Yep. So that's how you deal with the madness in society that's been forced upon people. And you get through it all, you see, you won't notice a thing. You'll just... In fact, you literally probably won't notice a thing, anything. And...

The mums who took cocaine during play dates
bbc.com / 8 May 2019

(A: Isn't that... All these happy stories suddenly came out. You think they all came out by themselves, 'eh?)

Cocaine use in England and Wales is at a 10-year high, with middle-class users accused of fuelling the drugs trade.

(A: They'd be unmarried single mums and they'd have their babies in the carrier and they go up and do a line here with their pals and stuff and sit and chat. And then when they're pregnant they also kept doing it and yada, yada, ya, you know. M-hm.)

One of the UK's leading providers of private addiction treatment says it has seen a 128% increase in the number of cocaine addicts since 2015.

Drugs are great for you, 'eh?   Wow. And here they are pushing more, I'm telling you, at the same time, telling you at the same time what happens, 'eh. Quite amazing.

And again, getting back to, you know, euthanasia, all these people that want to help you, you know, and reduce the population, and get organs at the same time.

Death by organ donation: Euthanizing patients for their organs gains frightening traction

Palliative
usatoday.com / 2 May 2019

Organ donation is a selfless gift to those on transplant wait lists. But what if we euthanize patients by harvesting their organs?

So, they kill you when they harvest the organs. How's that? Because then they're really fresh, 'eh. I'm telling you. There you are. But it's such a nice article... it's just wonderful. It's just... You'll actually want to go and do it after you read this article. If you take some of the drugs in fact, you might, you might definitely volunteer for it. No problem man, you know.

So, getting back to what I said at the beginning. What I said was, Charles Galton Darwin, descendent of Charles Darwin, and a physicist who had no problem working on something that would kill millions of people, the atomic bomb. He wasn't satisfied with that. He wanted to kill an awful lot more people and euthanize the rest, or else sterilize them at least. He mentions that in his book The Next Million Years, if we could just convince folk to be sterilized for goodness sake, you know, all the wrong people. You know, get them to go along with it, see their point of view. Again, you know, like Aldous Huxley said, maybe people can be coerced into coming into agreement with all these things, and be quite willing to be servants basically of the world State. You'd be happy with your servitude, you see.

There's nothing that can't be done to you. And again, Huxley talked about different drugs that could be used. And so did Charles Galton Darwin. And here ya go, folks, hm. Here ya go.

And then the enemies of their agenda, the enemies being too much good energy for giving you sanitary conditions and heat and warmth in the winter and things like that, start doing away with all of that, making it unaffordable by most, you get diseases creeping in, and water will get contaminated again... Well, Bertrand Russell said, if they only had a black plague every generation or two, it will keep the population down. Hmm.

Now, I'm not making this stuff up, folks. This is not conspiracy stuff. It's in-your-face.

And again, I can't make, I said this in my early talks too, I said, you can't force people to do anything about anything. You couldactually do it if you had the money, lots of money and use the techniques of persuasiveness, and especially get the young kids. Brainwash them quickly and make them hate whatever you want them to hate. And they become their great army, the creed, the very creed that Charles Galton Darwin said would be very effective. It's a creed, it's a belief, it's a religion. They're fanatics, these young, they're absolutely fanat... They're like any fanatical type religion, and they'll do what they're told. Ruthlessly. It's all there. It doesn't happen by itself. And what the deep state doesn't want doesn't exist.

So, I'm sorry for prattling on so much in this talk here. But as I say, I wasn't prepared for it really. I was just going to mention Charles Galton Darwin and leave it at that and go into two or three things. But you can always tie things in. You won't get articles in the newspapers or on television or whatever coming out, all the same articles at the same time promoting the same things. When we've lived through years and years of drug problems everywhere and suddenly they're promoting it all. Wake up folks, 'eh. Either wake up, or as they used to say, or dropout, hm.

Well that's it for me tonight, Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on May 19, 2019. We're rushing along through this year already, and to me it seems more so we're rushing through. Because very recently there was snow, lots of snow, more snow than I've ever seen before, because of global warming. Since then there's been a few days of nice weather on and off but there's been a lot of rain as well. And I suspect it's going to be an awful lot of rain this year, as snow basically is just a form of rain, isn't it, it's turning into rain now. I hope it's not going to be one of those terribly, terribly really wet, wet summers like I've had a few years ago... Actually, not even a few years ago. So, I'll wait and see.

But the world goes on. And that's what most folk never really catch on to as we speed through our little lives. And they are little lives, aren't they. As I say, most people, and really, we've all been there, amongst the most people, haven't we? But most people live day to day in a sense, and the younger you are the more so you'll just drift along from day-to-day. You'll absorb yourself, your time, with what's laid on for you to absorb yourself with, which is television, Internet, or parties or whatever else you're into, that's all given out there for you to use.

Because humanity is managed. Managed awfully, awfully well actually. And as time goes on with all the sciences, it becomes much easier to manage all the people. That's what Brzezinski said. He said years ago, it was easier to basically control and police a million people, rather than kill them. Then he said, with the technologies they had, at the time he wrote his last, that book in fact, he said that it was now easier to kill a million people than to just simply police and control them.

So it's amazing the sciences that are constantly at work. And we're trained in a sense not to even look at them. Or if we do look upon them, and the whole world sees them, it's a form of legality… where you're half sleeping in a sense when you read lots of articles. But the legalities, is like legalities used to be put into newspapers, still are in fact. If you want to put something forward, and then it's then noticed, it's called a ‘notice’, a ‘legal notice’ in a newspaper. A lot of stories, you understand, they're actually legal notices.

When you're told, for instance, after 9/11 that you'd all have to give up freedoms and liberties for security. That was a legal notice. The papers across the world, the Western world ran with those stories because we're all… The whole thing, it was to be a global system to be brought in. You can't simply have America or Canada brought in, in a system with, like Fortress America, against anti-terrorism. The whole plan was to get the whole world involved in it for a big change towards the global system.

Really, from World War I with the League of Nations, which was the embryo for world government, George Bernard Shaw and many others spoke openly about the need for a form of meeting place for members of all nations to meet, and basically run the world. That would include trade. It wouldn't include warfare systems, armaments, all that kind of stuff. Health. In fact, the League of Nations had its early, it was almost a kind of a resume it had set up to give the public on, eventually eliminating all the diseases with vaccines across the planet, things like that. Very old agenda, you understand. But the whole thing is to be a global system.

You don't realize just how much of a global system it really has been since then. Even with World War II coming along afterwards, and then forming the United Nations. They pretty well openly declared at the time, after World War II, that the UN would BE a world government. They were very open about it. But the public weren't quite ready even then to give up their national sovereignty. It doesn't go away because those behind the scenes, and that includes financial as well, naturally, a financial international system wanted a globalized structural system. The problem they saw, they foresaw even before you would get to a global system with a kind of global Parliament, what they foresaw was the possibility the people wouldn't go along with the dictates from a vague superpower over the whole planet basically.

It's difficult to feel anything towards an abstraction like the United Nations. It's far away. It's not on your land. It's bad enough if you have a federal government in a large country, like Australia or Canada or the US and Latin American countries. Massive countries. It's bad enough when you get a federal government that seem so far away from your local area. So you just put it up in the provinces or states, but even at that it's not so easy to relate to people so far away from you.

When you create a world government or even an EU parliamentary system, which was to be part of it, getting to the world government system, the European Union. In countries like Britain, again, it's an abstraction, it's over the water somewhere. And people from other countries, nations and cultures are all involved in it, so it's difficult for people to relate to it. Nevermind just go along with it. So, with a world government you can imagine how bad that would be for the general population. So, they foresaw the difficulties. They also knew the people might not want to simply give up sovereignty, national sovereignty.

They discussed many ways of bringing it in, bringing in a global system. Of course, terrorism across the world was one of them. You have to go into the teachings of military academies for the last 50 years or more and you start to get the gist of what they've been taught. As I say, the end of warfare could only come, they talk about warfare like national warfare could only come obviously through, from the end of nations. That's what they were teaching their officer group in different officer training facilities in Britain and elsewhere.

But the thing is too, how do you control the public who might not want, they might not want to obey orders that simply flow from some far-off place that they couldn't relate to? Well, they went through all kinds of scenarios to make the people pull together. Financial crisis. Economic crisis. Because government, local governments, which becomes a provincial type government, local government, and that means national government basically in the EU circles, basically loses its authority over the public if they are really subservient to some superpower above them. They thought that crisis might bind them together.

They thought too, that training at least one generation, if you get one generation from birth born into a post-apocalyptic system of terror, or 9/11 situation for instance, who 25 years later will be 25 years old and that's all they've known is anti-terrorism, they've never known privacy, and they think it's all quite normal. Well, let the old ones die off, which they do naturally. People get older, they get sicker. Or they become disinterested. Or they give up on society. They've seen the cons of wars and money and economic scams on a large scale across the planet, which they pay for of course, and they give up. They give up and they pull out of it and a lot of them to simply stop voting altogether. There's no point. And they know that.

So the younger ones are left to vote and so on. And they are easier lead when they've already been conditioned into a natural system, to them, of perpetual warfare under antiterrorism. And they're already geared into the system with another superimposed, another indoctrination on top, of climate change, from school onwards. So, they're perfect for it. They'll sail into it quite naturally and think it's for the good of all. It's a war to save the planet. It's a war of the people on the planet, so the people are the enemy, according to the Club of Rome, and therefore they go along with it all quite naturally.

These things are worked out so long ago, all these strategies so long ago. Back in I think the 60s they had quite a few movies, funded of course to put out there, very good movies on overpopulation of the planet. And everyone knows the one, it's called Soylent Green. It came from a book called Make Room, Make Room. The author talks about that, the whole idea was to get the readers involved in and believing that there's too many people on the planet and they'd have to submit to a super authority to control them all. And it was based on a Malthusian concept, you see, of running out of food and all the rest of it. They also had in that movie, interestingly enough, a form of global warming. Because in the actual movie version you'll see it's always so hot, etc. etc. and nothing would grow.

But at the same period, they had another one called No Blade of Grass. Again, exciting for youngsters to watch. These folk have to escape a crumbling city were a fungus that came out attacking all life forms, due to man's pollution of course, then these people had to get out and get little bands together and try to lead them to safety outside in rural areas so they can survive. Things that suck young folk into it, becauseyou become part of the movie you're watching. That's how books work too, and novels work, you become part of the people, you identify with them.

So that's the hook and along with the hook comes, you might call it, the syringe of indoctrination that comes with it, that will stick with you for the rest of your life generally. It's been on the go for an awful long time. You have no idea how much indoctrination comes from fiction. Because our guards are down, we're not expecting to be indoctrinated through fiction. That's why if you look into the different advisers to scripts in Hollywood, or even novels in fact, you get a lot of input from psychiatrists and psychologists, neurologists and behaviorists and all the rest of them. Big money involved in conditioning all of us. Right down to inserting certain, it's called, politically correct topics. You get updates for what you know must believe, or how you now must behave or whatever it is, into the fiction too. Or into novel as well. Or even children's books, inserting it all in there too, so that they'll all believe growing up that there's a battle on for the planet, and they are part of it, because there are the good guys. And everybody else is bad.

There's always a war on this planet. Always. There's never peace. When you think there's peace it's because you're pulled out of it all for a while. And even then, you'll be hit with it when, you see, you get little notifications in your mailbox or whatever to do with certain carbon hikes. Because you exist therefore, they're going to tax you for all the carbon, etc. I said, this is old stuff to me because I talked about it all long before it hit the public. Because I followed what they were up to. And they do publish stuff for themselves all the time on how to introduce all these things. And they never change, they never get off the track that they're on. You got to understand that too. With the massive bureaucracies that run this planet, directly from federal governments, and then indirectly too, well, it's all from federal governments because they farm out so much of it to thousands and thousands of agencies now that run our lives. Including, you know, psychological associations and behaviorist associations. We pay for it all. We pay dearly for indoctrination.

It was interesting going back to the old THX 1138 science fiction movie, futuristic movie, where everyone lived underground. Very high-tech society. People were drugged basically for the jobs that they had to do; they still needed humans for certain things. The humans themselves were constantly drugged and monitored and all the rest of it. And they were unaware they were getting monitored all the time. But they had Robocop's basically, these Robocop's with big kind of stun sticks that would torture them and test them. But you actually see in one in one section of the movie where I think it's Duval, is the main character, he's being prodded by these electric sticks by the Robocops. And as they're shocking him you see, it pans off into a bunch of scientists looking at, it's almost like medics in a sense, reading all his conditioning and conditioned responses, and his nervous system and his chemical readouts and all the rest of it, automatically, very quickly.

It reminded me that we're all living in this already, aren't we, a system of massive observation. You have the technology out now where they, yeah, they wear watches and all the rest of it that constantly monitor your blood pressure, pulse, and all the rest of it. And your breathing rates. And no doubt at all it will go into, it probably goes into other avenues as well. They can analyze even fear, I'm sure, from your sweat and things like that. So we're really going in, if not we're already in the system of THX 1138 without it being so obvious as an onlooker watching the movie. For those in the movie, if it was real, they would be oblivious to the fact that they were so closely managed and monitored. And even their sexual releases were supplied to them in various forms or another.

So we're in a system of massive observation. And these movies didn't just come out of the blue by themselves. They really didn't. There's much science fiction, as they call it, that really was based on reports of their day and before that, where the writers, the authors were in with the futurist groups of the day. They were employed by big think tanks in fact, to try and foresee what the future would be, according to all the data they had at the present time, where they could take it and how they could constantly dominate. Remember, power always must know what's going to happen. It must lead the path of what's to happen by owning all the tools they foresee will be used, up and coming in science and in every possible other domain. So that's what they do. And that's how the world is truly, truly run. Nothing happens by itself.

It's like today, for instance. We hear about, again, the saber rattling with Iran. And we all know from previous talks and so on and disclosures that Iran also was on the list, the famous list from the 1990s. It was on that list that General Wesley Clark talked about on a couple of TV shows including Democracy Now. He said, there was a list and he named the countries, and a whole bunch of other countries were to be taken out as well, when George Bush was in after 9/11. So, we live through scripts. The actual plan for that was drawn up before in the 90s, as I say, they always... they might take 20 years to get around to wiping out some of them, or even longer, but they'll do it. Because they never go back on their plans. And when you believe that you have a country that truly serves your interests, good luck in finding out any truth to that statement, that they're there to serve your interests.

You'll never know what your governments are really up to because they're pretty well foreign, [Alan chuckles.] all countries really, they're pretty well foreign to the interests of the public. They certainly have their agendas, but they don't really have agendas that the public are to be told about. Because you're treated like children. And children shouldn't be told bad news. If you're told bad news you might object, and they don't want the hassle so they simply don't tell you. Or they lie to you, quite simple, they just lie to you. Because you're children, that's what you do. Don't give the children nightmares. The children might scream, to stop doing what you're going to do, and you don't want that hassle either, so why bother telling them. You just gradually, one day they'll wake up in some virtual reality maybe. [Alan chuckles.] Maybe they're already in it. It makes you wonder when you read some the articles they're putting out today.

But in reality, as I say, in reality, you've got to pinch yourself now. In reality, we're definitely managed awfully well. Because most folk don't catch on. Occasionally, you'll get a ripple in the consciousness of the people when something doesn't make sense and they're forced to go along with it. As we've had with a few different things in the past few years. But otherwise they go back to sleep because there's so much entertainment where you can get lost and enjoy yourself and forget your worries for a little while, until you're back at work the next day.

I always think of Aldous Huxley who out of all of them really gave you a few clues of what was coming. And he also gave you a few warnings of what was coming. So, the man obviously did have some qualms about some parts of the agendas. He said that perhaps we, certain techniques were used on the public that could modify or change your behavior or get you to accept things that perhaps were not in your best interests. That's what he said. And that's about as far as any of them have ever come to actually warning you of what was coming down the pike.

So we have incredible sciences working on us from birth, again, through fiction, through television, through Internet, and through education. To make sure that in 20 years time from being a child you are the type of citizen that they planned you to be, according to what they hoped to have achieved in the world big plan in 20 years time. You will be created for it, you see, and readied for it and you think it's all quite natural. Which all youngsters do. We all think it's natural how we're brought up. Simply because how we're brought up. All the things around us simply exists, they're there, therefore they're natural, that's what we think.

It's no different than when I think about a guy I knew who was brought up in Vietnam during the Vietnamese war. To him it was normal to get up and go scouting with baskets to pick up bits of shrapnel in his area, for metal and they could take that and get it into their scrapyard basically, would buy the stuff and the children would do that and get some money for it. That was normal to him. You think of those that were born even in Japanese prison war camps during World War II. Most of them died because the parents were starved pretty well, malnourished. But some did live as well. I think they've tried to portray some of it occasionally in movies, by awful suffering, naturally.

But when you see the one, it was Empire of the Sun showed you the story of the young British boy from a wealthy family who ends up in a prison run by the Japanese. And how his life went through different cycles or phases as he was in there for a few years. He got by on trading potatoes and so on for different things within the camp. On the one hand it shows you how adaptable we are to situations, especially when you're young. But also shows you that in the character in the movie, that particular movie, was really different people at different phases of his life. The young spoiled rich child basically of wealthy parents who had lots of servants and he bossed them around, and even threaten them like maybe the adults would. And eventually he ends up kowtowing to the Japanese overlords and being subservient to survive. And even, as I say, wheeling and dealing to survive too.

So we can be different people in our lifetimes, we've got to remember that too. And it's easy to judge, it's very easy to judge what people do. And we're told how to judge folk, aren't we? More so than ever today, what's bad and what isn't bad. And who's bad. Without basically… being known that everyone's been bad at sometime in their life. I don't know anybody that hasn't been bad at some time in their life. I don't know anybody, for instance, who has never been a bit crazy at sometime in their life, or even for a night or two through drugs or alcohol or something. It's a lot worse today because it's so common. So remember too, when you start judging people, you have to, like the Indians would say in Canada, you can't judge a person until you walk a mile or two in their moccasins. Which is a good saying. Because if you walk in their shoes, well, who knows what they're going through.

And we're taught to judge very quickly now. When you're being trained, and what we're seeing today is the viciousness that's being created as very professional groups are now using youngsters, as I say, like professional, almost like the Bolsheviks before the Russian Revolution, you can see them being so ready to go into action sort of thing. That's not a good sign at all. Because mobs are always used to overthrow things, bringing in different systems. It's always a different system than the one that those who follow, are part of the mob, then they ever envisage. Because they don't know the real plan, you see. But they're always used. And when you see these things are happening today, when they're telling youngsters who to hate, that's not a good sign.

Everyone's being split today into genders or ethnic types and so on. And everyone's… It's divide and conquer of course. And there's big money behind all of this. It's not hard to find it. Which makes me always go back to the old James Bond movies because [Alan chuckles.] in James Bond movies the threats didn't come so much from national governments. They came from incredibly rich people. Individuals. And also, some of these individuals who made little... private little cliques of themselves, little clubs themselves, they could run the world. That's what it was all about. That's what the real system is today that we're living in, in fact.

When it was announced openly, for those who wanted to really get the message, it was announced by the Council on Foreign Relations that it was time, it was time they said in an article, for the big philanthropists and those who wheel and deal, they're talking about the multibillionaires and so on that run the planet, for them to come forward and take of their positions and help to govern the world. Well, that was an announcement, again, a legal announcement, that’s since happened by the way. That wasn't put up for the public to vote on. Because you don't vote for these people. So why should the part of them being rich give them the entitlement to rule our lives in one way or another? Hm?

You see how we float through life and don't really question it? And believe you me, if you don't question things you'll end up in a, you're already in a form of a prison, of course you are. In a prison you’re watched continuously, with the Panopticon system. I think Bentham, one of the guys in Britain in the 1800s came up with the idea where you could watch all the prisoners, but they never know if you're watching them or not, from the central hub. Well, we’re all being watched now. And just like prisoners, we now accept it. Because it's necessity, you see. I gave talks on necessity before, that's always what they use for the reason for taking your rights and freedoms away. Necessity.

The sad thing is today, as it always has been, there are plenty of people working for governments, in even the lower orders you might say, who will do the bidding of those, when they're told to just simply use brute strength, they'll use it. They will use it. I can remember reading when I was a child about the Highland Clearances and some of the places like the island of Skye, for instance. The people were getting tuffed off the land that they'd lived on for thousands… well, yeah, thousands of years. Because the land was being given over to, there was a lot of finagling going on by the guys who are the present-day Lords, didn't have the land at all but now they do of course. They claim that they had it by ancient right and all that stuff.

But a lot of the people were tuffed out of their homes. And the houses were burned behind them, the crofts. You'll still see the remains of some of these crofts, the kind of foundation walls and that in some of the, all across central and northern Scotland. It's just incredible. Overgrown with grass and moss and all that, but you know, they're still there. But the fact is, the people were tossed out and they couldn't, they had nothing to carry anything with them. They were tossed out to die basically. If you were poor that's what happened. And they didn't have horses. They didn't have cars. They were tossed out and told to get off whatever Lord’s land it now was or whoever he sold it to or whatever to put the sheep in.

There were a few cases that were, are noted for incredible cruelty. And cruelty was common then. Because you can always pay guys to wear uniforms and use truncheons and batter the people. They battered the women because it was women who had a chance of just being battered. But you could still yell in disgust what these uniform characters are doing. And some of them from your own countries, 'eh, employed and put the uniforms on and they bash the people. And outsiders too. It was the men, you see, the men already knew if they said anything they wouldn't be bashed, they would simply be killed. Immediately. No court, nothing, that's how it was.

So never forget, in all ages it's easy to recruit people who will kill and repress everybody else. Never forget that. And even all those ones who are chomping at the bit, who've been radicalized by big-money groups, they'll be the same way. I hope you understand that. The fact that it's being allowed to happen tells me that your governments, [Alan chuckles.] are not going to really stop it, and therefore who are the governments really serving? what agenda are they on? Because they're supposed to be there to protect the people, aren't they? That means all the people. There's more hate being spilled and spewed by those who want to have you literally living in mud huts perhaps to save the environment. And they're radicalized almost to insanity some of them. And we're going to see more and more of this kind of thing happening. It's not healthy. But the governments are allowing it to happen. Actually, it's being promoted because the agenda is to bring you into a system of incredible austerity. I won't go through it all again because I've done it so many times before in the past. But that is the agenda. Austerity. It's to bring you down from a higher standard of living, which gives you health and a bit of longevity, into a lower life expectancy, etc. etc. As I say, I won't even go through that, I've done it so many times before. To me it's just boring stuff because it's old hat that, you know, and you see it all happening.

So, the future doesn't look good for most countries. I remember in the late 90s and after 9/11, I talked about the coming blackouts. Now they tell you, oh, we have to save energy and maybe coming blackouts, rolling blackouts they called it. They tested them out across Holland and other countries. I kept all the articles and read them on the air, etc. etc. Well, that's all to come for those who haven't quite got it. Because we're living through a script. Very simple. The last three talks I've given too to do with eugenics and the fact that they're promoting that you take euthanasia basically, which is being sold to us as dignified way of dying. Which, let's be honest here, I've said it before too, there's always been a way out for people... who feel sick, who are terribly sick and who are dying. The nurses all know it, the doctors know it's and so on. But it's not forced upon anybody.

When you see the agenda being set up and mandated by the top, from government, it's a different agenda, it's not there to help them at all. It's an economic agenda. And eventually it will be mandatory you simply take the pill and die. They've had professors on in Australia pretty well saying that a few years ago. And certain professors will get big airtime to promote certain views, you know darn well, it's a government-sponsored thing from the very high authorities, including world governmental system of authority I should say, because that's what they want. And they float the trial balloons there and say, well, you know, if folk just hit a certain age and just died and left jobs for the younger folk, then it would be, what's wrong with that, you see? And you’ll think, oh that's audacious, that's terrible. But that's what it's meant to be, it's a trial balloon to get the idea implanted there. It's almost like a disease hitting you and embedding itself in you, that's how it's done. So the next step and the next step seems a little bit easier. Oh well, maybe they're right, you know. And it's just too easy to go along with it all.

It's up to the people what they want. And believe you me when they start looking at dollars and sense, and they're valuing your life with dollars and cents, your system is not a good humane system at all. Not at all. And that's really what's behind that. People have the right to do what they want. And there've been many, many ways the people have used over many, and a lot of it actually is getting taken away from them [Alan chuckles.] through the different drugs that are being withheld now. Which they could handle themselves. Which were meant to handle incredible pain. And don't forget, don't forget not everybody wants you to just be bumped off by the state. I hope you understand what I just said there. The state might want you bumped off because it might cost extra cash to keep you going a few months or even another year longer. But you might live fairly comfortably for that whole year with the right medications. Do you see what I'm saying? You can't believe government when it comes to what they're pushing. You can't do it. And then they want to take your organs as well. What?!? What? God help you if you have a certain DNA type and they want your organs and you're sick. I really mean that. Folk will be terrified to go into hospital shortly. I really mean that. I really, really hope you understand what I'm saying here.

Because when things start like this they snowball. And they snowball. And history has seen this kind of thing snowballing before. And it's not pleasant. It's not good. And we’re not here to serve the state. The state and the so-called public servants are supposed to be there to serve you, the people. I know it's a joke today, but if you stop pushing for your rights, hm, if you stop, you'll be rolled over so quickly and have no rights at all. That's what antiterrorism is all about too. Of course it is.

But anyway, enough of the gloom and doom stuff. Another thing too I meant to mention, because I forgot last week, the previous week from last week, two weeks ago, I had mentioned about Japan's declining birth rate. But I forgot to mention, it hit me one night afterwards I was thinking about it. It hit me, some article I read a few years ago after Fukushima, that they knew they'd have a lot of abortions afterwards because they were all terrified of having deformed babies because of radiation. I forgot to mention that. The Japanese have incredible memories indeed, to do with what happened to them with the two atomic bombs dropped at the end of World War II on them. They had the so-called jelly baby, almost transparent some parts of the babies' skulls and things that were born, actually for years and years after the bomb dropped. So, Fukushima has its consequences too and it terrifies people, obviously.

You also saw the same thing with, was it the Zika virus they called it in Latin America, the scare they put out there a couple of years ago. That suddenly died off, it just disappeared, didn't it? But the whole thing was to get the Planned Parenthood thing going again. And sure enough, women were terrified and went to get abortions in those areas. You see how it's easy to, hhh, use terminology like science and chemistry and biology, and use media to terrify the public? It's not healthy at all. And it's just too easy, isn't it? But that's what we live in. We live in big agendas.

Remember, in the 1800s, the 1800s was the time of industrial, massive industrial growth, incredible output of things and industry. It was a time of when they brought in the time-and-motions men who would go in there and they'd see what was taking, how long it was taking to do each little job in a factory and they would tell you hurry up, make you part of the machines almost, until you had no life at all. It was bad enough before they came in, and then it was hell afterwards for a lot of people. To get more profit out of the employees and more profit for the items they were producing, that's what it was all about. At that period too, from the time-and-motions, people were looked upon as the masses, by communism. Since then on we've been the masses, for capitalism. Because it's one in the same thing as far as I'm concerned. It's just a minority running the bulk of the populace. Of course it is. And that's what we're living through and have been living through for quite a long time. The mass man, mass woman, we're the mass people and specialists run our lives. Even when folk don't know it. You have no idea how many layers and layers of specialists are there working on, as I say, just the entertainment you're going to suck up. To make sure you get the right downloads and you will parrot what you saw on the movies and you will think along the lines that you're designed to think along. That's how it's done.

And just like the professor in Australia who talked about living to 60 years and that's it. You know, they don't want you to ever, you know, collect a pension of course because they can save more money for, oh, for the big pay increases for those who rule you. But you take the professor talking about that, if you just kind of died off and left jobs for younger people, that's straight out of the, they're called liberal economies of the 1800s, you know. Liberalism at that time was laissez-faire. Laissez-faire, just don't interfere. And people were disposable basically. Profit was all that mattered. It didn't matter, there was no human anguish over what you did to the people who work for you, and you destroyed their lives and killed them and so on. That didn't matter at all under the liberal laissez-faire agenda. Still doesn't. It's still there. Of course it is.

Then you take from that professor and you go into Logan's Run where everyone was born in an artificial system. No mating. Again, it was all done, again, kind of like Brave New World type, no one knew their birthmother, for instance. Everyone had a chip in their hand that eventually would turn a different color when your time was up. And when your time was up, you lived your quota of years you were allowed, and you went off into a religious, what you thought was a religious nirvana and you'd go up to this new heaven. In actual fact, you simply were eliminated and you died. Well, you think about all that. All these things technically are possible today. Because it's easy to, if you understand what a religion is, a basic religion as opposed to a belief. But a basic religion with its laws, regulations and so on, and you understand how they work on the human psyche, it's quite easy to create a religion.

Gorbachev mentioned it too. And he was head of the Soviet Union, Mikhail Gorbachev, who was given the Presidio in the US as his base, his new base when he left the Soviet Union and became the top greeny guy for international socialism. He said in his own writings, that he was an atheist. It was a kind of a question/answer, one of his books was a question/answer, very very, almost like... the Soviet style was almost like for children, questions and answers, and he was giving you what your real or presumed, possible, could-be questions. One of them was about religion and he said, I don't believe in gods or deities. But later on, in the same book he mentions that for the future of the world, he said that they would have to create a form of Earth worship, training the youngsters, a form of earth worship, he said, for international socialism to work. Well, that's your whole green agenda. That's what we're going through right now.

Don't forget that Gorbachev, this ex-KGB guy and president of the Soviet Union, don't forget that he gave a speech about international socialism, don't forget, he says, don't think it's dead, we're simply moving to the next phase. It was always meant to be worldwide. And those in the West were all in on the big act as well. Of course they were. Margaret Thatcher introduced him to the world, the so-called right-wing Margaret Thatcher, and had him on her arm, this new trendy Soviet. Introduced him across the world to heads of state. A few folks noticed and thought about it and clued in. Lots didn't. Most people wait to be told what to think about things and that's a sad truth. That's why it's easy for your opinions to be given to you if you're well-trained.

As I say, when it comes to end-of-life, when the state is really looking at economics, then they've told you what your purpose in life is, just to create finances for the planet... and money through taxation for the planet.... for a big agenda which you'll never understand... you're not supposed to understand it. But when you lose your value for life and when you're literally looking at economics as opposed to giving people proper treatment right to the end of life, and I mean proper, there could be no pain at all if they give them the right medications. And a lot of folk want to talk to relatives and so on. Because there's many things at the end of life that you can, that you've never said or told even your offspring and so on, and you can share it all. That's important.

But what is disgusting, I would say this, is a lot of these hospices they have today, that they farmed out as they train the public not to look after their own, are not even hygienic, some of them. They're all for profit, aren't they? We forget that. Sad state of affairs of the human condition when we've tossed the older folk out basically. Very, very sad indeed. And when you've done that you've also devalued your own life. Because eventually it's your turn as well. Who's going to help you?

But I'm not here, as I say, to preach. The fact is I want to just mention that, remember, you can still buy the books and discs I have @.com and help me tick along. I always forget to mention it. Once in a while I go through a little spate and remember for about two or three weeks and then I forget again.

But the fact is, we're going through such incredible changes. And you're trained up to each phase of change. And people don't know they're trained up to it, that's why they accept it, as they roll over to the next step. I can see the steps we've moved over in the last few months alone, quite obviously. And now you're getting ready as I say, for possibly the next war, no doubt, of other countries on the list. The famous list, we'll have to go through it. And it won't be tolerated speaking out against it, obviously. This is none of our business, apparently, we here just to finance it all. And keep quiet. We're dealing with a form of intolerance now like I've never seen before and it's getting worse and worse all the time.

There's an article here, I don't know if I read it before, but I meant to last week I think it was. It says…

Former US drug czar-
(Alan: I like how they use the terminology, czar, hey, that's Russian again, isn't it?)

Former US drug czar says national focus on opioid epidemic is overlooking real culprit
foxnews.com / 6 May 2019

Fentanyl and heroin are much cheaper and more accessible than OxyContin, former drug czar Bill Bennett explains.

William Bennett, the nation’s first drug czar, (A: [Alan laughing.] Czar…) said Monday that the debate about the opioid overdose epidemic wrongly focuses on prescription drugs.

While the government’s opioid crackdown has involved reducing the supply of legal opioids and reducing painkiller prescription rates, black market opioids such as illicit fentanyl and heroin actually have been the driving force of the epidemic in recent years, said Bennett during an interview on “Fox & Friends.”

“The nature of the problem has changed in the last two or three years,” said Bennett, who served as Director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy under President George H. W. Bush. “It’s now fentanyl, it’s now heroin” that account for most of the overdoses.

A key reason, Bennett said, is that fentanyl and heroin are cheaper than prescription drugs.

(A: They can get it for two dollars a hit apparently. Heroine as well. So, they're really cheap. He says…)

“When I was up in New Hampshire, they told me you [can pay] $10 for a pill --to get an Oxycontin, [but] two bucks to get heroin, three bucks to get fentanyl.”

(A: You see, there's nothing that's happening they don't know about. Hmph. So, believe you me, there's many, many different agendas on the go right now and you never get told the truth on any of them. Believe you me. But I do know of people who are in incredible pain and they have, and they can survive, and they have for years on some of the stronger painkillers, prescribed painkillers. And they have functioned well on them because they don't overdo it. They're able to get through every day. And some of them even work. But the fact is now they're getting taken off their heavy-duty pain killers because of the so-called epidemic and addictions, even though they are not addicted. So, they will, they're going to be in incredible pain. Because a lot of the stuff that they can get now simply isn't up to scratch as far as the kind of pains that they have to go through. Or else they'll take drugs that will knock them out for the whole day, and you can’t function at all. So, it's counterproductive. There are many things you've got to take into consideration here. But it's a good enough article and it does have a bit of data in it about overdoses and statistics, etc. It says…)

A Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) report last week said that about 70,000 Americans died of drug overdoses in 2017. Nearly 48,000 involved at least one type of opioid, roughly 30,000 involved fentanyl or some other kind of synthetic opioid, 15,500 involved heroin, and 14,500 involved prescription opioid painkillers. Other government data have indicated that many people who overdosed on prescription opioids stole them or obtained them from the person to whom they were prescribed.

So, it shows you, sure you'll always get that kind of thing happening. But the fact is, there are more things going on than you understand. Because they won't tell you all the facts on the big agenda. But believe you me, if you need heavy-duty painkillers and you can’t get them, you can't get the heavy-duty ones, hm, you might just take that pill you're offered, 'eh? Think about it, folks.

Now I'm going to stop babbling here and get on with a few articles to do with again our, hhh, our, hhh, how incredibly [Alan chuckles.] managed we are. On the micro level where... Remember, the point of total observation is it's necessary for those who rule you. They're terrified of people doing things they don't know about. They want to know everything about you 24 hours a day. Anyway, you're getting them all meeting together now and…

Jacinda Ardern won't rule out blocking Facebook if used to spread extremist content - newshub.co.nz / 14 May 2019

I think she's parts of it right now with a couple of other leaders. Macron, she's meeting with him in Paris and other leaders too. As they go ahead and start, again, restricting what's going to be put out there, or allowed out there. Until you'll have to be awfully nice and you live in a, you live in the kind of world actually that Fahrenheit 451 was about, if you've seen that one. There's a good film version of it where you'll see how the people act live television, you're part of the television, you can have interaction with it and how you're supposed to behave. It's all very, very nice and okay. And, you know, that's what you're supposed to get brought up in. [Alan chuckles.] I used to wonder about that movie because the movie was done in Britain at the time. And they even showed you the incredibly ordered socialist system that they would bring in where even when the state authorities were driving through the streets with all the speakers telling them all to come out in their front gardens, everybody in the house and so on, you see all these hundreds and hundreds of families gathering in their front gardens obediently and never asking questions. And that's your system there. So again, I'll put these links up on that.

Also, you've got the massive hype about – and I won't go into that either, because it's essential that they go along with it – you're destroying the planet and global warming and glaciers are melting and all that stuff. And all the species of animals are going to die. I can remember in the 80s that they came out with the same stuff, that the species were going to all be dead and there'd be no future at all by the 90s. And that didn't happen. And we weren't starved to death either. But it doesn't stop them because they use the same hype. Don't forget, they stampede you like a herd, that's what it's all about, giving you scary scenarios. That was their own terminology by the way, from the top leaders on this, they must give you scary scenarios to get your attention to get you to go along with things.

Anyway, they show you in this article here…

JakobshavnIsbrae: Mighty Greenland glacier slams on brakes
bbc.com / 14 May 2019

European satellites have detailed the abrupt change in behaviour of one of Greenland's most important glaciers.

In the 2000s, JakobshavnIsbrae was the fastest flowing ice stream on the island, travelling at 17km a year.

As it sped to the ocean, its front end also retreated and thinned, dropping in height by as much as 20m year.

But now it's all change. Jakobshavn is travelling much more slowly, and its trunk has even begun to thicken and lengthen.

You see, it goes up and down. And that's how even the polar ice caps go as well. We know that too. And don't forget too, the polar ice caps have its form of summer and its form of winter, and they always thicken in the wintertime as well. I've watched this my whole life long, this nonsense going on as they get you ready for big changes... to control you. It isn't just about keeping warmer, using less energy. It's about what you're going to eat, if you're going to eat anything at all, and less energy because less energy means hardship, and hardship means illness, and illness means you'll start dying off with things, you see. M-hm.

How the geography of climate change could make the politics less polarizing brookings.edu / 29 Jan 2019

The standard story is that the high-tech “blue” states are pushing a green wave of massive investment to cut emissions of gases that cause climate change. Meanwhile, the GOP-leaning “red” states are assumed to be part of what Ron Brownstein calls a “brown blockade” of fossil-fuel producers that are drilling and burning and don’t want to stop.

You see, it's so easy to tar anybody as good and bad, isn't it, according to the agenda. I'll put some of these articles up and let you read them for yourselves because there's too many actually to go through.

Louisiana Unveils Ambitious Plan to Help People Get Out of the Way of Climate Change

Well, here's the big thing. In the late 90s and early 2000s I talked about some of the stuff that the big new forces that were coming out at the time and became Homeland Security and all that, they were talking about how they would use, I think it was the Coast Guard in the US, they would give them the right to go inland 60 miles, and then up to 100 miles all around the US, from the shoreline. But at the same time that came out years ago it was also put out that they would have to start moving people away from the shorelines, the United Nations put articles out on it too, that they didn't want people living to near the coast in the future. Well, they're using the same excuse to get you off the coastal areas, you see. And they'll have big plans for the coastal areas, I'm sure. So...

And that goes into the risk of running out of choices in homes and so on. I'll put it up anyway. Another one too…

These Are the Cities Doing the Most to Combat Global Warming
bloomberg.com / 14 May 2019

(A: And I want some global warming here, I demand to get some because this winter past here lately, it was almost 7 months. Seriously. I've still got heat on at home here and it's almost June. So, I demand my share of it. That's what I want, to start a group up to demand our share of global warming... Since we're paying all those carbon taxes. I'll put this one up too.)

That’s the conclusion of CDP, a non-profit group that pushes institutions to detail their greenhouse-gas emissions. Often able to move faster than their national counterparts, metropolitan authorities from London to Sydney and Boston are among a group of 15 setting out the most rigorous plans to achieve carbon or climate neutrality by 2050.

If you have neutrality of carbon, you're dead. And if you don't put out carbon dioxide, you're dead. And carbon dioxide, by the way, is a trace gas. And it's completely invisible. And it doesn't cause a haze. And it feeds the plants, which they then produce oxygen. But facts don't matter, right. It doesn't really matter, does it.

They've got insurance companies in on it now too...

Florida Bill Lays Out Plan to Study, Prepare for Climate Costs and Impacts climateliabilitynews.org / 18 April 2019

If a new bill passes, Florida could fund a program specifically dedicated to assessing and preparing for the impacts of climate change.

We're going to get taxed into the ground. That's austerity, folks. M-hm. And you're going to pay an awful lot for energy. Because that was part of the plan that I read, whoa, a few years ago, where they said that all your spending money would go to basic necessities and energy and so on. There you go. In a post consumerist society.

Governor Ron DeSantis Announces Major Water Policy Reforms - flgov.com / 10 Jan 2019

That's also for Florida, for I think it's Tallahassee it came out of, this one here.

And this article too… It's interesting, as I mentioned before about the Japanese, hm, for the third or fourth year in a row the population has declined, and decline for live births and so on. But the share of Americans having sex… Interesting, as I say, how they study us like were little animals, you see.

The share of Americans not having sex has reached a record high washingtonpost.com / 29 March 2019

The share of U.S. adults reporting no sex in the past year reached an all-time high in 2018, (A: How do they know all this, 'eh?) underscoring a three-decade trend line marked by an aging population and higher numbers of unattached people.

But among the 23 percent of adults — or nearly 1 in 4 — who spent the year in a celibate state, a much larger than expected number of them were 20-something men, according to the latest data from the General Social Survey.

(A: This is the one that studies everything that you do. Like we’re animals, because we are a herd, you see. We're farmed.)

Experts who study Americans’ bedroom habits say there are a number of factors driving the Great American Sex Drought. Age is one of them: The 60-and-older demographic climbed from 18 percent of the population in 1996 to 26 percent in 2018, according to the survey.

But changes at the other end of the age spectrum may be playing an even bigger role. The portion of Americans 18 to 29 reporting no sex in the past year more than doubled between 2008 and 2018, to 23 percent.

You understand, they've got targets that they want the society to come to. That's why they study you like this. [Alan chuckles.] If you haven't figured it out, ‘eh. And then you have…

US births lowest in 3 decades despite improving economy - apnews.com / 15 May 2019

Ties in with what I just read there. It ties in too with the Japanese one. You see, it's all working. You see, it's working, working, working. And at the same time, though, you'll get other surveys saying that the population’s increasing... because of mass migration and so on and so on. Again, you've got to understand they have different, it's multilayered what they're giving you. They're looking at the traditional populations of the country is declining, declining, declining, etc. So, it's working, right, that part's working. On the other hand, they're always bitching there's not enough people left to pay off your debt, your national debt and so on. So, which one is it they want? Hm? When it doesn't make sense there's something else that they want, there's a different agenda.

IARPA Needs More Training Data for Video Surveillance Algorithms
nextgov.com / 10 May 2019

The data would improve the tech’s ability to link together footage shot across a broad geographic space, allowing it to better track and identify potential targets.

The intelligence community’s research arm wants to train algorithms to track people across sprawling video surveillance networks, and it needs more data to do it.

(A: So there you are, to keep you SAFE they want more spyware, you see, to watch you.)

The Intelligence Advanced Research Projects Activity (A: IARPA... which is really part of DARPA, they are the guys that supposedly created the Internet during the Cold War.) is recruiting teams to build bigger, better datasets to train computer vision algorithms that would monitor people as they move through urban environments.

(A: Now, they already have that. Again, a good movie to see is Enemy of the State, for those who haven't seen it you should go back and see it. And that was THEN. Of course, they have all that stuff. But now they want more stuff to watch you for… if you go to the bathroom probably.)

The training data would improve the tech’s ability to link together footage from a large network of security cameras, (A: Just like Enemy of the State, because they can track you from shop to shop by built-in cameras, private cameras.) allowing it to better track and identify potential targets.

(A: Hm. So, you’re a potential target? I guess everyone is, 'eh?)

Computer vision is a type of artificial intelligence that allows computers to interpret images and videos. Many law enforcement and public safety organizations already use the tech to investigate crimes, monitor critical infrastructure and secure major events that could be targets for terrorists. (A: That's their excuse, 'eh.) An early version of the tech was used to identify the perpetrators of the Boston Marathon bombing in 2013, (A: Well, why didn’t they stop it?) for instance, its popularity has only grown in the years since.

But according to IARPA, the data used to train algorithms today is fairly narrow, which limits the tech’s ability to dissect the wide range of situations they’d see in the real world. With the new datasets, officials aim to improve the training process and enable computer vision systems to connect footage shot from cameras positioned across a broad geographic area.

It's to tap into all the private stores and everything, and even public washrooms no doubt! So, they can literally follow you anywhere you go. Even if you don't carry anything with you they can monitor you with it anyway, right. So, there you go, that’s a beautiful future.

This Chinese facial recognition start-up can identify a person in seconds
cnbc.com / 16 May 2019

(A: They put out quite a lot of good stuff from China to show you what they're doing, as opposed to what they do here. They have cameras, glasses, for instance, that can literally come up with little computer screens and identify people in seconds.)

China plans to be the global leader in artificial intelligence by 2030, a market where the facial recognition piece alone is expected to garner $9.6 billion by 2022.

China’s facial recognition database includes nearly every one of China’s 1.4 billion citizens.

Shanghai-based YITU Technology has gained wide recognition for its facial scan platform that can identify a person from a database of at least 2 billion people in a matter of seconds.

Isn't that wonderful? Hm, isn't that wonderful, hey. And then you get this, here's what happens if you don't comply to the new system. You understand, you see, you've got to obey and allow yourself to be... You're a little minion, for goodness sake, so behave like one.

Man ordered to uncover face in front of police camera and then fined £90
mirror.co.uk / 16 May 2019

Met cops stopped and fined him £90 for disorderly behaviour (A: And what was the disorderly behavior?...) after he tried to avoid a facial recognition camera in east London

They slapped him with a fine for disorderly conduct after he tried to cover his face with his hat and jacket when he spotted the controversial facial recognition technology in Romford east London.

The tense encounter was captured by BBC Click, which was filming the Metropolitan Police trialling the use of the technology around the capital.

(A: You see, BBC is part of the British government and intelligence system.)

The technology has attracted criticism and accusations of a ' Big Brother ' approach to mass public surveillance.

(A: I love what they say, like they're just starting a 'Big brother approach' and that's what you're just noticing it. Who's kidding who? They were arresting folk with cameras in London, when they first brought out the laws after 9/11, just for taking pictures of famous places. So how many little warnings do you need?)

The technology has attracted criticism and accusations of a ' Big Brother ' approach to mass public surveillance. (A: Huh? I'll put a question mark there. What?!??)

While Scotland Yard says it will help the force cut crime, (A: They always say that.) its use has provoked fierce push-back in London - already frequently named one of the most surveilied cities in the world due to its vast CCTV camera network.

(A: I remember reading articles back in the 90s, about the big big military-industrial conglomerates basically, at that time, already pushing into surveillance. Because they said if we go into a world with no wars, that was the whole thing, there'd be no wars in the future, in a global society. In the 90s, that was all you heard was globalism, globalism, and one world system. And everybody accepted that, that was the mantra for about 10 years. It didn't stop until 9/11 happened. You're back to being a nation because they need warriors to go off and fight abroad, you see. But in the 90s, it was oh, we're so wonderful, we're global, blah blah blah. And that was the big thing, oh my goodness, how are we going to make money for big big war industries, without war? So, we go into mass surveillance and stuff, that was going to be the future. That's what they said, folks. I've got the articles. M-hm.)

(A: So here they go and you're still all shocked when they… with the next step and the next step and the next step. At least that’s what they pretend. So, Scotland Yard says is can help them, it can help them, blah blah blah.)

In the exchange captured in the BBC clip, the man is shown attempting to cover his face then being pulled aside by officers.

He tells police: 'If I want to cover me face, I'll cover me face. . . .

(A: They even say 'me' face, as though he's a low-class guy. 'I'll cover me face', that's the way that they're saying it here. Isn't it disgusting how they put the person down as lower-class, hm? Just for their little push. It's like an ad, this, you see, it's like a promo.)

'If I want to cover me face, I'll cover me face. Don't push me over when I'm walking down the street."

(A: Well, that's a natural thing, don't push him over when he is walking down the street.)

He then asks an officer: 'How would you like it if you walked down the street and someone grabbed your shoulder? You wouldn't like it, would you?

The officer tells him: "Calm yourself down or you're going in handcuffs. It's up to you. Wind your neck in."

(A: Wind your neck in?)

The man replies: "You wind your neck in."

After he receives the fine, the man tells a reporter a man down the road had told him the police were trialing the AFR technology, so he had covered his face.

(A: Well, isn't it his right? You see, they're telling you you're a bad person if you want to cover your face up. Because THEY want to see you. This is intimidation, mass intimidation on the general public, just to be… You're getting trained into all the Sci-Fi’s of dystopian futures, it's all here. It's here, folks. M-hm. And then the threat of a 90 pound fine. Oh. There you go. M-hm.)

The Met (A: The Metropolitan, the Met…) last year promised not to bring the tech back to Notting Hill Carnival after a public outcry at the use of the automated facial recognition (AFR) kit at the major street party in 2016 and 2017.

A damning report published last year by campaign group Big Brother Watch found the AFR kit used by the Met had a 98 per cent false-positive rate.

(A: So, this is hell they're bringing in here, folks. It won't matter, a 98% false positive rate! When they can storm your home, grab you, because they've got your face mixed up with somebody else, because the computer made a mistake! You're right into Brazil, the comical movie, a satire that Monty Python crew put out, the movie Brazil. Watch it. Where, was it Tuttle, gets mixed up with Buttle, in a bureaucratic foul-up and the guy gets wiped off the face of the map. It's here, folks.)

A protester from the group appeared in the BBC clip, carrying a banner saying 'stop facial recognition.'

The Big Brother monitor can be seen asking an officer of the man that had been taken aside: "What's your suspicion?"

A Big Brother Watch activist questions a policeman about why a man was stopped for covering his face.

The officer replies to her: "The fact that he's walked past clearly masking his face from recognition."

(A: So that’s a crime now.)

"I would do the same," she replies.

"It gives us grounds to stop and verify," the policeman responds.

"No it doesn't," the protester fires back.

On the day the BBC was filming, three arrests reportedly resulted from facial recognition alone.

(A: Ha! Sure! Would they prove it to you? [Alan laughing.])

But that's what you've got now. That's the system you're living in. And you accept it step-by-step. And it leads the way to hell. Way beyond the Stasi in East Germany. Way beyond the old senior police in every totalitarian government. We're way beyond it now. Under the guise of keeping you safe, you know. How often has that been used down through history, hm? ...we're keeping you safe.

US claims of Iran threat to coalition forces in Middle East rejected by British general independent.co.uk / 15 May 2019

You see, everybody's got to get on board for this, because it's on the list, right.

There has been no increase to from Iranian-backed forces in Iraq and Syria," says Major General Chris Ghika

So he's... there ya go. So they're bashing him back again and oh, you can't say that, you know.

And…

British general says no increased Iran threat in Syria and Iraq, prompting rare rebuke by Pentagon   (A: …for saying that.)
independent.co.uk / 15 May 2019

He's deputy commander of Operation Inherent Reoslve (OIR), the US-led coalition fighting ISIS, disputed claims from the White House that forces in the Middle East are facing an increased threat from Iran or its allies.

Well, facts don't matter, you see. It's on the list. And the list isn't even yellowed with age. It should be. But they'll still do it. And…

'Time warp speed'

This is like a replay of Bush’s group at the time after 9/11. Because it reminds me right off.

'Time warp speed': Congress demands urgent Iran briefing - smh.com.au / 16 May 2019

...you know. I can remember the guys around Bush at the time said they were told, ordered by Bush and Rumsfeld, to bring in really, very iffy, it didn't matter how iffy any accusations against the guys on the list were, bring them in and they'd go with that basically. The same thing, 'eh?, urgent Iran briefing. They don't want to hear anybody, in fact, at that time... This came out in documentaries afterwards where the guys around them, some of these agents admitting they were told not to put forward anything that was negative regarding an invasion of Iraq, etc., but only positive things, even no matter how iffy they were. Well, here we go again. That's all I'll say about that.

And also…

Gene editing: will it make rich people genetically superior?

metro.co.uk / 15 May 2019

(A: It's back to eugenics again. It's always been here, of course. They talk about…)

At a time when new technology such as gene editing offers unprecedented control over our own biology, the latest wave of medical advances, including powerful DNA-editing technology like CRISPR/Cas9, is a source of excitement and optimism.

Well, it won't be for us because we're supposed to, you know, we're not important enough to keep alive apparently. They are using more advanced technologies and sciences in medicine to give longevity to the right kind of people, who are awfully rich, or important, you see. That's how they're classifying all this stuff today. And there's lots of technologies now where they can put certain plasmas into you of antibodies that will kill off different cancers. IF they want to. And this is not make-believe stuff. This is fact. There's articles out there in the newspapers about it, where some types of breast cancer in fact in stage IV have been cleared up completely. Quite amazing. But will they give it to you? Well, that depends who you are. And how much money you've got. And how important you are.

This is a kicker too, hey. Here you have people having less sex, supposedly, according to the big system that constantly monitors us and puts out questionnaires and all that. But here is…

Fall in number of UK deaths hits profits at funeral provider
news.sky.com / 13 May 2019

(A: The provider is called Dignity. I guess that's from them, I'm not sure. But...)

Dignity said there were 12% fewer deaths in the first quarter of 2019 than there were in the same period a year ago.

(A: Wow. Well, what d’ya know. I guess they better speed it up then, 'eh? For the profit.)

The company said revenues of £81.1m were 15% lower than for the same period last year and underlying profits fell by 42% to £21.7m as the number of deaths fell 12% to 159,000.

(A: Well, my goodness me, that can't go on, you know. Hm?)

And then we have the whole thing with this Huawei. It's really just corporate warfare, really, for who's going to get the big business from national governments in the West. That's all it is, with China, with Huawei, as far as I can see. They want to ban, it says...

Huawei ban clouds U.S.-China trade talks, tech sector - reuters.com / 16 May 2019

Because of them getting hit with accusations from the US on spying and all that stuff. But it's really just corporate warfare. And don't know in the US who they want to give the contracts to, like big business, hey, big business, for the 5G and all the rest of it coming in. That's what it is.

[Alan chuckles.] And for all those who just love, love the gadgetry that comes out…

Now hackers can steal your ID and bank details from a coffee machine! Cyber security guru also warns people from using Whatsapp and smart TVs - dailymail.co.uk / 18 May 2019

Because literally the folk can put it all together, find out all your passwords and everything, and hack everything and that's it, you're wiped out. Quite something, 'eh.

And poor Manning has been ordered back to jail for refusing to, I guess, accuse whoever they want to accuse.

Judge orders former U.S. soldier and WikiLeaks source Manning back to jail - reuters.com / 16 May 2019

So, this character is back in jail again. That’s what they do, ‘eh, if you don’t do what they tell you, testify, whatever it is they want to testify and say against whomever.

And Russia too, Russia corporate warfare. Now that they're trying to raise the specter of the big bad bear, again. I remember giving that talk in the 1998 I think it was, how if they need it again they'll make Russia into the bad bear again. And here you go. They have big pipelines coming from Russia into the West with crude oil. So, the recipients of this oil are trying to claim that it's contaminated. It says…

Russian oil no one wants to pay for reuters.com / 15 May 2019

In limbo: the dirty Russian oil no one wants to pay for LONDON/MOSCOW (Reuters) - The bills are due for millions of barrels of contaminated Russian oil.

(A: But it's not really contaminated, what you think. It's actually, it says...)

. . . discovering it was unusable. . .

...supposedly, the recipients are claiming. How they can do it, this stuff, it's generally added... What this stuff is contaminated with is generally put in afterwards in a small quantity, and Russia claims that they didn't add it because they don't use it in the bulk crude, you see, so, if it's even there at all it was put in afterwards, they're claiming. But it's $1.2 billion worth of stuff that they want to, that the West is claiming they want to reduce the cost of it because they have to dilute it with more and more crude until it's acceptable. It's a shame, you know.

But again, it's corporate warfare we're seeing. That's what we're seeing. It goes on all the time. Corporate warfare is vicious. I mean, they use countries to go to war over corporate warfare. That's what that is, every war is an economic war. Somebody wins. And the peasants fight it for those at the top. And the corporations always win.

Anyway, I've prattled on long enough tonight. Remember too, you can buy the books and discs, as I say, @.com. Go into the website and see if you want to buy the books. Or donate. If you donate it helps me out to tick along here. Because as I say, I generally forget. And I don't, I really don't live very high on the hog at all, believe you me. What's kept me going is the fact that what I have put out has had such an incredible response from people all over the planet. You'd be surprised at the amount of people who use the data. Never mentioning you of course most of them. But everybody uses the data and puts it into their own shows and things like that too. Or articles. Because it's all verified and it's not make-believe and it's official sources.

So remember, you can help me out too. And remember, if anything happens on any of the outlets that I have go into my website @.com and look at the other official sites I have listed there. That's also where if you want to send donations or purchase the books, the only place to get that is on my own official sites. Anybody else, anybody else's site that's selling my stuff, it's not mine. It might be mine that they've copied but I'm not getting the money for it, believe you me. So, if anything happens go into @.com, look at the official sites I have all listed there on the .com site. Make a note of them for the future use and if any of them go down you can always use one of them listed there and still get, hopefully, the shows, as long as they can.

We're going into a time of fear basically. Fear is the prevalent word right now. It's prescient, it's a precedent word right now, fear. Because the whole world's being trained to go along into the new system. And we're all bad little children, no matter how old we are, if we don't go along with it. It's not, you know, it won’t be pleasant as big, big systems have become so incredibly arrogant, and governments definitely are arrogant now, authorities are definitely arrogant, and they're forgetting they're supposed to be here to serve the people, all of the people, by the way, and not just the very rich and those at the top.

So remember, don't get, don't let the world weigh down on your shoulders until it crushes you completely. You've got to understand things if you can, if you can handle it. Understand things, but don't let it kill you. Don't let the emotional anger set in. It festers away and destroys you. Don't let that happen. You can't change anything for the better if you’re disabled by it.

Everything that happens in the world takes years to change. You can see how many years, I mean, 30, 40 years in preparation for now, to bring this whole totalitarian system into being. Very obviously to do with the climate and all the rest of it and all this nonsense. It took years and years of preparations and billions and billions of dollars to set up the organizations that front for it all.

And it takes a while to start to come out of things. It might, you might have to start the system to come out of it all, before it's even all implemented, and it won't take effect until 30 years from now. We just don't know. That's what Orwell was getting at with O'Brien in 1984, when O'Brien says, well, your system won't change anything. Well, maybe in a thousand years... In other words, it takes a long time for things to snowball gradually, gradually for the changes that you might desire.

But mankind, humankind I should say, to keep everybody happy, humankind has had horrors down through history. It's never been a bowl of cherries. Because there's always power and powerful forces at work in the world. And there's always psychopaths in charge of the powerful forces. Because they are attracted to power. They enjoy and love power. They live for power. And more power. And they've made life hell throughout the planet in every culture at some time or another.

Therefore, it's more imperative that you train people to spot it and to spot them for a better world to come into being. And they can take all forms, very cleverly, all forms of even nice people who become completely intolerant of course, [Alan chuckles.] and want you all to behave the way they want you to behave. But they always start off pretending they're nice.So be very, very careful of the deceptions in this world. Because that's what the world's about, deception. And it is a battle. It certainly is a battle... between good and evil... and the balance in between.

For myself, Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Former US drug czar--'overlooking real culprit'

May 26, 2019 (#1722)

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on May 26, 2019. It's quite something to see a repetition of, not so long ago, a few years ago where you would see on the satellite images almost a circle of heat, and on an edge of a circle, around different, the continent basically of America, and in the center you could have areas that were getting deluged with water, the outside circle and the circumference of the circle, the perimeter would be getting very high heat and drought. So it's interesting to see how the various jet streams are being kind of played with. If you ask my opinion, that's my opinion. Only by being aware for many years and reading the articles put out by the geo-engineers themselves, and those who designed HAARP technology, etc., when they admitted they could actually do that, it was quite easy, or the Air Force's articles, Owning the Weather, and you know, official declarations, you might say.

Because the weather we're getting is meant, as far as I'm concerned, to scare the people into giving up every possible right you could possibly have. And fear is a great technique of taking away all your rights. And for any totalitarian system, which is the system we're really in, it certainly is, it's completely intolerant of any objections to this big world global agenda and is using the climate as a big excuse to take everybody's rights away. And telling us how to live. Right down to articles, which are once again coming out from official sources telling us that maybe people shouldn't be having children. And maybe they need official bodies to decide who will have children.

All the old stuff that was put out by the Eugenicist Societies at the turn of the 20th century, quite openly in fact about all the things they'd have to do. Julian Huxley was one of them. Again, his whole family lineage actually, including the Charles Galton Darwin's and so on were quite open about the need to regulate most of the public and take away their abilities to even think for themselves. And personally, I think they've been awfully successful in that by using techniques that Aldous Huxley mentioned, of behaviorism and psychology and mass indoctrination. It's awfully successful. Isn't it?

Whereas, again, his relative Charles Galton Darwin said that, and he was a physicist. He said that really, those who would steer the ship of planet earth would be the wild man. Meaning, they would have all their natural abilities intact, their faculties. But the general population would really be dumbed down and made to be almost imbecilic in some ways. So that's the future for them at that time. And you think that articles, which are popping out every single year, including this year, again, to do with the IQ level plummeting are just happenstance?

Then of course everyone who reads this article says, well, mine hasn't. [Alan laughing.] It's quite… It's the same people of course that say, well, yeah, they say that we really don't have a mind of our own and we're basically led to our opinions, and I'm not. Of course! That's how simple the whole thing is, isn't it? Everyone thinks they're in charge of their lives, but your choices really are very limited in a system that's humoring you in a lot of ways. Because when you look into the United Nations agendas, that all countries, including all of our countries have signed on to and are implementing for this whole sustainability program, is complete eugenics. It's the complete agenda put out by those in charge of the eugenics programs, from over 100 years ago. It's all coming to pass. Because they had the blueprint set up a long time ago.

And all the different segments of society, that were created tobe segments of society, divide/conquer, divide/conquer, divide/conquer, and issue out your leaders and portraying your leaders for them all, these are all part of what they claimed at the time was, they would push it all through by fairness. The world would have to be fair. So you had to create all segments that would then be given what fairness means. And what it means basically is the Marxist doctrine of eliminating all, all, eliminating all competition of all kinds, making everything equal, supposedly. That's IQ and everything, and work and so on. And it would be fine, it would be fine, but the fact is, we're not built like that. Unless they make it so.

And how do you make it so? Well, you standardize a generation of humans as most folk are not breeding at all, or they can't breed because they're sterile. And we take that too so easily, don't we? Well, yeah, I guess so. This is a momentous thing and you think it just happened in a few years by itself? Because really 40 years is nothing. Nothing! They were noticing it in the 70s and they were taking incredibly detailed studies of the sperm count in males at the top universities. Because they're all part of the big, you know, statistical game to see if the agenda is working. Top scientists and doctors were monitoring it, and still are monitoring it all. They keep a very good accurate count of motile sperm, that which is lively and can impregnate the ovum. And it has just plummeted. Plummeted. And they're all happy about it… because it's no crisis, apparently. It's not a crisis. Of course, is not a crisis because you see, that's the world that's coming into being. Now it's here, really.

A long, long time ago they had in all their eugenics magazines, that those who had the best genes would rule the world. Again, Charles Galton Darwin's wild man he called them, the ones who didn't have the damaged brains. Everybody else would be given chemicals and so on that would dumb us down, you see, and diets, just like Bertrand Russell. All part of the same societies, all these different people that were so well known and who helped create the cultures that we've lived through right up to the present time, the changes that is.

They were not futurists; they didn't look at crystal balls and contact the dead or anything like that. He simply drafted up a big, big agenda on what they'd have to do to make the world what they wanted it to be and to bring down populations eventually. It can take 50, 100 years to do that. But that's no problem at all. And by the time the last generation is living, if you might call it living, in austerity, and drug infested poverty in most countries now... If you wonder why you've got massive, massive, it's like drugs all over the place, and designer drugs, and they're dirt cheap, EVERY country's got them.

They keep talking about, oh my God, you've got this terrible homeless problem and all the… No, it's not. It's a drug problem. Drug problem. And the folk are living in tents. Because they get money, they've been given money, and in the UK they've got stacks of documentaries out there, as they study it all, naturally. Because the UK is one of the main nations for studying the changes... Since their leaders that are, all of them are based in London, [Alan laughing.] of this whole agenda, and they want to know if it's working.

So, they know that they've got so many thousands and thousands of young people, and all ages now actually, but on drugs. Who can't get off these drugs. You take them for two or three times and they're hooked. Literally hooked. And once they're hooked, they're not thinking clearly afterwards, and it just affects their brain so FAST. So fast. And once you're in poverty… then you end up on the street because you can't pay your rent. The money that's given to you by any agency, or whatever, you'll spend on the drug, you see. And then you don't pay your rent and you're on the street. That's happened across the US especially. Very openly. Then there's no work for them either, by the way. Why would you bring in mass migration at a time when there's not enough work, and in a postindustrial society, folks? Hm?

The terms I'm using, postindustrial, are all from the United Nations and all the different associations that belong to them. They wanted a postindustrial society. The Club of Rome and Maurice Strong that gave you the Rio Summit and the Biodiversity Treaty and everything else to do with the environment, he said, the best thing we can do is demolish all civilization of manufacturing, abolish it completely in the West, he said, and bring the whole system down. These are the folk who drafted up these charters that we're further signing into the next step and the next step and the next step and the next step. And none of us got to vote on any of it, folks. And you live in this delusion that you're in some kind of democracy. What a great number they've done on your brains, hey. It's astonishing. It truly is astonishing.

I know, yeah, I know that human beings are egocentric. And we love to do the thing, ego-syntonic, we do the things we like to do. You see, we've been trained more and more that way too. Where we can't postpone pleasure so much as we used to. This is all, it all comes from the studies... I used to wonder why these incredibly detailed studies from anthropologists and what they called Third World nations, incredibly detailed. And when you look at the different studies on different cultures and societies, they said, a lot of them, that they had frequent, for instance, frequent famines and things like that, or at least the occasional famine. The peoples for hundreds, maybe thousands of years, in warm climates, couldn't postpone pleasure. They wanted immediate gratification. Rather than, say, do the agricultural work and so on and work and go through the seasons and bring it all in and then enjoy the fruits of your labor and things. They had all these incredible detailed studies on every, and I mean every culture. Including the ones in Britain, different parts of Britain. Incredibly detailed. What they said too is that the ones that are worse off in the world and very poor, also had a lot of wars going on and so on, and the wars are from different factions of societies fighting together, or at least not cooperating.

So, you create the same situation across the civilized societies, the advanced societies, and you create segments of all kinds and have them all at each other's throats. But the ones who lead it are paid awfully well, you notice? They live awfully well. They get lots of TV time and stuff like that... to whip up their support and so on that they get from all the folk who now like to blame this group or that group for the ills that they're under, you see. It's so easy to do, isn't it? You always blame somebody else. As you're blaming someone else, you're fulfilling the goals of divide and conquer and divide and conquer and divide and conquer. And you're at the mercy of those who do control. It's just astonishing to see it.

What I'm getting at too is, folk have no idea of the precision and the all-pervasive control over every section of society, and in every nation. And how everything is in step across the planet. And they're really, really will not go in, again, they've been taught to look at the positive and happy stuff and don't look at the negative unpleasant stuff, you see. That's what they call it, that's negative, that's unpleasant. Yeah. Well, you can keep spending the money that you get every week or month or whatever it happens to be, and you can certainly, yeah, be happy and pleasant with drugs and so on, and don't look at the unpleasant stuff, and that's the balance of your account, hm?

And you know what's going to happen, don't you? Well, because you see, the unpleasant stuff is part of living. And unpleasant is something that helps you survive into the next part of the future, or next month or whatever it happens to be, the next year. The folk who really won't look at it, and can't look at it now, are those who are hooked on the drugs. It's amazing how many youngsters out there will do anything, and I mean anything for their next hit. It's just astonishing. They've got so many documentaries out there, they've got so many articles out there, and they all have the same story.

ON THE STREETS -- a feature documentary on homelessness in L.A. - youtube.com / 25 March 2016

And the authorities, they say, oh, it's a homeless, they keep trying to divert it away from the real problem. No, the problem is the intended problem, which is the complete inability to be functional and rational, by folk who are getting flooded with cheap, cheap, cheap drugs. In a time where there's little work for them. And in a time when there's more folk coming in to take the jobs. All the time. Everywhere. In every country in the West. Obviously.

And everyone will say, oh!... It's amazing how folk get into their camps and they get all angry at what they hear. Because you see, they've already chosen what they want to believe. As opposed to go and dig into the problems themselves and investigate them themselves. It's amazing how they're so fast to take the words of their particular favorite leader that is supplied to them by the system. And yet that same system, that same system, don't forget, it's that same system, is the system that's taken all your rights away and are watching you all 24 hours a day. The same system that took all your rights away from you. N-n-n.

To keep you safe, you understand, you always need a crisis and a threat to keep you safe. Real or imaginary. But it's all of you that are being watched, forever, for the rest of your life. And you think it's for terrorists? Do you really think that? Do you really think that? Or do you care? Most folk don't care anymore. Again, something's happened to their minds and their rationality. And their survival. Because if you don't care about being... owned basically, by the state, whatever, national states or international state, or global state, call it what you want, who cares. The fact is, you are owned, hm, and they have decided that they have the right to know all about you, at all times. All times.

And this is the same state, remember, who to take care of you are going to take all your rights away from you, where you can live, how you can live, what you can eat, hm... And I really mean this, they're dead serious and they're implementing it now, step-by-step, fast, quickly, can you travel, can you not travel? All these are being taken away from you. And folk think, oh I don't care, I'll stay home and watch movies, hm, I'll stay home and play some games... That they keep churning games out that are very addictive of course. They're meant to be, and they admit that too, the producers and makers of them.

This is not a functional society. It's a conquered society. And I mean that, it's a conquered society. It's all the signs and symptoms of the diseased conquered postwar society. Even though the war is still going on. In a war situation you see people, all kinds of people out in the streets living anywhere they can. No work. Often in rubble, or definitely a mess. And if yeah, you'd be on drink too, if you can get drink, but now it's drug. You see, drugs are cheaper. Heroine's cheaper.

I was watching a little article, I can get little bits and pieces on my Internet speed once in a while. Anyway, it was about addictions in the UK and other countries too. It said that the price of alcohol today in Britain was 60% cheaper than it was I think in the 1982 or 1983 or something like that. So they were making it cheaper and cheaper and cheaper. And this is in the time, remember, when there's no employment. There's no real future for advancements in a service economy, where the best you can get is stacking shelves or working flipping burgers or something. And the competition to get the jobs now with so many folk coming into the countries, is always, it just gets staggering.

Alcohol - Britain's Most Harmful Drug - youtube.com / 2 Feb 2017

And there's… I couldn't believe the money on welfare on whole parts of, say, the UK. The UK really is a small place. Per mile, you know, it's a small place, per square mile and the population density. And they've got whole sections, and towns in fact, outside Durham, for instance, or part of Durham County in England, where they were trying to sell, whoever owned them, streets and streets and streets of Council type housing. They couldn't even sell them to... They couldn't sell them, because number one, no one wants them because it's got bedroom taxes that, this is the beautiful tax, this is a good incentive to buy, you put bedroom taxes already on an economy that's gone.

And the government is needing more and more taxes because it's got so much welfare and so many social programs. And because it's in the EU it's so much, I read the articles years ago on radio shows of the multimillions per month it had to hand over of its income to the European Union. On demand. To the central bank when they demanded it, they just had to hand it over. And the gross domestic product is, it's going down down down down, you know. Because the economy is gone. And you've got massive, massive drug problem. Massive unemployment problem. And this place outside Durham, that you could buy, they even offered so many houses per street, for a dollar, and the local counsel didn't even want them!

And yet, there's all these folk living in tents and homeless and so on, 'eh? Of course, there's hostels that the governments help to create. And the hostels... You see, the economy now is a parasite economy. Because so many folk now are in and out of seeing lawyers, supplied by the government, who are living much better than the homeless folk, that come and see them all the time, or who are maybe shoplifting and petty misdemeanors and things like that. And the prison systems are overfull anyway, and the country can't afford to put folk inside the prisons. A lot of the crooks know this too now. And the gangs do. So it's a revolving door. But yeah, the lawyers make excuses for it, well, you know, there's just… But the fact is, those who are on drugs, certainly, aren't getting the help because they're just churned back on the streets again. Or they'll do the same thing over.

It's finished. You understand, that's the finished society when you've got that. And you can't afford to do anything with them because they have such a massive system of welfare, and folk having their rents paid for them, if they have places at all, that, well, all the money comes from folk that are working. Well, what's left to work at? The pile on top is getting, you know, larger and larger and the ones below that pay for it all are getting smaller and smaller. Until they themselves will end up either dying off or else they're unemployed themselves. You see what I'm saying? That's the same in the US too, a lot of the places in the US as well. But you find behind the mass homeless problem too, you definitely have an incredible drug problem. Incredible with fentanyl and God knows what else there. There's so many drugs out there. I've got lists of them actually. And I won't just dwell on that, I wasn't meaning to dwell on this.

I'm just showing you that some of the signs, of what the guys like Maurice Strong and those around him and even above him, planned a long time ago. There's definitely a massive world council here planning and implementing it. And your governments are all part of it by signing on to it. There isn't a politician out there that doesn't know what's going on. There's not one. Not one. And they're well-paid.

But it's a disaster to the public. But it's a victory those who planned this. Again, a postindustrial era, and you'll eventually go into pretty well almost a postconsumer society for austerity where your basic consumption will be for food, clothing and shelter. And you won't have all the extra money left for much else after that in taxes for everything. That's… It's to get pretty, pretty bad. They planned this and it's to get even a lot worse, actually. But they certainly don't plan on keeping any, much of an economy going for you to buy-buy-buy your cheap plastic junk that's not meant to last very long, for much longer. They really don't, and they talk about it too at the world meetings.

You know, these people at the World Economic Forum that you don't vote in, again, hm? You know, the ones that pretend they're communists but they're the top capitalists, that finance all these things. The top capitalists, 'eh? Folk never catch on to this game. I said, years ago, how come all these top communists are all multimillionaires? And the ones who get in on the right footing with them end up the same way themselves too. People don't figure it out, the top world banks, the banking system is part of this superstructure of total power. Always was. It's set up through the Royal Institute of International Affairs and the Council on Foreign Relations, etc. All the different groups that they have out there. They set up the World Bank. Private. They set up the IMF. Private. They set up all the other, the Bank for International Settlements. Private. They set up the system of central banking systems. Private.

They run us. We don't vote for any of this stuff. But it's essential to have all that to control the whole planet. It's to OWN the money system, even if there's nothing backing it. It's the greatest conjuring job out there, really. Yeah. It's a control factor. It's a few functions. It allows those at the top to live the life that kings and queens couldn't imagine a couple hundred years ago. The lifestyle they're living and the height of luxury they're living is astronomical.

The United Nations itself posted, because I actually wondered, because the UN, I knew it didn't care about the people, I knew what the agenda was. And they kept saying, oh, the gulf between the rich and poor is just a massive chasm now. And, you know, every year they come out with the same stories. Because they're part of it. The United Nations is the so-called embryo for world government, that everything gets signed under, [Alan laughing.] all these charters get signed under, that we don't vote for, that is not Democratic, never was, this organization plans to bring the gulf, to have it wider and wider and wider.

You've never seen the United Nations condemn the World Bank or the IMF or any of that. You never see it. What they do is demand that all the countries, that we're, our money is taken off of us to hand to these organizations out there to lend out across the planet. Not to get paid back by the way, they never do, they write it off. It's all debt, isn't it, and we're the guarantors for the debt, so they're quite happy putting loans out across the world. Always have been. Knowing they'll never get paid back by the people. But the guarantors, the public of the Western world, well, we have to pay it all off. And then they give them another loan. Because it's not… They don't care where the money goes. They've done studies on it. They don't even go and check up where the money is supposed to go in these countries. They don't care. And they hand things out to dictators that end up getting weaponry and all the rest of it. They don't care about that.

When you see things not meshing with the logic that's brainwashed into you, the supposed logic, and sanity, which is no sanity at all, it's insanity, then you know something really stinks, don't you? You should do. But don't, don't keep following along having your opinions given to you by people who know how to put the act on and put it across on television, with authority.

Look at the mess we're in... Look at the mess we're in. At one time every country out there in the West, everything you needed to survive in every, and to purchase in a country, from scissors to whatever, you know, buttons, you name it, to thread, to clothing, was all made in your own country. Everything. Think about it. Think of the levels of employment for any particular item, from raw materials up to the actual bulk whatever it was that was sold then to be made into the finished products. I mean, so many levels of employment. All gone. All… And they keep telling you that we're going to be better off. The whole reason we pay more is because they keep churning out more and more cash, at the moment, for a while... making it available... for a while. Because the money isn't even meant to be paid off by us. It's all bogus, it's backed by nothing.

But anyway, I'm going to touch on a few articles tonight because some of them may tie in with some of this that I'm talking about now. I've mentioned before too about Australia, especially. Australia gets into the paper, because different countries are picked for almost test areas for certain topics. Some of them were for using the electric cars years ago, I read the articles years ago. They had other ones too where they even had biofuel ones on little islands off of Scandinavia somewhere, where they would try biofuel out when that first came out, from plants. Take little test areas, you see, where they can study it.

They do the same thing with little areas even for their pharmacology and for inoculations and things. They come out, they can get certain areas where they can study the people, they can study the efficacy of certain drugs or whatever, or if they're of no use at all at least they can get good results and study, that is, from almost a closed society. It's like, I think it was Iceland that they, because of the people being there for centuries pretty well without too much migration into those countries, they had a pretty clean gene pool which you could study very, very well. And some Pharma companies opened the big test laboratories there for that reason, you see. So you had different places for different things.

But Australia, Australia, I read an article quite a few years back, it was just a curiosity thing, for me at the time I thought, well, why would Australia have pumped money into an experiment to see if they could create an artificial womb in a man?! And apparently, they had done it not just in that one, they had done it before, and they've done it since. To try, experiment-experiment… What's so important? I mean, you'd have to say to yourself, in that, is there going to be a shortage of women who can carry a… Because they can hire women that will do this now, they'll carry a child if they're impregnated artificially or naturally or whatever, but they'll carry someone's child to birth. I thought, well, there's no shortage of that. I mean, we might be going infertile, especially on the male side but I mean, why would they be wanting to see if men...

Was that in case somehow there'd be a disease came along? Your mind tries to be nice, try to be nice about things, right, to go along and see what's plausible. Well, maybe there'd be a virus released somehow or just develop that will wipe out all women or something. And of course, it’s not that at all. Mind you, if something can be done scientifically... And with so many universities just churning out, the universities are like machines, they just churn out people with degrees all the time, and masters and doctorates and all the rest of it. There's so many. Look at the whole environmental movement, it was nothing before, but now it's suddenly an important thing and all these folk go in there looking to get, living off grants, you see. So, they need crisis and if it's not there just create it.

So, it's the same thing everywhere, across the board. But you have folk going into this bioengineering and all this, you know, let's engineer humans. The same stuff from all the old movies that you saw, from Soylent Green, Logan's Run, all these things, you see, the eugenics program where the scientists are in control of everything, and THX 1138, same kind of thing too. That's where all the stories came from, is from… Because these people have been living under this scientific domination for a long time. A long, long time. And the scientists themselves, especially those who created the UN and so on said that, they would have to get, come up to prominence of a real authoritative power over the people and that governments would eventually come to them for advice. And they're all living on grants, as I say.

Big money. Better than most folk doing really constructive stuff. The theorists, they're all sitting there on big massive grants and deciding that they're so important that you should just obey them basically, and they have the right to take all your rights from you, to save the planet. Because they know better than you. And they couldn't think of a better idea than to terrify you about the environment to take your rights away. You see, that's what the Club of Rome, that's what they were given, that kind of job, you see. It's quite staggering to see how successful it's been. But every government signed on to it. That tells you there's a superstructure above everything, and that your governments at that level are much lower on the totem pole than the ones above. And every politician obviously is well aware of it today.

But as I say, Australia, now, they also have artificial womb programs to see about growing baby sheep. Now, these are the kind of floater ideas and little trial balloons to see if, the more articles that you see about things like that, the more you'll accept the final product down the road. You say, well, okay, oh well, so what.It's all intended and is to get you used to different kinds of humans. Until the scientists, as I've said before, can eventually make purpose made humans for different functions. That's what they want! Even NASA had stuff out on that years ago, even documentaries. So here, as I say, it's not just to see if men can carry children by artificial wombs, I still don't know if they've been successful really in Australia with the actual ones on men. And it's so secretive too, 'eh, in this great democratic system. Anyway, here's another one...

An artificial womb successfully grew baby sheep (A: Now, this is doesn't stagger me at all, and it says…)—and humans could be next theverge.com / 25 April 2019 / Rachel Becker

(A: And they go through this, what you see…)

Inside what look like oversized ziplock bags strewn with tubes of blood and fluid, (A: ...blah, blah, blah...) eight fetal lambs continued to develop (A: …etc, etc, in this particular article.)— much like they would have inside their mothers. Over four weeks, their lungs and brains grew, they sprouted wool…

(A: And it says…)

…it has only been tested on sheep.

(A: And that I don't believe that at all. Because science, as I say, if they can do it, they will do it. And science is waaay beyond, in my lifetime, way, way beyond any need, legal or otherwise, to inform the public. Absolutely. There's so many covert programs underway, definitely. This is written by a woman I think but it says…)

It's appealing to imagine a world where artificial wombs grow babies, (A: It's appealing, you see…) eliminating the health risk of pregnancy.

(A: A health RISK of pregnancy. Don't forget too, that under health, up until recently, fairly recently, having a child was a natural thing that happened. Surgery was never performed unless it was a necessary thing to save life. But when you've gone into abortions, that changed the whole game of what doctors were. It really put a stigma on the whole field of medicine. Absolutely. And it's getting worse now that, as I say, the hospitals want your organs and everything as soon as you're booked in.)

(A: You become fearful when this authority keeps giving itself more authority over you. And you're taught constantly that life is worth less and less and less. All these articles are meant to make you think life is worth less and less and less. It's like Julian Huxley said, we've got to knock humanity off its pedestal, he said, train the public that humans are just another life form, and they're not special at all, and to devalue life. The same guy that also was part of Planned Parenthood and he was all for bringing down the population, of all YOU types too, YOU types, you see, YOU types. They don't include themselves, like Charles Galton Darwin said. He says, we, the wild people, the ones who still have all our capacities, and we're wealthy and we marry the right mate sort of thing, in the same class and all that. He says, WE should have all the children. And he says the ones, these people, all the ones that they've managed to damage, should be sterilized, etc.)

(A: But here they are wanting to make sure… I mean, do you really think, do you really think… It's nothing to do with making the lambs or sheeping more profitable, sheep farms. It's to do with, again, what can they do, what can they do, what can they do, what can they do? But this to me is old stuff, this is from 2017. I read the articles on the males before that, the testing on males.

(A: And before that, I think I did a show in the 90s, where they call them arcs, there's three of them in in the States alone. Professors in universities are in charge these arcs where they have, they say they have the ovum and the sperm of all species of everything pretty well on the planet in storage. And they have also done, according to the documentary that I saw, and there was a woman professor I think from Louisiana who is in charge of one of them. She says, we've also put them together after they've been deep frozen for a long time, and it hasn't destroyed the cells, and put the fertilized ovum into, say, if they've got a dog, they could actually put it into a cow to bring it to term.)

(A: So, all this stuff is old stuff to me. The only difference in this article is, they're supposed to be trying to get an artificial womb. But they can already grow any kind of creature in any other kind of creature according to the documentaries I saw years ago. But the terminology is awfully good as I say, eliminating health RISK of pregnancy. But it says…)

But it’s important not to get ahead of the data… (A: ...etc, etc. It says it's still…)

…science fiction… (A: ...to an extent at the moment, right... They're still working towards it, obviously. And of course what they also say, it's pretty well, aid the use for premature infants, basically, where they put the children in to keep them warm and so on, at the right temperature and the right kind of humidity and everything else too, all part of it.)

But you get that article there and then you get…

No men required

I did these articles before I think. It says…

No men required: Australian women 'will be able to have babies WITHOUT males within two decades', fertility expert says
dailymail.co.uk / 11 Oct 2018

Australian women will be able to have babies without males within two decades, a fertility expert says.

(A: Again, and I love how they say, ‘fertility expert says’. What did Bertrand Russell say? We'll train the public they can't do anything or even believe anything without an expert's advice. And that's happened. That has so happened. At one time you didn't need advice on how to even have children and how to go through pregnancy, etc. It was all just quite a natural thing for thousands and thousands of years, you know. Anyway, it says…)

...breakthroughs in fertility technology

... comments come after baby mice were recently born to two mothers in China

(A: M-hm. They also did articles about the same time as this one to say that they tried it with humans, where they can actually take basically a stem cell and alter it into, and they had done all the technology and ability to alter it into any particular cell they want, including what they claimed at the time was a sperm, from a female. Huh? A cell from a female, put back into a stem cell, and then put into, made into a sperm, that's what they claimed at the time. This is a different article to do with mice instead of humans. But it says...)

…he does not see why the same feat cannot be achieved in human reproduction.

Ethics committees…

(A: Here is another thing too, by the way, I noticed my hackles go up on my hair once in a blue moon, you know, if it's not Wi-Fi, which it does for me, my hair starts to feel it, the tingles, the roots of the hair. But also, I get the same thing when something is just up and there's something you've got to take note of. I can remember when they suddenly came out and did documentaries in the 90s on television about, and in the newspapers, with bioethicists and you were introduced to the world of bioethicists. You never heard of them before, now you realize you've got professionals now that are professional bioethicists. And we all thought that we had our own ethics on things. But no, they've got the real ethics. They're the ones now who decide you should really die, you know. They're the ones who decide maybe your life isn't worth that much in the hospital. Maybe you're better off dead and maybe they could use your organs and make some money off you. That'll go to a good cause, won't it, so maybe they are some use after all. Maybe they shouldn't keep you alive, you see, because what have you got to offer at that age, whatever it happened to be. You see? You've got all these professionals ready to make you do the right thing, 'eh. Isn't that wonderful. So here this article mentions that ethics committees too...)

Ethics committees and legal prohibitions would put a stop to the process in humans but Dr Molloy said attitudes will change over time.

(A: It doesn't say you may, it says WILL change over time. Because they're working on us all, you see. So...)

Women will be able to have babies without men within two decades, an Australian fertility expert says. (A: Isn’t that wonderful.)

Dr David Molloy said pregnancies will no longer need the input of males in the future thanks to the advancements in fertility technology.

(A: Ah. Isn't it just wonderful, hm.)

'It would mean that heterosexual couples where the man has low-quality sperm, and women couples, can have their own genetic child,' Dr Molloy told the publication.

(A: So there you go, you see, because they really care, you see, they really care about women couples or male couples, you see. Do you really believe they care? Do you really believe that? The ones at the top use every possible thing to divide and conquer. But if they can experiment on any of them, they're so happy to do it. Really. Everyone's getting used here. M-hm. And why they're doing it is for reasons you'll never figure out just yet. It says…)

'I think it will be possible to fertilise an egg with a set of half chromosomes and targeted gene editing.'

(A: They've got problems at the moment from the ones from mice for instance, it says, where they've got deformities, the ones that are done in this way from mice, you see. It says some of them have a long tongue and big bodies. I guess they’re wanting long tongue humans, ‘eh, and big bodies. Mind you, if they're bigger, the body with this austerity, how are they going to get all the food to keep their body big? But there you go. You get what I'm saying here? It says…)

Scientists said the technique could one day create humans whose biological parents are two women, or two men.

Oh, it's so important that that's done, isn't it? You don't understand, they're going to bring out different KINDS of humans. They've already said in other articles, they can even make part and them animal and so on. And other science magazines and papers, University articles too and textbooks mention now they can even go ahead and start creating purpose-made, work-made humans, or creatures. So, all the steps in between are all part of that. They don't give a darn about helping you feel better about anything, it doesn't matter who you are, nothing at all. Another article…

Want to Dismantle Capitalism? Abolish the Family (A: Right?!)
thenation.com / 16 May 2019

Feminist theorist Sophie Lewis’s new book looks at how rethinking pregnancy (A: Here you go again, let's look at pregnancy again…) and the idea of family as forms of labor is central to emancipatory politics.

(A: Again, the old Marxist critical theory idea where you criticize all the past to make everything equal and so on, hey. Even though you can't even judge the past because everything was so different, vastly different before to make things happen the way that they did. Hm. So it says…)

Arguably the most infamous demand of The Communist Manifesto is the “abolition of the family.” (A: This person's 'arguably', in other words, she doesn't think, make any big deal about it. What they also noted was…) The family, Marx and Engels noted, was where patriarchy and capitalism worked in tandem to produce willing, alienated workers, where women became little more than “instruments of production” for the men who lorded over them.

You see, they're so incredibly... You can't even judge the conditions then and what happened under anything. There was no welfare back then for anybody. And people had to survive. They had to survive. And folk would come together in any way they could. Whether it was men and women or whatever, the fact is, they had to club together in marriage or whatever, just basically to survive. That was… And the guys at that time, of course, the kind of work that they did was heavy heavy heavy labor. So they got the rotten terrible deadly work, like mining and all the rest of it. They didn't have big massive machines in those days. And the guys themselves might not last long. And yeah, they would put the wives down if the man was sick, down the mines. But you can't judge by today's standard, oh, that was just so terrible. The folk had no option in those days, none at all.

Again, they're churning out these books on how, there's a whole market out there for people who just love to create division. And they're getting paid to, obviously. And they’re making more money from their books and helping to create more anger and hatred on their targeted group, whoever it happens to be. Stacks of these things out there now. Ties right in with the articles I just read too, doesn’t it?

Another article too I’m going to put up, actually it’s from the United Nations. It says…

A Healthy Planet Depends on Us All – UN Environment
unenvironment.org

(A: This is part of the indoctrinations, the short slogans, you know. That’s what Lenin said, we shall win by slogans. Little short slogans.)

A healthy environment is the foundation of human life.

(A: No kidding. M-hm.)

But we are putting the planet under enormous pressure

(A: Again, you've got to give up all your rights.)

The 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development charts a clear path forward.

(A: My goodness! Thank goodness we have these saviors that just come forward at the right time, and who tell us that we're going to pay all these massive carbon taxes, through their particular carbon exchanges, mind you, when they'll get even more rich off it like Mr. Gore and these guys. But they're really altruists that are out there to help you. And if you really believe that, well, there's no hope for you.)

(A: You have no idea of the incredible... evil, I call them evil, yep, absolutely evil crooks out there running the whole system. And they don't give two hoots for you. In fact, they want you to get depopulated. As they profit off of you. You're just animals, you see. You getting the message, you're just another animal... And you're not really necessary... And certain ones of you are less necessary than others. Hm? You getting the message? From all their highly paid spokespeople? [Alan chuckles.] I hope some of you are getting the message. So here they are...)

We work to improve air quality to protect the…

(A: Blah, blah, blah.)

We promote the protection and sustainable…

(A: Blah, blah, blah.)

We promote sustainable, low-emission transport…

(A: ...meaning, no transport at all for YOU, most of you, because you can't afford the alternatives at the moment.)

And they've already said under the agenda for the 21st century, 2030 is only part of that. Agenda 21 for the whole century literally has it all mapped out where they want to take you step by step by step. And they'll never be happy. Oh, we've achieved the carbon emission targets, then we've got less carbon emitted then we did in the, oh, 1924 or something like that. It won't ever be good enough. Because it's a con. M-hm. And one day they will start taking down the population by decree. No kidding you. And they can train you into it. Yes, they can. They can train you into anything with the techniques that they have today. Look at what the children are coming home and parroting to any parents they still have, hm, that they're getting taught in school.

Another one, too, is…

Global Environment Facility - Funding
thegef.org

(A: Do you know that existed?)

The Global Environment Facility (GEF) Trust Fund was established on the eve (A: …of guess what?...) of the 1992 Rio Earth Summit, (A: …that Maurice Strong put forward on behalf of the Rockefellers, and other owners of the planet, you see.) to help tackle our planet’s most pressing environmental problems. GEF funding to support the projects is contributed by donor countries. (A: …meaning our nations give our tax money to then. How’s that, ‘eh.) These financial contributions are replenished every four years (see GEF Replenishment documents) by the GEF 39 donor countries.

(A: And you wonder why you're so poor, folks. You've never looked to see where your money goes. And you've never looked at the quality of clothing that these folk, who are just helping, look at the quality of their lifestyle they have and their clothing and everything else that they own, and their homes and you name it, folks. That YOU are paying for. And they're going to help you by making you poorer. Huh?! Sustainable? Oy-yush.)

(A: The private World Bank that was set up by the private group called the Royal Institute of International Affairs, that owns the CFR across the planet, and owns all the other banks, right...)

The World Bank serves as the GEF Trustee, administering the GEF Trust Fund (contributions by donors). The Trustee helps mobilize GEF resources (A: Meaning… [Alan laughing.] it whips the public of every nation, you know, for taxes.); disburses funds to GEF Agencies…

(A: They’ve got all these agencies with all, you don’t even know they exist, most of the folk.)

Again, look at the quality of the clothing and their shoes and… the way they wear the airs and graces, you know, etc. They're so altruistic, these folk, who… who just know that they're there to rule you, they’ve found their natural vocation, obviously. But you didn't get to vote them in. Ha, that's quite wonderful. It's the best kind of tyranny there is. We've never had such wonderful, almost invisible tyranny as we have today, by those who have done it all. It took time. It would take maybe 100 years to bring it. Well, it's all past and gone, we're here. We're here, folks.

Al Gore of course is over in Australia there, getting paid to go over there and lecture them about it too, you know, and how they must do without this and that and the other, energy wise, and pay more money into the world system. I've mentioned before that he had set up, he pushed and pushed and pushed for all this carbon nonsense. Because he set up an organization with Blood, a company called Blood, and it was literally called Blood and Gore. I'm not kidding you. You can't make this stuff up. A carbon exchange. But they've changed the name of it now because so many people, myself included, really pushed this forward so that folk knew what was going on here. [Alan chuckles.] And of course they had to back off a bit and change the name of it. It's quite, quite comical.

But yeah, Mr. Gore, and Blood of course, Blood and Gore, there you are. That's what it all comes down to, isn't it? But I'll put the articles up about him lecturing them in Australia. And how Australia has to pay for him to get taken over there, you know, flown over, you know, and all that carbon and oh, stuff coming out of jets and stuff. It came out too about his own particular side houses for guests and that too, and just the electricity alone that he went through there, phenomenal it was. But you see, our masters are allowed to live better than you. After all, look at all the hard work they do raking in all that cash from the taxpayer to make themselves rich. Hm. Hhh, I tell ya.

Al Gore - en.wikipedia.org

I'll put sustainable development goals up too, a list of them too.

About Sustainable Development Goals- UN Environment
unenvironment.org

(A: It's got everything in there, you know, everything you can imagine, things you can't even imagine comes down under sustainability, including families and all that. You've got to understand, this is all part of it. You don't think of all that, do you, destruction and the elimination of family, and maybe even males down the road too, etc. etc. On sustainable development goals, hmmmm. Interesting, 'eh, ain't it? Think about it. Most folk don't want, again, that's negative, we can't look at that, it's too negative. It makes me unhappy. Hm. [Alan laughing.])

(A: [Alan laughing.] Oh dear, dear. Why do they give you so much pornography on television and so on? As long as you don't have children, they don't care what you do. And in fact, that's why they give you it all, it keeps you all disorientated and you know, cognitive dissonance they call it, yeah, you can't really put two and two together, and you can't memorize something for very long at all.)

GOAL 1: No Poverty

(A: No poverty is to exist on the planet. Isn't that wonderful. As they put you on the streets, hm. Because you can't live in the homes you're living in now, you know. And there'll be no work for you anyway. Right?)

GOAL 2: Zero Hunger

(A: And goal 2 is zero hunger. Right. Well they might give you all these substitute foods, but it won't be food, folks.)

GOAL 3: Good Health and Well-being

(A: You've got to understand that all the things, including some of the stuff I've talked about comes under good health and well-being. Including eliminating some of us, hm. Huh. Yes.)

GOAL 4: Quality Education

(A: Well, you can't have a, you can't indoctrinate children about the agenda unless you can get the children through mandatory education. So that's imperative obviously.)

GOAL 5: Gender Equality

(A: Right. Well, why are you trying to make mice, you know, female mice create their own, you know, male sperm and stuff now? And eventually you can do that with humans and stuff? Where's the equality here? I mean, okay, what's going on here?)

GOAL 6: Clean Water and Sanitation

(A: Hm.)

GOAL 7: Affordable and Clean Energy

(A: Yes, oh, hey, everything comes under that, affordable. You see, all these experts decide what's affordable. They'll come up with the figure and they'll say, well that's affordable, hm, you won't have any input at all. And the clean energy. Well, apart from sunlight, what's clean? When you make turbans, the cost of making them, all that stuff is manufactured and then there's furnaces involved in carbon and boom, boom, boom. And the chemicals involved just making all the different wiring and coatings and so on, yada yada yada yada, ya. They've also got articles out there on that too. I'm not making this up. This is a fact. But they are going to decide what's clean, 'eh?)

GOAL 8: Decent Work and Economic Growth

(A: Well, what have you got at the moment? They've taken all your work away through the same organization, of the World Bank, that gave you the World Bank and so on, that gave you the EU and NAFTA, and the new name for the same thing, and exported the work. They literally exported it through the GATT treaties and so on, to China. All your governments signed on that they would pay your factories and corporations to move all this stuff off to China. I've done so many shows on that years ago when it was all happening. Our tax money helped pay for them to uproot and move. And left us with what's called a service economy, eh, where things are just brought in and passed around. There's no manufacturing left.)

(A: And you're left now with a massive, top-heavy, almost a communistic system managing the dysfunction of it all with the mass unemployment, all paid by our tax money. With stacks of agencies, social work departments, welfare systems. And again, more social work departments and specialized units dealing with drugs, plagues of drugs on the streets and homeless. Huh? Think about it, 'eh. Think about it. Decent work, right. Humph. M-m-m.)

(A: And economic growth. How are you going to have economic growth when your manufacturing is gone? And the service economy only employs a small, X amount of employees? All the big superstores that are left now are putting in self checkouts. So, there's nobody working.)

(A: The government will give us tokens for money. Issued like Bertrand Russell said. And you'll have to be awfully good, and don't be an ASBO, antisocial behavior, and say something you shouldn't say, even in a quip or with how you talk, or you won't be able to pay your rents or buy food. Russell said this back in the 40s before you had the term ASBO. [Alan chuckles.])

(A: Then you've got.)

GOAL 9: Industry, Innovation and Infrastructure

(A: Well you can… play with that one. What industry?)

GOAL 10: Reduced Inequality

(A: I guess they're going to make us all the same size and everything else, hm.)

GOAL 11: Sustainable Cities and Communities

(A: ...which they're all going to be… Do you understand the control of everything I'm mentioning here, to get anything that they're wanting takes, like, Commissars, whole legions of commissars to manage it all. Sustainable cities and communities. [-Said robotically, quickly.])

GOAL 12: Responsible Consumption and Production

(A: Responsible consumption and production [-Said robotically, quickly.])

GOAL 13: Climate Action

(A: Climate action. [-Said robotically, quickly.] You know?)

GOAL 14: Life Below Water

GOAL 15: Life on Land

(A: ...and if you can live on the land, it even says that, life on land. You'll be there on the land only IF you're producing, you see, that they've been authorized to be there. Because they don't want anybody else living on the land. You're going to get crammed into cities, sustainable cities, you see, etc., etc.)

So I'll put these articles up. Another one, too, is...

Former US vice president Al Gore will lead a three-day climate change lecture in Queensland – and you'll be paying for the venue
dailymail.co.uk / 24 May 2019

(A: As he comes over there to tell you what to do, 'eh.)

•Mr Gore will speak at the Minister's Climate Change event in Brisbane
•The cost of the event has seen Queensland Government fork out about $142K

(A: Ha!, so they can tell you you're... you're producing too much carbon, and you're not eco-friendly, and you know, put your tax money through Mr. Gore's carbon exchange and, you know.... Okay. But it's got it here and I'll see if I can find that one other one too, I've got with the proper name of Blood and Gore's new name for the company. There ya go.)

Generation Investment Management - en.wikipedia.org

So they lecture everybody in this university about climate change, you know. An Inconvenient Spoof... I think it's called. But it's really something, isn't it, isn't it really, m-hm, what we're living through.   Also...

UN Environment 2018 Annual Report
unenvironment.org / 7 March 2019

People and Programs

The United Nations Environment Programme is committed to working with everybody at all levels of society to support the implementation of the SDGs by addressing environmental issues and ensuring a long, healthy future for people and planet.

(A: Have you been invited, folks? Can you afford to jet set across the world to exotic places, where they eat exotic foods at these big big events, and they wear exotic clothing, very wealthy, you know? Can you manage that? Mmmmmm. No, you won't even hear about it, because you won't be asked. And it says...)

The implementation of the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development Goals and its 17 SDGs officially began on 1 January 2016, as the UN family, (A: You see, we're all family, you understand, only in the family you've got bosses in the family, you know, maybe bosses bosses, big sisters and big brothers and stuff that are, decided to rule you and all that, you know.) nations, businesses, civil society and many others looked to how they can transform the very way we live.

(A: Well, maybe we don't want to transform the VERY way we live. Especially into the way that you want us to exist. It won't be living. It will be maybe existing as we go down the tubes. But that's the agenda too, isn't it?)

How can you say you're Democratic if you have no say in this stuff? And these organizations, nobody, no member of the public got a chance to vote for these things to be set up, you know. M-hm.

Again, getting back into the communist capitalists, you see. Because everybody out there in society, I'm tellin' ya, they're all bought and paid for. Have been for a while. I used to laugh about this in the Cold War, and it was even more obvious in the US. The top communist leaders were all multimillionaires, yeah. In Britain they tried to hide it a bit, but it still broke out through too. Here's one too about the top Labour Party they called them at the time, the member of Parliament Jeffrey Robinson, who's been lifelong in politics, but also a massive businessman. He eventually became a massive businessman and multimillionaire and all that.

Great friends he had, he was given massive amounts of money by Maxwell, remember Maxwell too that owns newspapers and had a massive Ponzi scheme. And, well, they say he died way out in the, oh I don't know what sea he was in, he maybe fell off his yacht or something. He was a pal of these characters, these top, top, you know, member, Labour Party, multimillion-pound Labour people, you know. Labour, people who have never ever got a spade out in their lives and dug up any ground and planted a turnip. You know. To them we are the turnips. Yep. Seriously. But I'll put this article up. This guy literally was passing secrets of the British government and the military, for his whole darn working life, to the Communists in the Cold War. And afterwards too [Alan chuckles.] I think as well. And someone out there, they’re admitting it, they kind of found this out.

But it says...

'Robinson spilled his guts over dinner - and the contents of his briefcase':
What Czech files (A: He was passing it on to the Czechoslovakian version of the KGB, they all passed it on up to Moscow.) claim about how Tony Blair's minister handed over sensitive documents at a Pimlico restaurant - dailymail.co.uk / 25 May 2019

By the way, I mean, there's many of them who belonged to the, they used to call it the Trotskyist Party at the time, and Peter Hitchens has mentioned it as well. He still knows a lot of them were full card-carrying communists at the time, that are now top Labour members. Guess who they are? You can guess yourself. But they, yeah, all the rich ones, you know. I’ll put these articles up. It's interesting to me, these articles anyway. Then...

Greed, power, Maxwell - and how Geoffrey Robinson's millions bewitched Blair and Mandelson - dailymail.co.uk / 25 May 2019

Remember those names from not so long ago, when they all went on board for the war against Iraq and so on? Blair got the whole of Britain dragged into it, and Mandelson was his right-hand man and all that. Remember that, you know? And how, it says here that they were all bewitched by Maxwell at the time, from years ago. Because Maxwell had soo much money. He gave some of them like over 200 million at a time. Big, big money, you know, big big loans and... n-n. Yeah, it's great being a communist, isn't it? Yep. And running the government. Yeah. And then this one’s...

Do handwritten notes in Robinson file (A: They've declassified some of the ones, the stuff that he passed on.) prove he spied for the Czechs? (A: ...the Communists.) Expert says it's highly likely these WERE written by the same person - dailymail.co.uk / 25 May 2019

They show you some of them here. The fact is that they've all the admissions now from the secret police and so on, from the communist countries admitting that he was one of their best informants and spies in Britain.

It doesn't matter. Folk don't care now. Because you know, what is there left to save now? Look at the homelessness. Look at the drug addiction across the streets in the UK. Look at the mess of it all, huh, look at the mess of it all. Degeneracy, everything. A complete war, total war. It was awfully successful, hasn't it?

You couldn't, you see, you can't change where they're going into this whole controlled world society without destroying the cultures and the people and everything that made them strong, including right down to the basic stuff, can even the genders get along and have a purpose together, hm? Destroy it all. Destroy it all. Make it completely dysfunctional. Make the whole nation bankrupt with it all, crime, you name it, you know, drugs galore. But then you bring them, well we've got the answer, we're bringing in a world society and all our new commissars are going to manage your lives for you, from birth to death. So...

Generation Investment Management
en.wikipedia.org

Generation Investment Management LLP (Generation IM) is a sustainable investment management firm, (A: It's sustainable, it will keep getting profits forever.) founded in 2004. It was co-founded by former US Vice President Al Gore and Goldman Sachs' Asset Management head David Blood.

(A: There's Blood and Gore. But it's now called Generation Investment Management. There you are, that your tax money is going to go through. And they can trade carbon credits and all that stuff and make fortunes off it. Making fortunes off nothings, you see, big bags of nothings. They can trade these big bags of nothing. Yep. And they get all the free carbon trading, millions of dollars worth, every big company to started off with. They tried this before across Europe, you see.)

Generation has offices in both London and San Francisco and employs 87 people. Generation Investment Management LLP is authorized and regulated by the Financial Conduct Authority in the UK.

(A: I have no doubt too they've got lots of friends there, that probably put them there. [Alan laughing.] A bit of humor doesn't... It doesn't go bad, does it, a bit of humor, if you can get it now and then, don't you?)

The firm's advisory board, chaired by [Alan coughs.] Al Gore (A: Al Gore himself...), meets twice a year. (A: So no wonder, he's got a big, big stake in all this stuff. He helped start up the big scam. He saw early when Maurice Strong and the rest of them had set it all up, you see. We'll terrify the public and say they're all going to kill themselves if we don't step in and manage the planet for them and manage their lives. Okay. Is there profit here? Oh, masses of money to be made. Ho-ho-ho, okay. There you go.) The board consists of business leaders, industry experts (A: ...again, that expert thing.), and other luminaries. (A: No kidding, luminaries, 'eh. Wow. There ya go.) The board helps establish a macro framework of trends and ideas.

The firm began investing client money in April 2005. Its breakthrough was integrating the disciplines of finance and sustainability.

(A: So hence those words are awfully important, finance and sustainability, hm. There ya go. Sustainable, that word sustainable can make multimillionaires very quickly. If you can get recognized by the United Nations. And then United Nations makes sure every country signs on to it, and bingo, you've got big money to set it off, and then you can get a finger in the pie of the taxpayer and start, you know, throwing a few... a few coppers here and there in your own direction. There you go. Nice, 'eh?! There ya go.)

In 2014, Generation launched Climate Solutions Fund II (A: Isn't that wonderful, they keepcoming up with great ideas.) and the foundation partnered with George Serafeim. In 2015, Generation launched the Sustainability Insights Series, releasing "Environmental Intelligence" and "The Power Industry in Transition." (A: Wow!) In the same year, Generation became a Certified B Corp.

So there you are. Everything that industry and... Even the energy in your home from electricity to everything that you use that's for power, is now under their auspices now. They got their finger in what you use and what you need and everything else. It used to be called monopolies and you know, things like that, and oligarchs, but they don't say it, and I think they're all corporations now, they're there to help you.

Remember what, getting back to what Julian Huxley said? Julian Huxley, he went on and on about knocking humanity off its pedestal as the supreme being on the planet, and they have to be taught, they'd have to be taught they're just another animal basically. Because you see, he wanted to bring in a very drastic reduction in population by training them to kill their own kinds off and stuff like that. You see, first you've got to dehumanize them. And you're getting trained to be, in dehumanization all the time, folks. Under the guise of freedom. Oh, we're freer. Yeah, before we couldn't just throw ourselves in with drugs and that and have sex all over the place before, you know. And all the fallout from all that, it's all taken care of by the state, 'eh? We're free, right? Okay.

Calgary police let organ donors off for minor traffic violations
cbc.ca / 15 April 2019

(A: You see, again, the little mousetrap, 'eh? Whether it's a genetically modified mouse, I don't know, I've only read the article. But anyway, there's the mousetrap. They call it mousetraps in marketing, put something out and say it's free or something, get little freebies to the public and they jump at it, and then you've caught them, you see, you've caught them. That's what all your convenience cards are for, you get a few bucks off every week if you buy the stuff. But they've got all your data, and you've got to use the card and all that, hey? So here you are, organ donors get off for minor traffic violations, you see, if you're pulled over by the police. So, you won't get a ticket or anything because you're a registered organ donor.)

Instead of a fine, drivers receive a warning — if they're a registered organ donor.

There you go. Is that not discriminatory or what? Isn't that a bit of a coercion too? What do you think's happening as you get dehumanized and the value of your life, from all the data, in real time, every day, it's updated on everybody, automatically by the computer system. Your DNA... And you schmucks are even putting it out there for them to try to find your ancestry. You give it all to them and they're using it, 'eh. [Alan chuckles.] You fall for it all, you really do. But if you've got the right DNA for some rich sod out on the planet somewhere, who's very wealthy, do you think eventually they might just get to that stage where it, you know, they'll know where you are because you're driving your vehicle and you know, they've got that monitored everywhere you go blah, blah, blah, blah, blah, that certain things could be arranged if it's a bit of a desperate thing that's needed for someone who's important? and you're not so important?

Just an idle thought, daydream, you know, just daydreaming. Because we live in such a civilized society. The same civilized society, remember, that Madeleine Albright when she was up there, when they were starving Iraq before they bombed it into oblivion and the Stone Age. They starved it through sanctions and kept them from getting food and everything else and medical aid in. On television she was asked in an interview, she says, well, you know, that operation that you were in charge of and so on, for when she was the politician in charge of whatever it was for the embargo, you know, it killed over 500,000 women and children, starved to death, and couldn't even get medications in... was it worth it? She says, oh yes, I thought it was quite worth it. Civilized, aren't we? And you think you're so important they might just not go after you for your particular DNA and that liver you've got? Dream on, folks. That's the world we live in. And it's getting, hhhk, because you're already believing in it, dehumanization. Well, yeah, you know, sure. Yep, IQ's plummeted.

Another one is this article here on...

Drug overdose deaths top 70,000, drive down U.S. life expectancy - nbcnews.com / 28 Nov 2018

There's never been so much drugs, highly, quickly addictive drugs, we haven't seen them like this before, just boooffff. And your government doesn't stop it? Do you really believe they can't stop it? Do you really believe that? Hm? So I'll put some up on the National Center for Health Statistics on some of the overdose death rates for drugs and so on.

Overdose Death Rates - drugabuse.gov / Jan 2019

And...

Almost one in three drugs overdoses in Europe recorded in UK (A: ...happen in the UK.) - theguardian.com / 6 June 2017

I said that years ago, I says from watching the BBC dramas it depresses you so much that, ohhh, there's nothing left to live for after you watch it. I'm not kidding you, they churned out so much depression, depressing, depression, depressing stuff for years and years and years, that no one could watch it. They'd run off and see their doctor for antidepressants. That's serious. And don't forget, the BBC is the government, it's not just the government, the British government, I think the CIA actually have shares in it too, the Crown shares too, from an article I read quite a few years back. No kidding you. Almost one in three drug overdoses in Europe are recorded in the UK... That's because they're doing so well with, you know, with being in the European Union and being postindustrial and all that, you know, a service economy.

Also got more and more folk, now that I mean marijuana.... You see, my big objection to this is that governments now, government agencies now promoted the whole darn thing. And folk who worked in governments and work in government are the shareholders of it all. When they're pushing stuff, you'd better believe they have other agendas at work here. And people who are really sick and in awful pain, I've had folk even write into me, they wouldn't even give them painkillers after a complete hysterectomy, some women who've had problems, you know, and it's necessary, and they can't even get painkillers now. Oh, we don't want to addict them. You understand what's going on here? Eventually ALL you'll get is marijuana… government authorized from government agencies and big corporations that are in league with government and so on. There you go.

It's also getting more common obviously. Obviously, every youngster thinks, if parents say this is legal it must be all right. So they start earlier and stuff. Anyway…

Killer driver is FINALLY unmasked: Police officers' son, 18, who was spared jail despite ploughing into and killing two pedestrians in his parents' Audi while high on cannabis is pictured for first time - dailymail.co.uk / 27 May 2019

They've had stacks of this stuff; they've kept it quiet. They're going to have, obviously, the right programs we have to go in, oh, here we go again. The folk are not into all this stuff, or even into the drinking and driving too, same thing. You all have to go under the… It's like there's a terrorist somewhere on the planet so you all have to be spied on by your governments. Huh? Or, there's a drug here and there so you all have to go through this, 'eh. M-hm.

Evan Horowitz: IQ rates are dropping in many developed countries and that doesn't bode well for humanity - nbcnews.com / May 22, 2019

Well it's working, the agenda is working, isn't it. Because that used to be pretty well innate, you were born with it and...   But they've been up on this for years and every year you get some of the UN departments come out with their own statistics on it too. And there's never a, oh, this is a crisis thing from them. It's the same with folk going sterile. If folk are going sterile and sterile and sterile, how come that favorite word that they have when they try to rush into something, why is it never used, oh, this is a crisis? They never mention that. It means they know what's happening with fertility, certainly happy about it, it's meant to be, hm? And since IQ has been dropping for years too, oh that's meant to be as well. They know it. They want it.

In this article too on Australia, as Mr. Gore is there to lecture them on putting more money his way into, you know, into those different, there's different carbon exchanges, all with very important people that you're going to funnel your money through. Including a world one by the way. I did the article years ago, they call them Green Banks. And our favorite bankers had one I think in Switzerland they said, a lot of it will go through there too. Can you imagine the interest overnight on a loan when countries are putting all this fake nothing's through? You know, money for nothing. That's a good song that is, Money for Nothing and Your Kicks for Free. We get kicked and the guys get money for nothing, the big bags of nothing carbon. Nothing, yeah. Just imaginary, yeah. A trace, a trace gas... That's completely invisible. It doesn't cause haze or anything.

Gore's over there in Australia, this politician in Australia says, Barnaby Joyce, it says...

'These people don't have electricity mate': Barnaby Joyce says voters are more interested in affordable power than climate change policy in fiery rant
dailymail.co.uk / 21 May 2019

•He said more than 100,000 families (A: ...in his area.) went without power because bills too high

I had to laugh too when I mentioned earlier about the feminist who's raking the cash in on books, and her favorite enemy, which is men, how bad they are for the family and all that and how the family should get abolished. But, here's another one, Naomi Wolf has made a good career on this.

Feminist author Naomi Wolf learns in a live radio interview that her new book contains fundamental factual blunder - and the men she insisted were executed for sodomy in Victorian London were actually PARDONED
dailymail.co.uk / 25 May 2019

(A: Well, facts don't matter for goodness sake, 'eh.)

•Naomi Wolf, 56, was doing a BBC radio interview to promote her book 'Outrages'

(A: I thought it was going to be Outages, because power. But no, it's Outrages.)

•In it she refers to dozens of men being executed for sodomy in Victorian London

(A: It just shows you how they'll jump on anything and make it, oh, our favorite target, 'eh, make money off anger. Ooo.)

•But British interviewer Matthew Sweet pointed out a fatal factual blunder

(A: And they show you articles from the period, about the ones that she was on about. It says...)

•At Old Bailey (A: ...in London.) the sentence of 'death recorded' was legalese (A: ...speak...) for a judicial pardon

(A: They didn't kill them at all. Britain didn't go through that kind of stuff for sodomy. Nope. It says…)

•In fact no man was executed for sodomy in Victorian Britain, Sweet argued

•Wolf acknowledged her error but insists her overall thesis holds true

(A: [Alan laughing.] What is her overall… What is it, men are all just, oh, and these guys are no different, you see, they're just bad?)

•She was an adviser to the presidential campaigns of Bill Clinton and Al Gore

(A: Again, favorite crooks, 'eh. That's my opinion, you're a crook certainly. M-hm. So it says she was corrected on the radio show and...)

Wolf was stunned to learn of her mistake in an interview on Thursday with BBC Radio 3 journalist Matthew Sweet, who gently pointed out that she had misinterpreted the British legal term 'death recorded.'

'I found, like, several dozen executions,' Wolf told Sweet of her research into Old Bailey prosecutions of sodomy in the 1800s, for her new book, [Spoken very boldly!!!...] Outrages: Sex, Censorship And The Criminalization Of Love.

(A: Look at the mess we're in today where you've got people in the street flogging their bodies, kids, for drugs. There's free love for ya, there's where it got ya. Hm? And the folk don't even care anymore, even when it's all over the place. Destroyed. The end of war. And this is the kind of stuff, rhetoric that they put out there that's part of the war, you see, to make it worse and worse and worse. Criminalization Of Love. It says...)

'I don't think you're right about this,' Sweet fired back. 'Death recorded is what's in most of these cases that you've identified as executions. It doesn't mean that he was executed.'

(A: And they go into it, right.)

'It was a category that was created in 1823 that allowed judges to abstain from pronouncing a sentence of death on any capital convict whom they considered to be a fit subject for pardon,' Sweet said.

'I don't think any of the executions you've identified here actually happened,' he continued.

Stunned, Wolf replied: 'Well, that's a really important thing to investigate.'

(A: ...you know, really ticked off, I guess.)

Sweet zeroed in on a particular case presented on page 71 of Wolf's book, that of teenager Thomas Silver, (A: The way she painted it you see, it was... you know.) whom she writes was 'actually executed for committing sodomy.'

(A: Right, teenager, poor guy. You see, again, go into the past when, you know. Anyway...)

'Thomas Silver wasn't executed,' Sweet says in the interview, producing a contemporary newspaper clipping (A: They actually have, of the actual period, the newspaper...) showing that Silver's sentence was commuted.

(A: And her point was that, that's the terrible society, you see, and that's how they treated this kind of thing back then, just men, love men, you see, that's how she was pushing it. But the thing was, though, this guy that they commuted him off with it, he was actually found guilty, and it says, it was because he had grabbed a six-year-old boy. There's another oops, thing. Oh, ooops. [Alan laughing.]   Oops. [Alan laughing.] So it's quite something. So that's what it says here, it says...)

A newspaper clipping from the time shows that Silver's automatic death sentence was commuted, as well as that his crime was much more serious than Wolf indicated

Sweet also pointed out that the nature of Silver's crime was more disturbing than Wolf's description of an 'unnatural offense.'

The Express reported that Silver, then 17, was convicted for indecently assaulting a six-year-old boy, adding that 'the evidence was totally unfit for publication.'

(A: ...at the time, you see.)

Jail records show that Silver served a prison term in Newgate.

You see, it's so easy to go in and paint a story because you've got this angst and you know it's going to sell books, 'eh, to the popular segments of society that have been literally weaponized, you know. It's sad, isn't it. It's just... How can you possibly have any functioning society when it's so corrupted, and divided, by so many segments that are deliberately out there, and with incredible funding a lot of these people. I see, always a warfare tactic, all these things. And it was meant to be from even the times of Julian Huxley. He was adamant about the agenda. So was Karl Marx of course. Karl Marx, of course. Where did he live? He lived in London, 'eh. Access to the British Library. By this totalitarian British system, 'eh, they give him access to the library. And he was given access to all the incredibly rare books and everything, of histories and goodness knows what for such a long time. By this rotten terrible Britain system. No, he worked for, as far as I'm concerned, those who ruled the system. That's what I can say for sure.

Whenever people try to get you riled up, about what's now called popular marginal areas and so on and divided society, if someone's trying to rile you up, making you get all emotional and angry, you're getting used. As far as I'm concerned, you're getting used. That's the first indication in psychological warfare of you've just lost, when you become emotional. Your logic must guide you with reason, and facts. And you must decide for yourself. Because you see, emotion is put across in such a tremendous way, of almost neuro-linguistical science, of people who are trained in it, to guide you into a state of anger, and not to use your reason or logic. And they certainly won't give you the facts.

For across the board, for all the different sections out there, be careful.And if you join a lot of these different groups, you're getting used, for agendas which are utterly destructive to all of us, ALL of us in the long run. Because only through destruction can the big folk at the top step in eventually, all these agencies that are all set up quietly and covertly, and say, well we're stepping in to take over society, now that you're all in such, you're in such chaos. Order out of chaos, here we are, we are the order.

You'll be such a dysfunctional mess you'll probably cry for them. What was it that Rockefeller said when he talked about some of this agenda? Rockefeller, remember, and his dad Old Rockefeller, he said that, competition was a sin, as he took over and have monopolies over all the things that you needed. Food, fuel, for industry and everything, complete monopolies. They've never changed. The same organization that the Royal Institute of International Affairs belong to, take over all the resources of the planet, and then bring in the scientific experts to rule the public, depopulate, etc. But you'd have to, folk wouldn't give up their rights so you create crisis after crisis after crisis until you literally, you'll have a population at the end of a war, which everyone won't even know they've been in it, they're just part of it, it will be so dysfunctional and chaotic, he says, they'll come to us with perfect docility. That's what Rockefeller said. How do you think they would get us to come with perfect docility? We're here to help you, look at the poor mess you're in, you poor people, look at the mess you're in. But you can't live like you've lived before, with rights and demands. You have to follow what we say here if you want to survive. Live in the cramped city. Eat what we give you the eat. You can't breed so we prefer it if you got sterilized. Unless you're one of the worker helpers and you can actually earn the right to produce children, maybe one or two.

Not kidding you. I'm not making this stuff up. This is stuff they talked about, and Charles Galton Darwin did too. And the Huxley's. And the Russell's. And the Macy group. And all the other groups out there, that all work together to make this happen. And the Maurice Strong's, that you never voted for into anything.

Anyway, that's it's for today, sorry to say. But it's important that I put so much of it in, you can't really do a talk without cramming so much in I suppose. It's not a downer. This is not a downer. You see, knowledge is power. And if you're fortified with knowledge, this, it teaches you of how to avoid so many pitfalls. And if you've gone into the pitfalls, and everybody can and will occasionally, it tells you how to get out of them. You can use your own mind, your own ability and you can feel stronger for it too.

But whatever you do, be careful of all the different authorize groups out there and authorized leaders of different things... who are the real haters, that's all they promote is targets. They target groups and they are authorized to target different group, and genders, they target everything. And everybody falls into a camp. And they're all getting used. Because really, the war is upon the people. This means the people all have to come together here, all of them. Because what's happening is the most hellish thing that this world has ever seen, it's the most dangerous thing we've ever, ever had to cope with.

For myself Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on June 2, 2019. I hope you're all surviving this wonderful break into summer. Because it's been pouring rain an awful lot up where I am and I'm back to wondering if I should build an ark. Again, it's reminiscence of previous years, except last year was the normal one which was nice and dry. And there were some apparently man-made fires, forest fires in the area, man caused, but it was a nice summer regardless because it kept the mosquitoes down. Now they're back to this constant gray sky thing, almost constant because there's the occasional day that it isn't totally dark, but most of them are so far or have been. It's pretty unpleasant.

The amount of rain we're getting too is rather unpleasant. But the mosquitoes love it. You can hear them outside the windows in a chorus just saying they're taking over, you see they're getting very cocky again. And bites galore of course if you dare go outside. And when you shut the door outside, you close it behind you, there's just the waft of it brings millions in with you. That's the problem. So you've got the pleasure of meeting them one by one for the next few hours, or maybe all night long. Even in bed you wake up and your neck's all bitten with these mosquitoes. And you hear that thing zzing, that zzing, it just wakes you up. It must be a primordial memory or something, you've got this memory of this zzzzzzzzz, from the cavemen, hey, and it wakes you up immediately.

I think that's really what encouraged the cavemen to put a door on his cave eventually, that became a house, and of course real estate started to flourish and now we can't afford the houses anymore and we're going back to the caves. But that's the state of things as we so-call progress along this progressive planned system. What gets me too today is, again, as I say, we've moved another chapter into the progressive system, a planned system where media, going back a few years mind you, took a big dive. It was already a dive anyway, a lot of the media, just with opinions and reporters giving nasty commentaries about different people or whatever it happened to be.

But the thing is, eventually they had the Leveson Inquiry in Britain, and they had the one in Australia and other Commonwealth countries, just in tandem, and they came out with new laws and restrictions on media. So you don't get really much investigation at all into reporting. It's all… Safe reporting today means simply republishing the handouts that government and top agencies give you. That's what they do and that's how they get their money. That's authorized stuff, you see. And it's safe. There's nothing in it to cause offense, they think. Hmph. But as far as anything with any grit in it at all, it's pretty well taboo. You can still slang politicians because that's what they're there for. Because they're not really making the majors decisions on top.

But you'll notice we're in a kind of limbo, because since the Levinson Inquiry pretty wellall the news you're getting is just straight handouts from government departments. Even through PR companies for governments in fact and different agencies too. And lots of the health things that they hand out too are simply ads for this and ads for that. And the rest of it is photographs, like the Daily Mail, they've got stacks of photographs to try and trap you and make you go ooo, aaa, ooo, aaa, for hours on end. And that's fair enough if they want to because they have to make their money somehow. But what happens to the stars, the so-called stars, actors and actresses, etc., or models or whatever it happens to be, that's not news. That really isn't news.

News is supposed to be, to do with things that affect all of us, you see. That's what it always was before. News at one point, like the fourth estate, was to inform the public, like a medium between government and agencies and authority and the general public. That was supposedly what they gave themselves, the kind of title. But of course, it was a con then too because they all did the right things, and they were all looking for, in Britain especially, they were all looking for their Knighthoods, etc. Which is a big thing today. There's more folk from the Labour Party seeking knighthoods over the years, according to some articles out there. It's quite astonishing, really. Or is it really, 'eh? Is it really? And they grovel as soon as they've seen that possibility of a knighthood.

But that's the system in which we live today, you don't really get... you get declarations from governments. Now, Britain has been awfully good at that, the declarations. Even during all the real heavy socialist area where it's more obvious, when Harold Wilson was in. You could tune into BBC radio and listen to the department of so-and-so and the Ministry of Agriculture has declared blah blah blah, and the Ministry of Fisheries has declared blah blah blah. And they can tune into radio Moscow and you get the exact same format, in English, hm, because they had an English version, the exact same. And you swear it was all coming from the same place. Mind you, after the so-called abandonment of the Soviet Union, you find so many of the radio hosts in Russia had been trained and [Alan laughing.] enabled by the BBC. [Alan laughing.] That's good. Which again, puts up a bit of a farce on a lot of the agenda that we're given.

But today they're back on the same roll again, as the occasional declaration here and there. But you have to really search for it, they're not going to hand it out to you happily. Because they don't want you involved in anything. Remember, a democracy is supposed to be informed consent for the public to accept anything. It's a nice joke, I know that. But it's, you know, the intentions are there, I suppose, they're nice intentions. It sounds nice. But in reality, they don't want public input when there's some laws coming up or something to be debated in government. Because then you'll get immediately, hopefully, you know, more so in the US of course, citizens organizations immediately wanting some input. And at least some output from what they're up to. That way you could stop, hopefully, or sway something, or alter something that's going to be put upon the people.

But nowadays you only find out about things that have happened, often after the fact. They don't want your input; therefore, they don't tell you. They've been training the public, I've said this for years, to sit back and allow yourself to be governed by these experts. And the experts are not the politicians. The civil service bureaucracies are far more important. They have heads of different departments in civil service, in every country, that have long-term, they have their whole life career there basically. They know what's going on and they know what they're about basically, and how the system works. Whereas with politicians they have what's called musical chairs. If they screw up in one department, getting put as the head of it basically, they move them to another department. Of course, then they ask the top civil servants to issue them with, you know, things to say and read and tell the public. That's how it's done. So really, the civil service is awfully important. As every government knows.

Today of course they just simply don't want you involved in the knowing, or certainly not the debating of any up-and-coming big agendas. And everything really today is one big global agenda. It really is. It truly is. It's so comical to read, ha, the guff [Alan chuckles.] they give you for news. [Alan chuckles.] And you're supposed to believe it. It truly is the biggest drama, a very... I guess it's, I don't know if it's a good drama, good soaps or not good soaps, I never watched soaps, I couldn't stand them. But it's halfway okay, you know, for soaps, I suppose. Because that's what you're getting. That's all you're getting. In Britain they had them on suspenders for, as we say in Britain, you're on suspenders for about two years while they're waiting for this BREXIT thing, and, is May going to pull you out or is she not going to pull you out? Does that clause 50 or whatever, article 50, and keep you in, yada, yada, ya? And they played it out awfully well just dragging it on. Because they kept going with the article, I think it's article 50, then you'll find that Brussels has the right to tell them the terms, you see. Which would not be nice. But if they just toss it out and say we're going this way and that's it, then Brussels has to come to them. And then Britain was... That's how they play it to the public anyway.

It's so interesting to see that Britain was one of the main countries, it's actually the main country initially to start it off with for a global world system. The government system for the whole planet through the Royal Institute of International Affairs. They boasted about it, it's in all their books. They set up the secret organization, well, secretive organization by recruiting people who would become politicians, in all parties, at the heads of them, to help not just in Britain but in all the British Commonwealth countries, to bring this about. Then again, they turned a lot of it over to the US because Britain was broken after two world wars. They were intended eventually to bring in a world system because everybody was so sick of war, which made you sick of nations, you see. They used that as the excuse, if it wasn't for nations, you wouldn't have international war, m-hm, between nation-states as they call it.

So the wars were awfully good, but they didn't get the global system. They did get out of it, though, the secretive arrangement for a United Europe. And out of it too, they had the American Summit group and then the free-trade negotiations and that became the NAFTA, and it's now the new name. But it's the same organization, exactly, nothing's changed for the Americas. So that was all part of the old old plan before they even had World War I. It's documented. It's not conspiracy stuff. It's all documented by the organizations themselves in books put out at the top, not just by Carol Quigley but many members belonging to, say, the CFR in the US, for instance. And even for the Fortress American group, they came out in Canada and the States on behalf of the CFR by the head of the CFR at the time, it was Lloyd Axworthy. He had been deputy prime minister of Canada just before that. They came out as the CFR talking about the need to integrate all of the Americas under one system.

So we continue with it all of course. And now they'll be using climate change, and everything else you can dream up, you know, bogus enemies, etc., to bring it all about. Including the very old agenda going all the way back, probably even before Thomas Malthus to do with population reduction. As we well know, of course, facts don't matter… We well know that the more employment people have with a decent wage, etc. and sure enough, just like Charles Galton Darwin said, they can be enticed to have a motorcar, he says, as opposed to having children. So in other words, the materialistic benefits will make them not want to have so many children. And that has been awfully successful as we know, in the West. Coupled with mass, the mass promiscuity agenda, the more you stay single and have lots of sexual partners then the less likely you are to have a permanent one, nor want children. So that's been awfully successful too.

This is all by design, I hope you understand that. It didn't happen by itself. Because instinct is very, very strong. You're born with these instincts. And of course, the mating instinct is what preserved humanity. If you don't live in a tribe where the whole tribe looks after the children, then, in the Western countries certainly, it didn't to that extent, even though within tribes they still had families. Because the whole tribe can't, in a moneyed system you can't afford to take care of the children so it's up to the individuals who have the children to take care of themselves. So that's what the family always was for. But in the welfare system and in the social system the idea was to wean it off that, they actually said that in all the writings at the top, that if they could just, in psychology that is, if they could just train the public to have sex, and not to have bonding. The bonding is what, that was their main enemy. So the more sexual partners you have and the more it's promoted in a sexual cultural, meaning entertainment system, then the less chances that you have of permanent bonding.

And even if there's something there to begin with in a couple, if you're watching television you're going to be awfully, awfully unhappy with, it doesn't matter who your partner is after a while. Because it's meant to make you dissatisfied. In fact, everything on television with commercials is meant to make you dissatisfied with everything you personally have. That's the whole point of commercials. So, you get that particular thing that's missing in your life, obviously it's that chewing gum or whatever it is, and your whole life is going to be just hunky-dory. So, you've got to be unsatisfied or dissatisfied with whatever you have at the time. And that's how simply it is to work. It works awfully well.

So as I say, the targets are obvious. It's been very successful. And then the promotion of single-parent families, and housing too. Tony Blair really revamped all of that because they wanted to encourage women to have just children, if they wanted children, but don't have husbands. There's even articles out now in fact, again, the same articles by experts, an expert here and an expert there, who have always got books out of course, telling you that single women are much happier and live longer than married women. And of course, they don't give you the statistics to show it. But then that's how it's done, isn't it?

Who needs real true checkable facts when you're promoting an agenda? Hm? Everything's like that, isn't it? It's like the spraying the sky, you're not supposed to ever notice it. They even had all these, whenever you find anything to do with scientific facts, and observational fact, hm, like when in 1998 in Canada when they really, in Ontario at least, they started spraying the skies daily. And it was so obvious. And they were much, much, much lower when they were doing the crisscrossing back then too. It was like walking into a sci-fi movie at the time, that's what it was like! It truly was. It was perfect, perfect checkerboard pattern but so much lower, wide white trails, because it was low. And you weren't supposed to notice it.

And most folk, it would surprise me, I talked to a few folks that day and pointed it out, and they would say, oh, yeah, yeah, oh. But they won't take anything that's startling unless, because they really do think as Zbigniew Brzezinski said, that the media and the news is there to do their reasoning for them. And if you are not told to be aware of something, or to be on the alert or lookout for something, then obviously it's not very important. That's how simple it is to do outrageous things on the public and they're completely oblivious of it.

They will just… If they would dis... I mean, it should have freaked them all out! Something in your environment changes instantly like that, you've never seen it before... It wasn't a few trails; it was literally from horizon to horizon... These big thick... I mean, when you put your arm up in front of you these trails were so low, they were as thick as your forearm, as your forearm would be from your eyes. It was freakish, it really was.

It was the same time too, the same year when they brought in what they called downbursts, this new term downbursts. You might see that downbursts are happening, the sudden blasts coming down from the sky, and even doing straight lines through forests, absolutely straight lines like a highway through forests and things like that. All brand-new phenomena. And they said that it took the upper part of a building off outside Toronto I think it was, this sudden downburst. But get used to the terms they're giving you. Then you had noctilucent clouds floating across the sky at night, glowing in red and yellow and all this kind of stuff. And then they, oh yeah, people saw that hundreds of years ago, says old Indian legend.

I mean, they come out with this stuff as they're doing new stuff, obviously, all the time and super heating the atmosphere. Then you had the HAARP project out and that was the first time they admitted that they had it in Alaska. But now they have them all over the place. They can even use whole arrays of them, individual arrays, across miles and miles or even across the country, that work in unison occasionally and they can triangulate where they're projecting the power source, they're super heating the atmosphere, and then cause amazing changes in the weather and the atmosphere. Amazing things they can cause, for sure. And a lot of universities have their mini-HAARPs, all parts of this huge array system that they have.

So, we live in a scientific age of scientific supremacy, they say, whatever you're looking at you have an expert telling you what to do. Like Bertrand Russell said, he says, we'll train them, he says, until women can't or anybody couldn't change a diaper on a child without expert advice and to be shown how to do it. That has come to pass now. We now also have bioethicists, I did a show years ago on that when they first gave it to the public. They launched them on television and across all the newspapers, this so-and-so says, this bioethicist has declared… These people, who are only human beings like you and I, are given special abilities, special insights over what ethics are, as they start creating laws on what's ethical and what's not ethical. To do with us. Including our bodies. And TO our bodies in fact, you see. And now of course they're deciding if you should live, die or whatever for your organs in hospitals. And it's going to get a lot worse.

But you don't think for yourself, for goodness' sake, because you've got bioethicists who've got it all in hand. Thank goodness they're there and we can just sit and play and drool. I guess, well, they're making all the decisions on what to do with our lives. How kindly we accept it all, 'eh? Because like Russell said it, he said the people won't be able to do anything without the advice of experts. And they've got them all out there. You've been trained with them. These weather stations, you know, these weather programs they have on television, their weather stations for television, 24 hours a day… Horror stories, and they were designed to be horror stories. Until a little bit of drizzle was going to be a mass flood. Before that, of course they started it with the weather people showing you the next day's weather, and they'd come out there dressed in oil skins, it was going to rain! Are we children or something?!??? This is how gradually you're trained into it, you know. That this is how it's done.

They admit now, and books put up by people who were involved in the setting up of the weather channel and different ones, to terrify you, that that was the purpose of them, was to terrify the public. Because you see, you won't go along with, say, the big big global agenda on sustainability unless you go along with this whole hype on whether change, or weather modification as I prefer to call it. Because what's normal weather today when they are geo-engineering the skies, hm? Are the effects of what you're seeing the effects of the geo-engineering? Of course they are. You can't have honest tests, or statistics today when you've got daily geo-engineering going on, and it has been going on for years now.

And remember, the top report said, as they said, if we ever had to geo engineer, this is years ago, and I keep all this stuff, from their main meetings in the US at the time. They said IF we were to do this, you couldn't just stop it, once we started it. He said, because once we've altered the climate by geo-engineering, if we were to stop doing it you would have incredible catastrophic events happening when you suddenly stop it. Because you see, the whole point is also to alter the jet patterns of the airstreams, the currents, the normal flows, and divert them elsewhere. That way they can divert moisture into one place and not to another, etc. and make it dry in one place, wet in another, and reverse it when they want to. It's literally child's play today by super heating certain parts of the atmosphere.

So it's all happening, and therefore, are we going into the geo-engineering? ...still going into the geo-engineering project? It said it might take 20-30 years to get enough of the particulates to inject into the stratosphere, the particles, it might take 20 to 30 years to get a loading dose up there that would stay there for 100 years. So, are we still going into that phase? which is making the incredible things happen already? Or are we coming out of it? You see, they won't tell you anything. Because it's all secretive. You’re still supposed to think that they're still debating whether to do it or not. Even though they admit they have been doing it other papers at universities.

It's a sad thing in this world where people truly tout what they think is fact, that they're free in a democracy, when you're run in pretty well absolute secrecy. In fact, you're run as children. Don't frighten the children by telling them unpleasant things of what we're going to do, they might not like it so they might stop us by protesting. So just don't tell them anything. And that's what it is. Meanwhile, you can get the bust dimensions of some movie star every day there, and probably see the bust in fact. But the fact is, this is not news. The real news you're not going to get. And what you are getting is a kind of a downplayed version of what they’re already doing. It's sad but true, isn't it? We know this. We know this.

And then you go into, and how quick people forget things too. You're so overloaded with data and bits and bytes and trivia every day from all sources, and you won't remember much of it at all. That's why they’re overloaded with it, especially the... 99% of it is irrelevant data. It truly is irrelevant. And the stuff that you should remember, or you'd hopefully remember is put across, in all this stuff, a needle in a haystack, so that you pretty well have been legally informed, but you won't remember consciously. Or if you do, you'll say, ohhh yeah, I can vaguely remember. And that's how it's done, so the pretense of democracy can be kept going along.

I'll put up a link from a few years ago actually to do with climate geo-engineering governance, a research project from the UK.

Climate Geoengineering Governance - geoengineering-governance-research.org

It's from geo-engineering-governance-research.org and you can have a good read it that too. It's got a lot of links. There's even stuff up on YouTube from big world meetings and things like that, if you're interested at all. Most folk aren't interested in these things. Because they’re trained out of really caring. They've been trained to believe that they are being governed well and the special special invisible people above, who are just so incredibly brilliant, you see, are managing you all, and it's your place to be down below and just play and enjoy yourself and watch the movies and stuff like that, you know, party. I mean, that's how you're trained... isn't it?

And they have world agendas to do with well-being. I've mentioned some of them before. Because you see, under austerity programs, and that's what they are, for sustainability. You're being trained, it doesn't matter if you don't have much of what you think you want, if they can reshape what you really should have and make you want that instead, and had be happy with it, then your well-being goes up. And it's going to be all nicey-nicey good then, you see. There, there. And that's how it's done. I've read these articles, too, they've had world meetings under the UN and different organizations all working under them. I'll put some these things up perhaps tonight.   Because as I say, you should just be happy, you know. Like that silly silly dumb song, Don't worry, Be happy.

Huh? If you can't eat, or you know, people around you, or even yourself, if you're addicted to drugs that are just flooding the countries now, on cue, mind you, and being allowed to, and there's folk dying all over the place, and you can't have a, your brain goes on them right away, you know, you're completely dysfunctional and you to stay that way until maybe you die or get off them, if you can. But if they can just make you be happy, be happy with what you've got... You might be living on the streets, but hey, what's wrong with living on the streets if you're just happy? Hm?

And of course, they even have articles about taking the drugs to make you happy. As long as you're happy that's the final outcome. Don't forget what the whole Freudian thing was about? Hm? That being well meant you were in a state of happiness. Which is nonsense! What does it mean by happiness? There's different degrees of contentment, you see, and stability for the day. And in between phases. There's times too you must be a bit depressed because depression can goad you to do something better for yourself perhaps, you see. Or depression might say, you procrastinated on this long enough, do something about it, things like that. So, these are natural things.

But no, they want you to be happy all the time. Just like the ads on TV. You know, the dumb ads that you get all the time. Just smile, grin and be happy, you see. And if you can't have a good smile, and you can't afford a dentist these days because it's so incredibly extortionate, then be happy with the mouthful of broken teeth that you have, you see, just... if you're happy who cares, you see? There you go! There's your answer. That's the Freudian thing.

The Freudian whole idea was that the system, as they destroyed religion, under science you see, taking over as your new master, then there'd be so much unhappiness and depression. So, psychiatrists would step in and take the place of the priests and therefore all the people who went to priests for advice or help or whatever, or even confession, could then go to the psychiatrists and pay them big money to confess all these things. And then they could put you on pills, right, maybe for life, and make even further profits from that too. Isn't that wonderful. Chemical happiness, you know. It doesn't last long.

But again, I'm going off the topic here. I wasn’t even going to talk about this tonight. I just wondered about how folk are perceiving this new reality they're in? If they adapted quickly into it, with the nonsensical, a million photographs per newspaper but no real stories, and definitely not stories that matter. And are they quite, are they adapting to the fact they're being told very little? At one time people would demand that, at least the politicians would put a show on television and give different statements about different things they were up to. They don't even bother about that anymore. All you get is the scandals and the PR shots of them, you know, like wrestlers, just badmouthing their opponents. It's all an act of course. Just like the wrestling thing. It's a big act.

But that's what they've given you for reality now, isn't it? Because you see, the agenda is so entrenched that no one can get off of this progressive agenda, that's written in stone, that's not happenstance. None of it is happenstance. It all meshes together towards a particular world society that they're creating, with the vastly reduced population. What we're living through now are really the early stages of it. They still got a lot to do yet. But they've got all the technologies to make it happen, right down to their advance projections for the military on population decline, that's around 2030, a sudden drop. They don't tell you why it's a sudden drop, but they know exactly when the up-and-coming youngsters will hit a certain age, and for procreation, and there'll be a sudden even further massive decline in fertility. That's part of it, you see.

Don't forget, even with the basic studies they did on soya with the soya bean and all that, how it was heavily modified and heavily toxic too with particular herbicides that they created at the time, years ago. The studies that came out, the official studies that came out on them when they said that the first, the ones who ate it, the test rats, etc., could develop stomach or colon problems, and decreased fertility. But the offspring would have twice as much increased sterility, and the next generation were almost completely sterile. You see how your genes are altered step-by-step?

This is a big, big breakthrough for them too because you see, when you go into biowarfare, hhhhh, and you study the terrible things that they were working on during World War II, they look to different programs for extended warfare on different, that might last 20, 30, 40, 50 years, or almost a permanent state of warfare like was envisioned in George Orwell's 1984, you see. Well, how do you, over a long period of time win that war, that protracted war? Well, you make sure that you must get to the young fertile group who, or even babies, because eventually they're going to grow up and produce more children, you see. This is widely discussed in all military colleges. Even today. It's standard stuff. And some of the conflicts in the Arabian countries, or Arab countries, you see lots of, say, lots of documentation on how to bring them down over long period of time by using different techniques. Of course, they don't tell you all the techniques they're going to use, because they probably will be using them, on us all, actually.

But it's quite fascinating when you see it all happening, after reading about it from years and years ago. And it's all happening across the planet but mainly in the West, as we go down with fertility. Whenever you see things like that and you get all the different, it's multi factoral... You've got plastics of course. They made it popular to drink bottled water. Why do you think that was? Hm? Until you can hardly see an ad or even things in movies without the main characters drinking from bottled water... with the soft plastic, the worst kind you can get for biphenyls. Which are awfully good at causing you reduced sperm in the male, for sure, and many other hormonal factors in male and female. Hormone disruptors and mimickers too.

Then you get this one too 'eh...

Sperm counts are on the decline – could plastics be to blame?
theguardian.com / 24 May 2019

A recent study that tested both men and dogs added to concerns (Alan: I guess that's how we're lumped in now, if you're men you like a dog... where both men and dogs added to concerns...) And it's true enough, 'eh, [Alan chuckles.] we're the most hated species at the moment.) that chemicals in the environment are damaging the quality and quantity of sperm.

Surprising new research into dog sperm has reproductive biologists concerned about the fate of their own species. (A: So the dogs are afraid of the fate of their own species, I guess, the way they word it here. Anyway, it says...) In a March study, scientists at Nottingham University found that two chemicals common in home environments damage the quality of sperm in both men and dogs.

The culprits implicated are diethylhexyl phthalate (DEHP), used to make new plastics more pliable, and polychlorinated biphenyl 153 (PCB153), found in older plastics and electrical equipment. Companies stopped producing PCBs in the late 1970s due to their health risks – including a possible increased risk of cancer, hormone disruption, liver damage and behavioral or cognitive deficits in children exposed to the chemical in utero(A: That’s a big one too.) – but the chemical persists in the environment.

The Nottingham study is just one in a mounting pile of research indicating that the quality and quantity of men’s sperm is on the decline. (A: Well, it's been on the decline since about the 70s, steadily, but this is a further bang again.) Research suggests that sperm counts have dropped by half in the last 50 years or so and that a higher percentage are poor swimmers (A: That’s, you know, they’re immotile basically...) – slow, ungainly or beset by genetic flaws. (A: ...the ones that persist are flawed now, the sperm)

The exact cause of that decline is not well understood.

(A: What nonsense! All these things happened after world meetings. There was a world meeting remember, basically during, at the end of World War II, I think the war was still going on. King George was at the head of it, the titular head of it, at least for the meeting. All the top Royal Society scientists and that, the relevant groupings got together and talked about the coming, there's just, they haven't killed enough people off with this war, you know, especially eligible young men, therefore, they'd have to do something about a future population explosion, etc. etc. So, they came up with the idea, even the psychological stuff too, and repetition, oh my God, the baby boomers, baby boomers, baby boomers, like a curse on the planet, baby boomers. Like they've never had people having babies before, hm? You see.)

(A: So they went to work of course, they didn't sit back. So, after that, not even 20 to 30 years later you've got the sperm count cut in half by... just by accident? I mean, yeah, just happened by itself, I suppose. And folk will accept it as that too. There's always a cause for everything. Always, folks. It doesn't just happen by itself. It doesn't happen by itself. If you get up in the morning and your left leg doesn't want to follow your body, there's a cause for it. If you just accept it as some new normal then... good luck, you know. But it's the same with everything that happens, there's always a cause for it.)

(A: The problem is today were getting taught just to accept things. Just be happy. Be happy! You can still have intercourse, maybe, you see, with chemical aids and stuff. But the fact is, you won't produce children. And if you do, there's ways you can get rid of that problem too. Folk just don't get it, 'eh? They really don't get it. That the big authorities out there that are managing the population count and all the rest of it, don't give a darn about you. They really don't. They've got other agendas to fulfill. Really. Anyway, so the sperm count is on the decline. And the exact cause of the decline is not understood, they say.)

The exact cause of that decline is not well understood. One culprit may be increasingly unhealthy lifestyles. (A: Oh, sure. Sure.) The same factors that affect general health (A: And they've always got obesity, smoking...)– being overweight or obese, smoking, stress and alcohol or recreational drug use (A: ...blah, blah, blah.) – also affect the quality of sperm. But many researchers suspect chemical residues in the environment may be partly to blame.

Well, if you look at what's in the stuff that you're eating, pesticides and herbicides and all the other kind of things too, then perhaps they've got something to do with it too, folks, 'eh? Hm? What do you think? But anyway, the motility, the ability for your sperm to actually swim is definitely damaged. It's much, much lower. And you can see it all under the microscope. They've got lots of university studies on all of that. So there ya go.

But also I want to go into this. It's to do with the well-being budget, right. New Zealand's got one too. They've all got them. You see, it just happened. Again, from a central agency for the world system. And the United Nations, I read articles when they first came out with this well-being. Never mind about stopping, you know, eliminating the poverty problem and all that. Just feel well. Feel... Don't increase salaries and wages for living standards. No, just make you feel well with where you are. You see? So...

New Zealand's world-first ‘wellbeing’ budget to focus on poverty and mental health
theguardian.com / 14 May 2019

Country claims to be the first to measure success by people’s wellbeing

(A: There ya are. Yep.)

Child poverty, domestic violence and mental health will be the priorities in New Zealand’s “wellbeing budget” . . . (A: So they have well-being budgets now...)

They're destroying all cultures. They’re destroying traditional systems and families and everything else. And work, I mean it's all been given basically to Third World countries, all the industry. They employed millions and millions and millions of people across the world, but it's all stuck in the same areas now. And folk are, they seem to have no purpose. Their religions have been stripped off them and getting hammered and chipped away. Which gave them at least something to turn to rather than going to psychiatrists... God help you going to a psychiatrist, hm. Or these agencies that governments are just churning out, the new scientists that are going to be managing your minds for you, just hand it over. People have nothing to believe in now, you see.

As I say, if you want... How can you go to humanity for help when it's humanity at the top strata of scientific tyranny that's destroying you all? And bureaucracy and politics? Hm? You need something beyond that. And actually, whatever man puts out, when he puts himself as God to manage everything, ends in disaster. You get hell on earth. That's what comes out for the majority of the public, hell on earth. Absolutely. And it's only in the first stage of this. Wait until it gets really rolling, folks, into real austerity.

And another one, too, is...

They tax everything off you, and then they've got the cheek to turn, not give you anything back for it, just come back and say, just be happy with your state of living, hey? [Alan chuckles.] Well, they can be happy, these politicians and so on because they're all living off of us. And they live awfully, the servants live way above the masters, don't they, hm? Topsy-turvy world. Another article too…

The Essence of Evil: Sex with Children Has Become Big Business in America
rutherford.org / 23 April 2019

(A: M-hm. Because you see, that's the next hurdle, is what they call intergenerational sexual relations and step-by-step they said they would get to this phase, and here they are now.)

Children, young girls—some as young as 9 years old—are being bought and sold for sex in America. The average age for a young woman being sold for sex is now 13 years old.

(A: Isn't that just… it's progressive, 'eh?)

This is America's dirty little secret.

Sex trafficking—especially when it comes to the buying and selling of young girls—has become big business in America, the fastest growing business in organized crime and the second most-lucrative commodity traded illegally after drugs and guns.

And I mean, look at the state of society, 'eh? I know people in London who walk around with bulletproof vests on now, it's so dangerous there. And now they're bringing out the special ones to deal with just knives, because there are folk getting stabbed in different places, it's pretty common now. This is progress, they call it?!? Really? Ok. Excuse me if I don't agree with you.

So, I'll put these links up. And then there's another one. And here's the answer to the, remember all the grooming of the children and stuff in Britain and elsewhere in Europe, and, you know, that you're not supposed to talk about now? And it's true, isn't it, the governments told the cops to lay off the grooming gangs, etc. in Britain, for years. Thousands of people have been destroyed forever, these children. So, they get the unions to go forward, you know, under supposedly a good cause, you see, without thinking it through, where it's supposed to go.

Decriminalise sex work to protect us from crime, prostitutes say theguardian.com / 27 Feb 2019

English collective says laws forcing women to work alone expose them to violence.

Well, you know, that's where prostitution always goes. So, English collective of prostitutes. And I already last week put up some stuff from areas in England that were officially the trial areas for legal prostitution. And they're still falling down dead with, you know, syringes stuck in their arms and stuff. And they get diseases. And alcohol. And they're dying of course. Then they're fighting each other for their area, you know. But anyway, this one up here too says, it would be better just to make it all legal.

Then all those... [Alan laughing.] Really amazing. You see where it's going to go if they make it legal? The next step is, let's legalize young children, right, from the previous article, let's just legalize that and make children that are precocious, you know, they know what it's all about, and make it legal for them to have sex too. And then they can have government pimps managing them. You see? Why not? If your government's already the pimp, or your drug pusher, your government now, then why not? Do you understand where it's all… What's happening here? And this is not happenstance. It's not stupidity either. This is an agenda. And then they bring in the nurses in Britain, right, Royal College of Nurses, union and all that....

Nurses vote to back decriminalisation of prostitution - theguardian.com / 20 May 2019

So there you go, get them in on the act as well. But they don't think it all the way through, do they? They really don't. They really, really don't. They don't think where it's all meant to go.

And that's the beauty of collective organizations. Bernays said that, if you want to... He said to the big marketers, don't go door-to-door trying to get people to back whatever you're selling them, or changes or whatever it happens to be, go to the heads of organizations, including ministers and priests or whatever, and get them on board with you. And we saw all that happening, it happens all the time. They're all on board with the green agenda, and the eco this and eco that. And before you know it, they're all pushing for having less children. I mean it's beautiful how it works, isn't it? Bring your flocks to us, you see.

So here's the College of Nurses and they really don't see where it's going to go. It's already hell, but it's going to be a worse hell once you legalize all this stuff. Then you get all the different, the real grooming gangs in action and stuff, and they'll get their licenses to operate them. There you go. And…

'Prostitution is seen as a leisure activity here': tackling Spain's sex traffickers - theguardian.com / 11 May 2019

There you go. Big business, etc. In this day and age, are you surprised it's big business? It's astonishing.

Last week too I mentioned about [Alan chuckles.] things that are happening now with organs, you know, and being an organ donor and how really, it's an amazing business, it's amazing, and how they can con everybody into getting their, you know, organs, the dangers of all this, where it's all meant to go of course. And, will you even get treated in hospital, are they going to bring you back onto your feet and get you walking, or are you more lucrative to them for your body parts? You'd better start thinking about… Don't think for a second that this won't happen. I mean, corruption doesn't stop at the street level. It's worse way above that. Look at your governments. The Baltimore Sun and it says…

Organ donation on the rise as fatal drug overdoses mount
baltimoresun.com / 13 Aug 2016

Overdose deaths, largely from heroin and powerful prescription painkillers such as fentanyl, have reached record highs across the country. Maryland had one of the biggest surges in the country, with 1,259 fatal overdoses last year, twice the number in 2010.

(A: So, there's progress for you.)

Nationally, organ donations from those who overdosed from injected drugs are the fourth-largest donor group, according to data from the United Network for Organ Sharing, (A: Organ SHARING… [Alan laughing.] That's not ghouls, it's organ sharing.) which coordinates donations. (A: It's big business, 'eh.) Drug overdoses eclipsed homicide victims years ago.

Drug overdoses rank behind people who died of natural causes — the largest group of donors — as well as car crash victims and those who committed suicide. Car crash donors have declined as auto safety improved. (A: It's actually getting worse again, auto safety, because they've legalized other things, and they're mind certainly isn't on the road now. [Alan chuckles.])

But anyway, you understand, we are the business. I've said it so many times, we are the business. And we're also the product at the end of it all. We buy it all and then they make money off us once we're about to die. Remember, if they want to keep you alive… it's to take your organs out of you. I hope you understand that. They don't want death, or organ death. They want to keep you alive and harvest the organs. The last one out is the heart; they keep it going as they basically cannibalize everything else.

When the people who go there to receive the organs, the different surgeons are sent in, are flown in by jet, big business, as I say. There's ones that'll take the kidneys, specialists, ones who go after the liver, and heart and lungs and so on. The person in charge of it is the heart and lung specialist because he will keep that going until all the other ones are taken out, and straight into the freeze, you see, for preservation. Then basically they have the job of real, causing the real death by cutting it off and that's it, and out goes the heart and lungs and that's it. That's how it's done, for those who don't know. It's big, big business.

Then they persuade the public that you, to do it all for nice causes, you see. Do you think that it's all going to nice causes? Do you really think that? I mean, how many folks are getting transplants a day, even in your own country? Compared to how many folks are being cannibalized in your own country every day. Anyway…

As death tolls rise, opioid crisis makes more organs available for transplant theglobeandmail.com / 27 July 2019

(A: This is where it's going, you see. They give you a story there of her son lay dying and this poor woman and so on, very emotional…)

A nurse who works with people with chronic kidney disease,...

...knew the impact of such donations well.

So, they give you something that's very heart-wrenching, etc. But of course, the whole thing is, it's good, even though the guy dies his death is not in vain, you see. This is where it's going.

So tragic as I say, but really when you book in, in Ontario, to hospital or your taken to the hospital, you're automatically put down as a donor, unless you opt out. And they don't tell you at the time. That was in the papers, though, a few years ago. They even have professional persuaders that are jetted across the country to hospitals, just men and women that seem kind of ordinary, men and women who come in, they're awfully nice, and they're trained to reach worried or grieving parents who are in hospital who are in there for someone on artificial life support or whatever it happens to be, to try and convince them to just sign them over for organ parts.

I mean, do you understand… This isn't more humanity, I think. I see it as, we're just products and we're worth an awful lot. These folks wouldn't be doing it, jetting across for nothing persuading folk. Remember, they're getting paid awfully well.

So, hhhh, and of course it also tells me that they must understand what the different antidotes to these different drugs can be, and they must have awfully fast ways, I would think, of determining if there's actual other diseases present. Very quick, like almost instant, to even bother to take organs, etc., hm? If they're taken from, say, car accidents and so on.

Now, DARPA, that's the big testing and research organizations. The ARPA, when they call it just ARPA, that's the part that gave you the computer they developed during the Cold War, supposedly, to interact with the Soviet system. So, they had their wargames going on through computers back then. Then they gave us the computer to get us all into it. Because the agenda was to literally alter the world and spy on all of us and manage and control all of us of course. And there's DARPA and it says…

Pentagon eyes expanding DARPA future warfare research office
news.trust.org / 24 May 2019

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - The U.S. Department of Defense is close to expanding its legendary future warfare and technology agency DARPA by combining it with the Pentagon office in charge of adapting existing weapons to new uses, people familiar with the plans said.

The Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (A: That’s the full name of it, you see.) would absorb the Strategic Capabilities Office (SCO) and centralize more research units under the Pentagon's Chief Technology Officer Michael Griffin.

(A: Now, in the past they put out wonderful stories, oh, we created a chip that can implant in paraplegics, and they can actually type on a computer which is just with their thoughts. So, you see, you understand that this warfare outfit puts all these wonderful things out to help people. Because you know, the peacekeepers today are warriors, you know, dress like warriors, they've always been, with grenades and weapons and so on, right, but we call them peacekeepers. And DARPA, this wonderful organization, the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency, that give you all your advanced warfare stuff, is there to help paraplegics and stuff. You see, you've got it all wrong, you just keep thinking bad things. You must be paranoid thinking they're there to actually do warfare kind of stuff on the world, you know. Get with the program here. So...)

The combination would end an experiment with SCO that began as an attempt to adapt to future threats quickly and with less bureaucracy.

If all of SCO's $1.3 billion 2020 budget request were transferred to DARPA, DARPA would gain control over 37 percent more funding on top of its 2020 funding request of $3.5 billion.

The SCO is charged with developing unexpected and game-changing capabilities to counter emerging threats.

The SCO has looked into projects like swarming small drones and transforming the Raytheon Co-made Standard Missile 6, a defensive weapon, into an offensive weapon.

(A: Wow! There ya go. M-hm.)

You can imagine, 'eh, when you've got all these folk who got the chips, because they want to give you chips for everything, and tell you how they're going to make it so wonderful to have chips in you and that. So eventually you probably won't get medicine and such, you'll get a medical chip, an implant that will fix everything for you, you see. And you can imagine it, one night you're all lying in bed, just like a horror movie, making a horror movie, you're all lying in bed and then DARPA activates that chip, and then millions of folk from across the country just get up in the middle of the night from a sleep there and walk like zombies, you see, chipped zombies. And you can do stacks of movies on that because they've done it on everything else, haven't they?

Anyway, I'll put this article up too, and then this one here…

US Military Developing Wireless Tech to Control Weapons With Your Mind
tomsguide.com / 22 May 2019

DARPA wants to wirelessly connect human brains to machines, allowing soldiers to fully control weapon systems, view things remotely like a Three-Eyed-Raven (A: ...wow...), or feel stuff remotely.

It's the stuff of science fiction, but scientists have already made some advances in the field. The first human neuroprosthetic devices appeared in the mid-1990s, (A: That's when they put out the PR stuff on the chips…) allowing patients to crudely control artificial limbs. But those required surgical interventions. More experiments during early 2010s showed that scientists could reconstruct people's vision into digital video, but that's far from being real-time. Most recently, the scientists at Carnegie Mellon University have figured out how to connect to brains, using machine to transfer information wirelessly.

(A: So, two heads are better than one, you see. There you are, they want to help you, you understand. So, it gives you the different universities that are in on the programs. They always use our tax money for everything, don't they?)

This article here is pretty good, it's about…

UN hysteria linking climate change and species extinction mindlessly parroted by media americanthinker.com / 8 May 2019

(A: A little history of it, but a lot of it I read years ago on other websites, to do with their predictions, to terrify the public. Including the quotes from the leaders of these different ecological organizations and NGOs, the heads of them, and the United Nations too when they admitted blatantly, we always give them scary scenarios to terrify them, otherwise they won't listen to us, you see. And they're still doing it, of course.)

It is truly sad that U.N. reports on the climate and extinctions are printed throughout the media to push the agenda and scare the public, especially the children, with no questions asked and no attempt to verify the information in the reports.

(A: So this article here goes into the, ohhh…)

One million of the planet's eight million species are threatened with extinction by humans

(A: And then…)

…Intergovernmental Science-Policy Platform on Biodiversity and Ecosystem Services (IPBES), a UN committee, whose report was written by 145 experts(A: …You see, EXPERTS…!) from 50 countries.

(A: …talking about tens of thousands are already dead, blah blah blah. They give you the numbers from like decades ago. And none of us should be here by now, because even in the 90s they said we wouldn't hit 2000. Actually, they said we wouldn't hit 1990 initially, we'd all starve to death, you see. And here we all are. And all the other scary scenarios too... And they're still at it. And then Prince Charles came out years ago saying, you've got 100 odd days to live if we don't change right now, you see, the way we live. And of course that came and went, and the royalty is still getting married and having children and so on. It says…)

U.N. Predicts Disaster if Global Warming Not Checked
June 29, 1989

A senior U.N. environmental official says entire nations could be wiped off the face of the Earth by rising sea levels (A: That's why I bought a snorkel, a big, long snorkel just in case, 'eh.) if the global warming trend is not reversed by the year 2000.

(A: Oh...)

Coastal flooding and crop failures (A: aaaa... aaaa...) would create an exodus of ″eco- refugees,′(A: ...blah, blah, blah... and that was from...) the U.N. Environment Program, or UNEP.

(A: Oh, terrifying scenarios, 'eh. And then they said...)

There are 3 trillion trees on Earth (A: Yep...) – but they're disappearing fast

(A: It's interesting, they're giving you different studies, but obviously they've got people going around counting it all, right?)

A study led by Yale University researchers has found that there are over 3 trillion trees on Earth - but they are disappearing at an alarming rate.

The study found that there are around 3.04 trillion trees on Earth, or around 422 for each person on the planet.

The number is a huge increase on the previous global estimate, which was just over 400 billion trees worldwide. (A: …you see? And that's… they played that one up before too, oh there's 400 billion trees on the planet, now it's 3 trillion. It's getting more rather than fewer. So…)

We have been told that humans and CO2 are killing the oceans so now they only estimate that there are 3.5 trillion left. (A: That’s what they’re saying ‘eh.) That seems to be an odd definition of dying.

(A: M-hm. I’d say so! There ya are. And...)

How Many Fish Live in the Ocean?

According to the best estimates of scientists, there are 3,500,000,000,000 (3.5 trillion) fish currently living in the ocean.

(A: I guess they got someone going around counting them.)

Then there were all those looming disasters projected by scientists on the first Earth Day almost fifty years ago.

(A: That's what it was created for, Earth Day, right.)

A quick summary: We would all be dead by 1985 to 2000.

We would be out of food either in the 1970s or 1980s.

During the 1980s, four billion people would die, including 65 million in the U.S.

By 1980, urban dwellers would have to wear gas masks to survive.

Soon, none of our land will be usable because of too much nitrogen.

The rivers will be out of oxygen, and freshwater fish will all be gone.

(A: Oh my God, the sky is falling, ‘eh?)

By 1995, 75% to 80% of species will be gone.

(A: They first put out an ice age, they'd banked on the 'coming Ice Age' to terrify us all to give up all our rights so that the experts could manage us, you see, for depopulation and austerity and all that. But it didn't work out, so they then turned to 'global warming'. Now they just settled on 'climate change', because they're trying to cover all the bases. And it was the worst winter I've seen up here since I've been here, this winter past. I mean, it lasted this half, over half the year before the snow was gone.)

And ecologist Kenneth Watt said, because we were going into an ice age, that the Earth would be four degrees cooler by 1990 and eleven degrees colder by 2000. (A: That was the initial thing, when it was the coming ice age.)

But this article is just full of all the quotes from all the different associations and organizations, to terrify you. Including of course naturally, Paul Ehrlich, you know, who gave you the Population Bomb. Because that's the real agenda, is to depopulate the planet. How are they going to do it? Well, terrify them. And you can't have all these children who are just consuming and creating pollution, you see. There you go. And it's interesting. I mean, Paul Ehrlich, his wife was on the board, actual board of the Club of Rome, 'eh... [Alan chuckles.] that came out with the agenda, terrify the public because it's the only way to do it, give them scary scenarios, etc., and man would be the enemy of the planet and that would fit the bill. Well, that's what they came up with.

They never change. Big agenda. Global agenda. And all the world's leaders are in on it, folks. Yes, they are, the big club is in on it. And you’re just the, you're the cause of it all, all the problems apparently. You see. And they're not going to change it just for you, little ole you. You might think you're important, but they don't. But it's just astonishing, isn't it, the nonsense we get fed, the nonsense we get fed for a big, big agenda, a big global agenda, hm. Another one here too, is…

One million species threatened with extinction because of humans

(A: Not one million and one. One million exactly.)

One million of the planet's eight million species (A: Like, I used to, you come to the States or Canada, you would find towns and you'd always find an even number, everything ended up with 00 or whatever, for population on the signboards going into a place. I says, my God, they must, there's population planned for you. Well, here they are, you see, with one million species, one million exactly threatened with extinction because of humans. It says here…) are threatened with extinction by humans…

The global rate of species extinction "is already tens to hundreds of times higher than it has been, on average, over the last 10 million years," (A: This is the oldest count or whatever they had, this guy that counted them all.) according to the Intergovernmental Science-Policy Platform on Biodiversity and Ecosystem Services (IPBES), (A: There's a mouthful for you, 'eh. You see, that's very important, with the big long one like that. I'm impressed, aren't you?) a UN committee, whose report was written by 145 experts from 50 countries. (A: M-m. There ya go, species extinction.)

The actual number of species on the endangered list appears to be 3,000, so why are we told that one million are endangered?

(A: But when you go into it, there's only 3000 it says. And even then, that's iffy. So...)

Endangered Species: Once They’re Gone, There’s No Bringing Them Back

Currently, more than 3,000 species of animals are considered endangered. In the United States, (A: Well, what happened to that one million, 'eh? I mean, what? I mean, what is it here? Do you see what I'm saying? And in their own policies they tell you one thing, but when you go into it and look, it's only 3000. And even that's iffy. It says…)   the Endangered Species Act was passed in 1973 to help with conservation efforts, but there are now three times as many endangered species as there were just ten years ago.

If you look up the number of species that have gone extinct since the last (almost) 120 years, it is 477, or around four a year. I am sure most of those started going extinct long before fossil fuels could have caused the problem. So four species per year, and the U.N. puts out the prediction of one million, and journalists like puppets just print this. (A: …as fact, you see.)

10 Animals that Have Gone Extinct in the Last 100 Years

Nearly 500 species have gone extinct during the last century–and in most cases, we humans are to blame. According to a 2015 study by the National Autonomous University (UNAM), 477 species have disappeared since 1900 due to our degradation and destruction of their natural habitats. The researchers said it was the largest mass extinction of species in history.

In 1989 the UN predicted disaster and we only had ten years left to fix the problem. They were 100% wrong but journalists and other Democrats pushing the agenda (A: It's also Republicans, they're all on board with it.) to take trillions away from the public don’t care. (A: And of course the money goes elsewhere, ‘eh. And then…)

U.N. Predicts Disaster if Global Warming Not Checked
June 29, 1989

A senior U.N. environmental official says entire nations could be wiped off the face of the Earth by rising sea levels if the global warming trend is not reversed by the year 2000.

Coastal flooding and crop failures

would create an exodus of ”eco- refugees,’ ’ threatening political chaos, said Noel Brown, director of the New York office of the U.N. Environment Program, or UNEP.

(A: So that's what they hope to do, and actually Rockefeller also had articles out on the eco-refugees could happen. But they change their minds eventually and says, it's better just to have economic refugees as they call it today, 'eh... just mass migration to where the best, ah, money is basically. [Alan laughing.] Even if it's, they can't get work there. It says...)

He said governments have a 10-year window of opportunity to solve the greenhouse effect before it goes beyond human control.

(A: As they spray the skies and cause global dimming, 'eh, according to all the satellite organizations and NASA, etc., global dimming they say. M-hm. Spraying away. And they talk about greenhouse gas, most of the greenhouse gas they call it, is actually water moisture. And the carbon dioxide is a .00000 something, it's a trace gas. But that doesn't make a... Facts don't matter, 'eh. Then...)

In 2015, Yale University estimated that there are three trillion trees on Earth. (A: Ah, there ya go.) Previous estimates were 400 billion. (A: So there you go. And...)

How Many Fish Live in the Ocean?

(A: I did that one already. And...)

We would be out of food either in the 1970s or 1980s.

(A: Ohhh, there ya go. M-hm.)

18 spectacularly wrong apocalyptic predictions made around the time of the first Earth Day in 1970, expect more this year

(A: That's what they do every year. They actually say that, that they get together to give you scary scenarios. There ya go.)

Facts don't matter, you see. It's only that you believe what they're telling you, to create... You see, you won't budge... One of my talks in the 90s is, I said it's like, we're like cattle, they talk about we're cattle, you see, to them, and if we're content in the field with grass, we graze. We like to graze. And why not, you know? There's your pals roundabout you all grazing at the same time and you're quite content. But you see, to get change going, to get change going, or even to get you to move to another field, they've got a stir you up to get you moving. And it's not quite easy. So, they got to scare you.

It's easy to scare you. You see the cowboy in Westerns, and they start shooting the guns in the air and hollering and so on and trying to stampede them to get them moving. And they say in all the courses on human behavior, if you can get them terrified and hysterical, you get them moving. And fear. And not to let them stop and relax. If they stop and relax and start chewing the cut again, like the cattle, then you've got a do it all over again. But once you've got them moving don't give them a break, just keep them moving, keep them moving, keep them moving, keep them terrified.

This is the agenda towards planned change. Step by step by step by step, over so many years. And it's all still happening yet. It's worked awfully well. I mean, repetition, repetition, it's astonishing how it really all works, isn't it? Repetition, and the folk just go on and on and on with it, from one thousand sources, until they start spouting it themselves automatically. It's all understood in psychology of course. But that's the world in which you live, 'eh.

And all the stuff I mentioned tonight was nowhere about where I was going to talk about at all. But it just came out that way. Because I realized the stuff I was going to talk about would probably take me a couple of hours anyway, as I was prattling on there about the scary scenarios.

But that's how we're managed, folks. And most folk haven't got a clue because, do you realize the basket cases we would be if you were trained at an early age into reality? That the people above you are not there to help you at all? It's like a horror movie when you… Committee after committee, like a whole pyramid of committees above you and organizations, managing your brain, and managing what they want you to believe, in all, thousands of topics, and programming you to make sure that you go along with it all.

So in other words, these people are not superior to you. They're not benefactors. They are a scientific tyranny, exactly as Lord Bertrand Russell said they would bring in. And he wrote that in his own book in the 1940s I believe. He said that there will always be a tyranny. He says, we can bring in a tyranny, and at that time he was talking about you had the Nazis of Germany World War II, that affected naturally everybody. And before that, and during the World War II and afterwards, it never stopped, was communism, the Soviet communism of course and the Soviet bloc countries that came out of it. And then the Cold War of course that came out afterwards too. But they saw these mass movements. And they were really encouraged of how the Soviets, for instance, could manage many countries within the Soviet bloc and make them obedient. Mind you, they use terror techniques and everything else too to create a new type of humanity... an obedient society... with as less kickback as possible. It was all big experiments you see. And then they blended the two together. And everything was learned doing the Soviet technique, techniques used today.

They blended the two systems together, and that was what the Reece Commission came out with back in the 1950s in the United States by Norman Dodd. The Reece Commission came out with all of that. They said that they'd blend, eventually, seamlessly, the Soviet system with the Western system, blend the two together and that would be the new system. Well, that's where we are, folks, if you haven't figured it out. That's what happened.

That's of course what the foundations, that were owned by the big big, well even the, I mean for instance, the Rockefellers, remember too, and the clique they belong to, own the banks which are the US Treasury, the actual banks themselves that backs America. They own the top industries too. It was to grab all the top industries that folk would need to live, which they did, and then create the big foundations that manage all the NGOs. And education, you've got to get a unified universal education, or indoctrination you should really call it, for obedient global citizen. And that's what you've got, you've got that too. It doesn't mean that it's factual, what they teach you to believe is fact. It's only important that you believe it's a fact when you're brainwashed with it. Because they're looking at you to see if it's worked on you or not. And if it's not worked on you they're going to pull you in and, you know, tweak a few screws in your brain there to make sure it works properly. And properly to them means your indoctrination is moving and running you.

They always talked about reeducation camps in Soviet or communist countries. They still have them in communist countries. And they are very very real. To bring you in to make sure that you will say the things that you are supposed to say, you will NOT say the things that you're NOT supposed to say. We have it here now and you're being trained and trained and trained on the use of vocabulary and certain words which are going to be taboo. And then the words which are taboo then lead to topics that are taboo. Until they gradually thin out all the things that are maybe obvious to you, as they introduce new things, that are going to upset you, and then that will be taboo as well. That's how it's managed. That's real neuroscience and psychology and behaviorism in action. You're a specimen of it today, folks.

So for those who don't get freaked out with scary scenarios, and who understand it all, and who have kept their brains above water, with a big snorkel poles in case it gets flooding…

I'm Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada and it's goodnight and may your God or your Gods go with you.

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on June 9, 2019. I've actually had a couple of good days of sunny weather. It's been rather pleasant. Although the mosquitoes as always are getting their revenge on a long winter. I think they've modified the mosquitoes. I think they've created a new kind of flying platform… or oil rig. [Alan laughing.]   Because the size of the holes they're leaving in you [Alan laughing.] it makes you wonder, doesn't it, if these things certainly are. Isn't it astonishing, something that's so tiny, that comes at you by the millions, and it can cause so much havoc. And supposedly they've now got a way around it, apart from the usual lotions you put on yourself. But you'd think there'd be something a bit more high-tech than that. Although of course they keep talking about breeding sterile males which they release into the population, and supposedly this is to help diminish the numbers of offspring of these mosquitoes. It doesn't seem to work much though does it. [Alan chuckles.]   It makes you wonder what else they're sterilizing, doesn't it, [Alan chuckles.] in the process. Who knows? But there you go.

But they're doing well, of course, the mosquitoes. So, I guess the biodiversity crew from Maurice Strong's days, where they all got rights, all the animals and plants and insects got rights. We don't have any, but they get them all. I guess that keeps them all happy. I always say that every year, I don't need to donate any blood to any society because I do enough every year to nature. I'm certainly… I'm probably the dad of billions of them by now, they've had so much blood off me. But that's the way it goes, isn't it, 'eh? That's the way it goes.

You used to think at one time, why can't they put... Because they've tried it apparently with insects. You'll see these little ads for a kind of high-frequency type sonic deterrents for mice or things like that. I don't know if they work at all, I very much doubt it personally. But they also have them supposedly for certain kinds of bugs. But I wonder too if they could even work… The thing that does work, apparently, apparently, is something they were selling a few years ago where you had big canisters of propane and they would go through a kind of machine which would give off CO2, and the CO2 naturally attracts the mosquitoes. And they went into a kind of a vacuum thing, like a vacuum suction thing that would suck 'em up in this particular machine. And supposedly they had some good success. I never tried them so I don't really know.

And I think that anything that puts out CO2 today will be taboo, including us, of course. Once you get to carbon neutral, you understand, we won't be around, obviously. Nothing will live on the planet to get to carbon neutral. There'll be nothing alive at all, obviously, you know. Because we give it off when we breathe out, and plants take it in at a certain time of their 24-hour cycle and they put out oxygen. So to get a carbon neutral planet, since we're all carbon-based life forms, all of us, then everything's dead. There's a good goal for you, hm. But again, facts don't really matter when there's big agendas at work, isn't it?

After all, the sustainability idea is for total control of humanity. That was always the intention of it. And for folk who haven't figured it out, under sustainability, the whole thing is a reduction of the population. They've been quite explicit about how much they predict every person is going to consume in their lifetime, how much it needs to feed them, and all the carbon produced from that kind of stuff, and all the clothing, etc. etc., and heating. So the fewer folk they can have around, then obviously they'll meet their sustainability targets. Mind you, they'll also decide along the way, and this is inevitable of course and everybody knows it, that they'll go the whole way that they planned to do in early 1900s, which was, they'll have panels that will decide who can have children and who cannot. That's always been inevitable. Step by step by step these things are introduced. And you all know it's true. You all know it's true.

I can remember years ago talking about so many things, not because I was guessing about stuff but because I'd read so much of the stuff. Unlike some of the people that followed my example, but only they pretended that they read all the stuff. I actually did read out all that stuff. And some of them actually today still prattle on.   They copy my shows actually in the same week or two weeks later. And verbatim. I do all the work and get all the topics and do all the searching and so on from the source, and they use it all. There's one in particular you all know. But it's rather disgusting, isn't it? That tells you a lot to about their personalities.

But anyway, getting back to what I'm saying. Years ago, you talk about so many things, that would definitely get put into being. Because step-by-step they always introduced them, hm. And we adapt and we adapt, and they know we adapt. It's little by little until they've achieve their goals. Well, at the time when you come out with these things, years and years ago, the folk would say, oh, that's a conspiracy nut theory. Because that's what they were taught to say by, again, media reporters, that really work for the CIA. And I'm not kidding about that either. I mean, there were documentaries they had about that that came out in the 60s, the 70s and the 80s, a lot of them in the top television stations in the US were actually CIA employees. You don't have to be a full-time employee to be a member of them. The same with CSIS in Canada. They could take contracts, like part-time things, you see, and have full-time... For instance, some of the professors in universities are members of them. That's quite common, in all countries in fact.

So anyway, getting back to what I'm saying. They would pooh-pooh it and say, oh, that's crazy and nuts and so on. But it all comes to pass. And the people who would laugh at it, when you asked them, why would they laugh? And they'd say, oh, that could never happen. And you say, well why couldn't that never happen? Well, they...they...they... somebody would stop that. Well, who's the somebody? Who's the somebody, you always hear the same thing, oh, somebody would stop that. Because it won't be them. It's not them. They won't say, I'm going to stop it or try to... Oh, somebody will stop that. Or they say, they'd never do it to us, whoever they are, hey, they'd never do it to us. They presume that there's some kind of benevolent supreme commander looking after us all here. And I'm not talking about a deity. Well, they might think they are. But they really think that there's some kind of deity overseeing it all with our best interests in mind. And of course, that's how they're trained to see things.

Even when things are put forward to them to indoctrinate them, to give up their rights and freedoms under a world threat, oh the world's going to end because of man's destruction of the planet. That's the greatest one they came up with, you see. Before that they tried atomic warfare as well. We were the enemy then too, you see. Even though most of us are ignorant of it all, and most of us have never studied atomic energy to any extent at all, certainly not in that field, at that level. But then they came up with, we're all killing the planet. We're all gonna die anyway, you see, they couldn't get a comet to pass by quick enough to really give us a big fright so they came up with this idea. Because once you give up all your rights to save the world, now you're in a wartime mode, you see. And it is a war, you see. It's a war against the population of the planet. And don't think that somehow you're exempt from it if you're living pretty well in your middle-class or whatever it happens to be in some of the first world countries. The first world is going down pretty fast by the way, don't think you’re exempt from it. Because it's a war on the whole planet's populations.

Many people at the top in the Fabian organizations a long time ago were rather open about it. Bernard Shaw was one of the better ones to expound the theories of true mandated scientific socialism and control over the populations and your lives from birth to death. That's what they want. And believe you me, it's really going into that in this day and age right now. Very evident, for those who understand it. Most folk don't. Most folk don't want to. But it's a choice as well. Even when it stares them in the face. And I understand it. It's a frightening thing to realize that the system that you're born into and brought up with is really not there to have your best interests at heart. But they do want you to believe in it, obviously. I'm talking about the ones who gave you the impressions that you have on the system. It's quite easy to understand how it's been done in any… Look at the countries in the past, look at tyrannies and so on. And yet we can't equate tyrannies with ourselves because no one is bashing you on the head right now.

In some countries there are. I mean, if you look at France, for instance, with yellow vests and so on going on, it's one of the best covered up things right now. And the whole of Europe is going along with this cover up, want to keep it as quiet as possible. When literally there's thousands of people getting injured all the time. Supposedly it all started with the increases that Macron had put on, the taxing of fuels and so on and diesel, which is transport and consumption of foodstuffs. Which we're going to get here too, by the way. You're going to get all the austerity taxes put on us here. And carbon taxes as well. It's already happening. And once they really tax the diesel and gasoline, so your food even, ha, is transported by tractor-trailer, big trucks or else it's done by train and so on, that's all going to get passed on to you. You'll be in the same boat shortly, because France was a test case for it.

So, taxes go up and up and up. There's not enough work. There's none of money. And you can't, and then everything that's taxed, especially the fuel line, ends up being tacked onto you. So even basic, basic things like food is too expensive. We're already seeing that. A lot of people are hurting even in Canada here. I know it because I know the prices of food is getting ridiculous. Then again, it's authorized by governments to keep increasing food. And that's classed as energy, by the way, if you haven't figured it out.

So, you're going into the austerity mode that I talked about a few years ago. Because that was mandated we all go into austerity. It's the start of it. It might get brought to a stage where there will be riots. And then the governments, believe you me, if they can let them loose in France, they can let them loose anywhere. And they're all ready for it by the way, for big time riots if it comes to that too. But you're going into the sci-fi mode of all the movies we saw in the 90s, with the bad bad future of dystopia, run by a system which is rather nasty and inhumane, and we're all living in rubble and trying to, you know, feed off garbage dumps and so on. Don't laugh at these things because they can be done so quickly, if it was ever needed to be done by those who deem it necessary, those who are in control.

There are documentaries out now from France with so many photographs and pictures of people who've lost their eyes because of these rubber bullets they call them, these riot control type bullets that are fired hitting people in the face and losing their eyes. Very very common. I think it's one and a half thousands so far, maybe more. And these things are pretty high velocity at close range as well, and they go right through the faces of people. So this isn't a little skirmish of protesters. This is a full-scale war on the people basically and it's being covered up to a great extent.

Because the folk were just fed up with the higher taxes and lack of work and so on and so on. And of being dismissed by this character Macron. I watched a documentary where a woman who’s a representative for the Yellowjackets, but she's actually a lawyer who comes from a family that always were part of the police forces, and she was one too at one time. She's discussing it and talking how bad it is and why it's all happening. She said that Macron himself is such a... he's an incredible snob apparently, silver spoon type of guy. And he so derogatory when it comes to talking about people who haven't gone to university, like the working classes. He's giving talks about people in factories being basically illiterate and saying things like that. What a character this is, really.

But you see, that's the kind of people that are chosen as front people to supposedly pretend that they are up running the countries. It's astonishing how in-your-face it can be at times. And even then we don't want to believe it. Most people don't want to believe the bad news. Or they'll make excuses for them, and they'll say, well, yeah, I know they said that, they can't really mean it. Or, it was a slip, or, they had a bad day or something. No, the this is the way that they see you, the people who are in charge, this is how they really see you. And every country's got the same types as Macron. Especially in the civil service and areas like that.

And it's sad, but true, isn't it, that humanity really doesn't change much, and they go through the pretense of having a classless society. What a joke that is, a classless society. What a lot of nonsense, 'eh? It's as alive and well as it's always been. I guess that's just the way of nature too, this idea of being better than other people because of wealth. It can affect anybody, even the ones who start at the bottom and start to get some cash coming in, and they can change their opinion of everybody else rather quickly too. It's easy to become a snob. Very easy. You'll see it in everyday life in fact.

But getting back to what I'm prattling on about here, which is basically that the people will pooh-pooh all the bad things that are written about. And when you give them evidence of it too, from sources in the big think tanks that work for governments, and you see them being implemented, these different actions, even though you show them proof they'll decide not to believe it. Because it's too frightening for them to believe. However, if some famous person, or even an actor or actress comes on television and talks about it, it must be true! It's just too easy to get, ha-ah, people who they think is a special authoritative person, and if they're an actor or actress they must be authoritative, they must have a... No, they're not!

Have you ever really met many actors or actresses? There's not much to say. They're really not that great at conversation, you know. They're not. You'll start yawning in no time at all. They really don't know very much about the world. They have their own little world that they're in. They don't have a lot of interests outside what they do basically. Sometimes later on they take up positions as PR people for big causes or charitable things, etc. Which is also often a tax write off, you see. But in reality, they don't know an incredible... Well, I could even go through some musicians too, well-known ones, but they'd bore you stiff. They really would. You'd pinch yourself to stay awake. But that's the truth of it. A lot of them to can become snobs so easily as well just because they're wealthy, you see. They always say if you forget where you came from, then you haven't grown as a human being, you've actually shrunk. And that thing is very, very true. So people really, as I say, don't want to believe unless, because it's just too bad, isn't it, and I've heard people tell me, they choose not to believe something, even though you've got documents from the government's own websites on different things and they can read it. It's a strange thing, isn't it, where they decide not to want to believe it, it's too upsetting. M-hm. And that's what governments count on.

Do you understand this idea of democracy is such nonsense, when you have a massive, massive, it's like an overcast sky of multi layers of think tanks and nongovernmental organizations all working with each other, thousands of them across the world for every facet of society for every country, on every particular area of topic of managing the public, including education, everything, and the UN specifies that governance must include all these organizations. Well, did you vote for that? Of course you didn't, you didn't vote for that. And these organizations have all these different charters they're signing all the time, and signing deeper into them, even like the Paris Treaty and all this kind of thing, and then the next one too, 2030 for sustainability and the environment and so on. And again, in those ones too, those charters as well to the United Nations, it says again, that all, ALL interested parties must attend. Well, we don't even get a chance to attend anything, never mind say anything. So, who are we kidding here!? Hm?

Because we certainly are kidding ourselves. Democracy, what a joke that is. And when you go into even the end of World War II when they were very open about world government, and not just government but governance and all of... Again, exactly what I'm talking about now, where it'll be a different world, a different kind of, you couldn't just have children, you couldn't just marry who you want to marry and all that kind of stuff. That was all, they tried all that then, tried to push it but it didn't sail very well so they went quiet on it. But they kept working at it. And we're really there now. It's been pretty well successful. The family unit is destroyed, a la Karl Marx. And don't forget that every single political party we've had, regardless of what they claim to be, have signed further and further and further into the same single agenda, folks, without exception. And you still think it's all real [Alan laughing.] these parties and so on. It's beautiful, isn't it.

But when you realize just how much has been accomplished, and how you've always had the wool pulled over your eyes, and they're still doing it, even more so today... There are so many organizations, at the end of World War II, as I say, they set up the program for the United Europe, right. It was to be kept secret from the public, that the whole goal was to completely incorporate all the nations into a single entity, completely under a parliamentary system, a single parliament. And again, the same with the Asian countries, far Eastern Pacific Rim countries. And then the Americas as well. And they're still at it. And there's no point prattling on about it and repeating it all, I've done it all before, about the different things that have happened here.

It's still on the go, if you haven't figured it out yet. The only reason they're keeping it slightly separate in North America is they must keep Americans thinking that they have a country, which is theirs. Because they're paying for the wars that are still to happen yet. They've got to finish the list, the list from the 90s, that's got to be finished and they've got to go through it all, you see. And it wouldn't wash, they couldn't get recruits or people to go in, or even people to pay taxes towards a system of wars that was for the whole of the Americas. But they'll do it for their nation-state. You see, it's a patriotic thing that's instinctive in people, and that's what they count on.

Years ago, I can remember talking about the radio frequencies of the Internet and Wi-Fi, which again goes into the microwave range. There's been so many articles that have come out over the years, still coming out too, mainly from countries that are allowed to still publish of them, like Switzerland or Sweden and different places, on the effects of Wi-Fi, or the effects too of brain cancers going up and up and up and the association to magnetic fields, strong fields and so on. Whereas in the West it's pretty well dampened down, the whole idea of speaking about it, although we have more than our fair share, you might say, of youngsters getting brain cancers. Not just youngsters, of course, but they're certainly more prone because their brains are still, they're still growing. They're children, they're still growing, right, their brains and all that too. Cells are dividing very quickly, etc. etc. and that's when unfortunately, you get a change in the splitting of cells. Then you get the oddball one coming in, and for some reason the immune system doesn't go into action and destroy it, or it can't destroy it maybe because it's working so fast and changing so fast and multiplying so fast that the cancerous tumor develops.

There's so much of it today I won't even bother going into it. To me it's boring because I've done talks on this before. People will say, well, it's bad news and we don't want to hear bad news. But they know about it too, it's the same idea that people had with going into war. You know, they'd sign up for the wars and be home by Christmas, that's the propaganda that was told to them then. And a good portion of them would die or be wounded and really disabled for life. But each one who went in thought that they would not get hit, you see. That's the nature of humanity, it's always some vague other person's going to get it. And if you all knew, the ones who eventually get killed, that they would definitely get killed, they wouldn't go. It's the same with smoking cigarettes or anything else like that, you know. Or even playing some kind of tag across the roads as a child and trying to dodge the cars. Well, that's what it is, you're playing dice basically. Well, that's the same natural phenomena that you have in you, saying that won't happen to me, of course, it's always someone else that's going to get it and I'll be okay.

Isn't it strange, that all the folks who come down with cancers, is always someone else, hey, it doesn't happen to you? It's like you automatically go into the survival mode of seeing them as them, them, like something's different about them that must be really different and so different in fact, because they're not you obviously, so that means they're really, really different, I'm okay. That's the simple thing people have, and everybody's got it. But it does happen to people… that can happen to all of us. Folk who even listen here now have had it, had different things like cancers. Different people get in touch with me too telling me about the trials that they're going through and it's just the way it is.

I can remember years ago watching a public broadcasting thing in Canada and two scientists started talking on this live show of the dangers of electromagnetic radiation. They were closed down before they got much of it out of their mouths, in fact, by the station itself. Someone had to have called in to cut them off. But they were qualified, top scientists in their field of electromagnetics and frequencies. So that kind of made me wonder about it, way, way, many years ago, before even the Internet was up and running the way it is today.

If you do have a radio, a normal radio, you can get especially AM frequency, from the AM… well, you'll see it with the FM too if you get close enough to the screen of your computer. You'll put an AM station, and especially a shortwave station, and you'll hear the racket, the noise as you get closer and closer to that screen, or to the actual computer itself, the main body of the computer. Because it gives off an incredibly powerful electromagnetic field all around it, in fact. I even had, when I use cheepo electric wire sensors, the little pencil type that you're meant to touch the insulation of a wire, and it will glow and give a little buzzing sound if there was live current going through. Well, it will go off near the computer actually, without touching the computer it will actually go off and do the same thing. Well, you're sitting so close to the darned thing, hhch, no one thinks anything about it, hey.

I can remember years ago too when they actually had people who were using the laptops, and they were having cancers of, males, of the testes. That was accepted as fact by the medical community that this was happening, that's what they thought the reason would be, that they were using, sitting the thing on their lap. That's why they call it laptop, right. But it's got that strong signal, electromagnetic current and it's in Wi-Fi for most of the time that they're using it. So there's a double whammy. And they always give you warnings about it, but I don't know if they still give you warnings, don't put it on your lap. Why do they call it a laptop then, 'eh?

Hhhhh. You can't make people use common sense. You can't make them use it, common sense. But at the same time as I say, most folk think it will never happen to me. But it's happening to a lot of people, the other folks out there, you know, them, not me. But them, [Alan laughing.] that phenomena again. I can remember doing the articles across, with some of the Canadian authorities, and the US too. They were putting up the antennas on schools to broadcast Wi-Fi, right through the area, the school and the playground too. They had measured the currents of it all and so on. People were getting, including the teachers were getting incredible headaches with it. At least that was the outcome with most of these places. And confusion at times as well, which it can cause as well. So eventually they took a lot of these antennas down again, I remember it happening to a place not far from me, because of its potency basically.

But give it a little bit of time and they'll all forget it. And we do. Today I think people's memories are getting shorter and shorter. Because what I'm talking about was only about three or four years ago, maybe five at the most. And yet all that stuff is coming back again and now you're going into the 5G system. Now, the 5G system was officially launched, they launched it in Scotland for the UK, actually tried Scotland. At least the Orkney's, the islands north of Scotland. That was the test base, I guess. They did a kind of launching of it over a week ago. Apparently, it failed [Alan chuckles.] during a live PR thing by the BBC. But the idea was that, it says…

5G: Why Orkney got the latest tech before London
bbc.com / 30 May 2019

People living in six major cities are now able to access the UK's first 5G network for the first time.

But the latest superfast technology has already been available for months - to islanders in Orkney, farmers in Shropshire, and some cows in Somerset.

They have been taking part in a trial, part funded by the UK government, which is designed to make the case for investment in areas without lots of customers.

And…

And…

5G: Finally, it's here in the UK - so what is it? - bbc.com / 30 May 2019

And it tells you what it is to an extent, 5G. Really… Well… Even then it's very, very thin on facts because they don't go into the effects of it really. Hm. Oh, you'll get faster Internet speeds, things like that, or be able to download more stuff at the same time, that kind of thing, that's what they're telling you, all the plus things about it. But it says that maintaining Wi-Fi across the islands basically and how it's going to work out there, but it's going to be awfully, awfully expensive. And you're only going to get about I think it's 10 gigs a month, although they'll probably have ideas that you can pay more and more money. But it says here that there's 5G handsets, you see, you have to get a 5G handset to go along with it. So, in the meantime most folk will still be getting their 4G systems, working with that basically until they have everything else ironed out. But it's awfully expensive.

It's the Internet-of-things, really. The other articles in the techie magazines talk about, it's the Internet of things, where all the different appliances and everything will communicate with everything else. And literally there'll be nowhere you can hide anymore because you'll be traced and tracked everywhere by a thousand different things you don't even know exist around you. Even nanotechnology too. They did documentaries on that years ago on the nanotechnology and the 5G system. Basically, it's here, the Internet-of-things as they call it. They talk about the speeds of it, you make it 20 gigs per second they say. Which of course will be way up, way beyond what we're going to get. But they always do, they always overestimate all the pluses that it's going to do for you. And how expensive it will be of course.

And also too, they're saying that it'll be more expensive because if Huawei doesn't get the contracts you’re left with other contracts, or contractors to give you the 5G. Which is quite interesting to me because all that stuff with China is just to see what country's going to get the big contracts. Because they'll supply all the security systems across the world with money, on all your… even the NSA will be getting their stuff from them too, you see. So, it's a big, big contract and of course, there's big battles. And some folk have been more open about where it's going, who's going to get the contracts. It's quite something else. Business, business, business, isn't it?

I'm going to do an article here on the 5G and it says...

5G, There's Nowhere to Hide! mieuxprevenir.blogspot.com / 26 May 2019 / Dr Tracy Chandler

(Alan: This is a good article in fact about people who are exposing some of the dangers. It says...)

Our health is more important than having cars that talk to each other or faster movie downloads, states Dr Tracy Chandler (aka Dr Wellness) who says we should be wary of 5G.

Crowd control. No these aren't the words of a conspiracy theorist but actual history of 5G (a form of radio frequency, or RF radiation) which was originally used in the last Century (A: ...that's the 20th century...) for crowd control but was later mostly abandoned because it burnt people.

(A: They've got links to it too, these actual articles from the defense.gov about the actual burning of people with what they were using for crowd control and the 5G system. Anyway, it says...)

This week's opinion piece has been an accumulation of many weeks of research and communication with experts in the field of the effects of 5G on human health. It was therefore heartening to see the media recently take on this controversial topic.

The key sentence in this Stuff article is an eloquent quote from University of Auckland psychology professor Susan Pockett: "Approximately 600 peer-reviewed research reports from a range of international scientists show us that radio frequency radiation is linked to [multiple medical conditions including] infertility, (A: Well, that's a plus factor, you see, again, coincidentally for the big agenda, for sustainability, right. And...) diabetes, various kinds of cancer and psychiatric disorders".

In fact, the research on the health effects of 5G is even more extensive than that quoted by in that article with tens of thousands published over the last 80 years. This huge database clearly refutes the industry funded research that claims no harmful effects from EMF's (here and here).

(A: And it gives you again links on legitimate scientific investigations on this.)

As the Stuff article mentions, "more than 200 scientists have written to the United Nations and the World Health Organization (WHO) expressing concerns about potential health risks from the technology". Whilst RF radiation was classified as Group 2B in 2011, a possible human carcinogen (along with lead) after advice from the International Agency for Research on Cancer (IARC) there have been further studies since then which have strengthened the association, leading to many scientists calling for EMFs to be classified as a "Group 1 carcinogen" along with tobacco smoke and asbestos.

(A: Not a bad article this actually. As I say, it isn't just guessing about stuff. They have a lot of studies to back up what's being said here.)

The WHO has 'appeared' to be proactive by launching a paper for public comment in 2014 on RF fields and health. However, it turned out that five of the six members of the Core Group in charge of the paper are affiliated with International Commission on Non-Ionizing Radiation Protection (ICNIRP), an industry loyal organisation, and thus have a serious conflict of interest.

That's how they always do it at the World Health Organization. The same with different organizations that are overseeing the drugs, drug safety and so on for the public. They're often affiliated with the very pharmacies and so on that actually make the pills and medicines. That's how they do things in the real world. Anyway, I'll put this article up for those who want to look through it. Also go through this article here and it says...

Then an article by DARPA. Quite interesting, in fact, it says…

US Military Developing Wireless Tech to Control Weapons With Your Mind
tomsguide.com / 22 May 2019

DARPA wants to wirelessly connect human brains to machines, allowing soldiers to fully control weapon systems, view things remotely like a three-eyed Raven, or feel stuff remotely.

Imagine the potential applications, not only for military control of airplanes weapons, but also for civilian uses, from controlling artificial vision systems to completely immersive virtual reality systems that will transport your consciousness to alternate relatives.

(A: Hmph. Alternate relatives, 'eh?)

It's the stuff of science fiction, but scientists have already made some advanced in the field. The first human neuroprosthetic devices appeared in the mid-1990s, allowing patients to crudely control artificial limbs.

So, they always go into the nice things you can do, and,we're here to help people. The military-industrial complex is here to help people, right. But anyway, it says they've got all these different projects on the way for finding ways to, to manage basically your brain, in the military and also in civilian life as well. You're living in the technotronic era remember, and you tie that with the 5G, and the waves which can go across an entire continent, like Brzezinski said in the 1970s. He says, they have the technology then to bathe a whole continent in technotronic waves basically, of power that would influence the behavior of the entire population and even pacify them. Old stuff in a sense. However, what they say they're working on was done long ago if fact. They're really just meaning their putting it into operation on a bigger scale now.

Amazon wants to 3D-scan volunteers' bodies for a $25 gift card
theverge.com / 23 May 2019

Amazon is gathering data about body types by inviting volunteers to get scanned, taped, and photographed. As spotted by Mashable, the company is running a study to “learn about diversity among body shapes,” offering a $25 gift card for a 30-minute appointment in New York. Participants will take a survey and assent to 3D scans (plus photos and videos) of their body — first in their everyday attire, then in “form-fitting” clothing.

(A: Do you understand where all this is going?)

The study is run by Amazon Body Labs, originally a startup that Amazon acquired in 2017. Body Labs produced detailed 3D body models for shopping and gaming; as Mashable notes, it grew out of an attempt to identify criminals (A: ...initially, right.) with computer vision techniques. And Amazon has gathered this kind of body data before. The Wall Street Journal reported on a longer-term study in 2018, when Amazon asked to scan participants several times over a 20-week period, measuring changes to body shape over time.

So again, it's not just their faces that they're doing, it's your whole body. Everything identifies you, even the way you walk, that's all studied as well by the way. And recorded. [Alan chuckles.]   Yep.

Comments on US National Toxicology Program reports on toxicology and carcinogenesis study in rats exposed to whole-body radiofrequency radiation at 900 MHz (A: 900 is much lower, remember.) in mice exposed to whole-body radiofrequency radiation at 1,900 MHz
ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/24 Oct 2018

During the use of handheld mobile and cordless phones, the brain is the main target of radiofrequency (RF) radiation. An increased risk of developing glioma and acoustic neuroma has been found in human epidemiological studies. Primarily based on these findings, the International Agency for Research on Cancer (IARC) at the World Health Organization (WHO) classified in May 2011 RF radiation at the frequency range of 30 kHz-300 GHz as a 'possible' human carcinogen, Group 2B. A carcinogenic potential for RF radiation in animal studies was already published in 1982. This has been confirmed over the years, more recently in the Ramazzini Institute rat study. An increased incidence of glioma in the brain (A: That's the brain cancer type that you're seeing more common right now in youngsters.) and malignant schwannoma in the heart was found in the US National Toxicology Program (NTP) study on rats and mice. The NTP final report is to be published; however, the extended reports are published on the internet for evaluation and are reviewed herein in more detail in relation to human epidemiological studies. Thus, the main aim of this study was to compare earlier human epidemiological studies with NTP findings, including a short review of animal studies.

(A: It's quite detailed actually for those that care to read through it.)

The brain is the main target of the exposure to RF radiation during the use of handheld wireless phones; both mobile and cordless phones. Thus, an increased risk of developing brain tumors has long been a cause for concern.

Then they go into it all for those who care, as I say. Also…

WHO - Electromagnetic fields and public health who.int / May 2006

Mobile telephony is now commonplace around the world. This wireless technology relies upon an extensive network of fixed antennas, or base stations, relaying information with radiofrequency (RF) signals. Over 1.4 million base stations exist worldwide and the number is increasing significantly with the introduction of third generation technology.

(A: Well, we're beyond that now. This was going back to 2006, this particular article.)

Other wireless networks that allow high-speed internet access and services, such as wireless local area networks (WLANs)… (A: …and so on and so on.)

Recent surveys have shown that the RF exposures from base stations range from 0.002% to 2% of the levels of international exposure guidelines.

There has been concern about possible health consequences from exposure to the RF fields produced by wireless technologies.

(A: Then it goes into the…)

Health concerns

(A: So, it shows the early findings, from increase in body temperatures…)

. . . increase in body temperature (> 1 °C) from exposure at very high field intensity found only in certain industrial facilities, such as RF heaters. The levels of RF exposure from base stations and wireless networks are so low that the temperature increases are insignificant and do not affect human health.

Now, they've done it before in universities, since then in universities where they've actually put two cell phones, nevermind the base stations, but two cell phones quite close and put an egg in the middle and eventually you can actually cook the egg in the shell. I'll put this up too, the early findings. Another one too is…

5G Wireless Technology: Cutting Through the Hype

Many news stories debunk the exaggerated benefits of 5G cellular technology and effects of cell phone use on adolescents. Research on adolescents suggest that cell phones disturb sleep and has an adverse effect on memory and cognitive processes and the endocrine system.

(A: Interesting, on the endocrine system as well too, which secretes different hormones and so throughout your body for different purposes. A lot of good links here actually that are well studied areas on the effects of it and so on. And various professors' writings in universities too about their findings to the testing, etc. Really interesting actually. If anybody really cares. Again, most folk don't want to hear the bad news. You want to just have fun, right. Again, back to that human thing, you'll never get the problems but someone else will. And even then, it's like a human thing, too, there must be something wrong with them to start with, that's why they got it, you see. It's amazing how people rationalize so much without any real evidence of their conclusions. [Alan chuckles.] And then...)

Measurements of Radiofrequency Radiation with a Body-Borne Exposimeter in Swedish Schools with Wi-Fi
wirelesseducation.org

(A: Quite good too.)

Many schools give each student their own laptop and utilize the laptops and wireless fidelity (Wi-Fi) connection for educational purposes. Most children also bring their own mobile phones to school. Since children are obliged by law to attend school, a safe environment is important.

(A: So they go into discussing radiofrequency radiation…)

Lately, it has been discussed if radiofrequency (RF) radiation can have long-term adverse effects on children’s health.

Results: Eighteen teachers from seven schools participated. (A: So, they’ve carried these things, to detect it, how much you would get in a period of time, of these Wi-Fi signals and radiation.) The mean exposure to RF radiation ranged from 1.1 to 66.1 µW/m2. The highest mean level, 396.6 µW/m2, occurred during 5 min of a lesson when the teacher let the students stream and watch YouTube videos. (A: So I guess YouTube videos, I guess any kind of videos would jump up. The maximum peaks would jump up and it shows you what it went up to.) Maximum peaks went up to 82,857 µW/m2 from mobile phone uplink.

Our measurements are in line with recent exposure studies in schools in other countries. (A: So they're comparing their findings with other countries findings too, in the same kind of studies. Which is the way you're supposed to do it.) The exposure levels varied between the different Wi-Fi systems, and if the students were allowed to use their own smartphones on the school’s Wi-Fi network or if they were connected to GSM/3G/4G base stations outside the school. An access point over the teacher’s head gave higher exposure compared with a school with a wired Internet connection for the teacher in the classroom. All values were far below International Commission on Non-Ionizing Radiation Protection’s reference values, but most mean levels measured were above the precautionary target level of 3–6 µW/m2 as proposed by the Bioinitiative Report.

So that goes on and on again too. It's all kind of dry stuff. But you've got to read the dry stuff to find out what's going on. And then this other one, this one too…

UK Study Connects Social Media Use and Depression
wirelesseducation.org

(A: Which I’m not surprised actually.)

In the UK there is a significant rise in teen suicides, anxiety and depression. The mental health of young people is a major concern. Many celebrities are becoming involved, (A: Oh, see, again, you need celebrities, 'eh. Otherwise we won't take any notice. Isn't that sad, 'eh?) turning their attention to helping young people. The UK Millennium Cohort Study1 involved more than 10,000 teenagers who are 14 years old.

This particular study is unique because it was not only looking at the possibility that social media use could lead to depression but also investigated online harassment, sleep, self-esteem and body image as potential pathways to depressive symptoms. The findings were radical and echo the results of similar studies conducted.

The longer young people spend on social media, the higher the risk of suffering with depressive symptoms.

(A: I don't think it's just teenagers that find it. I think we all get that don't we, 'eh. Just reading the nonsense they give you to read is pretty depressing itself.)

Girls spend more time on social media than boys do.

Girls with greater social media use at the start of adolescence can have poorer mental wellbeing several years later.

(A: This is all predictable, from what they already understood by the big marketing companies, their studies they've done on youngsters, male and female. They know exactly how to target the different genders and so on. And the age groups as well.)

Girls using social media for more than five hours a day reported:

- Fewer hours of sleep
- Disrupted sleep
- Online harassment as either a victim (A: Hhhh…) or a perpetrator
- Low self-esteem
- Dissatisfaction with their self-image

(A: This article goes on to talk about, in the US that is…)

In November, the U.S. National Toxicology Program's $30M study2 determined:

- "clear evidence" of heart tumours
- Evidence of brain tumours
- Evidence of DNA damage

(A: So there ya go, that's the US National Toxicology Program study, a massive study that was done.)

Another major 2018 study at Italy's Ramazzini Institute reported similar findings.

This low-level, (A: And this is low level…) non-ionising microwave radiation pulsing from the wireless antennas is linked in other studies to insomnia, anger, depression, behaviour issues, cognitive impairment, suicidal ideation and more.

Children, the science shows, are especially vulnerable. Each device has multiple antennas (think cellular, data, Bluetooth, WI-FI, hotspot, etc.) and without us realizing it, they are all on all the time, constantly pulsing microwave radiation for a handshake with the nearest cell tower or router. The risks for tumours increase after 30 minutes of daily use of a mobile phone against the head.

(A: There ya go.)

There's a lot in this article, pretty good article too. I'll put these up for those who... who look at them. There's some good sites out there with good studies. It's quite interesting. Interesting to look at some countries like Switzerland that voted, where the teachers voted at one time in 2013 to keep Wi-Fi out of school. And I think there's some kind of anger in Switzerland because there's big money offered and the teachers eventually went along with it a few years later or so. Give them time and they get around all the arguments that are put across to the public, I suppose. That's how it's done.

Swiss Firms Will Not Be Compensated if 5G Found to Be Harmful - mieuxprevenir.blogspot.com / 26 May 2019

Something a bit different I just want to touch on. We know there's going to be war with Iran eventually. Because again, it's on the list. And it's in the news, they give you little bits of the usual kind of, the build up to it. That's how things are done. You learn and you accept things by little bits that are put out, and a little bit more and a little bit more, and eventually it's easier to give you the last lie, which is for invasion you see. That's how propaganda works. But if you go into this one here…

U.S. commander says American forces face 'imminent' threat from Iran
nbcnews.com / 6 June 2019

The top commander of U.S. forces in the Middle East says he believes the Iranians or their proxies (A: Their proxies, right…) may orchestrate an attack at any moment.

"I think the threat is imminent," Marine Gen. Frank McKenzie said in an exclusive broadcast interview with NBC News in the Iraqi capital. "We continually evaluate our force posture in the region."

So anyways, it's getting us used to the idea. They won't be happy until the whole list that was published in the 90s is fulfilled. Again, it was General Wesley Clark that came out with the list idea during an interview he gave with Democracy Now when he mentioned, he was stunned to find out there was a whole bunch on the list. Of course they never go back or forget them. This is an agenda and they're going to do it one way or another. I mean, just the starving of these countries alone with embargoes and so on, like they did with Iraq, has incredible effect on the people. And again, as I've said before, you can basically make folk, force folk to leave and get out of the country, that area, leaving it empty [Alan chuckles.] eventually if need be, by the constant threats and embargoes and all the rest of it. There's many ways to take a country down and the US is definitely using a lot of it. And they won't forget it, they won't let it go.

Another article too is… This is from a reporter….

I live-tweeted the AFP's every move as they raided the ABC's Sydney headquarters
abc.net.au / 7 June 2019

(A: They were raided by the police there. It's almost like the equivalent to the BBC getting raided.)

It was a surreal moment: standing with a group of Australian Federal Police (AFP) officers around a big screen, sifting through 9,214 emails and documents belonging to my colleagues.

I felt like I was having surgery but was still conscious. I was seeing and hearing things which I'd rather not be.

It felt a complete violation of us both as journalists and citizens — and it had nothing to do with national security.

It was at that moment that I felt there was something sick about modern Australia — that an institution as important as the media had come to this.

I should jump in and say this is all... aaa... Hhhhh, starting even with Assange and I came out and said that when we saw that very, very high profile attack basically, open day-light type attack on Assange, all the media were there to take the photographs, and were told to come of course to make sure it was broadcast across the world, that this will happen to you if you start to report things which aren't authorized. But now they're going after ones who are, or they think they're authorized to report news to the public, which was standard for news. But you've got to remember that Australia also had their own version at the same time as the Levinson Inquiry in Britain when they changed the rules of what you could say and so on. That's when the media changed. It was like night and day. It's all politically correct and people were scared to say anything at all in case they would get in trouble. Of course, what they're showing us now is that it's for everybody else. It's to terrify anybody out there that once they give out any kind of... Including bloggers, obviously, obviously it is too, 'eh?

It's a good story but you have to read the whole article itself. As I say, there's a, it's almost a rumor, but it said it's about special forces, showing how special forces may have been killing people they weren't authorized to kill in Afghanistan, supposedly. That's one possibility. And there was something else which they haven't mentioned yet too. So, you don't know what to believe at the moment. So, you can just wait and see. But I really think it's a massive exercise as well on putting people under the thumb of government. Even though newspapers generally were, well, they were authorized to inform the public. Well, that's a bit of a myth as well. They've always been cooperative with governments, I would say, at least most of the time. But I think the message is loud and clear now, you can't just go and get news or discover what is newsworthy anymore. Because we're in a different system. As I say, we've moved into a different chapter.

And in Britain as I say, the Leveson Inquiry didn't just stop with the inquiry. They had recommendations and they passed laws as to what could be said basically and so on. And it's the same in Australia. They're really enforcing it now I suppose. As far special forces go, I think the public, I don't know if they'd be shocked or not to find out if some... War is not hygienic. When you unleash soldiers on the public for wartime purpose, especially special forces because they get put in to do a job, 'eh, and that means generally killing people on the way. Even if that's not the main objective they're going to kill folk on the way in and the way out. They really are not, really, in much of a caring attitude as to should they kill them or not, if they're old, young or whatever it is. That's the nature of war. And especially special forces. They're not going to get bogged down with niceties, you might say, or common decencies. And they certainly can't afford conscience, otherwise they crackup and they'll get wiped out themselves. That's not how it works. Let's wisen up here as well as to what war's about. Maybe they'll suffer later in the years, that's a thing too with posttraumatic stress syndrome. But while they're actually in the units like that there's a whole system of ensuring they don't have much of a conscience, put it that way, for the particular type of work that they're going to do. However, I don't know if that's the real story or not and we'll have to wait and see. But as I say, it's a warning to everybody that think they can just tell [Alan chuckles.] what they see is the truth. Those days have changed, drastically.

Now, in the past, I'd like to say this too, this is to do with suicide and assisted dying. Because it's really, they're giving press to it too and I guess it gets folk familiar with the idea so they'll accept more of it. That is the agenda too naturally. But you've got socialism, remember I've said before that the globalists decided a long time ago, and Carol Quigley affirmed this, he said, we're often mistaken as communists because our goals and our agendas are so similar. Well, they're so similar they're pretty well the same.

The elite wanted a system that would control people completely. Socialism is that. That's the idea that they chose. Not what you think you're going to be getting as a worker from the government back in taxes. No, no, no. That's what they want you to believe. Socialism is a regimented system, an ideology, which is communism too, where the state rules and the state has the panels of experts and bosses, commissars ruling your lives from birth to death. Everybody in it gets ruled and there's no real free will eventually down the road. And you have a purpose, they decide what your purpose is going to be. In fact, they'll even decide if they even need you to be born for certain purposes. That's the end goals of where they want to go in scientific socialism, right.

Now, don't forget that National Socialism was what Germany used in World War II. That's what ran the system for a short time. They get all the hatred piled on them because they used what they called the hygiene, national hygiene system to kill people who are in hospital who were psychiatric patients and those who were deemed below par in different ways, and people with physical ones too, disabilities and that area too. And here we are, opening, I knew it would come to it, it's the same system, right, you understand, but somehow this is a good… and we're being humane when we do it, 'eh, isn't it? Isn't it amazing the hypocrisy of the liars at the top that run the system. Right...

medscape.com / 29 June 2016

"A policy for access to assisted dying by nonterminally ill patients with psychiatric conditions will put many vulnerable and stigmatized people at risk," write Scott Kim, MD, PhD, National Institutes of Health, Bethesda, Maryland, and TudoLemmens, LLM, DCL, University of Toronto Faculty of Law and the Dalla Lana School of Public Health, Ontario, Canada.

"We believe there is a serious gap between the idealized basis upon which assisted dying for patients with psychiatric conditions is advocated and the reality of its practice, as reflected in evidence from Belgium and the Netherlands," they add.

(A: You understand, they always unroll it, like, oh, it's really for real terminally ill people. That's how they always start these things. Just like DARPA, you know, the military industrial research department, we're there to help people and give them chips so's they can move their arms again. You know, aaaaaaaaa, that's how they always start this stuff. So, the same thing, oh we're here to determine… And then they go into, well you're a bit depressed, how about a pill, you know, take this pill. So anyway, this article is quite good and it says...)

"We believe there is a serious gap between the idealized basis upon which assisted dying for patients with psychiatric conditions is advocated and the reality of its practice, as reflected in evidence from Belgium and the Netherlands," they add.

(A: They give you the actual link to the editorial in fact that was published in the Canadian Medical Association Journal.)

Their editorial was published online June 21 in the Canadian Medical Association Journal.

It's really something. And I knew it would come to this because they always, they never change, a leopard never changes its spots. Or it's techniques, you know. It's always there to help you. It's always for you, we want to help you. Yeah, we don't want you suffering, hm, in any way at all, we don't want you suffering whatsoever. And that's how it's put across to you. And then...

Belgium investigates right-to-die group offering suicide powder
theguardian.com / 31 May 2019

The Last Will group, which has about 23,000 paying members with an average age of 69, was blocked by the Dutch authorities last year from helping approximately 1,000 people purchase the lethal drug but continues to offer advice on legal ways to obtain it.

The reason I think a lot of this is in the paper again is because they made a big, almost like a publicity… It's almost like… Yeah, I guess it's a publicity stunt in a sense, but it's real, supposedly. It says that a girl, a young woman took her own life in 2015...

Doctor Killed Healthy 24-Year-Old in Euthanasia Who Thought of Suicide Since She Was a Kid (A: ...a child.)
- lifenews.com / 22 June 2015

And then Belgium, it says it's getting worse and worse and worse, right. So basically, what you've got here is… You see, anybody who might be what they'll call a burden on society, an economic liability, it's cheaper to get rid of you. It's the same if you're elderly. You might be scared to go into hospital now when they can offer you suicide basically. Because they like it, it's going to save money for the system. They got more money, they can spend it on other good causes. And I won't even go into that.

But there you go, they aren't going to help people who have a mental problem. Even if it's temporary. Do you know how many young people really get depressed? It's a normal thing to go through when you're young, as you’re trying to figure out what life is about and where you are in life and where you stand with everybody and so on, as you're finding yourself. That's why even youngsters, you used to say, they were ungainly… Especially the males trying to walk when you're an adolescent, you're trying to walk like a person who knows what they're doing and you're self-possessed and so on. But you might feel, in actual fact, gangly, gangly legs and that as you're... because you're still growing. That's how it is. But to get depressed and things and then get offered suicide, come on. It says here…

Raped girl, 17, legally allowed to die in Holland after suffering ‘unbearable pain’ since childhood abuse
thesun.co.uk / 5 June 2019

… died on Sunday in an “end-of-life clinic” bed in her living room in the Netherlands after she refused food…

Now, they'll use this for the debate, of course, naturally, and like a PR thing too. They'll make hay out of this. And folk will go, they'll pick sides without knowing all the facts. This is how it's done. And that's how you're led to your opinions in the system.

Criminal Case Spurs a Rethink of Euthanasia for Mental Illness
medscape.com / 19 Feb 2019

The recent launch of a criminal investigation into a case of medically assisted death for psychiatric illness in Belgium, reported by multiple media sources, is shining a spotlight on growing concerns — even among supporters — about the controversial practice.

I'll tell you something, it won't just end with you choosing. It's going to… This is the whole thing about it, where it always has to go. Eventually the state will decide to kill you. I'm not kidding you, this is where it's to go. Hhhch, and you're constantly being trained to believe professionals and accept them and do what you're told, obey, obey, obey. And as this system goes in and in and in, you're being brainwashed in a thousand different ways through techniques you don't even understand are happening to you and being used on you. And that's where it's supposed to end up. And you'll have the state advising this to you.

It's already happening where they advise you to take it, I've done stories on that before. But this will be the normal. And they'll demand you take it. I'm not kidding you. They might not even tell you. This is really where it's supposed to go, folks. A professor in Australia, I told you, came out a few years ago and he got big press on television, naturally, saying that, you know, if people would just hit the retirement age and die, he said, and the excuse was, well it will leave more work for young people to take. But the whole point is it's the planned, literally the planned society, including planned death, folks. Brave New World, here you are. M-hm. There you go.

But also, we've got the odd things happening that don't make much sense because they won't tell you much, will they? It says…

Three Chinese warships dock in Sydney Harbour — but were they even invited? - businessinsider.com.au / 3 June 2019

Supposedly it was a surprise. Although again, the Prime Minister eventually, and says, no, it wasn't really, you know. But everybody else, it's gotta be something to it. It was a bit of a surprise, apparently. And who knows what's happening there. Maybe they're forcing them to buy Huawei, who knows! [Alan laughing.] Gunboat diplomacy, 'eh? M-hm. After all, that's what the US used in Japan to force them to trade a long time ago. And that's what also the US and Britain and France did on China, to force them as well, they put bails of opium in until they succumbed to it. But there you go, that's how it really is.

It's just astonishing the world that we live in, isn't it? It really is. I'll put these links up, remember, for those who really care to read through them and plow through them. And for those who can handle it, you know, no one wants to think that stuff is damaging us… even though the statistics out there and the disclosures of studies showing us about all the cancers we're getting off this stuff. And you wonder why they're giving you more and more and more. You know, the folk who design these things and make them won't even carry a cell phone! What does that tell you?

That's the world we live in, folks. So sorry for a dry talk today but there was so… I wanted to get that stuff out on the 5G because you got to start thinking about things. You really do. You're getting bathed in the stuff wherever you go. When it's really up and running, it's the Internet-of-things, as I say, where nanotechnology... Don't forget the articles on nanotechnology and the big, oh, wonderful, wonderful things they're going to do with 5G, and nanotechnology will get it signals... and all these little particles and that, like little microorganisms almost, could get together in your bloodstream and repair things and stuff… be programmed externally from any distance across the world, to you. In other words, all these things can be done to you without you knowing about it or getting approval or anything else. And you really want that happening to you? Hm?

Do you really want what Persinger the professor who had worked for the big military boys at one point, he talked about the big field of, basically that could, they could... you're living in a field, he meant Wi-Fi, and eventually no one would be, could be ignorant of other folks' sufferings. You'd know what people across the world were, how they were starving, you'd feel it, you'd know it. You'd literally feel it, because they'd be in your brain, you see. Do you really want that system? Of course you don't. Well you're not going to get much of a say in it. Well, you get a say in it if you demand it. If you don't demand it, you get no say in it. Simple as that. And it's always pushed as a great, great thing.

You know, you've got to have logic in the world and consistency of logic. And I'm not putting a damper on anything, I'm just stating logic and some fact. If you want to be able to stop people smoking, because of the tar in cigarettes that's carcinogenic, it's not just the tar, it's ALL of the chemicals the government demanded that were put in the tobacco, by law, hundreds of them. They weren't necessary. And they haven't explained yet why they demanded to get put in. But also, the tar, okay, but smoking, now that government is in on pushing marijuana, big big massive business, right, and the minute those at the top of government, including the legal profession, and who are in the departments of Attorney Generals and so on, top characters, have got shares in the company, 'eh. Now that they're running it all, marijuana is, have you seen the tar that comes off of that stuff? Waay beyond cigarettes. But that's okay.

Well, as I say, logic has to be logical, and it must maintain logic. You can't just have... you can't have it both ways. It's not logic if you go in different directions here, you know, on the same kind of problem. Tar is tar, 'eh. That's good tar, this is bad tar. Because why? Because the government's pushing it now, 'eh, for big business. You got to start thinking for yourselves. On everything. Including this 5G. And including below the 5G because don't forget we've been getting the reports of the cancers from, you know, the 2 1/2 all the way up to now, the 5G. It's sad but true.

And really, that's all I can say tonight unfortunately because I've run through this stuff. I was going to talk about different things tonight but I thought I should get all this... this kind of depressing data out, just for the articles themselves, for those who want to go through it. That's how knowledge spreads, it's from the ones that can handle it. They can handle the bad news and they're not scared to delve into it and then pass it on to other people too. That's how things change. The people who turn their heads away because it's bad news really don't change anything. They enable things to happen because of their silence. That's what they count on of course.

And I don't blame the people. Life is tough enough for most folk without having to worry, worry, worry about other things too. Don't worry about it. The ones who can handle this stuff don't worry so much. They're cautious, they understand it, but they won't sit and let it destroy them, that's the difference. That's the best you can do.

For myself from Ontario, Canada, I'm Alan Watt and it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

June 16, 2019 (#1725)

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on June 16, 2019. I'd like to start off by reminding people to donate occasionally to cuttingthroughmatrix.com website. I've mentioned it before, you can buy the books and discs on the site. All the sites listed on the .com site are mine, therefore you'll know they are authentic sites. You should take notes of them all too in case anything happens to any particular one of them, or even the .com site, then hopefully you can still get my talks on some of the other sites which I have.

Remember too, if you're buying books and discs or donating, they have to be from my sites. Everything else out there who does it and pretends it's me, but with a different address, is obviously someone else that's getting the money. And I say this because it's happened quite a few times before where characters have even reprinted the books and so on. You'd be amazed at the things that happen if you're occasionally hitting the nail on the head, and perhaps even frequently hitting the nail on the head. You'll definitely get a lot of problems happening to you. And I've had this for years, since I started actually.

So as I say, for those who can remember I'm still around and who listen to my talks, remember, I can't live on just air. I need the help too from people to donate for the talks they get. You'd be surprised how many people across the planet use this stuff, in a lot of the big talks, and some of them even in the US too, which we know of course because they parrot them off, my topics off, and often don't even change the writings that I put out there or the way that I word things, and they just repeat them without mentioning where they get them from. And they don't give you a penny unfortunately. It's a darn shame, but that's the system that we live in today.

One thing I've never looked for is the system to be fair. Because when you're dealing with humanity it really is not a fair thing at all. Remember that too. You can look, for instance, and I've said this many, many times before, even when you go into the martyrs of history, or even take Christianity, where the people who followed Jesus were booing him, once he got caught and he was hanging up on the cross there, they turned their back. Because they want a winner, you see, and a winner is someone who's going to make utopia for them, and they do nothing to get it actually, they want it all for nothing.

That's a sad truth that will always be eternal. You find that over and over again, when people are knocked under, who've been causing a bit of a problem to different kind of authority figures you might say across the world, they're knocked down. More so today because they're getting more and more bold on simply silencing people. And we all know it. It's rather obvious. And we get little threats… or your Internet is not working much at all, or everything starts slowing down, or your telephone calls are all clicking and getting cut off each time you talk to someone. You know darn well you're being harassed of course and that's basic simple harassment. That's how... you hope it stays at that, although who knows. Who knows where it’s really going to go?

Remember too, that a lot of the biggies out there that used to be seen as leading proponents for human rights, and your rights too in your own countries, really are obviously simply political punters today getting well-paid obviously to push and promote politics as usual. And even the wars too as you've all noticed. So I hope you're taking good note of all of that. It's awfully important that you do. If you value your sanity. Because if you don't know who's who today, I do feel sorry for you. It's very, very evident, isn't it.

It's the same with the US too, I’ve said before that the people in the US didn't have real politicians to vote for in the last election. They really didn't have much of a choice in any party. And I keep saying this, it wouldn't really matter who you got in, if it was Trump or Hillary, because Hillary would take her orders from the same bosses of the planet and would have to go along with it. These are big agendas that were worked out long ago, all the wars, step-by-step, all the way back to the published list of the neocons in the 90s, of course. And they haven't changed the list. I keep mentioning the list, and some generals too I've mentioned before are pretty good at verifying it because they also talked about the list. And we're still living through it. So they never go back on what they plan. They might take a few years to slow down here and maybe reformulate their strategy, but they eventually get around to them.

And anyone who dares oppose anything today is being put in their place very, very quickly, in the very system that the people thought was their free system, their Internet. Which is a big joke. To think that… Do you really think… [Alan chuckles.] I gave talks in the 90s about this. I never even had a computer then but I gave talks on the radio. The only reason I got a computer eventually a few years later, quite a few years later actually, was because I had to do it for my talks and my shows and things. And that's the only reason. Because I knew, and I said, you'll get 20 years out of it, if you're lucky, before they rein in all the different rights and freedoms that you thought you had. And that's exactly what's happened of course.

Julian Assange was the obvious martyr to this one as he did expose a lot of things that were going on and upset the powers that be to an extent. And believe you me, if you upset the authorities on that level, they don't forget you. And they won't let you go. And they will get you. Hate thrives at the higher echelons of power. Hate, if you want real hate, you can just see the different characters they have come to hate down through time. It's always too, the message is loud and clear, that anyone who has a good word to say about Assange is going to be attacked as well. Very obviously. That's why of course they did the arrest the way they did. They publicized it to make sure everybody got the message. And terrified every journalist on the planet who might say something good. Except for maybe John Pilger who at least has the gumption, and a few other people around about him, to come out and say, give some support for Assange. But for the rest of the population across the world who are quite happy to use his information, to their own advantage of course for whatever their own personal aims and ambitions were, you get total silence. Which is standard, again. Because Assange didn't bring them the utopia they all wanted. Standard thing isn't it. And that doesn't change. But the message is loud and clear, loud and clear, that authorities, especially with warfare in mind, are not going to tolerate any little nuisances at all.

I'm sure you're all aware that on Trump's recent visit to London he took some of his top members of government with him. I knew there was more to it, going to come out of it obviously. It wasn't just going over for dinner with the Queen, it was much more than that. And sure enough, it's to do with this, are we all on board for the war against Iran idea. Obviously. Before the supposed, or so we're told, attacks on ships in the Gulf over there that happened supposedly a couple of days ago. They already planned that strategy obviously, and they were getting, making sure that everybody was on board with it. That seems to be what they always, always do. Getting back to Assange though, I'm sure they discussed that too because it says here in a newspaper article that...

Julian Assange: Sajid Javid signs US extradition request
bbc.com / 13 June 2019

A request by the US to extradite Julian Assange has been signed by the Home Secretary Sajid Javid ahead of a court hearing on Friday.

I keep saying that nothing has changed, I think Einstein said it too, that nothing has changed, when they dropped the bombs basically, except man's way of thinking, we're still in the Stone Age basically. Power rules absolutely and those who have power are generally pretty ruthless characters at the top, of all countries. These are the advisors as well in all countries, that are picked because they are psychopathic, and they work their way up because they are psychopathic too. Psychopaths love power. Psychopaths, as I've said before, will serve a top dictator, or even if you're elected, I don't care what they want to call it, it's all the same to me. They'll serve them very well. They'll actually almost worship the top person, the person above them, and they'll despise those beneath them. That's the arrogance of the psychopath. That's why they're perfect for the kind of pyramid level from top to bottom of authority. So, they love the power themselves. They love to get power. And they worshiped those who have more power than themselves. They despise those with less. Quite simple. Every country's got them.

British Home Secretary signs extradition order to send Julian Assange to US - rt.com / 13 June 2019

Getting back to Assange of course, they want to just grab him back to the States. Or somewhere else. They might shove him in some other country. It's astonishing, again, the disclosures a few years after some of their renditions as they called it before, just where they were putting these people. It's just astonishing, all over the planet. And every country was in on the act and grabbing folks and whisking them off to be tortured. And often that was the last you heard of them because they just disappeared. Meaning they're dead, you know. Other ones were, they could get back.... but a lot of them were just simply killed. You know, because we are so progressive and humanitarian, as they keep telling us we're more human today.

To be honest with you, nothing surprises me. And I don't get as much upset about it because you can't get upset about a system which you understand. Nothing is unexpected. The lies that you get are expected too. Even the types of lies and what they'll be are often expected. But I've never lived in some kind of fantasy bubble of what the world was.

I can remember one show was on years ago and it was with Dr. Stanley Monteith. He says, tell me something about yourself. And I was, he wasn't used to my kind of humor that I have but I said to him, well, I says I'm probably, I've often thought of myself as being a bit autistic. And he was a really nice guy and he said, oh, I'm sorry to hear that. And I says, no no no, I says, meaning I was kind of joking about it. But what I was saying was, I said, I tend to see the world as it really is, so that's how I said, I must be kind of autistic. Because most folk DON'T see the world as it really is. They tend to believe the system that's indoctrinated into them.

Many years ago I gave talks about, about the system itself, and how we are all dosed with this, this, this-is-how-to-see-things, we're dosed with it from childhood. As soon as we're born. Your parents are the first ones to indoctrinate you because they'll try to pass on their indoctrination on to you thinking it's normal. They tell you what to respect and what not to respect, what's good, what's bad, and so on. It's all changed of course in the last 40, 50 years now as they've turned everything upside down with the big experiment on humanity. And we're always going through literally planned experiments, mass cultures and… For every part of the culture, for each century, is divided up into sections. They already have it planned what type of culture they're going to give you for the next 40 years, for instance... and where you are now, and where it came from and so on. It's all planned that way. And yet the folk who lived through that will never know it, they'll think they just developed that way and that the choices that THEY make they think are their own choices. They have no idea that you're told, here's your handful of choices that you can pick from. Right down to even extreme body art, which I might even touch on today. It's all planned for you.

So as I say, nothing surprises me. Other philosophers have mentioned it too, through their own observations as well and their knowledge, acquired knowledge you get too naturally, that you're living through a system, a very, very carefully managed system. Nothing is overlooked in this system. Especially today with so many levels of government agencies, and so many new agencies farmed, and that the work is farmed out from government to them, and think tanks and so on galore, it's just astonishing. Working with every facet of society and the future, the present and the future.

We truly are like antenna, and every generation is like another crop of antenna, because like antennas receive signals, or information or data from sources. And for those who control the sources obviously they can decide what kind of data that's going to get transmitted. And if the data ends up in a being, a human being, you might say, then obviously the human being is going to believe what they're told if that's the only source of information that they're fed. And even if they're suspicious about it and they'll find when they look at other areas or other sources of information, if they all verify the same thing, they'll believe it, you see. It's quite easy to do If you have a monopoly over all information. A very simple thing.

But even so, if you've got ten different establishments, news establishment giving you the same stories, then surely, they can't all be wrong. Well, why not? Why can't they all be wrong? We've already done the talks before on, and the studies on the big corporations and consortiums, call them what you want, monopolies, cartels, who owned the media before, who have their histories published from years ago, on how they were started up TO BE monopolies and to basically standardize information to the people across their continents or their countries. And how effective it's been. It never changes. It never will change. The beauty is that today of course it's even better at covering up or trying to hide through a labyrinth of front companies to get to the parent company that actually owns them. That's what they do with monopolies, you know. Even if you try to get to split them up from the big massive monopoly that they are, they'd simply hide it even better and better and better.

It was so interesting watching a documentary put out there on Standard Oil basically and the oil wars that happened in the early 20th century. You find that they had a monopoly on information then too. They also were in the business of buying up newspapers to standardize information. It wasn't just oil, they wanted to own and standardize all of it. They wanted to own everything pretty well. And they believed in a system that would not be Democratic that it really was the right, is the right for big, big billionaires, the richest folk, to run the world. That's what they really believed and they were more open about it than they are today. The only ones they had to trick and confuse was the general public beneath them. And they're awfully good at that too with their medias.

Because old man Rockefeller himself said that competition is a sin. And he wasn't just being facetious. He meant it. Don't forget too that the Rockefellers were in touch with, they were really the beginnings of the American branch of the Royal Institute of International Affairs, which is the CFR, who wanted to take over the resources of the world. They were already doing it from Britain. And I hate even using the word Britain because the British folk haven't got a clue what went on. They just paid for it all through their taxes and their wars and so on. And supplied their troops.

But the Royal Institute of International Affairs that came from the Lord Alfred Milner group, who, they ran the British Empire, Milner's group were the top people who ran it, in the top positions for the Empire. But they also, the members also ended up running the gold mines and the diamond mines across Africa, and much of the resources across India too. They did not believe that democracy was a thing which was a safe viable system for the public either, but they believed that they would give the appearance or the semblance of democracy. They'd allow you to vote, make you think that you’re free and so on. It was awfully good.

But these organizations are still going on. They're alive and they're well today. But they're still going after all the resources of the world. They never ever went back on that or changed their minds on it. Because it's essential for them to own ALL of the resources in the world. And it isn't just accumulating wealth and more wealth and more wealth so they can hold onto power, and then have arranged marriages amongst their families to keep hold of that power and wealth. It was also to basically bring in their system, which we know today as progressivism where science and so-called, the humanist scientists would rule the world on their behalf. They would be the kind of technical class on the behalf of those who owned all the resources. And this has all happened. It's all happened. And all the think tanks too that all work for them too are part of the scientific groups which give the customs and the culture to each up-and-coming group of say ten years apart, they hit them further with what's going to be their culture and their culture and their culture right up to the present.

It's very clever. It's not so difficult to understand, it really isn't. It's just difficult if you've never heard about it before, hhh, it kind of shocks your mind. But it's quite easy to understand how it's actually done. It's not guess work on my behalf here. As I've said before, Lord Bertrand Russell wrote enough books about it. He worked with the Macy group, awfully important, to do with the technocrats and so on, which would be the expertise, the scientific staff that would run the world, how to do it all, how to give cultural changes step-by-step, until within a 40-year span those who were hitting 20 would think it was all quite natural and normal. That's how, you know, precise it is. Very, very effective.

If you look back to, for instance, the world wars that really initially made no sense, especially World War I, to the population. But now, of course, as I've said before, they always disclose all of the information after 50 or 100 years, that previously was under the official secrets act, in the UK, for instance, and they tell you far more about why it all started in the first place. But it was never for the reasons that they told the public. The public are just told that those people that they were going to fight, they're really bad people, they're evil people, and they’re monstrous people, and we have to fight them, for the good, the greater good and all that. And that's what we do, we go off and fight. All countries are given the same propaganda.

But they're never told the real, real, real reasons, the true reasons for it all. And of course, even change is one of the big reasons for it, when you plan change. To get change going in the dialectic you must have at least two opposing parties. If they're not in opposition, you won’t get change. They'll be quite happy to go along in harmony. So, you create division and you get them fighting with each other, and then you plan the outcome, from whoever is going to win it, you plan the outcome to be change, to change the world. That's your synthesis basically. Very simple but very well directed and very well coordinated.

World War I again too, the propaganda was simple. At the end of that war the bankers themselves attended, who helped draft up the treaty, and of course they put Germany under such stiff penalties to pay off reparations to all countries involved that they could never have paid it off. Then you had the Great Depression and it didn't help at all. Of course Germany had it even worse because they got runaway inflation, it's old hat, all that stuff now. But it was caused by the treaty after World War I, guaranteeing another world war. Because Germany had to fight its way out or basically die, and the top writers or journalists who attended the Versailles Treaty and then the Paris Treaty agreed with that too, they'd have to, they actually published books on that, they said, this is the biggest mistake, there's got to be a better way. But again, World War II came along and then everybody's fighting for their way of life and so on. The same propaganda.

But look at it today. Look at from even World War I or World War II, it makes no difference, the grandchildren of these soldiers and so on literally have been taught to hate their countries, and their own people! That took planning. It didn't happen by itself. It took a lot of work and a lot of indoctrination, very clever indoctrination. Almost psycho indoctrinations, like psychotherapy only it's to give you a whole new way of seeing something until you hate it. Because you shape it, you can shape a culture, you understand, you can shape the mindset by selected material and with the exclusion of, say, other parts of the story. So it's not that hard to do at all. Really.

And I've often said too that if you're ever told to go off and fight for something, a physical war, and you're given scary, scary terrifying stories as to why you must go and do it, don't do it. Because I guarantee you, it's got nothing to do with what they're telling you. And if you succeed and live through it you'll find, if you have children at all, or grandchildren, they'll probably end up hating you or even want to exterminate you, because of their indoctrination. It's quite easy to be done actually.

We're used and abused in this system. We truly are. And those who bring you... your nearer to the ultimate goals of those who rule. And there are definitely goals, indeed. These people might eventually one day publish more on what they've done to bring you to this step or this stage. But by that time of course if they ever tell you it's because you couldn't do anything about it anyway. Or you might even like it. It's quite easy to love servitude. Like Aldous Huxley said, you'll come to love your servitude. It's not that heavy, it might be quite, quite happy actually with lots of cheap or free entertainment, things like that. That's why we're catered to so much today. That's why too they allowed so much pornography on the Internet in the first place.

We live in a system, if they want to shut you up, they do it very quickly. We live in a system if they wanted to stop drugs flowing, it would have happened. Very, very fast! And you wouldn't have scandals coming out like drugs for guns scandal, like the Contras that came out in Reagan's time with Oliver North. Drugs were essential to sell at the time for the CIA's different plans, their black budgets and so on to supplement. And of course, they make a lot of folk rich. Nothing happens by itself, but it generally never happens for the reason you're told. [Alan chuckles.] It never does.

And each thing you do, each war you fight, for what's called this new order of things, or what Bush said and Bush Junior said the same thing, he called it a new world order. Each time you get closer to it or the next level of it, you've lost more and more rights along the way. It's not for you. It's a world order of their dreams. They've dreamt for this world order for so long, in certain select organizations like the clubs, like the Royal Institute of International Affairs or the Council on Foreign Relations, and higher groups above them too. Which are circles within circles, as they say, they overlap on the extremities. Much like what you'll see when you see the Olympic flag with the circles all joined together. That's circles that join, you know, circles of friends, circles of influential friends in power, and they're all joined together. That's how it's done. Different names for different parts of them, different rings. But they all know the big plan. They all work towards it in their own select specialized areas. That's how it's done.

But when you look at what's happened, if you live long enough to see what's happening in your own lifetime, you shake your head. Because most folk live through it without seeing it coming you might say, or adapting to it without even consciously questioning it, or wondering why these things happen. And you hope before they die maybe the penny will drop and say, my God, it was planned this way. That's how it happens, as I say.

Remember, World War I was a big, big plan. HG Wells talked about it, in the Fabian Society, Bernard Shaw and many others talked about their dream would get fulfilled through this war, they'd have this war to end all wars. They came up with the slogans, you see. Of course, there never was a bigger lie than that, the war to end all wars. But the war was to get everybody to their knees to give up sovereignty. But out of it came the League of Nations, that was the beginning of it, of the world government. HG Wells talked about it openly. He wrote about it and said that this is our hope and dream come true. Now politicians, or bureaucrats mainly that really run governments, regardless of politicians. The bureaucrats are more important, they're technicians, they know their area, their field of expertise and they run it. But he said that, now the heads of those organizations can contact each other and work together and bypass the political system altogether.

Well, when you look at all the treaties that have been signed and agreements that have been signed through the United Nations, that came out of the League of Nations, and everybody automatically goes to sign the latest thing that they want you to do and so on, and we don't get to vote for the United Nations, so why are your representatives signing on to it, to these foreign things in the first place? Hm? Most of you won't answer or even question it. But the fact is, your politicians are fronts. They are front people. And they know not to ask questions. That's why they get up there, people in politics clue in quickly what not to ask from anybody higher up the totem pole. And that's how you get up the ladder. That's how they're selected.

And politicians do what they're told. The scripts are written for them. All of them. When they come in front of the television set at news time, it's public relations exercises. Everything's put up in place, where they stand and the whole thing, and there's the speech there for them and they parrot off their speech written by somebody else. And that's what they do. That's what they do. And they'll sign their name to anything they're told to sign their name to buy their bosses. Because they do have bosses. It's true enough, you know, that some of them don't know they've got bosses, or they tend to forget it. Like Ronald Reagan, he got shot, not to kill him but he got shot to remind him that he wasn't the boss at one point. That's how it goes.

If you look across the world, like in India, occasionally you'll see someone getting blown up at election time on some stand where they're giving a talk or something like that. That's happened, it's more common in those countries. Because they're not so camouflaged as to how they get around things.

Getting back to what I was talking about originally, humanity hasn't changed. Systems of government and governing you might think are more complex. But they're not. You have the strong psychopaths at the top… who are not wielding clubs anymore, you see, they use military and they use policeman to do their... and they use other agencies as well to do dirty works for them. And every country does dirty work. Every country. No exceptions. None of them are squeaky clean. They all have the dirty tricks squads. All of them. And they are used.

The thing is, they'll always point across the water as I say, oh somewhere else, like India, and they'll say, oh, look at what's happened over there. But it's just because it's more blatant over there. They don't get so many things in the West, like blowing up politicians so much today. But if they can get away with it, they've got more subtle ways of dealing with things. And believe you me, there's just as many people in the West being bumped off and assassinated and having accidents. We're accidented, that's what happens to us all the time in the West, very, very sophisticated, and often put down to natural causes of whatever it happens to be, or hit and runs, drive-by shootings and so on. It's so common.

It's only your disbelief, you see, that allows it to continue. And it does continue. A few years ago there they're were top biochemists just dropping dead all over the place. Just falling over, you know, rail banisters, off tall stairs and stuff, just falling over them, just things like that all the time. Involved in certain projects, naturally. Big, big field. The top investigators to do with Kelly in Britain, that was killed just before he was going to testify. He said he would be found too, the scientist, he says, he warned and said I'll be found dead in a field with my arms slit, you know. And he was. This happens in the West. We've got to stop thinking we're so… so advanced... really... that they'd never do that. What do you mean, they, they would never do it here? They do it all the time. We've got to get that through our heads. Really.

If you look at Assange, that guy was petrified. He didn't stay inside the Ecuadorian embassy because he liked the wallpaper. The man knew that they'd kill him. And if they couldn't kill him, they'd do what they're doing now, which is the next best thing. But they might kill him yet, which is to put him away for natural life. As a big, big warning to everybody else. So, he'll be the ultimate scapegoat for everybody else, you see. He is the sacrificial lamb you might say, that's what it is really. And a warning. Believe you me, all the reporters out there have got the warning loud and clear. And they're all complying. And they're all immediately with this Iranian thing, oh my God, oh yes, and they're publishing the handouts given to them by the military and by their governments, just poof poofpoof.

Just like 9/11, before the dust was even settled, I think before the buildings actually had collapsed completely they were already yelling to tell you who to blame for it. The same thing. Same technique. And they tried it few years ago and blamed, to blame Iran for the same kind of things. And when they showed you the photographs [Alan laughing.] I mean once you get the photographs [Alan chuckles.] of the ships that were hit before, not this time but before, and you saw that the explosions definitely were from within the ships. Because the plate ceiling was blasted outwards, you know, you get the shards with the blast outwards, and you could see quite clearly.

But this time they're trying to say of course that Iran even used torpedoes. Which is ridiculous because torpedoes would have hit just below the waterline. And these particular things they saw were just above it. So they're claiming it's limpet mines now. But it still doesn't wash. Because it's the same scenario as Syria. Syria was warned that if you use chemicals we're going to bomb you. That was the… And that's what was used against them, over and over, even though they hadn't used them. And even the British attaché to that country over in Syria said that too, it was all bogus. But they're getting blamed for it.

Well, it's the same with Iran here too. Because Iran would have nothing, nothing to gain by inviting a war upon them at this moment. Nothing to gain. And again, Iran too, since Japan had a cordial visit to Iran, at the time this happened, of course, the Prime Minister of Japan was there, why would Iran, who is there to do trade and even sell oil to Japan, why would Iran then go and sabotage its own word. It makes no sense, you see.

You always say, who does benefit? Well the fact is, it was on the cards. We live in the time of dirty tricks. And we always have lived in a time of dirty tricks. That's the real world, folks. It really is that bad. It truly is that bad, you know. And only if you live in Disneyland and your indoctrination's been awfully, awfully well taken by your body and your system and your brain, will you ever believe anything different.

I can remember years ago when the Cold War was on the go, and there had been, there was a Russian defector to Britain living in London at the time. He was coming down an elevator, and this is what's they pieced together, and in the elevator traveling down was another guy with an umbrella, which isn't uncommon in London, a furled umbrella. And the defector, the one who is the defector got out of the elevator onto the street, walked about a few feet and then dropped dead. It had been put down to natural causes, like a heart attack or something like that, and that would be the end of it. Except for one person in the mortuary who had a good look, a minute look around the body and found a tiny, tiny, like a, almost like a mosquito bite, smaller than that even, where it wasn't up and raised, it was just a tiny little thing on the back of a calf of the leg. And sure enough, they fished around and I got a tiny, it was like a miniature BB pellet. And a BB pellet is small enough. Tiny little thing under the microscope, they showed you in the newspapers, that had little holes in it and that's what this particular poison would come out of. They deemed that the person that was in the elevator with him and just touched him on the back of the leg, and it would be gas driven, you know, like an air gun sort of thing and driven into him. And he probably didn't feel much at all, if anything at all, and that was that. That was his death warrant right there.

Well anyway, they had an idea immediately who this other person might have been. Because they were watching, London had a fantastic watcher system they call it. It's where anybody from any interesting countries were followed, incredible detail, 24 hours a day. Because they pretty well knew who it would have been. Sure enough, when they got to the person's flat, he left behind belongings, this hitman. They showed you a briefcase, which is a standard assassin's briefcase, with a whole bunch of viles and sprays and injections and things like that. They said, and this is way back, way back in the year, in the caveman's day I suppose. But they said that there were poisons in there which are standard across the world of espionage and assassination which would, could mimic all kinds of diseases, like fast acting cancers, fast acting cirrhosis of the liver, in a teetotaler for instance, things like that, very quickly. And under just general autopsy, or postmortems as they say in Britain, autopsy, it would probably pass as the actual real thing most of the time. That was then.

So, you've got to understand the assassins trade is very old. It's about as old as prostitution I suppose. It's soo old, going way way back in time. Way back in time. It was rife during the Roman days too where poisons were used to assassinate different nuisances in the political realm. Nothing changes. As I say, humanity really hasn't changed except we've got more sophisticated techniques of propagandizing us on a daily basis through media. And of course, the electronic instant communication system, we're all getting the same data across the planet at the same time, from the same sources. Very powerful indeed.

And also remember too, there was a group of assassins that attack, they were after Arabs. I don't know if the guy was Palestinian, but he was Arab, they classified him as Arab and he was a leader. He was hauled off into a, just into a doorway from the street and squirted in the ear with a deadly poison. They pretty well knew who it was. Luckily, his team were around him at the time, knew exactly what it probably would've been, and they got him right to the hospital for the proper antidote. This stuff would penetrate your eardrum, you'd have no symptoms otherwise except for anybody who saw it happen, and you would go into basically a coma and then you would die. And it would probably be put down to cerebral hemorrhage or something like that, you see. But that wasn't that. That was a few years ago that happened, it was in the newspapers. Then you find that was the same from Shakespeare, he talked about that type of poisoning, through the ear, that had been used on Hamlet's father I think it was. So anyway, as I say, it's a fascinating study to see how horrific humanity can be. And in every generation there are people who are quite willing and happy to kill people. They enjoy it. So, they can do it legally for governments and what they call good causes, 'eh? Quite something, isn't it.

And yet I mean, everybody's so fascinated by murder stories. I never understood the fascination by murder stories. Maybe it's because folk really do wish they could kill certain people throughout their lifetime, I don't know. But I've never been interested in who-dun-its. But I'm more interested in the real-life assassinations that happen all the time. All the time. Because we live in a... Humans, their nature has never changed, you understand that, never changed. And those who seek power, it never changes either. It never does. It's a pretty nasty world.

And when you realize too the change agents of teachers and education, and that's what they're called nowadays because they do, they know, each teacher knows that they're really there to change the culture through indoctrinating the children. Nothing to do with teaching them to be able to support themselves throughout life. That's out the window today. But they come out all politicized, don't they? They come out knowing what is right, what's wrong, and all the new normals which are okay to do and what they shouldn't do and so on. What they shouldn't do. It's all taught to them through school. There's never been such a time of mass indoctrination, and with perfected techniques made by psychologists and behaviorists, and neuroscientists, they make up teachers tool kits to make sure they can bring them all, from a beginning on any topic, in a circle, to the perfect ending, and have them all believing in the version you've just told them. That's how perfect it is today.

So getting back to the system, you can see the velvet gloves coming off the iron fist today as everybody gets the message to be good, to shut up, and to talk about space aliens and things which are okay to talk about, things like that, you see. That's what they want you to do. Now, one here is...

Australia may well be the world's most secretive democracy thenewdaily.com.au / 6 June 2019

(Alan: Well, it isn't it a Democracy, really. It's the same agenda as all the rest of us. I mentioned last week about them invading journalists' homes because they had reported supposedly on some special forces in Afghanistan who hadn't been, who had been doing untoward things you might say, they weren't just doing their job, supposedly, that was the rumor at the time. But it says...)

One journalist is being investigated for reporting that several boats filled with asylum seekers recently tried to reach Australia from Sri Lanka.

(A: So, reporting on things now, when you're told to shut up, is in the open now, you see.)

Another reporter had her home raided by authorities this week after reporting on a government plan to expand surveillance powers.

Then on Wednesday, the Australian Federal Police showed up at the public broadcaster (A: That's the main station basically...) with a warrant for notes, story pitches, emails and even the diaries for entire teams of journalists and senior editors – all in connection with a 2017 article about Australian special forces being investigated over possible war crimes in Afghanistan.

The aggressive approach, which Australia's Prime Minister Scott Morrison has defended, fits with a global trend.

Democracies from the United States to the Philippines are increasingly targeting journalists to ferret out leaks, silence critics and punish information sharing (A: And that's awfully important, if you share this information they're going to be coming down on you, basically.) – with President Donald Trump leading the verbal charge by calling journalists "the enemy of the people".

(A: What does he mean by... What people is he talking about, though, 'eh? Hm? Enemy of the people? That's the term [Alan laughing.] which they used in communist countries. You see, slogans can be used in all, all tyrannies, can't they? But enemy of the people, yeah, there you go. M-hm. I saw an article in the paper I thought about there when I just read that. It was in Hong Kong, because mainland China wants to extradite people from Hong Kong that harbors a lot of discontents and malcontents of the communist regime, and China wants them over to deal with them obviously. And some of the signs they had up, the protesters in Hong Kong, were for the police who were firing all kinds of nasty things at them during demonstrations. And these signs in English some of them said, don't be an enemy of the people, hm. So anyway, here's Trump saying to journalists, you're the enemy of the people.)

But even among its peers, Australia stands out. No other developed democracy holds as tight to its secrets, experts say, and the raids are just the latest example of how far the country's conservative government will go to scare officials and reporters into submission.

"To be perfectly frank, this is an absolute international embarrassment," said Johan Lidberg, an associate professor of journalism at Monash University in Melbourne, who works with the United Nations on global press freedom.

"You've got a mature liberal democracy that pursues and hunts down whistleblowers and tries to kill the messenger."

Anyway, it's getting worse and worse obviously. We're back into the old nasty system, 'eh. You're all getting the message that the Internet's not yours. But you can still, I suppose, go and see porn and all that stuff that they've got you addicted on in the first place, that made you to watch for it and want to have computers. You know, personal computers with privacy, personal, it's your personal computer. Meanwhile, half the planet is spying on you through your personal computer. Which you really should be given for free, I said that from the beginning. It's the biggest spy agency/tool there is, they should be giving it to you for free, your government should be doing it.

And then you get into the agenda. I mentioned before about population. What do you think sustainability means? You see, it's about population control and bringing it down, fast. Sustainability, I've gone through many articles over years from the big sources, the foundations, the think tanks that they use at the United Nations Department of Population that was set up for the UN by the Rockefellers by the way. [Alan chuckles.] They are all interconnected, one system, you see. But you're all the problem and any excuse will do, so they had sustainability and carbon and all that nonsense, you see. That's why you're heavily under attack. And you're going to go into massive austerity once they bring the next big financial crash in, which is planned of course. Everything's planned. With the money system, when the money's backed by nothing they can keep, they could keep the fantasy going forever if they want to. So anyway, I'll go into this one here, population control, right…

theamericanconservative.com / 4 June 2019

Low fertility there has been devastating to healthy wages, kinship ties, and family life. We could be next. (A: Oh, my goodness!)

America's fertility rate has fallen to its lowest point in history, 1.73 babies per woman, according to data just released by the Centers for Disease Control. (A: Interesting, that's really your population control, you see, you're the disease, 'eh. Hm? M-hm. [Alan chuckles.] If you haven't got it figured out yet.)

The truth is starker still around much of the developed world, as noted by a new Institute for Family Studies report. (A: And the links are on this article too for those who care to even look it up. Most folk don't care about studying too hard about anything.) Across Europe and Asia especially, each year brings more countries hitting their lowest fertility rates in history. In South Korea, for instance, the average woman can now expect to have less than one child.

(A: Then of course they bring climate change into it that's got nothing to do with it, it's all nonsense.)

In the face of global climate change, this worldwide birth dearth might seem okay. Representative Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez of New York recently noted that some may even be wondering: "Is it OK to still have children?" (A: Well, that's the socialist idea, is to stop having children, if you haven't figured that out. They've published all that stuff years ago.)

Some experts have a different question: should we even care? (A: …experts, 'eh. Hm.) Conrad Hackett, senior demographer at the Pew Research Center, recently asked this question at a forum on family issues hosted by the Brookings Institution. Why do we care if fertility is low?

(A: Then they go through the same thing, where they just, repetition, you notice papers keep repeating the same stuffs about three times before they get to the heart of the story, you know? It's all stretching, padded, filler. Anyway, they go into the fertility rates around the world...)

… in the United States, are lower than what women themselves say they want. About 40 percent of American women in their 40s report that they would like to have more children than they currently do. This figure is markedly larger than the approximately 20 percent of their peers who say they have more children than they would like. Such numbers are worrying because research tells us that women who "miss" their fertility ideals tend to be less happy than those who make them.

(A: For every report they put out there they always have a contradictory one, too, mind you. And anyway, they go into the same stuff that the economists...)

…economists have begun to argue that slow population growth makes us all poorer. (A: Yada, yada, yada.)

It's the agenda, folks. You hear it everywhere you look, you know. It's the agenda, have less children, it's just not sustainable. And then you get another one here to do with abortion, ‘eh…

Abortions high 'shows need for contraception access'
bbc.com / 14 June 2019

Over the past 10 years, rates have been increasing among older women over 35 and decreasing in under 18s, (A: You see how we're studied and studied so minutely, aren't we, ‘eh.) figures from the Department of Health and Social Care show.

Doctors said the figures showed there was an urgent need to improve access to contraception for women of all ages.

(A: Then you have…)

Rising rates in older women

(A: …right… So, you go from people wanting children to abortion and so on. But that it goes into the fact that there's maybe less abortions here and there. But the reason is, is because now you see, you have the abortion pill, if you get it in time, you can have it in the first couple weeks I think. I think that's got a lot to do with it as well, obviously, you know. It's that RU4, what is it, 86 or something like that, what they call that pill, the abortion pill they call it. Anyway, it says…)

In total, there were 200,608 abortions in women living in England and Wales in 2018 - a rate of 17.4 per 1,000 women aged 15-44.

This is just below the peak of 17.9 abortions per 1,000 resident women in 2007.

(A: So it’s… there ya go.)

The actual number is higher now because there are more women in the population.

The latest figures show younger women are continuing to have fewer terminations.

So, we're studied, 'eh, we're studied, studied, studied minutely, minutely. If they think they're just having to many they'll find a way to start getting rid of more. Because is not sustainable, is it, having too many children, yada, yada, ya. We are the problem, you see, humans are the problem they say, they're telling us that.

They gave you what they called free love back in the 60s, they had been planning it for a long time before that. Once they got the pill out in the 60s they really went to town with free love, and the end of marriage, and the utopia was coming and all the rest of it. The promised land was all here, everybody had flowers in their hair and all that kind of stuff. And most of it was actually weed, which they smoked. So there ya go. Everything went up in smoke back then too, I think.

Again, we’re into legalized suicide. Maine in the States…

Maine becomes 8th state to legalize assisted suicide

Again, I tell you, it isn’t, I’m not against, you know, folk wanting to deal with things themselves. What I’m with is when government has a different policy to step in, because they will eventually mandate that you take it all. Do you understand where it’s supposed to go… and it will go, and you will see this going this way.

If you go in and study the bioethics that they’re taught now in universities, especially in medicine, they’re putting out specialists or professional persuaders, on how to teach people how to convince people to kill themselves. Because it’s cheaper for the system to do it. And insurance companies. And when you have nationalized hospitals it's cheaper for the state, because they can use that money, well, on wars and things, you know, or on their big paychecks, pay raises.

Now they've got... it's just... You have to look into bioethics if you want to hear a real horror story, to see how it's all worked out in dollars and cents. And if you get a difficult patient here's how you deal with it. 'A difficult' means someone who won't just go and kill themselves and won't give... They want you to give up fighting for life. Literally, I've read lots of their documents and this is what they say. A difficult patient is someone who is fighting to stay alive. Which is a natural response, folks! But here's how you can get around it and here's how you convince any relatives that are hiding around, waiting to make sure they can get their organs.

They have professional persuaders, teams, that look like ordinary people, you know, who are taught to be sympathetic. And they fly them in jets, around, to get to the relatives during that time so's they'll sign over the organs. You see, they want the organs to be fresh, so you keep the body alive. Huh!?... They can keep the body alive... for as long as they want... until they want their organs, right. But to keep the patient alive, for the patient's sake, no, no, you have no say in that at all. Right. They want to just terminate you if they can't use you. [Alan chuckles.] Woah! Huh? But they can keep, it's okay to keep money to keep that corpse alive for as long as they can when there's an actual, what they claim is brain-death, you know. And they claim that, there's been a lot of cases that have come out of what they call brain death, it just shocks us all, which are published and verified. But that's the horror show in which we live right now. It's a horror show.

But anyway, it says, this article...

Maine becomes 8th state to legalize assisted suicide
wwlp.com / 12 June 2019

Oregon was the first state to legalize such assistance, in 1997, and it took over a decade for the next state, Washington, to follow suit. While still controversial, assisted suicide legislation is winning increasing acceptance in the United States, and this year at least 18 states considered such measures.

(A: Well, sure, because we got the professional persuaders in now to persuade the patients and the hospitals to go along with it. M-hm.)

So it's, yeah, it's quite something there, 'eh. I tell ya.

And it is sad. When they're taking away more and more medication to handle pain and so on... Things work together, folks, this withdrawing of all the opiates and so on, during terminal phases... terminal phases... Huh?!? It's to make sure you want to die... With pain, when you get enough pain long enough you want to die. And it's all done deliberately. For dollars and cents. There you go.

Then they'll give you marijuana as a substitute, but I'm sorry, when you're in that terminal, terminal state it's not going to do any good. And it's all planned that way. Because you see, humanity is unsustainable. That's what they claim. You all are, not the ones who decide for you but the ones, all you, you that'll get the problems, you're unsustainable. You're the problem, you see. That's true socialism. Scientific management of it all. On behalf of the richest folk on the planet. Really. That's what it is.

And then they're going to bring magic mushrooms in now, 'eh? Articles, hey, all over the place, just like marijuana...

Magic mushrooms could replace antidepressants within five years, says new psychedelic research centre - independent.co.uk / 8 June 2019

And wait until you see all your governments, those in government will open up mushroom farms shortly too, no doubt. No doubt at all. No doubt. And they'll have the top shares in it all. Along with the police chiefs maybe. Hm. Just like the marijuana. Yep. I'm telling ya. But they say they do have a massive problem with depression now. No doubt about that too. Because people are losing, it's being kicked out of them actually through a lot of different techniques, they're losing purpose. What's the purpose? It's obviously a dissociative type problem that they have where they can't relate to things, because things don't relate to them. You're a minute amoeba in this massive pool, this sea of amoebas, until, and you simply lose it all. It's meant to be this way. It's planned this way, folks.

Australian men are in crisis, with suicide rates rising. Meet some of the men who'll die this week - news.com.au / 11 June 2019

And they'll help you exit the place because now you can kill yourself for depression, legally. Yeah, they'll kill you. It's cheap that way. If they say to themselves, well you know this person could have manic depression and, which is bipolar now they call it, but it's the same thing, and it might cost a fortune in their lifetime, just getting in and out of hospitals and giving them psychoactive drugs and so on to deal with it all, stimulants and then you get the downers too and all that good stuff, why not just kill them, 'eh? So there you go. Here we go, 'eh.

That's already happened from the articles I had last week, where they're doing it in different countries. They're actually offering suicide to folk, young teenagers who've got a bout of depression. A lot of teenagers go through a bout of depression, folks!It's called… it's part of growing up. Hm. Terrible. It's really awful what's happening, isn't it? It truly is.

And then you get legalization of prostitution, they're trying to push legalized prostitution in New York State.

Group of New York Lawmakers Calls for Legalization of Prostitution - nbcnewyork.com / 25 Feb 2019

And again, you wait and see. You know who will end up owning the farms of prostitution? [Alan chuckles.] The same ones who own the farms of marijuana... and farms of magic mushrooms. Until the state literally is your pimp and your drug pusher. That's where we're going with it. This is your Brave New World, folks. And you've been taught that life is cheap, you're not so important after all, and why not live, you know, your threescore years and just die before you get a pension and leave that money for the state to use. They've actually had some of these bioethicists come out and talk about this. They actually promote it. But I've noticed none of them volunteer. Have you noticed that too? Interesting, 'eh.

But it's quite fantastic to see what's happening in this day and age. You truly are going into it all, aren't you? I want to just put into tonight the warfare techniques that every country's in. We all have our little plans of what of strategies to do with invasions or wars with whoever. But here's one, it came out of RT actually and it says…

Meddling 101: US Army research center publishes strategy to destabilize Russia rt.com / 23 May 2019

(A: It's quite fascinating to read it because that's exactly what they're doing. Including causing mass migration into it from countries 'round about them, if need be, and the techniques of how to do even that. Does that sound familiar here? You know? Hm? So…)

US army soldiers take part in NATO training exercises in Lithuania. (A: …blah blah blah.)

The US could use a variety of economic, military and ideological strategies to "overextend and unbalance" Russia . . .

(A: Well, that's what you do, overextend it with mass migration. Medical care, they need medical care, and the taxation galore to pay for more accommodation to put up even all the masses of refugees. These are destabilization techniques, if you haven't figured that out. It's all done on purpose, in the West too, including the darn wars. I was thinking about that when I was reading this article too, and even before what happened with Iran or coming up with Iran… Do you understand the mass migration you're going to have with all the other countries involved? Syria too? They won't stop just at Iran; they want Syria out of the way too. They won't forget them. And you'll get millions more folks flooding into Europe and… people can't afford it. M-hm. It's meant to destroy and destroy and destroy. Of course it is. A complete massive shakeup of everything that was, a destruction of everything that was, bring in chaos, and out of the chaos you bring in the new, the new order. That's what it's about. So, I'll put this article up too, with there's a PDF for it too. It shows you, this is a U.S. Army research center, their think tank on strategy, all the ways to bring them down. And you can bring all the other countries… [Alan chuckles.] Because obviously it's been used already, all these techniques on other countries, 'eh. It's quite fascinating, 'eh. It says…)

Geopolitically, the report offers that US could consider providing more "lethal aid" to Ukraine, (A: …to fight, you see, Russia, proxy wars.) but acknowledges this option could lead to a "much wider conflict." Increasing US support to Syrian rebels is another option, (A: …you see, US support to Syrian rebels… These are the ISIS rebels, hm, against Syria, hm. Increasing it. [Alan chuckles.] You see, they've already been funding them up until now) but could result in similarly unsavory outcomes, including damaging efforts to combat Islamic terrorism, it concedes.

(A: No kidding, 'eh.)

The US could also try to reduce Russian influence in Central Asia, promote uprisings in neighboring states and "flip Transnistria" and expel Russian troops from the unrecognized, mostly Russian-speaking region that broke away from Moldova after the Soviet Union collapsed in 1991. However, the authors resign themselves to the fact that most of these options would be difficult to carry out, could prove costly to the US, and may not even have the desired effect.

Militarily, the US could reposture its bombers "within easy striking range of key Russian strategic targets" in order to "raise Russian anxieties."

(A: Well, that's what they've been doing with bases and missiles around Russia for quite a few years. It goes on and on and on of all the techniques that can be used. But yeah, it's quite amazing to see these things. But the PDF is quite fascinating for those that want to read it.)

Overextending and Unbalancing Russia – PDF

Overextending and Unbalancing Russia - rand.org / 2019

All countries will do this, though. They always have these what-if scenarios. M-hm. That's like Three Days of the Condor I think it's called, that was along those lines of what they plan with their wargames and so on. Also…

Google staff keep 'blacklist' of conservative and 'fringe' sites - report rt.com / 15 June 2019

(A: 'Fringe' sites is stuff that writes, it just watches and notices what's happening, and they don't want them to maybe wake up people to what's happening. [Alan chuckles.] That's really your fringe site, you see. They don't care about one's that are, that think they're UFOs, or folks who think they're aliens, they don't care. But if you just… just put two and two together and in an understandable way, you're a problem. Like Bertrand Russell said you would be, and they would have to eliminate you basically. That's what Russell advocated, if you couldn't buy them over and win them over, you'd have to eliminate them, such people. Anyway, it says…)

The lists allow Google employees (A: And the link is here for the lists.) –who CEO Sundar Pichai told Congress in December never "manually intervene on any particular search result"– to suppress certain addresses in a user's search results.

The Daily Caller claims to have seen screenshots of the lists in question. Google did not address whether its staff deliberately weed out certain political content, but did say they are working to filter out "inappropriate" search results.

(A: So there you go, you're just blacklisted and no one's going to hear you or whatever, you know, or find your sites, 'eh.)

The first list, titled “webanswers_url_blacklist,” lets staff block specific web addresses from popping up in Google’s ‘featured snippets’ when a user asks a question. Many of the pages blocked are op-ed articles, which a user could mistake for straight news reporting. This list appears to target opinion pieces in general, regardless of their political bent.

(A: So there ya go. They even have, it’s like lawyers of all kinds... They even have some people blacklisted under the same blacklisting as they would do with a religion, for instance, anything to do with Christianity especially, and they can put you down as almost pornographic, because you’re in the same category if you have any good things to say about Christianity. No kidding you, this is where it’s all going, isn’t it.)

. . . “fringe” content will come as no surprise to some. The company, along with a bevy of other Silicon Valley tech giants, has been accused of harboring a liberal bias for several years now, with new stories of favoritism surfacing regularly.

They give you more and more data and more links to further studies, etc., etc., etc. But get used to it, it’s just going to get worse. What can you do?... you expect it. And folk will stay on the Internet and, like I said, because once they’ve got you hooked on the pornography and all the stuff you’re hooked on, most folk will just continue using it. I gave the talk in the 90s about what would happen. It’s exactly happened, exactly that way I talked about, absolutely that way. Yep. Definitely.

Now, Britain’s on board, like I say, with the crew that went over with Trump to meet the British Parliament and the royalty and so on. Obviously, it was meant to get Britain totally on board, and to do with Assange, etc. But it says…

Pentagon seeks to build global ‘consensus’ on Iran. Is it time to worry? - rt.com / 15 June 2019

Put that up as well. This is where we are, folks, with all this, isn’t it. It’s just so boring. We’ve seen it all before, the same buildup, the same characters, the same lines. Hm? It’s just… It’s boring stuff, really, you know. That’s the times in which we live. But I’m sorry to bore y’all tonight, if I bored you I didn’t mean to. It’s just that, you aren’t going to get any real news anymore. I said that for quite a long time now because everyone knows what they can and can’t do. Most of the news you get now is totally irrelevant and nonsensical. It fills the spaces on the newscaster’s papers, or whatever they use today, screens I guess. But you aren’t going to get any real news. Because everyone’s scared. Everyone’s afraid. That’s when everyone should be afraid, is when the people are afraid of government. Well, we’ve heard it all before, ‘eh?

For myself Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada, stay well and I hope your God or gods go with you.

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on June 23, 2019. I hope you're all getting along through all the changes that are happening rapidly now of course. You're certainly living through interesting times. Although if you've been studying reality for a long time you'll know it's a kind of Groundhog Day and we're building up to a repetition of what we've been doing for the last 20 odd years, or actually longer than that, with wars, etc. as they go for Iran as well. One way or another it will be accomplished because Iran was on the list from the 1990s to be taken out. And they never give up the list of course. Wesley Clark talked about it, the general. It's still ongoing today.

Iran has been under embargo for a long time, and that's devastating to these countries. Iraq was the same thing. We found that Madeleine Albright was questioned on television about the well over half a million children, eventually turned out to be about a million, and women too, and elderly, had died because the embargo, couldn't get medicine, couldn't get food in, for a long, long time. And that's what happens. So they're trying to do the same with Iran of course, for a long time. And Iran is left with the decision of, well, breaking out obviously. And what they hope to do is make Iran make that kind of decision, that desperate decision, which gives them credence for a counterattack by the West of course. And that's how strategy works within these kinds of shows.

Everything is public perception. But mind you, all of our news, all of our reality today is public perception management. And it's skewed by professionals. I don't know if you've noticed the incredible changes in authority, [Alan chuckles.] with the authoritative techniques that are being used now today on the whole of society. From children all the way up to adults now, we're treated… We are all treated as children, actually, by professionals.

But before I get any further in that direction, I have to remind you to help donate to me @.com website. And when you're there I always say take note of all the other links I have on that website, these are my official sites. You can order the books and discs from these sites. If you buy from elsewhere, they are not mine, someone else is putting them out. So everything official is on .com. Taken note of them all and if anything happens to the .com site at least you can get my talks on the other sites that will be left. You never know, you see, we're living in these strange interesting times as I say. You can buy the books and discs, or you can donate and it tells you how to do it @.com. The ways of payment and donation are listed there too. Remember you can also send a personal check to me if you still have checks. You can also get checks from your bank. Or you can get a postal money order from the post office and send that. It doesn't cost much. It's very cheap actually. If you're from outside Canada and you're sending it to Canada, just ask for an international postal money order at a post office and they'll give it to you for the amount and so on and it can get cashed here, you see.

Because I can see other techniques coming into play as we get managed by the professional managers, the nudge units as they call it. You know, the behavior modification experts, and we have teams of them in every country now, literally working on managing us. We don't elect them. No government agency has come out to tell you to vote or even have a say in these agencies getting established. They just appear of course. And you still think you're living in democracies as you get managed. I gave talks on these before, about these Nudge Units, Behavioral Insights Teams, that are much bigger than a few people here and there. There's teams and teams and layers of them. They also extend all the way into the Internet community of course. Because the Internet itself is a massive control system, down to the personal level. Even for those who think they are quite safe and happy and they're being awfully good, you know, I'm awfully good, they won't bother me. Believe you me, if you're quite happy being managed by the experts, who are watching every single thing that you do, even predicting what you think, because they're studying how you think, you see, then good luck to you.

It's a sad thing. Aldous Huxley said, he says, they'll come to us and they'll love their servitude. And that's what you are. Because it's not painful for folk at the moment… AT the moment, you see. And that's the key, at the moment. Because it's to get really bad as we go into the depopulation/austerity agenda under the pretext of climate change, etc. And this is no speculation on my part. I have the documents, I have their books, of the big players that came out with the ideas on how to control us all. They're quite… They love to publish it, their books themselves. Because they have tremendous egos. And obviously those who want to manage the world and everybody in it have to have big egos. We've seen the tyrants down through history, and we call them that luckily enough, but unfortunately, we can't recognize them today as what they are. Because like Madison said, they always take away your freedoms bit by bit under the guise of keeping you safe. And that's really how it is.

These are old techniques, you understand. And believe you me too, if they didn't want terrorism, they would not have caused the problems in the first place, to take out countries across the Middle East, it wouldn't have happened. And terrorism could be managed much much more easily in that case, if there were any radicals at all. But causing mass displacement across the world is part of the whole agenda of course.

I was just thinking today, huh, and I've thought many times before too, where are all the far-left groups that were against wars? They used to march in the streets against wars, where are they? What/who has switch them off? Because they all follow leaders, and their leaders know what they're doing, and they take orders from higher authorities too. It's also interesting that these groups, heavily well-funded groups, because we are in a new Soviet. The true new Soviet is more Soviet than the old system was. Because Soviet means 'rule by counsel' basically, an NGO type deal with appointed commissars to manage a certain area of society. We have lots of them now. We've got more than the Soviets ever had. And the difference with the Soviet Union was, they appointed leaders of them to manage them. We have them, called nongovernmental organizations, and we have thousands of them, that also, most of the big ones anyway are all funded by our government, our tax money, for changing society completely and managing society too.

They're also augmented by the massive funding from the big foundations. I did so many talks years ago about the foundations and what their functions really were. And it's true, the richest people on the planet direct where we're going in the world and how we'll act and behave and all… right down to population and how to manage the population, and even how to coerce the population into accepting eventually mandatory sterilization and things like that. All the way back to the days of Malthus. Don't forget, we've done this before. [Alan chuckles.] And we're still doing it other countries we call Third World countries. We pay for it. But they want to do it across the world. That's what globalism is all about. Have you noticed, again, the same groups who do not protest the war, against the wars and the displacement it causes, are the first ones to champion the end of nation-states, which is Marxian of course, which of course, is also the globalists, which is the capitalists at the top who own it all. It's all the same system.

The trick of running the world is to create different, different, not just sides but factions within sides. And they're all fighting each other. And they never come to understand that the dialectical process leads them to the conclusions, or to the points where those at the top actually want them to come to. Change. You can't get change without conflict. If you've got a happy, say, stagnant population, as they like to call it, and you want to change, it won't change, it's quite happy the way it is. So you create dissatisfaction for a segment and have them go at it with the other group. And eventually you get a synthesis coming out of it. That's what the whole Trotskyist doctrine was basically based on, was the Hegelian dialectic.

But today we have the true Soviet system where unelected, but appointed by governments, NGOs are running our lives through climate change and so on and sustainability groups galore. There's thousands of them across the world. Sustainability. Well, guess what sustainability is? Sustainability is all about too many of you. That's what… Forget all the other stuff. It's to do with you. And they have charts of how much it's going to cost the world, and how much carbon it will cost for every child that comes into it, and how many things that child will need growing up in food clothing and yada yada ya. And that's all done, ha, through this magic religious act, you see – because it's all a religion, to believe in it, you see – a magic act of deciding how much carbon and energy you're costing the world as they make up these wonderful algorithms to work out how much you're costing the planet basically. M-hm.

What a farce this is. You need an awful lot of faith to believe in this religion. Because it's a farce, complete farce. Although you might say it is a religion in a sense. It definitely has a plan. And it definitely has and it demands worship. It demands worship. It's completely intolerant of anything against its own agenda. Completely intolerant. And even has those within the structural parts of the system, the schools and everything, teaching the same plan, and it will tolerate no contrary opinion as to what is mandated. Completely intolerant. This is not a happy system coming in, folks. And it's not new. It was predicted a long time ago, in the 1800s. And the 1700s too, you had characters coming out and you eventually had Thomas Malthus about population reduction. And you had that continued through eugenics and Darwin, you see, all the way into the different plans of sterilizing people in America, and they did it in Britain too, calling them the unfit. Then across other parts of Europe. And then they brought up… They kept doing it after World War II in the US, and eventually was partially, it's not quite stopped actually.

Today it's wonderful when you think about it because we'll all get up in arms about, oh, that's terrible they could sterilize those people. But now they're talking about compulsory sterilization for men and women, to save the world. Nothing to do with intellect or IQ or anything. No, it's to save the world. If you're in a certain category, yeah, you'll be designated as, for termination, if you want to take sterilization. And the amount of data that they've published on this is astonishing, to save the planet. And of course, that's the whole idea, that was the excuse they came up with, to save the world, they had to have, it was either going to be a war, a massive, long war that would depopulate the world they were after. And failing that they'd have to convince the public that you're in a war mode, which the war is man killing the planet, you're the enemy, you see, that's what the Club of Rome said. They were given the task of finding an excuse to do it all. And all the big players were attached to the Club of Rome, even up to the present time actually, and on the board of it too. Quite fascinating.

At first, they came out with the coming Ice Age, the top players published books on it too. Often these top players had relatives or even their wives on the board of the Club of Rome. It's a small world when you get into who runs it all. Then you have the different government departments that are constantly creating new departments to study us and manage us, then they farm it out again to NGOs and agencies and the private sector. This is the true, the true Soviet. It's surpassed the old Soviet system. They couldn't even go as far as this with indoctrination in school, where they're reinventing reality completely with the indoctrination children are getting today. It's quite fascinating to see it happening. And to study their papers and the techniques of doing it is quite something in itself.

But what really is horrifying is the fact that they have no problem in lying, teaching an agenda with the use of lies and saying that lies are necessary, necessary to coerce the people along this agenda. Again, to save the world. You see? And if that doesn't offend you, being lied to all the time, about what their agenda is really all about… And of course the agenda has got nothing to do with democracy. The Club of Rome has stated in their own writings that democracy doesn't work. They wanted something harder… They want really like a fascist system, that's what they really admire. Where the diktats come from the top and you obey at the bottom. Without any arguments. That's what they want.

But what gets me too is the perfection you'll see in other countries that have been on the path longer because of the cultural society system. And China, this is not speculation, it's fact, that the United Nations has published many documents on China to be the model state for the world to follow on everything that it does to manage the people, to train the people, to manage them and so on. And China, and not just them, every major organization out on the planet there and countries have fawned over China in the past. Because it's the dream of the West to be like China. The West has a problem, and Margaret Thatcher and others have stated the problem. Those in power, in the past at least, had to give a semblance of acknowledgment to the complaints, of understanding the complaints of the public and sometimes acting on it and so on. That's what was called this con game of democracy. [Alan chuckles.] It's always a bit of a con game but they had to at least put a show on, right? But in totalitarian type systems, and don't forget, China is still called communist to this day, with a very very officious governmental system, and you have to belong to the party if you want to own a business. The party literally is all-powerful.

In fact, just in the papers now they've got I think it was the head of, it was a Chinese man who was a head of Interpol, I don't know if it was the Chinese branch, because Interpol is international, right? But he was found guilty of embezzling millions in bribe money. And that kind of corruption is typical with China, as it is with every other country.

Ex-Interpol chief pleads guilty to corruption, China says - bbc.com / 20 June 2019

But China doesn't let that go. They really deal with it. Which of course a lot of folk [Alan chuckles.] outside China admire, [Alan chuckles.] they deal with it when officials are corrupt. But by the same token China has come from a collectivist society. It's a very ancient system of ruling the people. They've tried everything. Even in ancient times they had a socialist type system. In ancient times, an authoritarian system. About almost a, you might call it a system run by nobility at one time too. They've tried everything in ancient times. So, there's nothing new to China. But China itself again generally has a different system of obedience of the people to those in power and authority.

So, under the communistic system they still can have a lot of freedoms. They have a lot of the freedoms like music, etc., they can go to dances, they can drink and that kind of stuff. And buy their clothes, commerce is doing well in China. I can remember when suddenly China supposedly suddenly went capitalist. They had interviews in the streets, for the Westerners to watch, and Mao Tse Tung, they'd say, oh yeah, Mao Tse Tung would have liked this, this system where money is good, you know. It was like night and day change. It was as shocking as when they just announced that the Berlin wall had come down in Germany in Berlin. So that's the kind of shock of those who lived through all this Cold War phase, and here's an archenemy of capitalism, supposedly… Today of course it's the top, that manages more capital than the rest of the world combined, I think. And yet they're still communist. There's no… You have one ruling group and that's all you've got is a one-party system.

But at the same time, I understand to an extent the Chinese system. Because if you truly want an advanced socialist system, you'll have a Chinese type naturally where the people will have a certain amount of freedom, but they're well studied, just like we are here like you wouldn't believe... They might be even better, like school-to-work ideas, and training youngsters for particular areas, where they could excel actually. As I say, they have a lot of freedoms. But when you look at the social credit system they have, it's completely managed from the top down. Which is here too. In the West they call it shadow banning at the moment, with Behavioral Insights Teams nudging you and prompting you and all that kind of thing. And even punishing you to an extent. And shadow banning in the West, where you won't even know it, you'll just notice that suddenly you'll find that very few folk are finding you on the net. There's nothing declared, you see, but it's all done, and you come to the conclusion eventually, with other people who are getting the same things done to them. But in China it's direct.

They're going by the Bertrand Russell scheme. Bertrand Russell was part of this global planning committee from the 1930s and 40s and 50s onwards. He was part of that global planning committee of how they'd manage the public with the social credit system even. They were thinking of a way where you'd all have your money going into a bank, now it's electronic of course. In the Russell system the government could punish you by stopping you from getting money to pay your rent, or money for food and so on. And get you on your knees basically until you repented and apologized and promised to obey and all that kind of stuff. This is how it's done. It's very simple. It's treating you in the way that you treat an animal. It's animal policy basically, animal training policy.

This is the system we're in today. Because it will not tolerate any other opinion and any other ways of looking at things except the authorized way. This attitude is incredible because when you go back in the Pavlov, what do you think Pavlov was up to? You think Pavlov was trying to find a way to train dogs? Hm? No. It was to find how to put, instill into people, all creatures, because they classify people as being just the same with these massive, you know, repetitive punishment techniques and fear techniques and so on. Which is very similar to what they tried to do with the CIA and MK Ultra where they would literally shock the people with electroshock treatment basically, coupled with massive doses of LSD, until… to depattern the brain and then they would rebuild the person, literally. That's what it was about. Well, in an advanced system of socialism you don't, they've already done it because it's got the children young, and indoctrination is very strong. And if the yoke, and this is the key to it, if the yoke is light, if the burden is light, to an extent, and they give them rewards, just like an animal, you see, then they will come to accept it and it isn't that bad and so on.

If you look at the social credit system, which is just what's going to come here. It's already coming here actually. Actually, it's probably taken here with a lot of people already in fact, who are cashless, etc. and do everything on their phones. And who will tell you, I don't mind if they government's watching everything I'm doing and taking notes of what I do, I don't mind, I'm doing nothing wrong. Well that… You're already trained, there's no difference between that person and the one in China. There is no difference. So it's already happened, you see. Once it's happened if you can get that particular generation growing up for another 20 years, that will be the normal for everybody then. That's really… It's so simple to do.

If they give you the little freebies, I mean, that's what got me too is the little freebies they give, the little points and rewards. You get that with social credit systems. You've already been trained if you've got yourself a points card for grocery stores or pharmacies and that, they've already trained you. [Alan chuckles.] It's the mousetrap, you know. If you take, you get so many air miles or so many this or so much of a discount, oh, you're already trained the same way as the communist social credit system. That's how it's done.   M-hm. And you'll get little things through into your email, how you've been a good customer. You're good. Good again, you see, aren't you good? Goody-two-shoes, 'eh? And you'll feel all smog and wonderful, I'm… oh wow. You see?

But they'll also start, like they do in China, to warn you if you've done, made a wrong choice in something. They've already floated the ideas here. It's the same, we're in the same global system, folks. All the stuff about China is different and we are… No, it's the one global system already. The trick was to make you believe that it wasn't [Alan laughing.] …as you became all the same. Years ago I remember reading articles on a radio show where they talked about doing battles against sugar and so on and they'd actually send it to your iPhone or email and give you little cautions like, naughty-naughty, we've noticed you taking too much sugar because you're buying more at the grocery store, because everything's cashless, you see. Then eventually of course it goes into the healthcare system, it's already there, where they've had, years ago they've had and they still have them every so often, in bioethics, how to manage the cattle. That's the public. We truly are looked upon like cattle now, honestly, we are animals, and how to train them and so on. And it's your own fault if you've got problems related to weight, for instance, that's what they're telling you. And they said they would even refuse folks down the road, to treat them, if things were self-inflicted. It's an amazing system. It really is.

And when you see it all, and you're part, you could see it all around you, it's part of your system, but you can't connect the dots. But it's all connected. If you've done a little bit of looking and studying and seeing what social contracts are all about, and they call them that now social contracts again. It's just amazing to live through this system as it's perfected and brought in, step-by-step, and how folk adapt to it by the day, by the week, by the month, by the year, without questioning, no questioning at all. That's what's fascinating to me. You'd really hope that there'd be more people that would say, no, hey, no. But again, all studies have shown that it's only a small minority in any generation who are indignant enough to say no to whatever it happens to be. It's always the same. And they know this too.

But getting back to what's happening, as long as the yoke is light, right, and you play the game and you do what you're told, and you like… And you'll even adapt your behavior and your vocabulary into being politically correct, awfully awfully good, I'm awfully awfully good, 'eh, goody-two-shoes, then you'll be patted on the head and they might give you little freebies here and there for being an awfully good citizen, you see. Well you see, that's not democracy folks. That is not democracy at all. And democracy is not supposed to punish folk who won't be part of the oneness of it all. Democracy is a variety of opinions and a variety of even ways of behavior and in seeing things.

I used to like meeting people, and it's true, England had at one time had a tradition of oddball characters that would work in their back sheds and invent things. And it's true, you'd meet oddball characters who were into oddball things, and they'd make stuff and invent stuff. And it was more than a hobby, it was what they live for basically. And that was fantastic.   And you'd say they were all oddballs. And they'd probably all disagree with each other about whatever they're making and comparing them and all that, but they didn't come to blows about it.

It was interesting, a society like that. It really was. That's how it should be. You cannot really, really have a free society unless you have tolerance. And tolerance is the right, as Orwell said basically, to say what you want to say, like two and two is four. Not what you're told to say. It's so sad when we're really in, is in this incredible boat of political correctness which is completely intolerant, and it's definitely not Democratic. And with… What you're seeing now is the massive, it truly is hatred, from those who are willing it right now. You feel it. It's probably like people sensed before the Bolsheviks took over Russia and the mass slaughter started. It's the same kind of feeling you have with fanatics. Most of them now who are trained to be fanatics, they've been radicalized by very clever people above them, they never know that themselves, but they're completely radicalized to have no tolerance at all.

It's not a good time to be alive and going through this if you're still an individual. You will go through it. We're going through it now. It's going to step up and step up into the scientific management system that was, that HG Wells wrote about he wanted to come in. He was part of it too of course. He wrote a lot of books on nonfiction, on how to manage the system. It's an old system. It's many centuries old, this whole agenda. And the coming collapse, financial collapse, which is designed to come, it's all part of it too. Because it's planned that way. [Alan chuckles.] You understand, a system that's backed by nothing, there's no gold or anything backing anything that's out there... Everything is run on debt money and IOUs. You trade IOUs today. That’s what countries have been doing forever, trading and giving out IOUs. It’s a complete joke.

And those who control and run the money, which is central banking systems, it’s only one system really, that again the private club in London, the Royal Institute of International Affairs preceded by the Milner group, Lord Alfred Milner and his group, to bring in a global society. Money is all part of it. And the wealth of the world. They had no problems going into Africa getting the war started with the Boers in order to get the gold and diamonds, that was part of it, for themselves. And that’s also why their agent in the States, that was Rockefeller, one of their agents, he said that competition is a sin. He wasn’t being facetious. He was being honest, from his point of view. They believe as the rulers of the world that the richest people on the planet, they have the right to take over the wealth of the world and dispense it proportionally to all those down below. They didn’t believe in democracy, but they did know they’d have to use this thing called democracy to get everybody initially to go along with it.

Do you remember the farce of when the American troops went into Iraq, and you saw it on news clips, where the soldiers were swearing at them, at the Iraqis saying, you stupid, you know what, we’ve come to give you democracy. You don’t have democracy in your own country. America is supposed to be a Republic. It’s Democratic within its own system of laws of the Republic. Meaning, it can’t be upset or changed and altered. Well, what happened about that one? [Alan chuckles.] But why, why is this farce supposed to work with other countries that have never known of it? Well, it’s that other countries know it’s a farce. They know it’s a farce. But it’s never been so obvious as today. It’s in-your-face. And it’s angry. And it looks upon everybody regardless of your age group, as you’re all children. Naughty children. Bad children. And the reason the anger is there and the threats behind it, and here’s the key, is the threat, if you have a threat everywhere, is to make you play the game and do what you’re told and obey. That’s what it’s for. It’s not a good time. And it’s going to get a lot worse, believe you me. A lot worse.

Now, let’s touch on a few the articles, like this one here. It says…

In Stores, Secret Surveillance Tracks Your Every Move
nytimes.com / 14 June 2019

Imagine you are shopping in your favorite grocery store. As you approach the dairy aisle, you are sent a push notification in your phone: “10 percent off your favorite yogurt! Click here to redeem your coupon.” You considered buying yogurt on your last trip to the store, but you decided against it. How did your phone know?

(Alan: Everything you’re doing is recorded, and literally they go through all these algorithms. It’s all, it’s not only they’re spending billions of dollars just on you, you see. The algorithms are so advanced today, that have Craig supercomputers can do billions of people at one… per second actually, that’s how precise they are, they can manage us all. Anyway, it says…)

Your smartphone was tracking you. The grocery store got your location data and paid a shadowy group of marketers to use that information to target you with ads. Recent reports have noted how companies use data gathered from cell towers, ambient Wi-Fi, and GPS. But the location data industry has a much more precise, and unobtrusive, tool: Bluetooth beacons.

I’ll put this up for those who care, you know. Because your technology is not there for your benefit. Really. It’s not. Really not. You are being trained in Pavlovian style and you don’t even know it. And again, like Aldous Huxley said, he said, you know, you’ll come to love your servitude. You’re a servant of the corporation to run and rule you. Then…

The Unholy Alliance Between DNA Sites and Facial Recognition
theorganicprepper.com / 15 June 2019

(A: This is kind of a repeat. I remember doing one years ago on the same kind of thing. It says…)

Technology that was once only seen in dystopian science fiction is rapidly infecting real life. Two means of collecting personal data – DNA databases and facial recognition software – are forming an unholy alliance, and the privacy implications could be devastating.

Privacy concerns surrounding DNA and facial recognition aren't anything new. As the popularity of DNA genealogy websites like Ancestry DNA and 23andMe increase, so do questions over who has access to that data and how it will be used.

(A: They use [Alan chuckles.] the schmucks, hm, who jump in and say, oh yeah, I may be related to royalty, I've got a find out, you see. And send them all the data, which they know about, who their grandparents were and all the rest of it. And great-grandparents. And then their DNA. And they do searches, etc. And out of that search come all of their sisters, their brothers, the mothers, fathers. Everybody. Their health, you name it, you know, any medical problems which may be genetically caused and so on. You're giving all that data, hm? You understand, data is power to these people. That's why they're after it. And of course, they sell it off too, to insurance companies. And believe you me, employers. [Alan chuckles.] Employers get it all too. The big employers, they have agencies that can get all that kind of data from them. And pay for it of course. They can turn people down, they never know why they turn you down. It's because they've got your medical histories, what you're prone to or not prone to and all that kind of stuff, you see. So, as I say, the schmucks who fall for it ends up putting all the rest of their family and siblings in danger, hm? There you go.)

Genealogy sites have been making the news of late, mainly for concerns over how our personal data is used – and who has access to that information.

Recently, GEDmatch, which has more than 1 million genetic profiles in its database, decided to stop providing information to police without user permission. (A: …to police, you see.) Last month, the site faced criticism when it allowed Utah police to use the database while investigating a violent assault. "Prior to the change, GEDmatch had allowed police to use its data only for rapes and homicides," reports Bloomberg.

(A: Of course they're all doing it, folks. They're doing it. M-m-m. And then…)

Engineers are figuring out how to match DNA to faces in a database.

(A: There's quite amazing stuff from China, again, who are way ahead on all this stuff with the facial recognition. They literally can, on YouTube I think they have, they even have some documentaries on how advanced they are with it. They show you the facial recognition techniques and how it's instantly measured, all parts of your face in precise little millimeters and all that. They know exactly who you are, where you are, instantly. And it reads on the computer. Whole crowds, all their names will pop up above the little people in the crowd and that's them. There's a movie out too, I think it's called Anon, about that. Again, getting you used to the idea about it too. This is your totally controlled world, folks.)

A team of engineers just built an algorithm that scans through a database of images and selects the faces that could be linked to the DNA found at a crime scene. (A: …could be linked, right.) Until now, predicting what someone's face looks like based on a DNA sample has eluded scientists. But, it is getting easier for them to use samples to filter the right face from a database, as an international (A: …here again…) team led by researchers at KU Leuven has shown. Their findings were published in Nature Communications.

I'll put these links up, you know, that's contained in this particular article here. So, they go on about it too in different press releases, other links and so on. And it's contained inside this one article for those who care about it. Most folk don't care. They know it's happening, they don't care about it, I'm good, I'm good, goodie, good-good-good, you see, I've got a good points system for stuff I buy in the stores, you know, and they even congratulate me for making the right decisions on my purchasing.

Getting back to talking about China. [Alan chuckles.] In China your social credit system also will give you warnings if you're using too much meat, or the wrong kind of meat or spending money and or something like that too. You see how it's done?   Or spending money maybe on cigarettes, 'eh. Because even then in the street they can actually see you smoking, instantly know where you are, who you are, and that's it. And you'll get a little warning, maybe initially a little warning. And eventually if you continue, you'll get bad scores. And if you get bad scores, you have less access to where you can go inside the country, or even inside your own town or city. Certain places will be banned, you won't be allowed to get through certain doors. It will read you instantly and they won't open for you.

As I say, remember, it's not a democratic system, folks. The choices are all recommended/allowed choices, there's a narrow band of them. You get the appearance of choices but it's a narrow, authorized band of them. And also, right down to your phone calls in China. If you phone someone inside China and the person, if they've got a bad credit rating or whatever it happens to be, and that the social credit, remember, is your behavior, it's a behavioral credit system, and a voice will come on the phone before you speak to the person saying that this person has a bad social credit rating. To warn you as well. To shame the person. Shaming is a big part of controlling the population in the social system. And it's getting worse and worse here of course. Big time. And me saying it isn't going to stop it, I'm just saying it because I know it's going to happen. [Alan chuckles.] At least I do know. It's been happening too in some malls. They've tested it out in some places already over the last few years in fact.

Anyway, it says here that this could be used for different purposes, this DNA and so on and facial recognition and special software and so on and so on and so on. And don't forget too, it's also to do with eugenics. With your history, your family history, your DNA history, any probable possibilities. It goes into the whole area of Gattaca the movie where those who are genetically enhanced, where any possibly, possibly bad genes including allergies and so on might affect you, are removed and the better ones are put in there. Well they can do the same. You understand how they can…. Hhhh, if you study farming and stock breeding, and you study eugenics, and you study the Eugenics Society of America and Cold Spring Harbor, remember, the big lab there that was set up for eugenic purposes for humans. They actually brought in the American Farmers Association and Stock Breeders Association for advice on how to literally change the people themselves just like they do with cattle.

Well, now of course with cattle and pigs and all the rest of it they've got artificial insemination. They literally alter, take out the genes, again, in the semen, 'eh, in the sperm, and they can substitute other ones too, and implant it with other ovum's and so on that are also enhanced, they've taken the bad bits out. In other words, you're creating what you want to be a designer person, as they do a designer cow or a designer bull. That's how it's done. And a lot of folk are already domesticated in the system, they'll say, oh what's wrong with that then, you know, what's wrong with that. Well, maybe for the ones who say that actually there's nothing wrong with that, [Alan chuckles.] they're quite happy, they're already changed, 'eh, they're domesticated.

But the folk who are not, you're unique as a person. You see, it's the uniqueness of individuals that must be destroyed in this advanced-advanced totalitarian socially run system. And that's the target of it all. That's an anathema to conformity for the social system. So, standardization is always what they get coming out of it. And what do you think teachers are paid so much money for? Hm? But you can tell that they're not turning out children who are well educated, as far as knowledge about the world and different sciences. But they certainly are indoctrinated with their latest PC social engineering, they understand that. Well, that's why you pay teachers an awful lot. Stalin said that, [Alan laughing.] you've got to pay them an awful lot of money, because they are the first line to indoctrinating the children into the system. Nothing changes.

Anyway, so I'll put this article up here for those who care about to see about it too. Most folk out there, remember, and a lot who are listening already are cashless, they don't use cash at all. And everything, they don't mind getting, being monitored because they're goody-goody and they'll obey and be good and say all the right things in conversation and so on. But there are those who again, who don't. They like being an individual and they like having choices in life, you know.

Another thing here too is…

From face to DNA: new method aims to improve match between DNA sample and face database - nieuws.kuleuven.be / 11 June 2019

So there's another article too. And then…

Amazon's Rekognition software lets cops track faces: Here's what you need to know cnet.com / 19 March 2019

(A: Most folk don't care, 'eh.)

Business organizations and, yes, law enforcement agencies are already licensing that software for their own use. That means that you don't need to use Facebook or buy a face-scanning iPhone or a fancy video doorbell from Google-owned Nest or Amazon-owned Ring in order for facial recognition to be a part of your everyday life. With Rekognition, maybe it already is.

And maybe you aren't OK with that. Civil liberties groups such as the ACLU have already raised concerns about the speedy adoption of facial recognition tech among US law enforcement agencies and the potential for its abuse, particularly against immigrants (A: What do you mean, just against immigrants? It's for everybody, for goodness' sake.) and people of color. (A: Everybody's at risk here.   We are equal opportunity victims when it comes to this. It's for the whole planet, for goodness' sake.) Many -- including some of Amazon's own employees and shareholders -- want the company to hit the brakes.

The controversy caught the attention of Congress last year, and now, with the Senate recently proposing a bill that would limit businesses from collecting and tracking facial recognition data without consent, it seems that Rekognition might be in for a reckoning.

(A: No, it won't be. It's already been here for a long time actually. There's a whole bunch of things going on that you have no idea about.)

What exactly does Amazon Rekognition do?

"Amazon Rekognition makes it easy to add image and video analysis to your applications. You just provide an image or video to the Rekognition API, and the service can identify objects, people, text, scenes and activities. It can detect any inappropriate content as well. (A: There you go.)

And it goes on and on and on but I won't read it all. You get the idea. And…

Major DNA Testing Company Sharing Genetic Data With the FBI
bloomberg.com / 1 Feb 2019

(A: Here's another one too. There's so many of these articles really.   Folk don't care. Most don't care, 'eh? And again, who gives them permission for all this to happen in the first place? All these companies are licensed, you know, that we're talking about here, they're all licensed by governments.)

The decision by a prominent consumer DNA-testing company to share data with federal law enforcement means investigators have access to genetic information linked to hundreds of millions of people. (A: There you go again.)

FamilyTreeDNA, an early pioneer of the rapidly growing market for consumer genetic testing, confirmed late Thursday that it has granted the Federal Bureau of Investigation access to its vast trove of nearly 2 million genetic profiles. The arrangement was first reported by BuzzFeed News.

And it goes on and on and on again too. And that's how it is, isn't it? But it's all meant to be because your governments, as I say, license these companies. They can't just go and do that without permission. Of course that's how it works. And then…

Japanese sign up for DNA matchmaking as country faces demographic crisis telegraph.co.uk / 22 June 2019

(A: So, you see, here's a plus thing, oh, isn't that nice, that, there's a demographic crisis. And then it goes into…)

The scene resembles a typical blind speed-dating event: 13 women and 13 men, seated on either side of a bamboo screen in an upmarket Tokyo restaurant, are chatting in pairs on a strictly timed three-minute rotation.

But the doctor hovering on the fringes and the scientific documents held in the participant's hands, however, offer a hint that this is no ordinary dating event: for everyone attending has undergone a DNA test in a bid to find their best romantic match.

Welcome to the world of DNA matchmaking.

There's other articles in the papers today too about Japan and how so many of the young folk there too, just like… they know, you know, they don't even have to sterilize you. Even though the West has been going sterile, and not by coincidence, it's mandated, folks. But they don't even have to do that. Because Galton Darwin was quite right, Charles Galton Darwin he says, you know, if you give them enough material goods, to not just purchase but to want more of them, to want want want, then they'll forgo having children, they won't even get married. Well, we are already there to an extent in a lot of the countries. So, the material wants outweigh any other natural instincts or drives. And Japan is no different than any other country in that respect. And they certainly have a good lifestyle there. It's expensive too. And they want all the same, actually they have more things electronically probably that they want because they're ahead of the West with churning out different goods and so on, and their mobile nomadic items as they call these, all the different electronic gizmos today.

They say too, their work ethic in Japan, they put so many hours into a day working that they're too zonked out too, to even go out at night and often meet partners, etc. That's another part of it too. So your lifestyle… You understand there's many ways to dissuade you from having children. And they're all known. They're all understood by geneticists, or eugenicists. Generally, eugenicists are geneticists by the way. They know darn well that economic concerns are a big big thing to do, if they can make you live in a very expensive system where it's hard to get money, spare money for anything, then they can bring in, of course, they dissuade you from having children. Or even dissuade, if you're pregnant they can actually pretty well force you into abortions in a sense because how can you afford it? They discussed this in all their manuals on management of the populations in universities, etc.

So, you're coerced. You really don't have a lot of choices in this system. It's a very precisely managed system economically, socially and so on, and you're coerced along a whole bunch of ways, roads that you didn't really, you would've never picked yourself if you had a different system altogether and real freedom, you wouldn't have gone that way. So, I'll put these links up too.

Then I was reading this article too, because you'll find that we've always had, we used to say that… Not we, but those even then in government in the UK and other countries in the West who lived through the Cold War, they had to have a good pretense of democracy, as long as you had the Soviet Union. And it's true, they kept you poor from all the world wars we'd had and so on in the West, especially Britain. And they literally did plan to keep you poor, in austerity, and for a long time. But at the same time, they didn't mandate about your behavior so much, about what you had to think or believe in or whatever during that time, so you had a bit of freedom. And they said that if the Soviet Union wasn't there, that the West including Britain, it might be more totalitarian itself on its own public. And that's very true.

In other words, it was a sham. The power always was to control you. Always. There's always a bigger bigger purpose to the government than what you think it's there for. Especially in our system. It's a very old global system that was planned and introduced, and even use wars to bring it about. So we're not just stumbling down through time and things just happen. But the governments will give you a bit more freedom to stop your rioting at home during an austere time, financial instability and so on. So they let you off with a bit more and let you get off steam, and don't dictate to you as much as they do once there's no opposition to it. So, you always need another country to look at and say, oh gee, well at least that wouldn't happen here. You see, that's what you always say here, that would never happen here. Really?

I mean, Bertrand Russell said the same thing. He says, every country is taught that they live in the best country in the world, the people are. And they'll tell you that you've got the best healthcare system, because they keep telling you they've got the best healthcare system. And so on. And you believe the propaganda. All countries do that. M-hm. So, this article here is that China, we like to hit China, because were not Chinese, you see. It says…

China is harvesting organs from Falun Gong prisoners in potential genocide, tribunal says
abc.net.au / 18 June 2019

- •The China Tribunal found crimes against humanity were committed against Falun Gong and Uyghurs
- •Falun Gong is a spiritual group based on meditation that China banned 20 years ago
- •Beijing has repeatedly denied accusations that it forcibly takes organs from prisoners of conscience

Well they say it's still going on, you see. So China, we're saying that China bad, right? We're saying that China bad. Well don't forget in the West you're under, and I've looked at the bioethics and this whole new science that burst on the scene a few years ago, you see, when suddenly on newspapers and so on and television apparently too you had professional bioethicists, hm. You see, none of you have any ethics at all. You wouldn't know anything if you fell over it. But professionals who are trained in bioethics, and situation ethics, you know, four people on a lifeboat after a shipwreck and you don't have enough food, who do you kill first and eat or throw over or something? I mean, these folk are trained in it, you see. So your bioethicists work with economists and they work with the governments, and they decide with all the data there how much they can save by having you killed as opposed to treating you for an illness, depending on your age, your physical condition, your social status, etc. They won't do this to rich important folk, believe you me. But for everybody else it's fair game if you get clocked into their hospitals. No kidding you. You're put down for organ harvesting, after they offer you the euthanasia pill, right. Which saves them a lot of money. I mean, [Alan laughing.] that's where we are, folks, in our wonderful democracy. [Alan laughing.] You know, the real peoples' system. [Alan laughing.] What a joke, 'eh?

So anyway, we have to look at China and look at them and say, oh, they're taking organs and so on. And then you have places like Canada that, yeah, I read the articles the last couple of weeks that Canada's been, and actually more than that, with offering euthanasia and then harvesting… The guy who's pushing it in fact in Canada, this doctor, also is the guy who's the top, he's definitely running some other organization for harvesting the organs as well. Well, I think it's a conflict of interest somewhere, isn't there? I've heard about making a good business and a profit for yourself but that's a bit much isn't it, hm? But it's always presented that they're doing it, they're all doing it on your behalf, it's to help you, you know, yeah. There's an awful lot more they could do to help you and use the money rather than have you bumped off. And not all illnesses are terminal, you know. And even terminal illnesses can be stretched out a long time with, and give a lot of life to the person, who wants it, right, who wants it. And the people can obviously decide what they want to do, as they always have decided, without mandating it from… When you hand this power to government agencies, you're in trouble, that's what I'm saying, you're in trouble, folks.

Canadian Blood Services releases first set of national guidelines for organ donation after medical assistance in dying
theglobeandmail.com / 3 June 2019

Yep. Government can't be given that kind of power. Government you can't trust. You can't. The people, the public are supposed to watch a control government. But we don't have democracies, folks. You also have the mass migration organizations on the go, from the United Nations of course. It's interesting, this undeclared, this semi-declared, undeclared officially [Alan chuckles.] system of the elimination of the borders of countries… Meaning the elimination of nations. It's quite something when all these well-funded nongovernmental organizations, thousands of them across the world, are all heading in the same direction, just suddenly, just get rid of borders. You know, the old communist system, which actually was run and managed by the top capitalists, like Lord Alfred Milner for the British Empire. Because he helped create the British Empire. And it's not conspiracy, you know, nutcase stuff. It's documented in his own writings. And in Carol Quigley's stuff and so on, The Anglo-American Establishment.

So, you’ve got Ontario in Canada…

Ottawa picks 11 communities for pilot immigration project - cbc.ca / 14 June 2019

And Sudbury near me is one of them of course. So, it’s an immigration project. The excuse they’re giving is that they need people to do work because there’s not enough young folk gets left in these areas. Well the reason there’s no young folk is because there’s no work for them. So why can’t they just put the money in for the people who were already here and won’t leave homes, then they can stay here in their own areas. Hm? You see, their excuses don’t jive with reality for what they’re doing. But they never do. But anyway, they give you a complete list, well I don’t know if it’s a complete list of these areas for bringing them in, for testing similar immigration projects. They’ve tried in Atlantic Canada as well. They’ve got some to plan for Moose Jaw Saskatchewan, and Alberta and so on, British Columbia, Chutney and Vernon. So anyway, it’s quite something. And that’s the excuse they give is that they had to bring in folk to do work because the young folk are just not there. Well, they’ve left because there’s no work here. Put the money in here and keep them here, why not do it? There are different agendas at work, I hope you understand, for different reasons. And people are used. All peoples are used.

Transatlantic Working Group Seeks to Address Harmful Content Online
annenbergpublicpolicycenter.org / 26 Feb 2019

The dissemination of misinformation and disinformation in politics has been around for as long as democracy. But the weaponizing of it, its viral proliferation, and the manipulation of the voting climate during the U.S. and European election seasons are compelling a more urgent focus on the issue on both sides of the Atlantic.

Similarly, as incidents of terrorism and hate crimes spread across the United States and Europe, digital platforms, governments, and civil society are all grappling with how to address abuse of the internet from hate speech and violent extremism without chilling freedom of expression.

(A: Well, the whole point is to, and freedom of expression, folks. As you all KNOW. It’s a censorship organization, this one here.)

The Transatlantic Working Group, or TWG, is a project of the Annenberg Public Policy Center (APPC) of the University of Pennsylvania, in partnership with The Annenberg Foundation Trust at Sunnylands, in Rancho Mirage, Calif., and the Institute for Information Law (IViR), which is affiliated with the Faculty of Law of the University of Amsterdam. In addition, the Embassy of the Kingdom of the Netherlands in Washington, D.C., has approved a grant in support of the research and public outreach of the TWG. . .

It’d be interesting to find out about all the other foundations that are funding it, and the tax money as well. So again, they’re deciding what will be appropriate, acceptable, and it all has to fall in with a global agenda, naturally. It isn’t just about being nice to each other. It’s much bigger than that. It’s a social credit system too of course. Of course it is, folks. Of course it is. M-hm.

Now, Bolton, the man of the people, [Alan chuckles.] in the States, ‘eh, the bulldog for wars when Bush was in of course and he helped plan the wars on Iraq, etc. He went over to Israel and he’s over there meeting with Netanyahu, which is a worrisome thing, really, everybody knows this too because he’s made his views very, very open.

Bolton arrives in Israel amid heightened US-Iranian military tensions
jpost.com / 22 June 2019

US National Security Advisor John Bolton arrived in Israel Saturday as military tensions escalated between Tehran and Washington.

Speaking in Washington on Saturday before heading to the US presidential retreat at Camp David, where he said he would deliberate on Iran, US President Donald Trump said the American government was imposing new sanctions (A: …new …that's extra sanctions…) on Tehran. (A: Meaning new, because they've been doing it all along you see.)

Bolton will meet with Israeli National Security Adviser Meir Ben-Shabbat and Russian Secretary of the Security Council Nikolay Patrushev.

"Nice to be back in Israel. Looking forward to meeting with Israeli PM Netanyahu tomorrow & my counterparts from Israel & Russia . . .

So, he's a scary guy, Bolton. He's got a history out there, it's quite open. He's a war hawk all right. Well, it's like again Groundhog Day, this whole thing with Iran right now, including the threat to attack them by the US after the drone went down. And then calling it off, I think, is a tactic. You see, no one would believe them if we went straight to war after a drone went down. We've had so many cons before with these wars, just one after the other for years, for 20 years. Actually, it's more than that when you take it up to Gulf War One, Desert Storm. That's almost 30 years. 30 years of warfare in the same areas. And we wouldn't believe it again, you see, if it was just an all-out war, with one of the listed countries they had listed back in the 90s, where the usual thing is given.

So I think they make you think, they're trying to make you think it's all real again, you see. Well may be Donald did just call them off again, oh, they could have attacked. But maybe he's being pretty good. In other words, making it all real, like a drama, where they build it up even further for the big big attack. We'll have to see because Trump's made it quite plain that he's not going to go along, from the beginning, even before he got into the office, he's not going to, he says he's been quite plain he won't accept Iran's treaty with Europe and so on and the one that they signed with Obama. So, there he goes. Maybe you'll find out why Trump's real purpose, being in there, has really been of course. And I think it wouldn't matter who was in because one would do it a bit slower, perhaps, and Trump might just hurry it up a little bit. Maybe that's why they got him in, who knows? But I don't think the people really have a choice. It's one big agenda, one big global agenda. It's quite simple. Then you have what Netanyahu said to Bolton…

World seeing 'greatest monetary policy experiment in history' - Rothschild rt.om / 16 Aug 2016

(A: And that's from Jacob Rothschild himself.)

Low interest rates, negative yields on government debt and quantitative easing are part of the biggest financial experiment in world history, and the consequences are yet unknown, says RIT Capital Partners Chairman Lord Rothschild. (A: This is their own company, one of their own companies of course.)

"The six months under review have seen central bankers continuing what is surely the greatest experiment in monetary policy in the history of the world. We are therefore in uncharted waters and it is impossible to predict the unintended consequences of very low interest rates, with some 30 percent of global government debt at negative yields, combined with quantitative easing on a massive scale," Rothschild writes in the company's semi-annual financial report.

So, he says there's trillions of dollars really just hanging in the balance at the moment. I'll put this up as well. And I know it's planned, it was always planned to use financial crisis too to get changes along for this global system, and consolidation of more power into a global system, you see. So that's how they'll use it. And into austerity as well. I'll also put up…

World in Transition - A Social Contract for Sustainability - With John Schellnhuber, Advisor to the Pope - researchgate.net / January 2011

This guy doesn't believe in God. I remember doing an article a few years ago on him. But he's the advisor on climatology for the Pope. And he's a real, real, this guy wants, you know, maybe even down the road sterilization and so on too, it's quite amazing, this advisor to the Pope. He's denied it before even though he's printed stuff and then he denies it, it's quite interesting. But there you go. I'll put this one up for those that want to read it.

It's really something. Honestly. What a world, is turned upside down, isn't it? Isn't it really, 'eh? Right is wrong, wrong is right, and yada yada ya. M-hm. Quite amazing. It's quite something to see who they use to… And again too, this particular guy, the pope's advisor, is also a member of the IPCC, the International Panel for Climate Change at the United Nations as well, you see. He's a big promoter for sustainability. Because it's all to do with sustainability, the whole excuse of whatever they're using is to cut your population down, folks. It's always been that. Always. Under any excuse at all. And they hit on the climate, that was going to do it. Well, this is a big player in it too. Quite a character, 'eh. But he does believe in Mother Earth and stuff, but he doesn't believe in God. So, I'll put these articles up for anyone that wants it.

And another thing too, as they change all of society and decriminalize so many different things…

Hey, Teen Vogue. On career day, no young girl should say 'I want to be a prostitute.'
usatoday.com / 20 June 2019

It's one thing for adults to debate decriminalizing prostitution. It's entirely another to promote it as a fulfilling career choice to young girls.

This week, Teen Vogue (A: … a magazine I guess.) promoted a column by a doctor calling for the legalization of sex work. This would generally go unremarked upon — similar arguments appear across the media landscape, and even in the Democratic presidential campaign (A: …it would generally go UNremarked…) — but for her characterization of prostitution to the young readers of the magazine as a mere career choice, as valid as any other.

(A: …that's really got their attention to it.)

Eventually, you see, there'll be intergenerational sex, that was on the calendar for quite a long time now. All taboos, all taboos actually had to be destroyed. I'll also put up… Europe, and also Britain or England, London, has refused to give Venezuela their gold that they have in the vaults there. So, Maduro, their elected president…

International Migration Drivers - publications.jrc.ec.europa.eu / 2018

Global Compact for Safe, Orderly and Regular Migration - refugeemigrants.un.org / 13 July 2018

Sorry for going through it all like in a rush but there's way too much to give you a lecture on it. As I say, for those who are interested they always check up on the articles I put out there and links and so on. To verify, you've got to verify them. To start with. At least ponder them, what they're about, to make your own mind up about them. I don't believe in just grabbing things out of thin air and… But I like to give you the evidence for them, obviously. And then they have to think about things.

Because it's a sad system, isn't it, when the effects, the scientific tyranny that Bertrand Russell said they could bring in, he said, if there is to be a tyranny, I'd prefer to be a scientific one. And he said it would be a real nasty nasty system, it wouldn't mess around, it would be tyrannical. That's what we're going into, folks. And you're seeing it now. Very authoritarian. And it will not tolerate dissent. And if you have alternate opinions or even thoughts on things, you'll be punished with your social credit system, and you won't be able to even feed yourself. That's your real tolerance in this ultra ultra scientific socialist system.

Sad but true, isn't it. But it doesn't surprise me because they printed about this, they wrote this stuff a long time ago and their outlines for it. And what I've said tonight is only touching the surface of the depth they have actually described they're going to take it to. Really. And they mean business. And yes, they've always been here, a long long time, centuries, working towards this agenda. And every facet that's in conflict doesn't know they're getting used for a different outcome to the agenda.

It's very easy to radicalize people. Very easy. Especially young people. If you go into history, the first Crusade towards the Holy Land was not by knights. If you understand your history. It was by Peter the Hermit who was a monk and he radicalized the children with incredible stories. And children are very impressionable. They can see right and wrong just so clearly, black-and-white, that's it, right and wrong. They don't… there's no gray area for them at that age. And they can also put into their heads visions of utopias and heavens, and Peter was awfully good at that. And the first Crusade was called the Children's Crusade, led by Peter, and drummed up by Peter, and they went off…   Eventually of course thousands of them were sold off into slavery in the Middle Eastern countries. And others died. And others were killed.

That's never been forgotten, it's easy easy… and Stalin said it too, Lenin said, indoctrinate the children. Indoctrinate the children. Again, getting back to the teachers, it's so important to pay them so much, because that's the first step for indoctrination into what you want to them to believe. And what they believe is how they'll end up behaving. That's what it's about folks.

At least for those who are following this and who like to at least know what they're living through, don't let it kill you. Don't let it burn holes in your stomach through ulcers. Just accept the fact that, you know, it's happening. And it's interesting to observe it when you understand why and how it's happening. And it's interesting to see the incredible intolerance that you've only read about in previous areas of history in the past, as it resurfaces again.

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

Hi folks I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on June 30, 2019. It's astonishing how time is flying now, isn't it. And it is flying. It's not just me. I think everybody I know I said the same thing, that it seems to be rushing in. And here you go, it's going to be July, and that will fly in too no doubt. Before you know we'll be getting snow again in September, if I'm still here that is. Again, that's global warming for you.

We live in amazing times. We truly do live in amazing times. But before I get into anything tonight… And I had a whole stack of stuff I was going to get to tonight. But I thought, it's just repetition of what's in the main organized newspapers. They've all got the same themes and memes and so on. Because everything today, as I say, this is a new chapter. News now is simply part of the big agenda of sustainability, with all the different reasons they're giving you for sustainability, except the true reason, which is they claim there's too many of you. If you go in with all the sustainable methods they're going to push, and they are pushing, through grants to small farmers to start little farms up, even sort of mud wattle type places and things like that, for sustainability, you're going to find the health of the public is going to deteriorate very quickly. And when they cut energy out too, and a lot of the energy, then you won't have travel, you won't even go to hospital, etc., with paying all the different taxes for sustainability and carbon, etc., there won't be money even left for a lot of the hospitals. So the population will plummet.

I used to wonder how they were going to effectively achieve their targets years ago when they came out with this. But then again, I had read the World Wildlife Funds reports and all the different organizations that Prince Philip was the titular head of, and he was quite blatant about their goals and their agendas before they toned it down a bit or camouflaged it. It's always been about too many people. The whole global warming idea was dreamt up when they were looking for a reason to take over our rights, to manage us all, and have us give them up in a crisis scenario. Then you drum it up and drum it up into a fever pitch and then you have a new system, you're living in a new system before you know it and you've lost pretty well all the rights that you had before.

So this is a big big change of the system that we're living in today. And there's no point complaining about it really because it's carved in stone. It's taught in every school and university across the planet now as a fact. And they train the populations to go along with it. So the younger they are the more they'll go along with it, they'll never question it. And that's how you run the world basically. A new system.

But before I get into all that, I'm not going to go into it very far at all. Because as I say, you're just parroting the stuff from the news basically. Why bother? I can touch on it and just give a casual breakdown of something. But there's no point, there really isn't any point. Anybody who's anybody is bought off. If you're a politician you've got to go along with this stuff, or you won't get the financial backing. The big foundations and the top philanthropists on the planet are backing this so there's nothing you can do. There's nothing to oppose this at all. And common sense won't do.

Because as I say, they've got to reduce the population of the planet. And it's not new, the idea is not new. It's a very old idea. Back in the late 1800s, in fact the mid-1800s some of the top early pushers for eugenics and control of the populations, etc. were very open about their ambitions, to either sterilize people, and the best way to do it of course is without their, [Alan chuckles.] not just their permission but their knowledge it's happening to them until it's done. And you can take that wherever you want to go with it but it's also to do with what makes a healthy population. If you've got a healthy population, where you can breed for instance, you've got to then cut out those things that make you healthy. So you reduce the type of food that the people get for high nutrition and protein and so on. Substitute it with other things which aren't quite as good. Then you ration it eventually down the road, you ration it all. And that's where it's meant go for those who haven't caught on to the agenda.

Before I get into it as I say, you can remember to go into the website .com. You can help me tick a long here. Either donate to me, you see how to do it @cutting throughthematrix.com, and remember you can buy the books and discs there too and just straight donations as well. You can use different methods of getting money to me. Because things are tightening up, there's no doubt about it. Remember you can also, apart from all the usual ways, you can also use an international postal money order from your post office to send money. It's cheap, it's a lot cheaper than some ones that you send, other types. But international postal money orders from the post office, and you've got to use international to send to Canada if you're outside of Canada. It's internal for internal, naturally. But as I say, it's cheap, it's effective. It doesn't take the big, big cuts at the top that the other agencies use. And it can get to me. You can also send cash.

You're going to find things are changing drastically now. If you're not on board with the rah-rah-rah agenda, or if you've even got questions about it, they don't want your voice out there at all. What you do in a totally propagandized society is ensure there are no dissenting voices from the propaganda. And that's what's happening today naturally. Buy the books and discs @cutting throughthematrix.com. Remember, all the other sites I've got listed there, the official sites that are all mine, they are the only ones I have, they're all listed on that page @.com and you can order from them. Anything else outside that's using my name and doesn't have one of those official sites, someone else is conning you. So be very careful. Always go into .com. There's alanwattsentientsentinel.eu. You'll find the other sites all listed together on the.com site. Take notice of them too because things will change, they are changing quickly as I say.

Because I don't get much money at all. I never have really. [Alan chuckles.] And most folk take it for granted [Alan chuckles.] even the ones that use you, the big corporations are one, for media, they do that actually, and some people even take the information out of the archives and use it for books… And they never send you a penny. Never, ever. And that's the society in which we live of course, naturally. But for those who… And it's only the decent folk really make you keep on putting out the stuff, because they are the few who will always help you out, the decent people.

Everybody else today wants politics basically. Politics I don't even bother with because politics is a con game and it's been a con game your entire life. I've given talks on that years ago about the whole point of politics, which is basically to stop revolutions. If you didn't have politics, you couldn't vote out the scalawags after four or five years. You might have a revolution so they give you the vote, you vote somebody else in. And yet you're really voting the last bunch out, you're so sick of them, the same people you probably admired before you got them in. Then you go on this endless cycle of replacements. And most folk never catch on their entire life that nothing changes.

There's agendas set in stone. You can hear them for 40 years, one party after another, but the same agendas continue. And that's you're telling point right there, the same agendas continue. If you truly had different parties you really would have different agendas. And I think it was Thomas Jefferson mentioned that too, when you see the continuity of agendas, even through changes in the house, meaning the Congress in the US, through different parties, when you see the continuity of agendas, then know you're under tyranny.

But we never catch on, do we? Because we're given these big big, oh, crisis things. You know before it was global cooling, it was 'the coming Ice Age', in the 1960s and 70s. Then they changed it to the 'global warming', we are all going to get fried. Then they just went to 'climate change' which is just normal weather change, you know, and they can't lose that way. But anything that… If you get a bit of rain today, it's going to be a major flood. If you get a bit of sun, oh my God we're all going to fry. Like we never had really hot sun before, hm? And it's just too easy, people will go with the media because it's what they watch on television all the time, all this propaganda, and it's repetition, repetition, repetition. They really can't remember very far back in their own lifetime to what happened a few summers ago or maybe a winter ago or whatever. They really can't remember.

And even if they think they do, they can be overridden like Aldous Huxley talked about, about the suggestibility of most people. It can be overridden with a little bit more persuasion and they'll ignore their own sensibilities and take the expert's opinion on something. He gave a good talk on that at Berkeley, part of the… Well, it wasn't all about that. But he did say that most people were suggestible. And I think he said about 40% to 60% of the public were allinstantly suggestible with different, advertisers knew this, that's why he worked so well on television for instance. He says if you take the instance of, like a snake oil salesman selling you something that's going to be a cure-all for everything, and the 40% of the people, the frightened people will buy it right away. They'll have relief from it because there's nothing wrong with them in the first place but they're very suggestible. But then 20% will phone up and say, well it didn't work with us. He says but with more persuasion that 20% can be run over and they'll believe it too, but they need a bit more reinforcement of persuasion. And then another 20% he says really have high sort of… Altogether you have about 80% can be persuaded into accepting the propaganda eventually. 40 easy, 60 with more, and then up to 80 with extra extra extra.

And there's always about 10-20% of the public he said, back in the 60s, he said, you just can't bring them under, they're not suggestible enough. I would differ today with that. I think today it's much easier to bring people under. The techniques are far superior to bring folk under, to accept what they're being told. And they'll accept it even if their own observations are contrary on whatever topic it is they're changing their minds on. So it's quite something to live through a time when neuroscience is rather open, in some areas, about the studies they've done on us and tests they've done on us. They're constantly doing tests on all of us. Again, that's a whole different topic again and I've given talks on that too over the years.

But it hasn't stopped. And it's getting easier. Once you get into the accepting, accepting, accepting mode of what you're being told, it's far easier for you to swallow the next lot of drivel that comes your way. And they know that at the top as well. There are many reasons for it too. One of the reasons of course is most folk don't want to stand out from their peer group. And again, the studies… [Alan chuckles.] The studies on us all that are just astonishing, where they find out the most adaptable and unquestioning people to accept something new and push something new are the cocktail crew, that meet, they stand and have drinky-poohs and they discuss the latest books, the best authors and talk like that. The middle class types. And even in the civil service in different countries, they're very prone to it. They don't want to, no one wants to be different in the civil service, you want to be accepted, accepted, that's how you get promotion. You don't cause waves and you don't say something too outstanding that's going to shock people around you, that might be frightened because you're clever, and you won't get very far that way in those areas. So anyway, you'll find that they want to be accepted by their peer group. They've got to all conform to what's being pushed, you see, by experts and scientists, etc. It's quite amazing to watch it happen.

But most folk do conform very quickly. Children do too, they don't want to be left out of their peer group or pointed to. Because children are very cruel to each other and they'll have fights and everything else. They're nasty if someone is a bit different to the crowd. And that can be used by, let's be honest here, the teaching fraternity who are on board with their indoctrination agendas. Because they are really change agents as some previous authors have talked about who are dead now. I think Charlotte Iserbyt was one of them who went through the educational system in the US. She was up there on the Board for Education for the US government, I think under Reagan maybe. She went through how they started changing it and changing it for indoctrination, and so she called them, the teachers, change agents.

Well, they're well-paid for behavioral changes, that's the main thing today, it's not so much education and things to help them throughout their lives. Children therefore can be persuaded to adapt with the threat of being ostracized from the group, by teachers who have read their toolboxes. They call them toolboxes, how to make sure all the children come out of that class and with that topic with all the same opinion on the topic, you see, the desired opinion.

Remember, in education, that uniformity is awfully important. That's how you get your degrees, etc., if you conform to what they expect. They're not looking for brilliant people. And if you are brilliant, you might have trouble, and you might have to keep your head down. It's sad, but true. Sometimes you need a bit of entertainment, in this day and age, you see, to learn something. Everybody's taught that anything you learn, even very serious topics, it's easier to put some humor into it, you see. You've got to be entertained with everything today. And it's a shame because if you had straight real honest news you wouldn't need any entertainment. But you don't really get straight stuff today. You get well-known people to present stuff to you on television, and of course you know they'd never lie to you. You know that, don't you? They'd never lie to you. They're there to help you. Isn't that what…?

They're an appendage to your brain, that's what Zbigniew Brzezinski said basically in his book Between Two Ages, that the media really would become, expected to be in fact... He said, shortly the media will be expected to be an appendage to their brain basically, by the general public. Because they were being trained then that they would do your thinking for you. That's what he said in his own book basically, to paraphrase it but that's what he said. And it's all happened. We know that it's all happened and we're living through it. And most folk don't know it. Most folk really don't know it. But they still fall for the famous faces thing, the people who get big big money as anchor people that you're used to, because they'd never lie to you. Would they?

Now, I do remember a time where they use to at least have the decency to give you opposing views on television on news and debates and so on. The object wasn't necessarily to completely demolish an opponent and the opponent's opinion in a nasty way. It was to give them both, both points of view and some kind of rational detailed description to the general public and let the general public make up their mind. Well, that's long, long gone. Gone years and years ago that whole way of doing things. Today you're told what you're supposed to think. And you're really ridiculed, it's like a little child, if you're stubborn and you don't go along with it. That's where we are. We don't have tolerance today at all, as we know. Because you're being trained to be a perpetual child.

And experts run the world, that's true socialism for those who didn't know it. You should go and study socialism. Go and study the early authors, some of the earlier authors of socialism who made it quite plain what they were talking about. Read Man and Superman for instance by George Bernard Shaw and you'll have him tell you that when they are in charge of everything, in true socialist form, scientific socialism as they call it, those who were deemed more intelligent would run the world, they would be picked out to rule over the rest of the public. And they would make the decisions for the public. The proper scientific society would be created by these experts. And you would do what you're told. You'd be obedient. And you'd serve the system.

Because in reality, you see, we're going into a completely intolerant system. You're seeing it today, as I say, if you don't go along with the status quo, with the laws that have been carved in stone. Kind of like the laws of Moses. Moses wasn't appreciated either by his people when he came down from the mountain with the laws from God, you see, and the people says you're kidding we don't want them, and Moses lost his temper and he threw them down and smash the stones. So, he was the first person to break the law, hm. And look, he was elevated as a hero eventually.

But anyway, getting back to the point here. When you think about the world in which we live now, Bernard Shaw made it quite plain, and we saw it in action through the Bolshevik and then into the communist era of the Soviet bloc countries, and then China too. But the Soviet bloc countries where they did, they set up the politburo organizations and different strata of bureaucrats who ran everything, and different levels in tiers, etc., and that was, you did what you were told. You are told what to think, what to say, what to do, or else. And you are monitored incredibly well, in detail. They had all this files and files and files on everybody. They didn't have the computers back then to keep tabs of everybody. But they had detailed filing systems, the Stasi in East Germany. It's astonishing about the system that they had and the files that they had on everybody.

In the modern, well now of course, the same system is using the Internet and all your data and your cell phone data, all that kind of stuff until you can't utter a word without them knowing about it. And they can replay that years later if they want to. And they will. They'll say, did you say that, you know, back in the year so-and-so? And you say no, I don't think so. Well, and they'll play it for you, and you'll say, oh my, well I guess I did. And that's you, guilty right there, you see. The context doesn't matter. Nothing matters as long as they get you saying it. And that's where it's all meant to go.

You see, people don't think about what they're reading today and what's the real intent of it. The intent of most of the stories you're getting today is to train you of what, for what's to come. That's what it is. And I can remember years and years ago when judges, an occasional judge would get in trouble for throwing a case out of court, for instance, in Britain. And elsewhere, but mainly it was Britain at the time. Because no one really had much respect for the big judges in Britain except the legal professional themselves. There was so much weirdness within the judges, that kind of position, or the folk who went into it, that's for sure. You'll find that occasionally they'd throw something out of court. And once in a while even today down in Argentina or Brazil or something you see similar things happening, occasionally. Where a woman is going to take someone to court because she went out and had a date and got drunk, went back and took her clothes off and slept with the guy, then claims that he had sex with her against her will. And the judge will say, well why on earth would you get drunk in the first place? with a stranger? go to their place? take all your clothes off and then go into their bed? I mean, you understand, that's what the judges would say, years ago more so. Today they're terrified to say something like that.

Because everything is politicized. Everything. Everything today is politicized. Really. To an extent that's dangerous. But what it's training you for, it's nothing to do with sex. What it's training you for, is for years down the road when the big world system pulls out of the thin air something you said on the phone or whatever 30, 40 years ago. You see it happening in the government today. Listen to the Democratic Party on the radio in the US, all vying all with their Christmas giveaways. Because every day with them is Christmas, you know, they're going to give you… everything's going to be a utopia and wonderful and free. And each one's trying to outdo [Alan laughing.] the last person's promise on the people. It's astonishing to listen to it. But I thought of the same kind of thing happening there. Because some of them complain about the other delegates on the same party who supposedly were against, were for, or against the bussing problem, I'm not quite sure for or against the bussing problem in schools years ago, and so they're trying to make a big deal about that.

So in other words what I'm saying is, anything from 40, 50 years ago can be pulled up at any time and they'll use that like a battering ram against you. The context of the time has got nothing to do with it they'll say, and things like that. That's how you can be lambasted. But you're getting trained for what's to come. Because everybody is going to be under this world Stasi system. We are in it actually, already. Of course we all know that. I think we all know that. It's going to get worse and worse for the controlled, socialistic controlled society.

I don't see any real parties, political parties out there of any wing, as they call themselves wings left-wing and right-wing, that are against this system. And I haven't seen, I really haven't seen any demands, like full absolute clenched fist demands that big tech backs off of collecting the data on everybody. It hasn't happened. It's not going to happen. Because that is the agenda, folks. That really is the agenda.

And you get hit constantly, constantly, constantly with other things that you hear and read about and so on. It's all to do with training you for what's to come down the road. Absolutely. I gave talks years ago about self-policing. Now, self-policing is a term the United Nations has used for, oh, maybe 20, 30 years with some of their agendas for a world society where they would train the people to self-police their thoughts and what they say. Well, you're going through it all and you don't even realize that's what's happening. You don't know.

When they say things and have big world meanings about the, and reinforce every part of their agenda and update it all the time and publish it, they're not playing themselves. I mean they are that too because they love to have big salaries and have meetings and look important. But the fact is, they really mean what they say. This agenda is fixed in stone, as I say, and there's no motives to break it, you see. It's fixed in stone. There is no opposition to it.

Isn't it astonishing how easily under the guise of keeping you safe, and it hasn't kept anybody safe, but keeping you safe, all your rights have been taken away from you? All the rights of privacy, that anybody in Europe even in the Middle Ages realized it was vital to have privacy and security, and in age where governments, which is generally royalty or monarchy at the time, with their armies could just plunder into your home anytime they wanted to. And they did. And folk fought and fought and fought to keep privacy. Now they've given it all away. Because your government's going to keep you safe.

I was thinking too about the lead up, the lead up to the 20 century and how blithely and easily we toss out the warnings from great minds going down through the past, who always acted as people… almost like prophets in a sense, just telling you to be wary of, hey, think about this, think about it, don't just rush ahead, think about it. And we've forgotten all that. We've been rushed, I gave talks years ago of how the neuroscientists and psychologists and behaviorists knew that once they can stampede the public with fear and terror… oh my God the world's going to end with an ice storm eventually, oh no let's change that the global warming, and no let's change it to climate change, etc…. or that we're going to run out of food, oh my God, yeah, we're running out of food, yada, yada, ya. And terrorism, terrorism everywhere. And give up all your rights to keep you safe.

It's just one thing after another, isn't it? You don't get a minute's peace to breathe. And if you breathe, they're trying to stop you breathing and polluting the atmosphere, you know, with that CO2. I mean, you really, you don't have any peace at all. And they've got fanatical armies set up to parrot the stuff. Repetition, repetition. Like Bertrand Russell says, repetition, constant repetition, the same little slogans, and that's how you do it. When you get brainwashed with these repetitive slogans, you don't have to have details or give them facts on anything, just the little, short sentences. Climate change, climate change, braa, braa. You see? And the folk are stampeded. And when you get them stampeded, you've got them panicked. Well, the whole technique today is don't give them any peace to regain their sensibilities and take a deep breath. Keep them panicked, keep them stampeded and you can ram change after change after change along the agenda in quick succession. That's what you're living through today.

And all the old prophets of old did warn us about all of this. And they did tell us. And we see it even with, when the first thousand years A.D., they had all these portents of, oh my God, things are going to happen because there's a magical significance to time and numbers of course. They talked about comets being seen, portends of terrible things, etc. etc. They also had a real deep knowledge of forces including evil… in religion. And anyone who discounts evil is going to end up either watching or participating or being the recipient of horror. That's a fact. For all the lessons we get taught we so quickly throw it out the window. Let the experts, again, rush us and stampede us onto the next part of the agenda.

Never forget the horror. When the second millennium came up basically, or when they came up towards the year 2000, you know, even before that, it came up, the crescendo buildup in the 19th century into the 20th century, really think about it, the buildup to that, the latter part going up to the second millennium, but not at it yet but the latter part, was a horror show of World War I. Never mind all the wars across the world, with occupations and empires, etc. But with the rise of mechanisms and science for weaponry, you're led up to a horror show.

And Nietzsche of course, they always give you, when they take away your religions they give you philosophers as though they're Gods, in their place, you see. You had quite a few of course trying to, and Nietzsche was brought out, God is dead basically. You see. The whole idea was, well, if God's dead then all the values, all the little safety mechanisms that could hold us back from being utter massive slaughterers, that was taken away. The curtain was opened and you could peek through and say, my God, there's nothing to stop us doing whatever we want to do now. If there's no God with rules and laws and regulations, then all the unthinkable becomes thinkable. ALL the unthinkable's, all the horrors which were unthinkable now, are, you can, they're possible, because there's nothing to stop you. You're throwing away the last vestige of human morality and now you can say, oh, now let our scientists and our social thinkers can now rule the show and they are the real gods. Because if God is displaced and tossed away, who is and you've got what, as a scientist, you see?

And it's a social philosopher. And a dictator. And here you are. Until you had World War I where millions of people were thrown at each other across muddied battlefields, for years. And the gross domestic product of the entire planet, of what they call the civilized worlds – civilized, 'eh, huh, world – went into try and blow each other up. And that was the peak of your civilization and your knowledge. And suddenly you were given the sciences and the abilities to put things together into greater weapons and technology. And you call that civilized?

And again, behind that you had this group, cabal, of revolutionaries, who'd worked for centuries before that to build a world revolutionary force for total world conquest to bring the whole world under their dominion. Because you know, unlike Nietzsche they tossed God out long long before him and they foresaw what they could do with nothing to hold them. And they were given their wish. Then of course you had World War II that came out of World War I really. Then you had, it culminated with atomic warfare on Japan. And the threat of countries elsewhere afterwards for years. And we say we're civilized now. Civilized.

When 9/11 happened, you know, the emergency call number happened, 9/11, we all know that, in 2001, right? And I got to admit it, you know, that whenever a big thing is done you're going to have incredible symbology and numbers thrown at you, [Alan chuckles.] that you're supposed to swallow calmly and say, oh, that's a coincidence. But anyway, when it happened, after the PNAC group talked about the need for a Pearl Harbor event to mobilize the public opinion on their support for the wars they'd planned, or they'd like to do, you see, and they got their wish, 'eh? Because they're lucky that way, aren't they? Another coincidence.

But anyway, immediately Afghanistan was attacked. They already had troops built up to it before 9/11 happened, you know, to go in. It was in all the papers. I did shows at the time talking about it. From the newspapers. At the time. I always use what they give as facts, what's given, whether they are facts or not, but they're given as facts by the news. So I didn't conjure things up out of thin air. And they did, it was a Canadian paper said at the time, they said that the US think tanks, that they really were pushing, creating the propaganda for this big war, you see, it had changed its sites very quietly after going into Afghanistan, quietly changed them all the way to focus on Saddam Hussein and Iraq. Without the public even aware that it had happened. It just seemed to be… It's like George Orwell, who are we fighting today, East Asia or Eurasia, who is it, who is it?

You just keep changing your sites and the folks follow on, you see. And then Bush, George Bush at the time who was the president, in the inquiry, I'm sure it's still out there, he said, he was asked at the inquiry about why they when into Iraq. You know, and he says, well I didn't say that Hussein had anything to do with 9/11, he says to the world, it's just he was a bad man and we're better off without him. So, it's okay to do that. But before they did that too, they starved the people for years with embargoes. Huh? Probably, they might've taken over half a million, and at one point on television, with Madeline Albright talking and she said, it was worth it, starving them all, half a million. And by the time they were finished it was about a million... of starvation, malnourished, lack of medications and so on, medicines.

What I'm saying here is, do you really think we're progressing to some better future here? Huh? What makes you think you're somehow civilized now? When they're doing the same thing today with Iran? And the US and other countries have been, got special forces into Syria for years trying to topple them. Because just like they don't like the president of Venezuela, who was elected, they don't like the presidents of other countries who are elected as well in the Middle East, like Syria. Where they toppled even the president of Egypt at one point, the Prime Minister, because they didn't, they thought he wasn't secular enough. The West thought that. Well, so much for noninterference and so much for this thing called democracy, 'eh. Hm? Think about it.

But we're civilized, aren't we? We're civilized. We don't go and just blow them up all the time, we starve them to death. Have you ever seen folk being starved to death, folks? How come the wonderful news organizations aren't telling you all about that? How come, 'eh? How come? Isn't that news? I remember years ago they had photographers who put exhibitions on in New York and other places, because they'd go around places in Bangladesh and Africa and other places, India, Africa all these countries, Third World countries, where often, mind you, it wasn't just because, and again you have this drumbeat in the background, there's too many people, too many people. No, you always had Western interference for corporations going after resources in these countries and causing civil wars all over the place. Standard technique. And when you have the civil wars no one's doing the farming, hm? And the food supplies can't get made and kept up. And the ones that are given to them can't even get through. I can remember stuff with Red Cross parcels ending up going through the Sahara Desert years ago on camels to be sold elsewhere [Alan chuckles.] by tribesmen.

But getting back to the photographer. They had all these professionally done photographs and he had some video too, of going into these designated areas where there had been mass starvation. And what d'you think you'd hear there? It's not like you're seeing it on what they give you for news today where you'll see the kids screaming and yelling, get me, and the hands waving and they're all… What you've got is a deathly silence. That's what you get as you go in. And you've got children, emaciated children dead and dying, outside, in the streets, next to highways. Mothers, the same thing. Often the mothers would die first trying to give the last vestige of the children the food. So, the children were lying, they have no energy to move, to crawl, whatever. The dogs and animals are all gone, you know. Either they'd have been eaten or they'd starved themselves. But this deathly eerie silence everywhere. And that's how you go out, not with a bang with but with a whimper as they say.

And we think nothing of it when you're told they've gotten embargoes against countries which they don't agree with. Now, I don't blame nations, I don't believe these… What's a nation? Have you ever had a say, like a vote on anything, any particular topic that actually matter to you, anywhere? You don't get it. These actors that are put in as political parties and so on, and they go along with the standard agendas, and then you wonder what on earth they're up to when they make all these strange little rules, laws and so on. So, you get no rights at all, and how even the pretenses of rights today, and you still vote for them because you'll vote them back in again.

Look at Europe. Europe's all but demolished right now. Because like every other country they are importing stuff from the Third World, that's manufactured abroad, the top corporations that were based in their own countries own them in China with the cheap labor. But nothing's made pretty well back in your own countries. So, what are you calling it your country for… or your corporation… or Britain has decided… or Canada's decided? What are they talking about? Were you asked to vote on something? Of course you're not. Or the wars that come up? And again, at one time folks used to scratch their head, at least scratch their heads and say what on earth are we doing over there? You don't even get that now, do ya?

Because you've been trained it's all out of your hands. Again, back to Man and Superman and George Bernard Shaw, you know, they would rule the world, all these experts. You just shut up and behave yourself and go and play and you be good citizen. That’s what you’re told. But the folk never catch on because they’re too well-trained. And I said this years ago, I said you’ll get 20 years of the Internet and then they’ll reel it all in and then it will be a curse to you. Because it’s just nothing more than pigeonholing you, constantly pigeonholing everything you do, your personality, even changes, until if you change any routine you’ll get a knock on the door by the world special police force or something to find out why you haven’t continued with your usual routines. I’m not kidding you. I’m not kidding you at all.

It’s astonishing how folk are adapted to this. But, yeah death, it’s okay for us to sit by and be proud of our nations as they starve other countries. These could be you getting starved to death. And what say do you have in your country for what leaders are doing? But it’s okay to starve folk in another country, who just the same way, have no say in their own country about what their leaders are doing either, ‘eh. You’re dealing with massive political power plays by the most important people on the planet, wherever you look, corporate or otherwise, who want resources, they want these countries resources or who want the land. Or who wants to rule them, basically, straight out to rule them. That’s what you’re seeing.

And any excuse will do for corporations. I gave the talk years ago where an awfully good documentary was put out in Britain and its when Sierra Leone had a so-called civil war going on. And Sierra Leone had diamonds of course and gold, etc. But the documentary, from Britain I believe it was, was very open; at one time they did some good documentaries. They showed you the British mercenaries that were over there basically managing the troops, ordering the troops around and so on, the native troops in Sierra Leone, they had native troops there too.   The British troops and the mercenaries were managing them, directing them, like officers basically. Then they flashed into a big, massive tower in London, a big business tower where a corporation, international corporation in diamonds and gold had its offices. They talked to I guess it was a CEO or a managing director of this company who’d helped finance the mercenaries and even finance the weaponization, the arms, etc. for the mercenaries to train the locals and get the wars going.

Because what had happened is their own people had put in their own leaders who wanted to have rights over their own country and the resources, their diamonds and gold and so on. So this company in London said, come on, he says, they don’t even have a proper government. And he was a quite candid fellow. And he laughing when he was asked why are they in there meddling with this country’s affairs? He says, look at that, look at what they’re sitting on, he says, look at what they’re sitting on, he says, and they don’t even know it or use it or even bother to exploit it. You know. And he talked back to the reporter as though he was, he wasn’t offended, he was just felt that you can’t be serious that you asked me why we’re in there. You know, to him it’s quite logical, that’s what you do.

And I’d rather have that, I’d rather have someone honest about it, why they’re going in and plundering a country, rather than this political hoopla that’s for the same thing. Look at the talks I gave about Tony Blair when he was in, the one-man band to wave his hands to get Britain into the war against Iraq as well. That’s what he wanted. Nobody else wanted it. He was bought and paid for. You know who, afterwards, was his paymaster afterwards when he left, who did he go and work for? J.P. Morgan. M-hm. And where did he, what was he put in charge of afterwards? Where did they put them in charge? Of The Quartet, they call it, managing Middle Eastern affairs for the corporations in the oil and gas industries. That’s what everything’s about. But he also, it was in the newspapers, and I always gave the links to things, the actual stories, it was admitted that before the war in Iraqi started, he and some of the top oil corporate executives met together and divvied up Iraqbefore we even invaded them!

This is reality, folks. So never fall for their, they’re just bad people. I don’t care who they’re talking about, they’re just bad people. These are ordinary people, like you or I, across the planet, who generally don’t want very much. And who’ve got as much say in their own countries as we do, which is nil. And you’ve got these corporations using national armies across the planet to fight their wars for them, to plunder. It’s disgusting!

But no, I can’t… I can’t… Look at, again, from the 20th century, right, you know, there’s 2000 years, almost 2000 years. Then you get into the millennium, 2000, and it really started in 2001, and 9/11 came along, boomf. There you go. And we’ve used cluster bombs since then. We’ve used what they call the bunker busting bombs, which literally can shatter the insides of a mountain. They really are tactical small nukes, that’s what they are. And we haven’t even touched on biowarfare laboratories across the world. We’re just looking at how we use conventional stuff, you know, conventional ways of slaughtering or starving or whatever people to death.

What would you do? Think about it, if… just reverse it. If your country gets so broke, as it gets plundered, at a time when you've never had a minority of people getting richer and richer and richer, and an even smaller minority getting richer than any pharaoh could ever dream of in ancient times to the present, as they tell you you're Democratic, and then you're stuck with the bill for it all, as they get the profit, which is what happens now. And supposing some country says, well, you know, we won't be happy till you get your government out of office. Then they start embargoing you until you're starving to death. Think about it, folks. Never mind this global agenda when they've conquered the planet and everybody on it under sustainability, they start reducing the population by taking away energy and all types of food from you, etc. etc., and sicknesses returns, etc. etc. That's all part of sustainability, folks.

People aren't living longer today because they're living in mud and waddle and stick huts. And once you put them back in it… And by the way there's some articles [Alan chuckles.] that are going to try this [Alan chuckles.] in sustainability programs, in places like Wales under a novel little thing that they call them hobbit houses. Sounds wonderful and quaint, but I know where it's all meant to go, folks. And most folk don't, they don't, they fall for their propaganda. Especially the children, who have had early early conditioning into the whole agenda.

So what I say is, think about it. Think about it. We haven't got nicer going up to the year 2000. Before that, as I say you have the 20th century of mass slaughter like never before, where your whole GDP was put into armaments to slaughter and blow things up, and people and blood and bones. To blow it all up. And to burn it and scorch it. And we think we're civilized. Now we try to do it quietly if possible by starving folk to death. Because the leaders that they have no control over are supposed to get out of office because the West or some other country wants them out. Or their neighbors. Or whoever it happens to be.

And just like always… You see, the US had the right idea when it started. No foreign entanglements. No treaties, you see. And they forgot that quick enough, didn't they? And then of course President Wilson managed to get them into World War I with Bernays who boasted about it afterwards, using the biggest marketing company to put out propaganda to get them into World War I. He boasted, he put a book out about it, how they did it, how they conned the American people. And since then [Alan chuckles.] the US has been involved in war after war after war after war. And once that happens, corporations are ruling you. Quite easily.

So anyway, yeah, mass slaughter was what we've done in the past. They had meetings in Britain while World War II was going on and the King was, it was held under the King's auspices supposedly, an international meeting for the countries that could attended. Talking about they'd have to go further, because the war wasn't killing enough people off, and World War I hadn't done enough either. So they talked about ways to reduce the population of Europe in Britain. Then they went to it. And it's up to you how you want to guess how it's been done. But believe you me, it's always done under the auspices, we're here to help you. That's the easiest way to do it. Always. Isn't it?

But it's not fast enough today now. And under sustainability for global society, you've got to go back to a carbon neutral society? Do you know how impossible that is? They never talk about the forest fires or volcanoes going off. You know how many volcanoes are off right now across parts of the Pacific? All the way into basically just north of Japan even, there's one or two on the go right now. There's earthquakes going on. And of those, that stuff is polluting the sky, like you can see it from the satellites. But they never mention that, do they? …the people who are petrified of it, never mention that. Isn't that weird, 'eh? …about pollution and carbon, 'eh? Hm. That's holy smoke isn't it, from the God Volcanus, 'eh, Vulcan.

But anyway, when you don't have consistency of rationale, there's something else on the go. You breathing is terrible apparently. Even though carbon dioxide is a trace gas, which is essential for plants to thrive on to create oxygen, hm. There ya go. Trace gas. Most of greenhouse gas is actually water moisture. We call it humidity. But facts have got nothing to do with the big agenda to reduce the population of the world. That's what it's always been about, very openly as I say from the 1800s onwards, and then hushed up after World War II, and reinvented again with, to get us all on board with it. We might object if they ask for you to just willingly die, hm? …to save the planet, 'eh.

It's so easy. Bring it about in a different way. We'll all have to change how we live. And how you're going to change his reducing energy, including food, food is an energy source. And the type of food too, folks. As I say, we didn't get to live a bit longer in this day and age by living in mud, in wattle, they call mud wattle huts. And dampness. And then cold in the winter. That's not how we got to live a bit longer. Think about it, folks. Think about it. That's all I say is, think about it.

And for the people who did warn us, going up to the year 2000 and beyond, we are going through it all. People get caught up in the immediacy of today's meme, which is to terrify you. And they forget about yesterday's meme and so on. Until they lose track of the big agenda. You'll find everything falls in place with the big agenda, folks. And don't just panic each time you hear the next scary story. It's control, isn't it?

Anyway, I didn't even mean to go all this tangent this week, but I'll put some links up for you to follow. For those that want to do it. And I'm going to put all the ones up on the latest barrage on sustainability and how you've got to live this way and got to live that way, and cutback this and cutback that. And be run by experts, you see, your new priesthoods. If God is dead, well, here's your new whitecoat characters, the experts, you see. They're your high priests. They're gods actually some of them, so they claim themselves. And Nietzsche would certainly be proud of them. And so, with the gods of the mind, psychology as they call it, behaviorism, to manage us so perfectly into this path without most folk even recognizing what's going on. There you go.

Anyway, as I say I didn't even mean to go off on this tangent, but I thought I might as well rather than just parrot the news to you. Because the news really is weaponized. And you don't get dissenting voices pretty well out anymore. It is going to get worse and it's going to get worse as we go through it all. We have our nudge experts, I've given talks on them. They're international and they prod you to behave on the Internet and so on, or they'll cut you off. And they're active and at it. They are going to teach you whether you like it or not to self-police, don't do this, don't do that, don't say this, don't say that. And just like Bertrand Russell said, in the socialistic gulag run, basically, this world gulag which they are creating, this electronic gulag, Russell said they'll cut off your funding, your money, your credits, whatever they want to call it from the state until you're on your knees and you can't pay your rent or feed yourself, until you behave.

And that is happening. We're living through this, folks. And that's not coincidence. Because the characters in Russell's day helped plan the whole system up to the present time. Including, ah-ha, what Russell talked about, the true language of numbers. Which is of course what they run your electronic systems by, isn't it? You've got to realize you're in an incredible agenda.

Anyway, for myself Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada, where the bugs are doing well, there's no shortage of them. And they certainly get fed well enough each time I go outside. They swoop in there and I donate, I donate all the time to wildlife. Every year I do that, until I'm white as a sheet of course. But that's just the way it is.

For myself Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

Hi folks I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on August 4, 2019. I hope you're all doing okay and getting by. Because that's all we can do these days is just get by, if we can. We're awfully lucky if we do get by. Because things are not great in the economy anyway really. And it's planned that way, as always. Because after all, since no one's on the gold standard anymore money really is a magic act for those who control it at the top. Because that's really what money is, at the top, it runs the world. It controls the world. It controls every government. And it's so important for those… It's a tiny clique at the top really who manage the whole banking system across the planet.

I'm sure there's lots of books out there, you all know that, on the histories of banking. I've talked many times too about the groups based in London who eventually became, the Lord Alfred Milner group and the Cecil Rhodes society, eventually what came out of them and the roundtables was the Royal Institute of International Affairs / Council on Foreign Relations who basically are planning everything for the planet, so it would seem. And they're not the, maybe not the top people at it but they certainly are the people who manage the affairs of the world, the foreign offices, the foreign departments, treaties, parts of them, and manage the economies basically. And they run the Federal Reserve systems with their Trilateral Commission branch. Therefore, they run the whole world. They decide who's going to be popular, who's going to be famous, and who's going to get toppled at the top, out of, maybe into infamy from fame and so on. That's how the world is.

They also take delight in boasting that they drafted up and planned the world to be broken into three parts basically, three unions. The European Union, an American Union, which would eventually broaden into the Americas and the Caribbean as well into one system, the European Union, and then the Far Eastern Pacific Rim region as well. So you've got this great plan they've had for a long, long time and people think, and I understand it perfectly well, oh, what's wrong with that? There's been many debates too over many years, well, wouldn't we get there eventually anyway? And maybe we would, maybe we wouldn't. But the whole plan here is to, really, like the Marxian concept too, if things can happen along the way through time in a natural process, why not use your abilities to make it happen faster? So, plan the problems, plan the solutions, etc., and eventually you can go up the ladder with the Hegelian dialectic and get the world where you want it to be. So, if that included wars, and world wars, you would use all of that, you see. And that is the system that has been used on the planet.

But those are the top… And folk will say too, well you know, they might agree with that. It's like, when you're young and you read Bertrand Russell, you would think that guy's got a lot of common sense in here, what he's saying. But it really isn't until you go into the cliques that they all belong to, and eugenic societies, and yeah, they need all your help to get things rammed through, just like the Bolsheviks needed the mob as they call them, the people, behind them to overthrow the Czar and take over the country, they always use the mob, and you end up getting something completely different at the end of it than what you imagined.

Because there's not a… You're not… You see, you always think in them and us. That's how people think. And it never occurs to you, if you're fighting for them, you see, then you are now part of us, [Alan chuckles.] that's what you think. But them at the top don't see you as part of us. That's just it. And again, I've given many examples over the years of the ones who helped foment revolutions, and don't forget we're still going through revolutions now. You don't need massive bloodshed to go through revolution. Most of the revolutions we go through are fairly bloodless. They're cultural. They're sexual. They're into gender. They're into all kinds of things today. And these are parts of revolutions that were planned along long time ago. And you think you know the end, where it's all going. But the fact is, it's a long-term process. We're reaching the end of one phase of it, that's for sure.

Within about 30 years or so they'll have it completely, you wouldn't recognize the world in 30 years time. Or the cultures in it. Or the types of new cultures that have been fomented and created for everybody to follow. Because cultures are definitely planned and formulated and successfully put across on the public, who adapt into it rather easily, without thinking. And it's not their fault. It's not their fault because they think they're free. If you're free why would you be emulating behaviors of what we used to call decayed civilizations, or defunct civilizations? …where the ancient Roman, ancient Greek basically collapsed from within. They didn't really need the people invading from without. They couldn't, it was so bad at the end with their debaucheries and their partying and so on, they didn't even have enough children of nobility to take over, to grow up and take over and run the country, it was just so corrupt and… yeah.

So here we are again. And so if you want to bring down a society or a system, that you've used, if you're something behind the scenes, say, and you use, you're always using others to do what you want to do and where you want to get, you use them, you see, once you've got them into this position where they think they're the bosses, then you have to get rid of them gradually. Well, that's what happened to the British Empire. Obviously. It's happened to the US too. And it's always a shock to those involved. Interestingly enough, Rudyard Kipling was involved, heavily of course naturally, with what he saw as the British system and the Raj system in India, and British Empire, where they literally thought "the sun would never set on the British Empire," as he said.

They couldn't imagine it. They had never had so much wealth across the world, the people who were born into it, on behalf of the officialdom of the Empire. They had servants and all the rest of it. And a servant really, as far as I'm concerned, is basically a paid slave, isn't it? They didn't like that term in Britain, so they call them serfs basically, but they were definitely bought and sold with the land. But, as I say, when a ruling managerial class have served their purpose, give them, oh, 60, 70 years, maybe 100 at the maximum, and they'll die off rather quickly. Because just like every other defunct, as they call them, defunct and arrested civilization, you go backwards. You start drinking, you take drugs, you have sexual immorality, you don't have children, just like ancient Rome, and so on and so on and so on.

…until you're overrun by the next phase. And the next phase of course of those who are going to manage the world are chosen by an elite, again, the quiet elite at the back, to take over. And they have really a completely different mindset, most of them. They're brought into this new computerized industry. They're okay at what they do. It's all mathematics basically. They get cocky and arrogant, very quickly, very, very quickly, when the big money rolls in. And they get their lectures given to them too, that they are the new rulers and can rule billions of people's minds easily with algorithms, etc. Which they CAN by the way, and I'll touch on that a little bit, just a tiny little bit of it tonight.

Because it is boring. I'm sure you've all read about it in various places. But the people who they bring in today who are taking over, who are made the multimillionaires and multibillionaire's, very quickly, are still a managerial class on behalf of something above themselves, which they don't quite understand or believe it's there. The greatest way to blind people is to make them think they're at the top. And they get terribly arrogant. And when they get too arrogant in fact and they won't take the little hints that will trickle down to them, they're simply removed in different ways from the system.

Getting back to Rudyard Kipling, he was part of the establishment. He was the big author of the day and a good speaker as well, for the British, as I say, in India. He and many others in his own era, his class system, like you find for instance you had the later HG Wells, this was a whole class who saw the world as a place to be ruled. A place to be shaped. And they were taught certainly by their owners at the top, the very, very top, the culture, everything would be changed. HG Wells was very, very aware of this and he was all for it, he thought at the time. But their shocks came. Their shocks came to all of them, even Kipling too, when the torch was handed over to America to take over.

Britain was exhausted with all the wars. The taxpayers paid for it all, one way or another, everything that you bought had taxes on it like crazy. They were exhausted after, right up through World War I. So really, the torch was handed, and it was planned to be handed before even world war started, to the US, a much, much bigger population coming in, all the time, getting bigger and bigger and bigger. It had a workforce from across the planet flooding in there. It had massive land space, great mineral rights and ores and all the rest of it. It could be exploited and up and running very, very quickly, which of course it was. There was a lot of factory towns, a lot of factory… that almost could be called factory cities some of them were so big at one time. It was a massive machine, that's how people could see it, as a massive machine of production. And Britain couldn't stand up to it at all. As I say, Britain was exhausted, because the public themselves are cannon fodder naturally for those who own an empire. And those who own an empire don't even see the people that they use as even being of the same stock, you might say, of themselves. They see them as almost a completely different race to themselves. And Britain certainly had that arrogant system installed there.

Anyway, for those as I say, that help to push onto the next step and the next step, they are in shock, they are in shock when it’s handed off to someone else. Because they think they’re going to be in on it. Some of the big players have said that, that many of those who help us, Julian Huxley for instance… I hate saying this stuff because there’s somebody grabs it all the time [Alan chuckles.] and uses it as though it’s his own, a rather big one, all the time. But anyway, Julian Huxley said that, he said that many will serve us and work for us to eliminate the old, the old, he’s talking about the system, and he said, and they’ll expect to come, that we’ll bring them into the new system. It was almost verbatim to George Bernard Shaw but they both said, but they’ll be shocked to find out after all their lifelong work and help, that they don’t have the right stuff, you might say, to get through themselves and to be, go into the next phase, they’ll be eliminated as well. [Alan chuckles.]

So that’s how the system is. I’ve said it before, that the elite see, and there IS an elite, there definitely is an elite, of course there is an elite, and they decide what the future’s going to be. They don’t sit and bury themselves in books to find out what to do. They have lots and lots, millions of academia now, those in academia doing all that kind of work for them. They have hundreds and maybe if not thousands today of think tanks across the world, which they have working on all kinds of the big agendas’ problems and how to overcome them, how to get around laws, all that kind of stuff, perpetually. So when they meet together, they want all the facts presented to them by the experts. And that’s how things proceed.

But the people at the top are very, very calm. They’re very calm. They don’t sit and fret about things or worry about things. They leave the worrying to those who are employed by them. That’s the beauty of being incredibly, not just incredibly, incredibly wealthy but a member of the upper echelons and the elite.

I have to laugh, and cry to an extent too, at the misery that will come when once again you read that now they are, they’re going to the next phase of course, I’m talking about this new chapter we’re in, of eliminating any voices out there on Internet or whatever that they don’t like. And they have to have some kind of excuse for doing so, be it fake news, be it whatever. But now they’re also going, and there’s all kinds of, oh, they’re racist, or you name it, blah blah blah, any excuse will do, to eliminate anybody who is off the beaten path of the authorized truth. And of course, there can only be one authorized truth. And here we are again.

I can remember after 9/11, leading up to 9/11 in fact, there was a big drum beat put out by the FBI and others, that literally are all NGO groups around them that said that the patriot groups in the US were, could be the worst enemy in America, the most, they were the biggest threat, according to the FBI. And this is before 9/11 happened. And even then, it took quite a while for it to sort of die off as well, that kind of attitude. But now they’ve kind of resurrected different attitudes again with the same kind of thing behind it of course. They will proceed to eliminate all those who are not authorized to be out there until you’re left with counterintelligence. Don’t forget, counterintelligence will have incredible funding. It will give out sometimes more information on events and so on than anybody else, and it’s got to be checkable, to give credence, but then they spin you off into politics, or into more wars across the world, and that kind of thing, you see. That’s how it’s really done.

A brief look at the Internet and through the different video systems and so on will tell you who still hasn’t been pulled, and who has no problem being found if you do searches and searches on them. It’s quite amazing. Where everybody else is being simply cut off and their finances are being shackled pretty well, to get them off, out of your headspace you might say. There’s nothing unique in this. Back in the 90s I did shows on regular media on what they did, and the big cartels who owned regular media and the history of it too. I read from the Royal Institute of International Affairs own documentation on their control, say, in Britain for instance, as an example, and how before World War II started they gathered their members then, the ones who owned, they were the cartel owners of the media in Britain.

They had a meeting, in an afternoon, because it wasn’t even sure if Britain would even be involved in any war in Europe. But they wanted, the Royal Institute of International Affairs had its own agenda of course, they always have their own agenda, and they needed the public’s support to fill the uniforms that would go off and do the fighting. They talked about ways that they could publicize, and terrified, the words were ‘terrify’ the British readers of their newspapers. So they all agreed there and then to broadcast on radio, it was the BBC and they’re using their newspapers write ups on the fact that Germany was going to gas them all, them and their children, from the air. They also said that they would be out digging trenches against it. Well, trenches aren’t much use in modern [Alan chuckles.] air bombardments, believe you me. And they knew that. But it was to get an active, it was to get something done in the big cities that would get through to the public.

You see how we are conditioned and used? If you see folk suddenly frantically digging trenches in your cities, something that hasn't happened becomes a reality to you. Oh, we're all going to get slaughtered by those nasty… So it builds up an anger for, against people who haven't done anything to you yet. It's a precursor, it's predictive programming. You get, oh my God, they're going to bomb us, they're going to gas us. They even said they were going to come over and they would castrate all the able-bodied men. That's what they… This is your… This is the moguls, the owners the of the newspapers in London, that's what they said they'd do. And they did. They put it all out there to terrify the public.

Well, immediately the women were, it's like what Hitler said, [Alan chuckles.] Hitler said in Germany, because he learned it from long before him. But Hitler said, you must aim, socialist government must aim all of their propaganda at the female psyche, the woman. Because they demand protection. And they demand protection for their family, for their children, you see. So, you tell them that government's now in charge, and the women won't question the government and they'll say immediately to the husband, oh Jimmy, do what they tell you, they're trying to keep us safe, you see. So already the government's overruling the husband, who's maybe saying, I don't really believe all this stuff that they're saying. But Hitler said, aim the propaganda at the woman because she wants peace and security and safety, aim it over the head of the husband, the woman will come to us, the party, the political party, and then, he said, the child will follow the woman, and therefore the man must therefore follow the child.

So, it's bump, bump, bump, 1, 2, 3, that's how it works. And it never changes. It doesn't matter about all of the freedoms that different genders have today or anything else, women still are more prone to demand. And this is what Socialism knows. We are your friend, we'll give you your rights, we'll give you this, we'll give you that, etc., etc. But there's a price to pay. And the price is that the government expects you to jump and jump and jump whenever they tell you to back them up. There's always a price to pay.

Power is not given out to people for free. Never. Anymore than the people who own the system, and then they'll say, we're going to use the people, we'll give them a term called democracy… Because if you don't give them this idea of democracy they won't do, they won't work for us, they won't do anything we want them to do, you see. We'll make them think it's going to be their system, a Brave New World or a utopia, and through democracy you'll have rights. And then they supply you with all the speakers of the rights. And then you wonder, what on earth is this zoo we've got here, you know. And how come you're still just as poor the bottom and getting worse? You have to understand, you're not living in the system you've been trained to see.

Bertrand Russell said that we, you know, we, meaning his we that he belonged to, and very high clique in fact, he said, we used to believe that all we had to do was to point out to the public what was right and wrong and what they should and shouldn't do, and suggest to them the better path to follow. And he said, how wrong we were. What we really needed to do was use what really worked, a brass band, flags and parades and things, that's what the public will follow, it's an emotional thing. There's never been a time in history where so much of our own money of course, through the grant, gets used to pay for studies and programs to control our behavior, on behalf of the ones who own the system basically. And it works awfully well. Incredibly well. And the amount of financing of the different teams in psychology and behaviorism get is staggering, folks.

But again, money is nothing to those who simply add numbers to the long, long numbers already exist of what the debt is supposed to be. It's nothing at all, you just keep, at one time it was just printing paper. Now it's just digitalized additions that's added onto computers. It's backed by nothing. So, you understand, it's interesting, that the central banking system is a closed shop. You talk about high temple of the occult, it's right there. Because you and I know darn well that at the end of the month of your bills don't tally up and your income is less than your output, then you're in trouble. But governments have no problem with this. When you get a financial crash it's because the elite at the top planned it that way, they want it. It doesn't have to happen; they could just divert it. They can just put it off forever if they want to. So, it's to suit what they call an adjustment, for themselves, not for us.

On the last, of course, the crash that we had, the 2007/8 crash is still wide open. Every country, pretty well every country borrowed from the US. You see, the US Federal Reserve today is not just the US reserve. It's pretty well reserve to the planet, when you look at the money that's owed to them by the all the other countries, including Canada. We also had bailout money the last time and special drawing rights in Canada from the Federal Reserve. We were included in the American's bank as well. But we have to pay it back naturally. And out of that they managed to really reduce the currency value, the purchasing power, the currency in Canada about 35%, almost 40%. Well, it pretty well is 40% now. And everything has shot up in price. And the foodstuffs has gone up in price too. But that's not the end of the story.

Because when you look at everything that's happening it's meant to look all disconnected, all the different events are disconnected, unconnected, but disconnected from a single cause, or a single-purpose, or a single agenda. And here we go with conspiracy theories, which they say now is the new taboo. It's the same as the old patriots being the danger to the planet or to the country or the US or whatever it was at 9/11. Now of course it's conspiracy theorists. Conspiracy theorists.

It's so interesting, when you read and you recorded the petty pathetic little inquiries, these little routine nonsense things they had after the crash of the economy that started in the US in 2007/8, and they had these little hearings. And to hear the chiefs of the Reserve and all the rest of it saying, well, the money went to money heaven, with a sarcastic attitude… knowing, and saying that the US couldn't even charge these people with anything. Greenspan said it too, he weighed in on it as well and said the US can't charge them, it's a completely different body from government, it's untouchable, nothing you can do about it. So here we are, we live through all this thing, because of it we're poorer off than ever before.

It was an adjustment, as I say. It was for the elites' own reasons. But when the elite then bailout other countries, not just Canada, and countries across Europe too have got special drawing rights over that… You understand, that money is always a control factor. It's THE control factor. And no loan is put out without, it isn't just all the legalese to do with paybacks, there's conditions, and social conditions, and cultural conditions attached to it that must be met. We saw all that first when Hillary Clinton was in the US State Department and when they were giving out different grants across the world, as always, you see. She started tacking on all these things that had the people in Africa scratching their heads. Because now it was overt, we're not going to give you your loan unless you promote this law and promote that law, etc. etc. etc. …that interfered with their culture. Well, now all the countries are the same, you see, we're all getting it with the same things.

That's what you do with the system. Because money is a control factor. Every government on the planet has to go cap-in-hand to the central banking system every year to borrow more of these nothings that are then tacked onto their computers as okay to put money in. It's a big club at the top, really, of incredibly rich… What I mean is, a rich, rich club. Because how can you not be rich when you're at the top creating money out of nothing? and the whole planet just accepts it?!! I mean what a heady experience that must be, 'eh?

We're trained to see the world in a certain way and it really is different. The reason being, you've all forgotten that when Agenda 21, the agenda for the 21st century, that used to also be called The Millennium Project, was all signed, with the sustainability agreements and all the rest of it, and now you have different parts of it split up into about 15 year periods for further negotiation, to ram the next level through, the next level, the next level through. But don't forget the original one is for the wholecentury, it's telling you what they have to accomplish in stages for the whole century. And population control is in there. Eventually housing in Agenda 21, there'll be no private ownership of property. Did any of you read it?

You see, what you're going to have is what's coming up right now. And you're being led into it. No private property. So, let's look at this little article just to start here, right. Now, this one here, it's for Canada but it could be for anywhere. Australia, New Zealand, London, anywhere in the world actually because you see the same articles across every country.

Priced out of the market? Three housing alternatives for hot markets
ctvnews.ca / 16 Dec 2016

TORONTO -- With the sluggish economy (Alan: So, they're admitting it's sluggish, right. What do you mean, sluggish? We don't produce material things anymore.) and tightened lending rules, (A: So, the big central bankers are tightening the lending rules…) being priced out of the real estate market is a reality for many, particularly those in Toronto and Vancouver.

But whether your finances are limited or you simply don't want to overextend yourself, there are other options.

Take Toronto, for example, where recent statistics show the median family income … (A: Now, these are always approximate things. And don't forget, you have a tiny minority that's earning hundreds and hundreds of times more per family than other average families so you can't really get a good figure for average at all, really. But anyway, it says…)

… the median family income (A: This is family income…) is $75,270 (A: …per annum, right…) and the average home costs $762,975. Using these figures, prospective homebuyers wouldn't be able to qualify for a mortgage.

"The maximum purchase price this median family's income could support is $620,935, and they'd need to put six per cent down," says Rob McLister, founder of RateSpy.com.

But affordability starts to come into the picture about an hour west of the city (A: So, in other words, they're trying to tell folk to move out, right. If they move out and if they're working in the city, well, now you've gotta have congestion on the roads more so and more so and etc. etc. etc., right? But they're trying to tell you that if you move out and the cost of the average home is…) in the Hamilton-Burlington area where the average home is $507,131. A family (A: …the same family…) earning $75,270 could qualify with a minimum down payment of $25,713.

(A: That's all well and good as long as you're pretty well guaranteed to keep a job. Which very few folks are today. If the businesses they're into don't go by, they'll be taken over or put out of the market. Everything is getting taken over these days, as you know. Another one…)

As middle class gets priced out of housing market, Canada takes drastic steps to make it affordable business.financialpost.com / 9 May 2018

(A: Now, here's what they're doing here. [Alan chuckles.] Right. And this is how it sounds, great, because we get great announcements in Canada, and they don't really go very far actually. It says…)

Canada is offering free land (A: …right…) and tax incentives to create more affordably priced options in Vancouver and Toronto

(A: I tell you where it's going here…)

Fuelled by a booming tech industry, (A: Booming, you see. Now, tech industry is up and down like a yo-yo because there's so many countries involved in the same tech industry.) Toronto's economy has produced an all-too-familiar problem: soaring housing prices beyond the reach of the middle class.

(A: It's also mass migration from, and they've admitted it, from wealthy China, every country says China and India; it's got a massive middle-class too, we forget that, that are wealthy, and they can come in and buy them, the houses, right off the bat, like whole, you know, don't bother with a mortgage, don't need to. And China is doing the same thing too. When you look at the world prices of housing, and there are actual lists of them, they admit it's mainly China and then India, followed by India, that has the money, very rich people moving out and just buying places. So, the folk at home can't afford it. Anyway, back to this article. They complain about Vancouver and Toronto all being, as if that's the only places in Canada. Of course, they're not but that's all they seem to talk about these days…)

That's also plagued Vancouver where prices soared even higher than Toronto.

Now, Canada is embarking on an ambitious plan to create more (A: …and here's the key…) moderately priced rental units.

(A: So, here's everybody thinking, oh that's great, they're going to give people land and… moderately priced rental units. So big international landlords, they have chains of them if you don't know that, are snapping up this kind of offer, obviously, you see. I've done research into a lot of these organizations and when you start… Is a light coming on, right? If your memory lasts just about five minutes or a bit longer, you remember, right. So, here's governments using your tax money to hand out land for building, and tax incentives to companies that will put up rental apartments, you see, as a start.)

With land handouts and tax incentives provided by the city and provinces, one group hopes to bring 50,000 affordable apartments to Toronto and Vancouver in just 10 years.

The project, to cost at least $10 billion (US$7.8 billion), (A: Well, you can probably put that up to about 40, 50 billion by the time they tied it all up, that's always the way it works.) is at a scale never before seen in Canada, both in its size and speed. And it's raising questions about whether or not the country will be able to address its affordability problem before it's too late.

(A: They talk about the…)UBS Group AG's annual list of major cities worldwide…

(A: What they're doing too, don't forget, don't forget, you know, they're giving them big projects, that own rental units across the planet. Anyway, it says…)

…Westbank Projects Corp., who spearheaded the project and recruited Allied Properties Real Estate Investment Trust to help. (A: They're in on the act as well.)

The Canadian plan, (A: …right…) run by a new nonprofit (A: So here you go, this public-private partnership, the public pays for everything and the private ones own it eventually. You see, it's a nonprofit called…) called Creative Housing Society, proposes to build units aimed at people with median annual income between $40,000 to $100,000, who would spend less than 30 per cent of their household income before tax on housing costs.

Well you see, the idea is to get you into rental only, because again, Agenda 21, by the end of the century they don't want people owning, at least ordinary folk owning their own property. And you have public-private partnerships, this is what it's about, there's so many of them, it's just staggering how many international real estate agencies there are. And these international real estate agencies are often in league or part of or a subsidiary of a bigger company of international landlord associations that have rentals throughout cities across the planet for instance. And that's the way of the future. The public's tax money will pay for the upkeep of these buildings and homes. And they will be so-called thermal friendly and eco-friendly and sustainable, etc. etc. etc., all the fancy words that add more bucks to it. And they'll be owned in an oddball sense by these corporations and somehow, they'll word it as not really private, although of course it is. That's the way of the future. There's quite a few articles on the same kind of thing…

Priced Out of the Housing Market - magazine.utoronto.ca / 24 Sept 2018

Again, they still blame laundering schemes…

$7.4B money laundering scheme spiked B.C. home costs 5 per cent, reports find - thestar.com / 9 May 2019

(A: The headlines now are becoming more… it's… I don't know if they go to school anymore because they're all lately, headlines often just don't make any sense these days, do they, really? And there's so many mistakes in it too. But anyway, it says…)

VANCOUVER—Organized criminals found B.C. an increasingly attractive place to stash their money — largely without legal consequence, two scathing final reports on money laundering said Thursday.

Money laundering, you see, that's where they sink their money, is into big, big projects, big buildings in big cities across the world, you see. I did some of the stories a few weeks ago, or last week or the week before as well, on China laundering money into buildings as a way to get money out and to make it appear to be clean. Another article too says…

Want to buy a home in UK? You need to earn £54,000 on average theguardian.com / 27 June 2019

(A: Again, it's the same thing, same tactic you find…)

Zoopla finds London buyers must be paid £84,000 (A: …to qualify to get a mortgage…) while Liverpool requires £26,000

You see how they can encourage you all to move. [Alan chuckles.] They know what they're doing, 'eh, when you see the same articles for different countries, all the same articles, basically, then there's something, there's a connection here, there's a reason. You also have affordability and sustainability being married, they call it…

Marrying Affordability and Sustainability at The Rose
nahbnow.com / 31 July 2019

(A: Neighborhood organizations work within these organizations, developers, etc., contractors, architects, they all meet together, and they address…)

…the seven LBC principles of sustainability as part of the project.

Located just south of downtown Minneapolis, The Rose incorporates pioneering green building techniques among its 90 mixed-income (47 affordable and 43 market-rate) apartments, (A: …apartments, apartments.)

So you see, everything's being changed into a Brave New World, isn't it? And we're going along with it. Because what choice do we have? The people don't know what else to do except to go along with it. You see, you don't have what you think of as your country, whatever country you're in. You still thinking it's your country, even though all the signs of what's happening show you the opposite. It's not your country. And the politicians you bring in, they completely ignore your problems, your real problems, and big things happen and you don't have a clue what's happening.

I said before, the NAFTA agreement, North American Free Trade Agreement that was drafted up was really to amalgamate the Americas, and the Caribbean and other ones too, and to bring them all into one big system. Even with a central Parliament down the road, if possible. They said they wouldn't need that, but they'd like to have one, they could still run the countries without one. If you wonder why you haven't been, you haven't seen any official documentation from your governments telling you they're dissolving the borders for instance, but you can see it and read it all the time that that's obviously been happening for a few years, [Alan chuckles.] quite a few years, then obviously your government is not in charge of what's happening. Something above them is because if your government was real and something was happening outside their control, they would make sure they took over control to get it back to where it's supposed to be under law. But they're not attending it, which means, they're told hands-off these new normals.

Now, I'll show you to a little example of people who think that they're up at the top, or near the top at least. And you can see the arrogance of the, I call them the strutters, they verbally strut. Their attitude is superior, is of superiority, etc. Because they're spoiled. They're spoiled. But they think they're in charge of much of what's going on, because they've helped to shape the opinions across the planet through electronic programming through different systems. Now here's an example, it's just an example of one person that, I think he was on television discussing what happened to him in 2017. And you wonder if you really gets it, yet, and during that discussion at least. But it's on…

Chamath Palihapitiya
en.wikipedia.org

Chamath Palihapitiya is a venture capitalist (A: Right. I mean, here's big money again.) and the founder and CEO of Social Capital.

Palihapitiya was born in Sri Lanka and, at the age of six, moved with his family to Canada. (A: …went to school and college and all the rest of it until he did really well in electronics. Then he went down to the States…)

…worked for a year as a derivatives trader(A: Again, derivatives and all the rest of it, to me, I can't tell the difference between hedge funds and derivatives. Unless maybe the derivatives are the leaves you've got left after you've got the hedge.) at the investment bank BMO Nesbitt Burns.

He moved to California to be with his then-girlfriend, Brigette Lau, and they later married.

Palihapitiya joined AOL, becoming the youngest vice president of the company in its history, heading its instant messaging division in 2004. In 2005, he left AOL and joined Mayfield Fund; a few months later he left that job and joined Facebook, (A: …and this is the key to it…) which was then a little more than a year old. (A: So he was one of the, maybe the partial, one of the many [Alan chuckles.] maybe partial kind of founders in a sense.) Palihapitiya's work at Facebook involved trying to increase its userbase.

Palihapitiya says that when he joined Facebook he had contempt for people who merely write code, (A: …because he has that attitude around him of contempt anyway.) but that his experience at Facebook led him to revise his beliefs. (A: And he was there for four or five years before he revised it, you see.) One of the things Palihapitiya admired about Mark Zuckerberg, Facebook's principal founder and CEO, was Zuckerberg's lack of ego (A: Well, I don't know where you got that from.) and ability to make business decisions dispassionately.

I hope you understand, these business decisions are much bigger than giving you something to chat with across the planet. It's a whole new culture. And there's a YouTube I'll put up, a link to it where this man talks about it.

Chamath Palihapitiya, Founder and CEO Social Capital, on Money as an Instrument of Change - youtube.com / 13 Nov 2017

He talks about when he left Facebook because of the incredible power it had and how it could cause tremendous harm as well, etc. But he says it out loud, the power to influence people's behavior and so on and so on, right, and culture. So he's left and he now is supposedly, he's advising people to do the same as him, and all get together, all the biggies basically, and create a good proper culture for the people, creating new morals, by using all these algorithms and behavior modification techniques they can use, that you don't even know are getting used on you.

Well, hold on a second here! Isn't that simply a continuation of the Facebook with a different company? And did anybody ask the population anywhere on the planet, do you want your culture changed? And if you all said even yeah, were you asked what you would want for culture? No. The arrogance of the people involved in the tech industry, who admit, who admit the power that they have to change, and they already, they use it all the time to change and create the culture, that's rapidly disintegrating, he admits that by the way.

Former Facebook exec says social media is ripping apart society - dailymail.co.uk / 2 Aug 2019

But I think it's disintegrating because it was intended to be that way. Let's be honest here, who's giving them the power to, the right to interfere with your mindset in such a way that you have no say so in it, you don't even know that it's being done to you because it's so perfectly done? It's a tremendous psy-op operation going on all the time. They admit this in lots of their writings, by the way, folks. So, this guy now is, whether it's his own idea or he's being used, is being used as a form of revolutionary for political lobbying strategies and so on. But his answer is basically to use it properly, with all their power that they have to create a good culture, etc. Well, whose opinion is it, a good culture, clarify what he means by a good culture?

And let's be honest here. How does this tie in with democracy? It doesn't, does it. It doesn't. When you're not asked, would you mind if we alter your behavior, or do you mind if we the penalize you for your opinions, or even your thoughts? Even if the thought is only a question, that borders on a taboo subject no matter what it happens to be, who gives them the right to say they're going to punish you for that? Because that's where it's all going. I hope you understand. So anyway, this fella got some media attention when he come out, at least talked about it and how they know they’ve got these dopamine driven feedback loops they call them on Facebook, that are deliberately designed into them to make it addictive… and really to get the young folk and then give them their opinions and so on.

Former Facebook VP says social media is destroying society with ‘dopamine-driven feedback loops’ - washingtonpost.com / 12 Dec 2017

Everything out there is so weaponized, you can’t watch anything on television without being brainwashed. There’s even a talk that Star Trek was loaded with all these messages all to make you think, maybe you should think about this particular problem that way or this way, until it becomes your opinion too. Everything out there, you see, the entertainment value is the hook to get you to watch and the rest of it is really just weaponized payloads to get into your brain. That’s what it’s for. So, I’ll put these articles up along with another one to do with Facebook…

Facebook could soon be snooping on your encrypted WhatsApp messages under plans to moderate content on the platform
dailymail.co.uk / 2 Aug 2019

(A: So once again, this is censorship of speech, ‘moderate content’, right.)

…using on-device AI algorithms to scan and moderate content in its WhatsApp messaging service to enforce its acceptable speech policy.

(A: There you go.)

By the way, this young fellow who wants to give you a new culture, well, basically new morality, on the talk he cusses and swears. [Alan laughing.]   This is your new guru to give you your good culture and good values and so on, hm? And where do you get all this cussing and swearing from? I’ve never heard somebody, folk cussing and swearing and all that. It’s all from everything on your social media and all your movies and everything else. That’s what started it all. I think Britain was the first target of that, big time, actually.

I’ll also put up remember…

The World's Largest Real Estate Companies 2018 - forbes.com / 6 June 2018

That’s got quite a good list, that ties in with the housing I mentioned earlier there. This article…

Should the Rich Be Allowed to Buy the Best Genes?
airmail.news / 27 July 2019

Biology is the new tech. I’m at a conference in Quebec City on CRISPR, the molecular tool designed to edit genes…

(A: It goes through some of it and some of the, again, your new gods up there, the white coated gods found ways to edit the genes and so on and alter the genetic coding and how wonderful it all is. We should worship them all, you know. We should. Yes.)

At one time, as I’ve said, like last week, about the people who go off to work at big agency labs to create biowarfare to slaughter millions of people, and they have families and they tend their gardens and they have wives and stuff and vice versa, wives that have husbands and they may go off and do the creation of biowarfare technologies. Well, it’s the same with this stuff here too. Because now you’re truly god when you can come in and decide what kind of creatures you want to be. But don’t forget, Brave New World, Aldous Huxley, 1932 I think it was, or 1933 he came out with it, that’s where you’re going with it all. It’s all eugenics. Always eugenics.

And another article I wanted to put up too…

Stop aerial herbicides bring on the Sudbury forest change.org

(A: …near me, they've been spraying over the Sudbury forest and there were articles in 2015 about it where they were, they wanted Monsanto's product glyphosate stopped.)

The herbicide VisionMax Pest Control Product (PCP), a Monsanto product containing glyphosate, the same chemical in RoundUp, and Garlon XRT PCP, another systemic herbicide containing triclopyr, will be used.

I've got two articles and I'd like to just put it up because it's important. Why are they doing this, 'eh? I mean, again, I know we're disposable when you get way outside the big important cities, remember, the super cities that the UN declared back about 10 to 12 years ago and how these would be the big places of the future. They'd be countries in a sense. Everything outside of them would just die off, because you wouldn't be living in them anymore, you'd be off the land, Agenda 21, living in these big, big cities. I guess that's what they're doing here. [Alan chuckles.] They're definitely spraying a lot of stuff on us that shouldn't be there at all. This other article too is to do with more spraying in Sudbury. They call it the rain of death…

Monsanto's "Rain of Death" on Canada's Forests - globalresearch.ca / 16 May 2019

It isn't just in Sudbury, but Global Research has an article too, for those who want to know about it.

Anyway, where are we here now…? Because I'm running out of time. I'm trying to keep it shorter talks because other folk put them up and one that goes up on a radio thing, actual radio broadcast eventually, and it tends to go over. So…

Former Google Engineer Says Google Will Try to Prevent Trump's Reelection - pjmedia.com / 3 Aug 2019

Well, that tells you, if Google is surviving and it's being allowed to do what it does, which is total control and total data collection, it's working for the people who own the planet. How's that. Obviously. Since no government's stepped in to lessen its powers at all. Like, they give you these little, oh we're talking, we're looking at this, we're looking at that. No, no, no. Forget that rubbish. It was set up by THE intelligence agency of the planet, of those who rule it, the planet basically. That's what I'd say. Also, they've got…

First human-monkey chimera (A: I talked about this years ago.) raises concern among scientists theguardian.com / 3 Aug 2019

(A: Why not concern about the public? So, they've actually done it, naturally. I'm sure it's not the first time either. So anyway, they've…)

…produced monkey embryos containing human cells.

A chimera (A: …by definition, it says…) is an organism whose cells come from two or more "individuals".

(A: It was done at the Salk Institute, people who worked at the Salk Institute in the States…)

…from the Salk Institute in the US have produced monkey-human chimeras. The research was conducted in China "to avoid legal issues", according to the report.

(A: So, they took their research over to China because it would avoid legal issues back in the States. But it was Izpisúa Belmonte from the Salk Institute in the US are the ones who did this particular thing.)

You know where it's all going, 'eh. And they will make certain types of efficient workers for different functions and so on. We probably won't even blink at all when that all happens because we'll be so conditioned into it, the inevitability of it.

This whole thing about Mr. Epstein, Jeffrey Epstein. I personally am pretty certain, from everything I've read, that definitely it's, to me it's an intelligence operation. Obviously. And I think even the first investigations they had on him years ago, they've admitted that, the guy who was put in charge of it, it was Acosta, was told to kind of back off to an extent because this guy belongs to intelligence, that came out. And of course, they're not saying which intelligence agency, and it would probably be more than one. I'm sure the US will use it as well. Because you don't do such incredible honey trap systems without exploiting it to the best you can. To get all important people who help in affairs of the day, over the population, you gotta get them all, as many in as possible and get the blackmailable stuff on them. And everybody involved in these things, who actually succumbs to it and goes along into the honey trap, it's understood, they're not stupid, that they now owe a favor, a big favor to the person who set it up for them. And they also know that they are blackmailable, obviously.

It's set different countries scampering for excuses on what to tell the public. Well, right off the bat out come, oh well you see he's just an oddball character. So, take it down to, instead bring it to, instead of it being a certain country, any country's intelligence agency, let's take it down to him being an oddball screwy character, right, that just wanted to repopulate the world with his own seed. That's how to get it off track. But the fact is, no, this was a big operation, heavily used, to influence people in all parties in the States and in Britain, other countries too. And there's royalty involved as you know as well. And that's a big powerful organization. So, they can't let that go to waste and the information will not be released to the public of it all. No way at all will they do that. But they'll use it.

I think what's… And I tell you, it's so well-timed. I mentioned about it years ago when the different, all the countries in the West had their censorship departments for culture, used to have that for television programming and movies and stuff, they met years ago talking about they had won the battle. Because these organizations were not there to safeguard the public. The public thought they were. They were there to see if they were ready to push the envelope even further. And they discussed what the steps would be for the next step. They did mention about intergenerational sex would be the next step that they would promote on television and put into movies and drama series, etc. And I'm certain that this is going to give, if it gets into any court systems, you're going to hear the top behaviorists and psychologists brought out to explain to the public, well you know, it's changed now, every, there's no child is ignorant of sex reality anymore from the age of five on. I guarantee you this is going to come out. And they'll say, yeah, and some children are precocious, and some are even sexually involved very early, at 11 and 12, they'll get these oddball cases, but there are, they will find them. Then they'll come up with many other ones too about the children, the information they've gleaned from the children social habits and social networks where they boast about this kind of thing. Then they'll say, well see, how can you possibly say that this man, he wasn't jumping out of the car grabbing them and raping them. See, it was a contract, financial, and these children knew what they were doing. That's what's going to come out of this.

And out of it will come the reduction of the age of limit for sexual contact for children. And they might even introduce legislation to make it okay. I'm not kidding you. Because they talked about this many years ago, I've followed this stuff for years and years and years. It's part of the cultural, the real cultural warfare on society where they mentioned that eventually there would be no restrictions between intergenerational sexual contact. You wait and see. You just wait and see. And they'll give you sides. And people will jump in. Well yeah, they knew what they were doing… And, no, no, no, they couldn't at that age, who could... And they'll get the public arguing amongst themselves, 'eh. It's just too easy, isn't it? Too easy.

And here's a sad thing. You see, there's a term they use, and it was used by the Communists, of course the West used as well, when you are enamored by an enemies country, by the system that they had, you might have liked parts of it, you were called 'contaminated'. Because now you start liking it, this, oh well, that's not too bad, that's a good culture, d-d-d. And so, they might lose you. And it's so bad, in fact, that Stalin killed many, many, many Russians, and imprisoned them in the Gulag's when they were released at the end of World War II, because they had been involved, now had been in contact, outside the communist Soviet bloc countries, they had met other people, as prisoners, but even that could be enough to contaminate them, and so they couldn't be trusted.

The parents today starting with, say, the parents from even the 1960s, and then they had children. So they're 20 years old, or in their 20s, they'd have children. Then those children would grow up and they would be in their 20s in the 1980s, all way down to the present time. Step by step by step by step you could now have your great-grandmother sitting with your granny, and your mother, and the children, all sitting, all in a row, and the dad's there too if you can find him. They could be watching 50 Shades of Gray!, or whatever else they're watching today, with the S&M and beastiality, or pornography. How can you get through to people what's happening when they watch stuff like this for entertainment? And that will come out too during these trials. Do you understand what I'm saying?

I'm not standing up for this. I'm telling you how it's supposed to go. We've been in a war for an awful long time, the complete destruction of Western civilization and the family unit. And it hasn't stopped. But now you can't get parents today, because they're, again, we've all had our dose of contamination, no one's escaped it. And the parents will, oh well, you know. And the public, after the debates go on television, get played on television, by faces that they like, you know, talk show people on television, and they'll say, oh well, you know, maybe they're right, you know, 'eh, maybe… what's wrong with lowering the age, you know. They will. I guarantee you.

When you can get folk to put holes through their faces to hang objects on them, and to tattoo themselves, through social media, through entertainment, through the massive algorithms and brainwashing they get, thinking they're going to be individualistic, well, you can't be individualistic when you've got a whole bunch of folk to compete with doing the same stuff, then there's nothing that they can't do with you. I hope you understand that.

Now, back to Epstein too. There's two articles, awfully important as well.

Jeffrey Epstein's Sick Story Played Out for Years in Plain Sight - thedailybeast.com / 9 July 2019

Victoria's Secret Has More than a Jeffrey Epstein Problem - bloomberg.com / 29 July 2019

Because it ties in with what happened recently where Boris Johnson, just magically, was basically put in there as the Prime Minister to take over from May. He appointed his cabinet, and I had a laugh when he appointed them. Because people really, they're clutching at straws hoping to regain some past something of a whole culture and society. Even the, I'm talking the working classes too. That's all gone, all the industry is gone, there's nothing to hold on to. But they want it, so anybody promising them some kind of vague promise…

I feel we're in, we're like the American Indians after all the Indian wars as they called them against the Indians. They came up with the ghost dance in the late 1800s, where you put a big pole in the ground and basically ropes coming from it with hooks on the ends. They would put these hooks on themselves and swirl around in the sun without eating and all that, so that the heat and starvation and so on, and the suffering, and trying to get visions, trying to get visions of hope, a religious experience, of hope. Some had put the word out that if they kept doing it, if enough of them did all this… You talk about desperation, this is suffering, this is the extreme of suffering, this is what it drives you to. When you see your, everything you knew that was yours and your ancestors, right up to your recent ancestors, and your parents, all they knew was getting wiped out, destroyed. They hoped that even the ghosts, even the ghosts… Like the idea that you saw in Lord of the Rings idea with the shades or whatever they called them, but the ghosts of all the old warriors going down through the ages would come back, and drive the white man off the land, to regain the lifestyle they used to have… of hunting.

A simple lifestyle but they all had work to do, the guys would hunt and so on, and the women. And no, they weren't all peaceful. These Indians fought each other like all tribes do. But they all had, what they seemed to have functioned. It was taken away; then you become self-destructive. And they certainly were not getting, before they were given booze/alcohol, they weren't drinking themselves to death. They didn't have glue to sniff themselves to death. They didn't get drugs flooded into them to kill themselves off. That's the techniques that have been used on what's left of the Western world, folks. The articles on drug abuse is not lessening, it's getting worse and worse and worse and worse.

Revealed: Britain's top private schools are 'awash with Class A drugs', according to society magazine - dailymail.co.uk / 31 July 2019

But getting back to Britain here. The folk in Britain are hoping this group will pull them out of something, these appointees. But Priti Patel, that was put over as… [Alan chuckles.] She's the head of the Home Office. Woah. That's the job I think that Teresa May had before. And you've got MI-5 and MI-6 under there and all that kind of stuff. Pretty Patel, have we all forgotten of her secret meetings? The Guardian did the articles on them in Britain. I'll put links up for those who care.

Priti Patel fallout erodes public trust and diminishes UK's stature, say critics - theguardian.com / 8 Nov 2017

But she, in her spare, she was given… Her job was to give British aid out, meaning our taxpayer money, [Alan chuckles.] people's taxpayer money, dish it out across the world to the poor folks so they could eat and so on and have education. But she was, in her own time, without her, under the law they're supposed to have their cabinet around them wherever they go to meet foreign dignitaries. Well she thought, well, she'll go over own way and she was going over to Israel, about 12 or 13, about 14 times, and didn't announce to her department, supposedly, this is what we are told. They were talking about possibly giving aid to Israel, right. Well now she supposedly is, in an article here, reported a visit to an Israeli field hospital…

What did Israel hope to gain from Priti Patel's secret meetings?
theguardian.com / 8 Nov 2017

…including a reported visit to an Israeli field hospital in the occupied Golan Heights, (A: And here's the key to it…) which could have taken place only with both Israeli military and political clearance.

If you remember back then Israel had set up hospitals, and they say here in these articles, 'to treat Syrian fighters'. Well, what it was, it was the ISIS groups that were, it was the mercenaries that were trying to kick Assad out. Because I've got other articles here at the time when it was all happening, and the wounded were getting taken back, and Israel was treating them, to send them back to fight again, you see, to try to overthrow Syria. Which tells you, and yes, okay, Priti Patel amongst many others were, she was the head of the British conservative party, Friends of Israel Association, sure. But most of them are, in all parties. But that tells me that she's intelligence. Now, you'll all debate which intelligence service that is. But the fact is, when she was, wasn't even kicked out of governmental positions, she was simply put in a different position out of the limelight. But here she is being basically given the top job in Britain, 'eh. That tells you that she was an operative back then.

Because Britain was, this is how you get around and get money to do an operation that you want. Because Britain and the US, we had the articles spelled out in great detail, no conspiracy involved, at the time, from the same newspapers across the world of what was happening there, and that we were funding these fighters, these ISIS, and ISS and ISIL and all the rest of the names that they gave it, the same thing, and giving them weaponry, weapons too. So we wanted… I hate this word, we. This whole thing of saying you're from this country or that country, you need to forget that because I don't know anybody in Britain that voted for war. They weren't given a vote in the first place, or even asked their opinion, on any of these wars. We've got to get out of this habit of blaming nations.

London, as always, wanted Syria to be under new regime as they call it, and of course, they're funding it. I can remember reading Spy Catchers by Peter Wright, he said, to get money at one point MI5 had a lot of fake organizations down that they were going to get money from. So they had different organizations that were labeled, some of them were labeled as lesbian, NGOs, that didn't exist, and that money that was put for these NGOs was actually coming into MI-5's scoffers for different projects. This is the kind of way they do it.

So Patel obviously was over there and that's why she wasn't really punished for it at all. She's still working for probably MI-6, I would say. At least. And maybe another country too, who knows. Maybe a few. Personally, I think, that all the top organizations are all one. That's my opinion. You couldn't keep folk out of them, you couldn't stop infiltrators. So, they have to be one. So anyway, I thought I'd just toss that in there too for those who want to have a look at it. And there's no time really for anything else. I've got stacks of articles, but time is running out again. As I say, I can't really go over too much of the time limit.

Now remember, you can help me tick along and keep going by donating @.com website. You'll find out how to send money. You can also see all the other sites I have listed on the .com site, which are mine, these are my official sites, anything outside of that is not mine. So remember, order your books and discs @.com or any of the sites listed on this particular site.

So, for myself Alan want from Ontario Canada, where I'm getting sprayed by glyphosate supposedly [Alan chuckles.]

in the forest, it’s good night and may your God or gods go with you.

What did Israel hope to gain from Priti Patel's secret meetings?
theguardian.com / 8 Nov 2017

Aug. 11, 2019 (#1733)

Hi folks I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on August 11, 2019. When 9/11 happened, I remember telling people on a live radio show at the time, that they should keep a hold of their sanity, it'd be the hardest thing to do is keeping a hold of your sanity. Because I knew there was a massive agenda to be unleashed for the 21st century, and academia in the 20th century, they always said the 21st century was the century of change or transitions as they say. And you're living through them all the time. I also said that the countries that fomented the world agenda for world governments, or world unification, organizations which are published of course, the Royal Institute of International Affairs and Council on Foreign Relations and the creation through the Milner group of the League of Nations, then the United Nations, and the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank, the Bank for International Settlements, all these private institutions that you take for granted were all set up by the same institution.

And it was to dominate the world and even use world wars to make it all happen, to make folk give up sovereignty and also to bring a whole collection of banks up to incredible financial standards, or wealth, because of the wars; they were lending to every nation of course in World War I and II. So, money, power of course is the new substitute for war. Of course it is. And those who control money or even who fixed the rate of its purchasing power for the day or the week or the year, are in control of everything. It's quite a powerful institution indeed.

However, most folk don't understand it. They think we're just drifting down through time and that the talking heads - and we do have authorized talking heads, we've always had authorized talking heads - are there to give you what you think is the right information. Brzezinski said, you also find… Well, he did say, and I'll repeat it again ad nauseum. But Brzezinski in his book in the 1970s Between Two Ages, in reality the whole future was spelled out pretty well in that book. Brzezinski, who was way up there in the CFR, the head at one point, and Trilateral Commission naturally too, never mind being an advisor to the most powerful country in the world for a long time, the United States of America, and for their various military wings, etc., he said that people really expected the media, the private media, to give them their advice on everything, and if anything that was important for them to know, personally, for your own survival, whatever it happened to be, economic, whatever it happened to be, he said the people will look towards the media to inform them. And that was a powerful, powerful tool obviously.

He wasn't the only person to say that. He was one of the last people to say that. [Alan chuckles.] Because it's been said so many times in well over 150, 200 years in fact. But that's the case, most folk literally think the media is somehow more honest than people they know, or than they themselves are. An odd thing, really. They didn't always believe that. Because people at one time who lived through, especially the people who lived and fought through World War II and survived after it and came back to their countries, they were well aware that there were other forces ruling them and they understood that the media moguls literally were running the opinions of everybody. Because they give you your opinions, really.

In Britain especially it was amazing because it was just, it was so polarized, the papers, managed and often owned by the same groups, mind you. They would give you your left-wing papers and that was generally something with the red star on it or something like that, and they would give you the ones on the right, so you'd have 'the stars' and 'the suns' and all the rest of this kind of stuff that even goes on today. Obvious what it's all about. So, the workers get the star and the other ones get the sun symbol, that kind of thing. That's how it works. That's an example I'm giving you.

But at least back when I was small, I could hear grown-ups talking, and ordinary guys too, who could reel off the moguls who owned each paper, and what their politics were, who they hobnob with, and what they really, what they were there to do basically in their newspapers. So, people had an idea then. But since then they've gone to an awful length to dumb us down so much, until folk don't question things at all… it was in the newspaper, it must be true. As they said in Wag The Dog the movie, if it's in the movies well it must be true, or on television it must be true. And that's how people think. And Brzezinski said that, he said that shortly the public will expect the media to do their thinking for them. Well, that's already happened. I think it already happened when he said it, to be honest with you. But now definitely the people don't question things at all pretty well.

He said, they'll expect, like an appendage to their brain, that the media will guide them, tell them what to do and so on. Well, now it's even worse than that because you have this massive Internet too doing the same kind of thing. And folk don't quite clue in. I did shows many years ago about this very problem, of how we get our information and how even in the basic, the basic five minute summary after some Prime Minister or president or combination of politicians talk you'll get always two people, at least, at least two people who would then decipher what you just heard and give you the opinion you're supposed to have from it. Well, you heard it yourself, can't you make your own mind up? Do you really need two people to tell you what opinion to come to?

That's how they see the people, so dumbed down that they've got to… You see, everything you see is to give you opinions, not to give you choices and let you make your own mind up. And most of it's done by simply omission. You either have all the facts there or only partial facts. Partial facts is, you can easily lead people into the belief of a conclusion judging from partial facts. But if you give them the whole story, with all the facts that you know of, then they might have a more honest and realistic assessment of what's going on and come to their own conclusions. But they don't want that. You see, we are in the most controlled society that's ever existed.

And getting back even to Adam Curtis, he talked about this in some of his documentaries on how we are given our opinions. He even gives one from the 1960s when he shows you the 1960s and how the public were given a kind of nicey-nicey, post-World War II era, a kind of old-fashioned idea of how you're supposed to be, and how the families were supposed to be, and how the police really were. They had Dixon of Dock Green in Britain for instance, your friendly policeman shows. They're all just dramas, fictional dramas to give a false impression, as Jacques Ellul would say, because all dramas, fictional dramas and movies on police are basically propagandistic, that's how they're done, to give you a false idea. Police in reality will charge you with anything. Even if they're not looking for you, if they come knock on your door and see something they can get, they'll do it. That's just how it is. But according to the old Dixon of Dock Green, oh, maybe at one time they did in fact help the occasional person get out of trouble, young guys and stuff like that, rather than have them go to court they would give them warnings and advice and that kind of thing. But that's all gone now.

We live in a very, very formulistic system and we're all guided along the same paths. And don't forget too, in the 1950s, 60s and 70s, and the 80s, especially in the US you had these very, eventually [Alan chuckles.] kind of naturally aged anchor people on newscasts, that the people grew up with. And they're paid massive, like superstar salaries, for reading off the news, that had been written by other people naturally. But they could… if you grew up with them, they were like your father, and that's why they kept them on so long because it was easier to… Well they must, they're telling us, I grew up with that guy, he's telling me the truth, you see. Why would he lie to you, you know?

Then you find that so many of them in the States actually belonged to The World Federalist Association, and got awards for it. And their whole idea was the elimination of nations, for those who never clued in even back then, and bringing in a world type of government system. And you don't necessarily need a parliament building to have that. You can still have the remains of, which would become regionalized or localized governments that used to be your federal governments, just like the EU, participating in this big amalgamation basically. That's how it's done.

So here you are in the 21st century, the century of transition, or changes, and we're going through all kinds of it now. And you see the countries, as I say, that set up and funded across the world all the different aid programs, paid the debts off of a lot of countries. You constantly give out money to these nations, your nations do give out massive, massive loans, that they know they can't get paid back, so the guarantors, or the taxpayers back home in your own countries pay it. So, you're used and used and used. But the idea is they constantly bring countries up and so on to a higher standard of living, is to eventually do away, eliminate the borders. And that's all part of the deal, well documented as well. And if you've noticed, all the nations are pretty well doing this from the top down, regardless of what they call the party supposedly in power at the time, and without any supposed declaration to the public that they've eradicated the borders or disassembled them.

That's the interesting part to me is how it's obvious, it's very obvious it's from the top down. And of course, they've all signed on to agreements with the United Nations to do with mass migration, etc., but it doesn't bother telling the domestic people at home. And that's interesting to me because if anyone really believes that you have a democracy, I wish you… I’ve got a lot of good fantasies to sell you, really, from children’s stories I heard a long, long time ago. The system we are in today really is not, it’s not democratic. It used this idea of democracy as a battering ram. Because people want rights, right? And so, you get behind the parties that are always in, for over many, many years, that demand that you have rights for you. And yet you’re seeing a different system being pushed today under this term democracy. And it’s the elimination of nation-states as you know them. That was all part of it.

I said that again way back in the 90s on shows, that eventually the big driving powers, Britain was gone after World War II. World War I really finished it, the debt that was incurred, then World War II was the final nail in the coffin. But they’d pass the baton on, as they say in the CFR or Royal Institute of International Affairs, onto the United States to take over. A massive tax base, you see, and great economy, at the time, to take over. So, they had plenty of work for the people, so they can tax them and use that money as a battering ram, again, across the rest of the world. But eventually the US was to merge into the system, as I said, it would submerge into it in fact, into the system it had created. That’s what you’re seeing today if you haven’t figured it out yet.

This isn’t speculation either. I can back it all up with all different books and so on put out by the big think tanks in the world, and that the globalists use. Globalist is a term which we’re supposed to not use anymore because they keep changing it. As soon as you start using the terms they give you [Alan chuckles.] then they hit you with some nasty remark. But the fact is, globalization was a term for the elimination of the nation-states. At one time it used to use communism. And they use the communist tactics. That’s what the Reese Commission was about in the 1950s, the inquiry into the big tax-free foundations that fund and trained thousands of nongovernmental organizations as big pressure groups and lobbying groups across the world, which bypass any ideas of democracy of course. If you’re paying folk to demand it, then so much for democracy, the person with the biggest money or the most money can get what they want, naturally, in this so-called democracy, right.

But big, big think tanks were all connected, and some of them even like the Ford Foundation I think was eventually taken over by the Rockefeller Foundation, staff, they took it over and run both of them. Then you had the Carnegie and a whole bunch of them, these mysterious foundations from the past. And don’t forget that Carnegie himself, this little fella who supposedly, according to mythology, was born in utter poverty in Scotland, etc. And who was an intergenerational revolutionary by the way, his family were anyway. Interesting, you can tie that in with Payne and others too. Again, this conspiracy stuff. But the fact is, it’s true [Alan laughing.] and they publish it in the actual biographies of the guy. It’s quite interesting that he comes over to the States, he’s in all the proper organizations and clubs, if you know what I mean, he just shoots to the top with all the robber barons. And from the very beginning they had a consolidation, a consortium you might say, of all the big mines and steel mills and everything that was going to be made for the future, they ran it all.

Then when you get into the Rockefellers, then Rockefeller, old man Rockefeller said himself that competition is a sin. And he meant it. He wasn’t simply being facetious or a snob. He was telling you what they believe in. They don’t believe in giving you competition. They believe that all the world’s resources should be in the hands of the people most apt to use it wisely. Which is themselves. They’re a private club. Very private indeed. And under the guise of using democracy across the world, they ended up having a good part of the Third World all working for them for nothing, even to the present time by the way, a lot of them, and then they would submerge the United States and other countries into the very system of a globalist society which they created. That’s all.

So you’re living through the final parts of this stage of it, today, this is the chapter for it, for the century. That’s why we’re seeing such incredible hatred, incredible hatred put out from the very, very top. I’ve never heard so much hatred coming from politicians in my life, against people who’ve got nothing to do with politics at all. But literally, I mean, some of the politicians who are running in the United States, who’ve gone through the Universities, have been taught to hate people, and even the people who’ve got nothing to do with rulership at all. It’s a terrifying thing. These are politicians running for government. It’s not what you would call minorities, although really, technically, they are aiming it at minority. It’s a new thing to see even the media using this terminology. Which doesn’t bode well for the future at all. But it’s been authorized from the very, very top, this mysterious body you might call it at the top that mandates who the next target is going to be, or who’s to be taken down, and who is to be lifted up, etc. etc. etc.

We are all used. We are all used along the way. Every group out there is used along the way. But most folk never catch on. They still tune into the same places every day for the same indoctrination of what your viewpoints should be on certain things. It's just astonishing to see them doing it over and over and over again. But again, people are creatures of habit, and that's an awfully important thing. Because even when you're told by the big systems that run the Internet for instance, of censorship as an example, or they're spying on you through the different programs that you use, and who are the worst spies and they'll tell you that too, folk who have been, and I said that years ago… [Alan chuckles.]

They understood, with all the real sampling in real-time they did over many years, they knew if they could get the folk hooked on it all first, the Internet, completely, that once you start to take away their rights and freedoms, after years of it all, the folk would stay and still use it. You see, get you hooked first, then gradually take away your rights, etc. And they were quite right about that. They had MIT involved in studies and all other universities doing their little bits and parts here and there, across the world, and sharing the data, and they're still doing it all of course, in real-time, as they dissect everyone and give everyone a profile, which they update every day in real time as you're updating your data about yourself if you're using all their programs. So, in other words, they know you'll keep doing it.

And it's astonishing, for many years, when I mentioned it to certain people, privately, you know, people might not really know by just casual conversation, or even in private inquiries into them, what do you think of this one, what do you think of that one? And they don't mind, they'll tell you, well, I don't mind, they know everything about me anyway. That's the standard answer. Well, they know everything about me anyway so what's wrong using all of it? That's their answer. That's the defeatist attitude, you see. That's what it's all about. And that's what they hope you'll all do, you see.

The sad thing is, it's always the same percentage of people who will all go for it. Which is the majority of them, they'll always go along with it. If you give them a free thing or whatever, more so. It's that easy. As I've said before, every tyrant in the past could only imagine a tiny fraction of power if they had enough spies to mingle amongst the populations and keep… But here you have everybody putting their daily data up there, and it's automatically put in by algorithms into their personal profiles for the authorities and for everybody else across the planet in the big global intelligence system to manage and see, you see.

I said years and years ago that everybody must be predictable in this system, for those who own you, who will always appear to be as champions for you. But they own you, at the top, the very, very top. To feel safe, they don't feel safe enough unless they know everything about you, and everything to be managed about you. And here you have a whole world's population, the ones who can afford it, putting it all up, with all there is there and they signed everything, they've agreed to this and agreed to that in all the different apps etc., they've given it all away for a little free this or a little free that. What tyrants in history could imagine… they wouldn't… they shouldn't have bothered with all the wars they had, just offer them free this and free that and you could've taken over entire nations without even using armies. That's what's happened.

Astonishing really, 'eh? Because freedom is such an important thing to a free society. You can't be a free society, 'eh, you can't, when you've given all your rights away, folks. Again, I'm not trying to convert anyone because most folk don't care. They're not… They don't care. And they pretty well understood it from all their behavioral studies and so on long before they gave you the Internet, they talked about giving you this system of communication before they actually gave it to you. They said that most folk will give away their rights and so on just to get the use of it. And they were right, when all that came to pass, they were quite right on the statistics that they had put out as a projection how many folk would just automatically adapt to it and who wouldn't care less.

Because we're brought up to trust. We are. We have a natural inclination to trust those in authority. That's the sad part of it too. Because we've been given authority figures for so, such a long time, and that's why your news goes to such great extent to try and capture attention and they all have these slogans, most trusted man in whatever country it is, or woman in whatever country it is, or the most trusted network. Really, they tell you they're the most. Who says so? Do they ever show you a survey? The only arbiter of trust and belief should be the person who receives the information. [Alan chuckles.] And if you get it all from one place then, I feel sorry for you.

At the moment as I say, we're going through the big change in society where, the old system is to be further destroyed. And that's what it is, the old system. Getting back to the CFR, which is the American branch of the Royal Institute of International Affairs, a private organization, you see. Carol Quigley said it in the book Tragedy and Hope, he said that their right in some respects, and there has been for many years now an organization that behaves in the way that people believe that, I'm ad-libbing, but the way that communists act, and he says the reason for it being is that much of our goals are the same. Well, when you figure this out and you realize all the international banking system are on board with it, they're members at the top, of the Bank for International Settlements, and Quigley mentioned that too, and the IMF and the World Bank, etc. Then you realize that they got everybody on board, that really matters. And running the country, they have members all through governments that you elect. And he said it too, that every president in the United States for, and this is in the 1960s he wrote that book, for about 60 or 80 years every president in the United States had been a member. It doesn't matter of the parties.

So, the same agenda always continues. And we've seen it. We've seen it. We've seen it. Right now we're going through the radical phase of it. Radical change. Again, just compare it to the Communist Manifesto and the planks of communism where they had the elimination of,the nation-state eventually would wither away, they said. And people say, why would it just wither away? You know, just the weather, was it a wind that came in? No, no, no. It'd wither away when they'd basically overruled, or just like the CFR said about the United States Constitution and Bill of Rights, where one of their top writers at one time years ago said, rather than hit the Constitution and the Bill of Rights head on, he says, we've just got to do a run around it, like a superstructure, build it over and around it, etc., just ignore it. And that's what has been done.

Well, you're seeing it happening with the world now. Completely. All the countries. And they haven't given you anything new to replace it by. Which means, if your basic system that you're supposed to run by as a citizen in any country, if your rights, whatever it is, a charter of rights, Bill of Rights, a Constitution of some kind, if it's all torn up, or being ignored, then what system is ruling over you? It is therefore lawless, isn't it? If the old, [Alan chuckles.] the old myth again, that the people ran the country, if that was the case, then whatever really is running the country, on your behalf, is lawless, it isn't yours at all. You have to accept that. And that wouldn't bode well either, would it?

But it'd have to be done, and of course, in the US, at least they had it written down what should be done if that was the case, if you had a lawless government. But folk don't recognize it as that. It has the pretense and formalities of the same thing, they can wrap themselves in the flag and say traditional quotes and so on and repeat them to the people. And you're trained to simply, oh, okay they're, it's like they're one of us or something, you know. That's how simple it really is.

But we're going through again a massive change, a massive change. There's hardly a thing that happens today on any scale at all that isn't either resulting from the massive changes or even planned. Because for everything that happens in a negative fashion, it has a positive effect on the old agendas of how do you take rights away from the people. Quite fascinating to see it done in the way that it's being done.

I always think of the old movies, The Manchurian Candidate, they did different versions of them. I like them all actually. But the idea was quite simple. You find that many others touched on that kind of technique, of altering behavior by drugs, hypnopedia, even electroshock therapy, de-patterning the brain as they tried with MK Ultra, things like that. And you have to understand, we tend, most folk tend to think in a very singularly objective way, so if they're looking for something, you can mention terms to them like de-patterning the brain, you know, they immediately jump to the MK Ultra idea and Cameron's techniques. And he was only one of many in a group at the time across the US and Canada, and elsewhere by the way, we're doing the same things, for the same group. But most folk never really think beyond what they know about it.

You've got to understand that there are many ways to depattern the brain. It's the object, you see, if the object is depatterning, the technique of getting there, there's many different techniques of getting there. Drugs is the easiest way. And the drugs today are far more effective in targeting specific parts of the brain than the old LSD, for instance. And now they're trying to use LSD again now as a therapeutic technique. They never give up, do they? Yup. But again, that's when money comes into it. But regardless, we've got to always remember that the drugs today, and these drugs are everywhere. It doesn't matter what remote part of the country you live in, you could probably order them, or go into the nearest town and get them there on a street corner, very quickly, anytime night or day.

And so many of these drugs are definitely, definitely created abroad, outside the country. Now, if the systems of police and law enforcement wanted, really wanted, or have been given the backing to do so, they could nip a lot of the stuff in the bud. But I've never seen a time, looking at the articles in the newspapers, where it isn't just a suitcase or briefcase of cocaine anymore, or bag of it that's getting caught coming across. You're finding tons and tons in singular hauls getting caught going into Australia and other countries too. It's such a massive industry. The whole of Latin America is pretty well living off it. And then you have the old triangle, the old Golden Triangle for the opium agenda being turned into heroin. Then they mix in different combinations of course with it, altogether in fact. And then you have the synthetic drugs flooding into the country too. This is by design.

It's by design. Understand, in a war scenario there are many ways to take down a nation. There is economic. There's psychological. The whole purpose of psychological warfare is to demoralize an enemy so much that they've given up already. They almost got that way in the 60s and 70s in Britain. Because Britain was under such heavy taxation from World War II, and World War I really, but World War II. And no jobs. And they didn't tell the public they'd signed agreements to join, literally submerge into this European Union. They didn't tell the public at all, for many, many years, until the late 90s, that they'd actually set up a secret organization under the Council on Foreign Relations, again, or Royal Institute of International Affairs, who drafted it all up for the countries to sign. And they drafted up the NAFTA ones for Canada to sign, you know, the CFR. And they admitted it by the way, after the fact.

But at the time the people in Britain didn't know what was happening. They had, oh, this Cold War going… and they get all this money from your taxes and to pay off debt, and build more missiles and submarines and all this kind of stuff. They've always got have a reason, you see, for keeping you in poverty. And they did it, until as I say, Britain overtook Sweden as the capital for suicides. So, there's psychological warfare, that's what you get when you do that. You can depress the country financially, for instance, knowing it's going to cause hopelessness. And those who are hopeless will either take drugs, they'll even do suicide or overdoses and death, or just basic suicide in itself. If you can't see a future… Margaret Thatcher said that on a nationwide broadcast at one time. She said, there's a generation who's growing up now, a generation who's growing up now who will never see work in their lifetime, get used to it. And she did away with the old pub closing hours until they're open pretty well all day and way into the night. It's better for them to spend their unemployment and welfare money, because they had massive unemployment, for young folk that is, to have them in the pubs getting drunk than have them on the streets and marching and demonstrating and fighting. So, you're always getting managed. And they understood too there were other forces encouraging this as well.

So there's many ways to get the changes that you want. For the last crash, the United States, just before, leading up to the crash in 2008, the planned crash of course, everybody at the top understood it and didn't suffer at all. The public got hammered naturally. And then because you're all borrowing this fake money, which, I mean, it really is backed by nothing. But the magicians in the US Federal Reserve had the rights supposedly given to them to be like a banker to the world, including Canada, and they bailed out banks outside the States under 'special drawing rights', they called it. They bailed out ones in Canada too and I did the talks on it at the time, even though Canada denied it at first. Then I got the ones from parliament where they agreed and signed it, and all the information came out. And sure enough, we'd all been bailed out by the US Federal Reserve basically.

They also loaned across the world, for those who don't know this inside the US. But inside that magic house they just wave wands basically and add little zeros to the computer screens. Because there's nothing transferred anymore, it's not backed by anything. What a secret society that must be, 'eh? But as I say, we're due for another one and that's what you're seeing now. It's warfare techniques to get you used to the idea. It gets you used to incredible change. Then they've trained, since 2008, and since they put on the quantitative easing as they call it, which is just inflation, but also basically 'neutral or negative', or just neutral interest rates at the banks, everyone's been trained in those few years to the present, right, it's so easy to do it, isn't it, to expect no interest returns if you have any money in the bank.

D'you realize that's millions and millions, that your whole population pretty well, except for the big boys and gals because the ones at the top, they have special, special investments and so on. You don't get anywhere near that with your paltry little savings. But everyone's accepted it. They haven't closed the banks. Because as they go cashless you have to transfer every money through banks and so on, you see. So, you still need the banks. You see how they've made, you need them, even though they don't really serve you a function anymore, otherwise you don't have the function of getting interest from them, etc.

Everything is training you and training you and training you for this, the new system that's coming in. And step-by-step you've been trained, you've been trained not to expect interest from anything. You still accept the fact your banks take that little bit of money you put in there and they're investing it, overnight across the world and making a fortune in interest off it from other countries, at massive interest rates too. But you yourself get nothing at all. And you accept this somehow as normal. Because no one's going to come out and tell you anything different. No one in authority, that is, is going to come out and tell you anything different, you see. Because you expect someone in authority to go through the media and tell you, and be an appendage to your brain, like Brzezinski said, and do your reasoning for you.

It's quite a system. So, despondency, like Huxley said, he said you know, with drugs, and Soma drugs… And you're getting all kinds of drugs legalized now, not just the marijuana. Some of the leaders have said, a couple of years ago, they'd like to legalize all the drugs. Well, that is coming, folks. And with it also comes the mayhem, because drugs destroys the brain. And you'll see more and more chaos, which gives them a right then to take more and more rights away from the public, in all sorts of ways. And again, most folk again, the same people who automatically will tell you, well I know they do this, and they do that to us, but well they know all about me anyway… Well these are the same people who go along with every new law that comes along until you know… that's just the way it is, the majority always go along with it.

It's the same thing with, I think it was John Pilger who is one of the people who did an interview a long time ago, many years ago, with I think it was Leni Riefenstahl who did the big amazing movie for its day on the Nazi party for propaganda purposes, with all the special effects of that era. It was quite amazing really. But he asked her, he said to her, well what about the middle and upper classes, didn't they see the warnings of a totalitarian regime coming down, etc., etc.? And she said, well no, not really. No one asked any questions. We just kind of floated through it and into it. Well you see, that's how it always is. Isn't it? You just float through it because…. Well, we're all floating through it together, so it must be normal. [Alan chuckles.]

And you end up in a different system, that has all the signs coming down of a horror, that's how I see it, as a horror. Because when they radicalize different sects of society to seek out some kind of, what they perceive injustice or revenge on another segment of society, only horror can come out of this. But that's being preached, it's even getting promoted from the lips of politicians who are running for office in the States. That's not healthy at all. And so sure enough, we'll float through it and people won't object enough, and it will probably happen. Because the future has been planned.

I won't go into it because I've given so much out over many, many years, and folk have written books on this stuff I've given out. But I don't get much of a reward myself, even to just tick along here. So I must remember to ask you to buy the books and discs, at least donate to me @.com. Always list all my official sites on that page in case any of them go down, who knows. So, list them all. And remember, too, here's another thing, you should always use different browsers. Not just use them but have an access ready to go for different search engines. Because it's just astonishing the blocking and the wipe outs of searches that you do now for different people. It will get worse and worse, so there's many search engines out there that can bypass, at least find who you're looking for. Always remember that too.

Buy the books and discs and please donate to me and help me tick along. Because I do not live high on the hog. I've got a lot to do to this ole dump of a house or just to fix it up for this winter. And I probably won't manage it either. And the winters are horrific here. There's some damage outside around the house, and that's just the way it is. I live a very simple lifestyle. Very simple. Because this isn't just a job to me, and it's not just a vocation. It's a necessity. That's the only reason I came out in the 90s was to start putting this stuff out. And I did a lot of damage at the time, that the mainstream, that the supposed alternate talkers that you were given at the time just stuck on the same old things and I told them the in-depth stuff. Now they all prattle the same stuff, but they need someone to do it for them, to make them do in the first place, because otherwise they would never go into the truth of it all. I made them shift their focus and start telling way more to the general public.

But from it naturally you get an incredible backlash from the official alternative, you might say, who you'd upset the plans. I always say, if you see [Alan chuckles.] something you don't like on any particular group, of who really supports them, and who they will not criticize, then you should make your own mind up about them for goodness sake, people. Hm. Because times are changing all right and changing awfully fast.

Now, I want to rattle through a few things tonight. I won't even get into the shootings they've had in the States, there've been a stack of them of course already. Not just the usual shootings. There's been a lot more shootings across the United States, because there always are. But these particular ones with different people just losing their top altogether are almost copycats.

Horrific video shows knife-wielding assailant violently stab woman, 54, in insurance agency during 'random' rampage in California that killed four people as police say suspect is a 'violent' gang member who had been in prison 14 times and 'should never have been let out' - dailymail.co.uk / 8 Aug 2019

We saw a lot of that actually starting with supposed terrorist incidences of people driving cars initially inside the States and other countries and killing folk on the sidewalks. And you'd be amazed at how that affects a lot of people. You add drugs to the mix today and you've got real big problems. Real big problems. And I think it will get worse, myself. But really, when I look at what's happening, I mean I thought even in Mexico, most countries put signs up, or road signs, like, be careful of bends, you know, tight bends in the road and things like that. Or you know, be careful, you're approaching a bridge or something. The Mexicans put up bodies. I guess it's a cheap way of doing it.

Mexico gang leaves 19 bodies, some hanging from bridge, as a warning - smh.com.au / 9 Aug 2019

Folk don't realize what's happening, what's happened throughout Latin America over many years now. And there's awfully good books out there on the gangs that run pretty well most of Latin America. In fact, a lot of the gangs in the different areas, who run cities and towns, act as governments. And they do get roads paved, they do put sewers in, when the government wouldn't, and stuff like that. It's because the corruption is rife, you see, and drugs run everything. But young children get recruited by being given a pistol by, again, at the age of 10 or 11 or 12, and being told to go out and shoot someone. They do it and come back and that's them in the gang. And so, they kill folk from the start, without hassle. And believe you me, it's like raising robotic psychopaths in a sense, isn't it? When you add drugs to it and all that too... And that's normal for so many people. Anyway…

Mexico gang leaves 19 bodies, some hanging from bridge, as a warning
smh.com.au / 9 Aug 2019

Mexican police have found nine bodies hanging from a road bridge alongside a drug cartel banner threatening rivals.

(Alan: ...rival gangs, it's not for the public. It's to threaten other gangs.)

Seven more corpses were found hacked up and dumped by the road nearby in the western city of Uruapan, and just down the road were three more, making a total of 19.

Well that's… You understand why folk are worried, they're very worried about a borderless society. And the ones at the top know that the first ones out of a lot of countries are the gangs, the criminals. And they have come out of all countries [Alan laughing.] across the world and set up networks, their own networks, etc. without a problem. So I'll put this little linkup too. We're in for terrible times, people.

It's obvious to me, and you will be living through this chaos, this planned chaotic upheaval, it's planned, and it's counted on. Because you're going to find we're going to get turned, to an extent, as they flatten a lot of these so-called Western countries, as they flatten them, as they bring up other countries, by using your money and so on, as they flatten you, they said they would do this, you would come down as your money brings other ones up. But you'll find that top nations, some people, some nations, the biggest expert is almost, or maybe the second export is just people. That's another way of course of taking over certain areas. Of course, it is.

I can remember Nixon many years ago, President Nixon and when he had a meeting with the President of China and he was talking about all their people being behind this... this... like the communists in Russia, the same kind of thing, an Iron Curtain type thing and how they wouldn't let their people have freedoms, etc. And the president of China said to Nixon, he says, well okay, I can start giving you millions, how about 20 million next week as a start? And that was the end of that, just a kind of polite little laugh of embarrassment and that was that, you know. Many ways to do it.

But again, it's going to creates tremendous upheavals in the so-called first world countries. And that is the plan. Whether you like it or not, that's planned. Because you're going into a completely new world. A completely new world. A completely new right and wrong. A completely new system of relationships, men and women, all the rest of it.

And eventually too, the Epstein thing too, which is all, you know, he's dead now, we're told, so we're told, then I'll guarantee you they're going to start hammering now to lower the age of consent. That's a given. That will happen. Because they've already had world meetings before about doing away with limits on 'intergenerational' sex, as they call it. You wait and see. That's a whole program in itself.

Jeffrey Epstein, accused sex trafficker, dies by suicide - abcnews.go.com / 10 Aug 2019

But they've already, as they said themselves, they sexualized the planet, hypersexualized it. And they've hypersexualized the children too, are given cell phones, they can get everything on their cell phone. And computer. And that's going to be, that's going to be used in the so-called formulaic arguments that you'll hear eventually. Well you know, the children are all, they all know what they're doing now, blah blah blah. And you wait and see. Some judges have already passed that as okay in trials and that in Latin America in the past years. They say, oh the child is precocious and therefore is, there's no crime. You wait and see. You wait and see, folks.

I'll tell you another thing too. [Alan chuckles.] It takes me back to even Margaret Thatcher again because she was asked in a televised show about all the unemployed people. I think it was the same talk where she talked about a generation wouldn't see work in their lifetime, get used to it. She said, well they can get work and people can get work, meaning the working-class people, you know, and girls too, well they can get work like they used to do in the Upstairs Downstairs series on television as maids and pantry maids and things like that for the wealthy and work for the wealthy people. That's what she said, you know. Well you can also take that, and I hope someday somebody puts all this stuff from universities they collected into books, to show you that behavior, the sexual behavior, into the same context. Because that also will be used when they push for intergenerational sex.

Because a lot of those women in the old days were incredibly terribly abused by the so-called, I call them owners, not hirers, you know, they were owned pretty well. And a lot of them were beaten up as well for failing to do this properly or that, where they were just beaten and beaten and beaten. Terribly. Some of them wrote about it. I hope someday somebody puts all their, all the stuff from universities they collected into books to show you the real, what the people themselves wrote about what was happening at the time. Because it was horrific. Well, get used to it again because we're going to go through a lot worse as things get dire and pretty bad.

But this whole Epstein thing I keep thinking of Ghislaine Maxwell the daughter of Robert Maxwell who literally scammed millions and millions from his employees' pension funds. And not just pension funds, he was jumping, he had like a pyramid scheme on the go with businesses and newspaper collections and so on, he was moving money back and forth from different ones. But there's more to Robert Maxwell than met the eye. And it ties in of course with the daughter as well, and the other children no doubt. But it says here, this is an article from 2000, the year 2000 about the business empire. I've got the articles too when they supposedly found the body of Robert floating way far off, etc., and that's a different story again.

How Ghislaine Rose From Ashes – Maxwell's Heirs Building A New Business Empire
nypost.com / 23 March 2000

FOR Ghislaine Maxwell, daughter of disgraced media tycoon Robert Maxwell, it was an exquisite moment of triumph and redemption.

As she sat in the front row of Fashion Week’s Ralph Lauren show, all eyes were on her and the man at her side:
(A: You see, her dad was in such disgrace, in Britain that is, not outside of Britain but in Britain, for what he'd done. And it took a lot of scamming indeed. But it says here...)

(A: … at that time, because for her, Ghislaine and the rest of the family, they were nationally embarrassed and so on, right. But hhhh, it says here, guess who launched her back into the limelight, and it was in the year 2000…)

Britain's Prince Andrew.
(A: That's who she was arm in arm with, who led her there, you see. And it says…)

As necks craned to see, as cameras flashed and motor drives whirred, the favorite child of the former New York Daily News owner smiled regally and quietly savored the attention.

Just a short time ago people spat the name Maxwell — if they spoke it at all.

Now, the public gesture of friendship by Britain's most eligible royal was a signal to the world that the once reviled Maxwells were back. And beautiful. And 39-year-old Ghislaine is their public face.

(A: It's quite the usual stuff, you know, she's up-and-coming again, from nothing again, you know, cleaned out financially. Although she was left 100,000 pounds I guess it was a year in an untouchable fund that her dad had worked out. I'm sure was a lot more than that, mind you. But the dad himself had looted, it says…)

He had looted $600 million from the pension funds of his employees in a vain attempt to keep the empire afloat.

Robert Maxwell saw himself as Britain's Joseph P. Kennedy, the patriarch of a dynasty that would wield financial and political power on a global scale. Like Kennedy, he expected much of his children and pushed them hard.

"He would interrogate them at the dinner table about history or geopolitics," said a once-regular guest in at the sprawling Maxwell estate in southern England.

"He could reduce them to tears if they didn't know an answer. He could be a cold man and the temperature in the house dropped noticeably when he was there."

The colder he was, the more his youngest daughter tried to please him.

(A: Well, you'd almost swear he's training them [Alan laughing.] for [Alan laughing.] for some kind of intelligence agency at that age… and geopolitics and all the rest of it, and in a very serious way, 'eh?)

Maxwell even dreamed that he might one day forge an alliance with the Kennedys by marrying Ghislaine to JFK Jr. The two became close friends and remained so until Kennedy's tragic death last year.

(A: Interesting, 'eh? It's also interesting here, the way things are worded, 'eh…)

…in January 1991 he bought the tottering Daily News and rescued it from oblivion, she was sent to Manhattan to be the advance guard for his foray into New York society. (A: …from Britain.)

A few months later he was dead. Of all his children, she took his death the hardest. She was unable to accept her father's guilt and likely suicide (A: …likely, hm?…) and insists to this day that a dark conspiracy of Mossad renegades (A: Interesting term, renegades, eh?) and Sicilian contract killers took his life.

Now, why would she just not think Mossad period? Why'd she say renegades, why would renegades of the Mossad go for him? It's her inability to understand what? You know? It's astonishing to me because Epstein, she was definitely procuring it seems for Epstein in the US, for years. She was given by her dad the money before he died for the KitKat Club in England. That was an interesting term they used from an old club, a name that used to exist, of Whigs, they called them Whigs at the time. These are these wealthy merchant industrial types who were all for a type of change in the world in a sense, that was their particular club, where they could talk without being, ah, just slammed in prison for maybe making threatening to or take the government or something or do away with it or whatever it happened to be. It was a club.

But she eventually was given, they called it a working, a working girls club. It's not for working class. It's wealthy. It's almost like she was already [Alan laughing.] into that kind of thing then, recruiting people, women for certain things. And I wonder about it because her statements before about Britain, and then about her dad, why would the Mossad go for her dad? And then you see Epstein and the sad thing with Wexner in the US, who seems to have been almost like a, acted like a, the parental type figure for Epstein, and a distributor of money. Because it had been pushed into my head, it's already been said by others, that it's basically a honey trap system that he had. Especially when you asked to know about the sexual proclivities of the different people who were using these youngsters. After having their thing off with the different people, he would question these girls about their preferences and if they said anything and yada, yada ya. This is, these are, this is sort of blackmailable.

And everything may be filmed, naturally, they keep talking about photographs, photographs. But how many videos and CDs, etc.? Or were they all burned at the island when they had all those big fires there? I don't know. We'll never know. But of course, lots of folks are going to wonder, really, and not surprisingly, at the information that that man had in his head. And obviously, to me anyway, all the agencies behind… Remember it came out too, Acosta and different people as well, long before that too, and I've got other articles here from top newspapers going way back, years, where some of them mention that they thought that Epstein as far back as 2000 as well was possibly Mossad.

So, it's like a massive honey trap operation. A person who was involved and then caught out at itwould definitely, definitely have have had, maybe even seen it in the movies, a whole bunch of people would get letters to be released on his death if things look suspicious, you know. And that would be his security for whoever he would possibly work for and deal with. And someone who had so many different politicians, from different countries, and no doubt top civil servants and so on and people of power over different areas, well, you would have to get the state involved to somehow quieten it down. The best way is to say he's dead.

They still talk about old Robert Maxwell. I mean, he was supposedly found miles and miles and miles away from his yacht, and it's never been explained either as to exactly how it all happened. And was it him they even found? It's easy to get a body, isn't it? In some of these little places, these little island places everything is just bribery and you can get anything you want, you can buy anything you want, and get it stamped, no problem. And smuggling someone out of the prison? Well… If it came from the very, very top, because of national security reasons, and had to be done, well, that would be the end of it. You would have the right folk in at the right time, the cameras would go off and that would be that basically.

So what I'm saying is just, it's going to create more and more questions, this whole incident, than it's going to answer. Really. Really. You can't overestimate the power behind it. This isn't just a massive pedophile ring. This is a well worked out standard system of sexual slavery. You know? For definitely high-profile characters. And some of the girls actually said that their passports were taken from them by Ghislaine, I think it was. And they have to have sex with different characters, when they were taken over to other countries. But they couldn't leave the country without the passports, so they were getting blackmailed into having sex, etc. This is quite an operation. Much, much, much, much bigger.

There's no doubt about it, you've got at least one intelligence agency, I would say, behind this. And the guy could be working for a couple. As I say before, I really believe, myself, that for many years the top agencies are really just one. And the big Five Eyes idea, there's maybe more than just five. But anyway, that's just by the by. So, I'll put this article up anyway, how Ghislaine rose from the ashes supposedly after her dad died. And…

I'm sure you've seen them all yourself. It's more like a soap when these things break out, especially by the way they're treated. Because there's much, much more can be said. But because you're dealing with big powerful organizations. People are terrified, really. Terrified. And everybody on the general television stations and that know exactly where their bread is buttered and what to say what not to say. That's the ones who give you your opinions, eh? It's quite amazing to really, really, really look at it all. And then…

Maxwell's body found in sea
theguardian.com / 6 Nov 1991

Robert Maxwell, the flamboyant head of one of the world's biggest media empires, was discovered dead in the sea yesterday (A: This is 1991.) after disappearing from his yacht off the Canary Islands.

As London business analysts were predicting the break-up of his business empire under the pressure of £3bn debts, his widow Elizabeth and their son Philip flew to Gran Canaria and identified his body at the Gando air base. They later flew to Tenerife, where the inquiry into the death will be held.

The body of the Daily Mirror publisher was winched from the Atlantic by a Spanish helicopter 20 miles south-west of Gran Canaria. Spanish national radio said he was unclothed and showed no sign of violence.

At a hastily-improvised midnight press conference at Reina Sofia airport in the south of Tenerife, the island's Civil Governor, Angel Delgado, said Mr Maxwell's motor yacht, the Lady Ghislaine (A: That's the same name of course as his daughter.), left Santa Cruz in the north of the island at 10pm on Monday and put into Puerto de los Cristianos at 9am yesterday.

But, he said, Mr Maxwell's body was found by a fishing boat floating 19 to 20 miles from Gando on the other side of the neighbouring island of Gran Canaria - more than 100 miles from the obvious route between the points of departure and arrival. Asked to explain how the body could have got there, Mr Delgado replied: "That's a good question."

Well, whose body it might have been, 'eh? And this is the stuff of movies, isn't it? [Alan chuckles.] But the oldest trick in the book used to be people putting their clothes and stuff next to a cliff, and the sea down below, etc., and then they'd, someone had just committed suicide. Then they would disappear of course. Sometimes they'd turn up 20, 30 years later in some exotic place or something like that, well… So, it makes you wonder. These things actually happen, as you well know. And if you did have intelligence agencies involved, it could be the easiest thing of all, easiest thing to arrange someone else to be someone… [Alan chuckles.] There's plenty of cadavers around, folks, every day. Plenty, plenty. And with the right connections and that you can get anything you want or look like or whatever. I'm just… it's speculation. It's the stuff of movies but that's the real world, though.

Isn't it? Look what we're really looking at here just with the Epstein case. Just you wait and see. Yeah, not difficult. But it is the stuff of incredible conspiracy indeed. And let's be honest here. The very fact that the man was caught before and charged, and pretty well given a slap on the wrist by all the news reports, meant there's a lot of people in the US government and state departments and state governments too that had to turn a blind eye deliberately or stamped different documents to get him away with that one. Come on, here. Come on. It's got telltale signs everywhere.

Very interesting stuff indeed. Because yeah, you thought that was bad enough in 2008, you wait and see. Because now they're going to bring in non-, the non-weirdness of negative interest rates. Now you're going to get charged just for having your money in the bank now, you're being trained to believe it's a good thing now. Everything you believed in the past was wrong, you understand, and they're going to give you new ways of looking at it. Before it was good to try and get a few bucks together to save for something. But now you're only going to get punished for just not using it. And they'll use, they'll charge you for having the money in the bank at all, or even using the bank. But really, I've prattled on so long already and I've got to bring it down a bit. Because there's some stations that actually broadcast the stuff and I go over the limit. They tried to, have to crush it into a higher speed rate, which makes me talk like a chipmunk. So I really shouldn't go too far here.

But I hope you get something out of what I've prattled on about tonight. Because I don't really plan these things. I like to just, things come into the mind as they come into the mind on certain topics. But get ready, I would say get ready for the next crash. Because it's planned. It's not, they're not talking about it happening, it is planned. It definitely planned. And they're bringing in the new system, as we live through it, with negative interest rates in Australia. I'll put some articles up there about that and how they've been warned in Australia. And also too, there will be limits on spending actual cash, actual cash.

Australian Government draft legislation limiting all cash transactions to $10k - treasury.gov.au

…under the guise of, they're not going to allowed folk to avoid taxes by using cash. Well, cash is still legitimate tender as you well know, and until they make it illegal then they can't really penalize you for using the stuff. And it's the best stuff to have if the ATMs and everything else goes down or gets hacked again, as they frequently do.

So for myself, and I hope you're all doing well because as I say, I see people out there, people get in touch with me all the time. And I like that because the system of the Internet and this faceless society except for pictures on screens, etc., that's not living, folks. And you should try and get a little circle of your own friends where you can actually, if you can get on with enough people these days and make some friends. Because it's important to have real conversations and real contacts with real people. The Internet changes how you deal with people and how you perceive reality. It really, it's meant to do that. And of course, we really do, we're meant to live with people and be with people, and you know, meet people for instance. That's very important.

So for myself Alan Watt from Ontario Canada, it's good night and be your God or gods go with you.

Aug. 18, 2019 (#1734)

Hi folks I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on August 18, 2019. Right off the bat I should say I hope [Alan chuckles.] that you're all surviving the stormy news we're all getting, and coping with it too, and not to get so upset about the bad stuff. Because that's what news is today, it's all the bad stuff we get. And bad stuff is meant to attract readers of course naturally for news, or watchers on television. It's all to do with ratings for most of them and of course selling advertising, etc.

But don't forget too, we live in a system and systems are about control generally. Everybody out there that has a system of business, and big business has a system of control embedded into it. Because the first thing is to try get something out there that people want, or else you try to get something else that you want them to want, and actually want them to actually need. And that comes down to control eventually.

That's what the Internet is of course with the computerized systems. And a few players, really, who are out there making the systems of Internet, like Windows and the other ones, Apple etc., but there should be a lot, lot more you would think, wouldn't you? And it's deliberate that there's not. Because it's about control. The world is about control. And you see so much of it today as even the crazy people out there, everybody's got a cause. I mean, everybody's been weaponized with a cause in a sense. Because causes themselves have been weaponized by the system and those who control the system.

We're living through an amazing time as I say, and if you understand history at all, even fairly recent history going back to the early 20th century, and even just before it naturally, you saw these advocates for revolution, all kinds of revolution, including anarchists too. Because the system had broken down at the time, across especially Europe and people were looking for something else. So you had all these different theories coming out by, and you were given the people to follow, the philosophers and the advocates to this, that and the other. And people just fell into it, they had their little niche. And the folk who were doing the least of all [unintelligible], are the ones who often were used as cannon fodder for these massive, massive revolutions where millions of people died. We've got to remember that. Revolution is not a pleasant thing at all. It's glorified in the movies and things like that, but it's not a happy time at all. And I don't care if you want to call it revolution or war, it's the same kind of thing. There's all kinds of people get slaughtered in these terrible, terrible movements. It could be a war movement, or revolution, it's all the same to me. Because it's someone wants to dominate everybody else. That's what it's about.

We're living through a time right now, and I don't read… I don't see television, I don't watch television, and what I read from newspapers is severe enough when you think about the topics that are put out there. But I can imagine how bad it is on television with so many stations competing for your attention. And they've got have the grabbers out there to try and grab your attention, that's what they count on. So it must be pretty, pretty awful to watch a daily newscast, especially with the world news today and you have all kinds of news from everywhere, all weird things that are happening across the planet basically. It can make this world seem a very, very unsafe frightening place.

Of course at the top, the power mechanisms in society, and we all live under them, we all live under them, in all countries we live under a system where power counts on fear basically getting the people to turn, turn to those in control, government basically, and governance as well, in order for safety and security. So the more afraid you are the more you're apt to just go along with the power structure, who you hope - it's a faith-based system, isn't it - you hope they're going to look after you. And that's what faith is in a system.

I said many times before, and I'm not being flippant about it, that a true, a true, and it's up to you whether you want to follow, naturally, but a true atheistic system of socialism, we've seen it with the Soviet system, that collapsed, and we have a history of that too, what happened there, and the systems are similar as well. But we see that the state, as HG Wells said, has to basically become God. The state will tolerate no other, no other gods before it, or rivals you might say. And that goes for any comparative type of what would be called democracy. In a social system you won't have this thing called democracy. You've got appointed systems, just like the Soviet, you've got appointed leaders for unions, you’ve got appointed leaders for all kinds of work and labor, and the division of labor. It’s all done for you. You don’t have much of a say in it, really.

And here’s the problem today. Folk don’t know this, they really don’t know it, how fragile this thing called democracy is. Because now it’s really under attack. Tremendously so. And I really think that it’s to do with the next part of the system coming in. I read before articles from universities over many years, and the big foundations, I’ve read some of them on air, I’ve also read the Club of Rome books, bits and pieces of them and so on, where they are quite adamant that democracy has had its day. It’s no good. It can’t fulfill its purpose in a modern society. It can’t do anything efficiently. And don’t forget that the whole system, and all the big courses at University validate this, this is what they’re driving home all the time, that everything will be reduced to its basic mode for the system itself for efficiency sake.

Efficiency is the key word here. And they will not tolerate… You understand, the powerbrokers, how furious they become when they can’t just go ahead and do something, like put a highway through your town or something and move maybe thousands of you out of the way in the process? Tyrants hate that, that inability to just go ahead and do it. That’s why they actually admire totalitarian tyrannies of the past where they just sit at the top, all the professionals and so-called experts and just go ahead and plan it and do it. So, this thing called democracy is an awful nuisance to them.

And I go for all sides of that too, I don’t care what flavor socialism comes in, I really don’t care. It’s all the same kind of thing, where you’re being told how to live, where to live, what to eat, when to eat, what to do, what to think. And you can see all the signs of it today. Which, it should be frightening people. That part you should be frightened about, for sure. Because it’s coming down. And you see the movement towards eliminating free thought. And free thought will encompass a lot of things you won’t agree with. Absolutely. But when you’re forbidden to even think about them, you’re in BIG trouble. Big, big trouble.

Because we have the capacities, and the technologies to introduce techniques into society, that are already in play by the way and can get a lot worse though, with technological means of computers, cell phones, electronics, etc. We have all that. And drugs of course as Aldous Huxley warned about. Which, obviously had been discussed even in his day, elucidating the public. But also, you have the techniques of basically [Alan chuckles.] mental strobes, etc, done electronically from a distance. The Pentagon even released stuff about that quite a few years back, that it could be done with even Wi-Fi, etc. So, this is not conspiracy stuff, it’s from official documents which have been released over time to the public.

It’s comical, as I see it, for me it’s comical to being at the cutting edge of some of it for years, many years of what’s going down and what’s happening and what’s planned. And you find the people who think you’re crazy, perhaps, because again, don’t forget, I’ve even read the documents from universities who’ve studied, are always studying the population to tell them how the people will react to someone who’s got proof of something happening but the government says nothing about it. You see, you’re trained to believe what’s called authority figures. Again, I read even these documents on the air, which are taught at universities. So, authority figures are the ones who lead and guide you, even though they can be completely politicized and veering you off into some state of complacency, where you shouldn’t have complacency, for political purposes. Or again, tyrannical purposes.

So, you’re supposed to think for yourself. That’s just it. And a technique for instance of making you listen to authority figures, and Carol Quigley talked about this awfully, awfully well in a conversation he had, which is out there on YouTube land somewhere I think, where he talks to students about this, about what to say, what not to say. And what he used to do, used to get pulled in as part of a team for the big television stations when someone else was coming out and exposing documentation, documented proof that something was going on inside America, for instance, that the public should know about, since supposedly the government is supposedly there to supposedly serve the public. [Alan laughing.] A lot of supposing indeed! But people really took that seriously. And nothing was supposed to be done to change their system without the public’s consent. At least on paper.

So, Quigley said that he was pulled in, on one of the many times he was pulled in as an expert, along with the panel who were also pulled in, to debate someone who came out with a conspiracy theory or whatever. He admitted in this occasion it happened, this one occasion, he said they went in with their usual cocky stance, ready for anything, to mock someone and pooh-pooh them and laugh at them, at this one person, I think it was Gary Allen and a book called None Dare Call It Conspiracy. He said, this guy had his information down pat. He knew his stuff. He knew his history, delved into it. And that shocked them. Because his job, as I say, was to go in there and laugh them out of existence. That's how you're trained to follow experts, you see.

Another technique they'll use often today, I've noticed, is when something happens, you're given a thousand, a thousand different reasons for it happening, until you just give up. Most folk will just give up. They don't have the time or the lifespan to learn all this stuff, so they just give up and go with the official view of something. That's very typical today. They actually did documents and put out documents a few years back on this technique and how to use it for those in officialdom.

So, we live in an amazing system of psycho politics, psycho warfare and psychological techniques used all the time, not just by advertising but pretty well everything out there. I had a, I refreshed my memory, again, not too long ago, with another look at the documentary called Starsuckers. It's called Starsuckers. It, really, it's good for its time, it was 2010 maybe it was put out, around then. It was up to date with reality television and all that and how everyone's reared on television. It shows you so much in a simple way that anybody can learn, of techniques that are used on you all the time from television and those who understand the techniques of using television for changing your opinions or your views or whatever it happens to be.

It was a well-done construct on how people are dominated by a system. They actually see it as a superior intellect, the very thing called the television. Whatever comes across must be, they worship it to an extent. They worship the folks that are on it. They really worship them. And they encourage you to worship them. Until now news is mainly about celebrities, what's called celebrities. At one time they were just actors and actresses. But eventually they were raised up to this status, oh, now, they're celebrity. They're rich people, you see. And everyone wants to worship them. And they do. And they can tell you all about their affairs and their divorces and... This is what occupies your mind as you live your little, short lifespan. [Alan laughing.] It's quite good, really, isn't it?

But as far as getting real facts and information, you really won't get very much at all. Because the television is used and promoted to keep you away from looking at deeper issues. Because those who control, across the world, don't want you to look at all these other issues. They don't want you looking into it. You may complain or object about them. You might. Although again, their statisticians are always in the way with statistics, and they have it pretty well down pat of the amount of the population who just go along with the flow, no matter what happens. Because they trust it. They trust the system. In a really nice system, a Disneyland system, we should trust the system. But it isn't like that. It really isn't. We've got to be on our guard all the time. Because you have big powers like never before who really run the world.

If you live in what you still think is a nation where, what's the point in electing people to represent you as a people on a particular part of the planet, wherever it happens to be called, if international forces are way above them managing it all? Your concept of your nation has to obviously change, and think, well it isn't really a nation, it's only a part of the planet. And it certainly is. And this isn't conspiracy theory. This is stuff that the United Nations has been prattling on about since they created it. You live in a system where they call the people who are participants in the big movements for the future from the present, constantly working for the future, they call them 'stakeholders'. And stakeholders are nongovernmental organizations that you don't vote for, which are often funded and put out there by big foundations, very rich corporations and rich people. All sides, and all flavors. Again, far left as well, folks.

And these people, you don't vote for them. Most folk don't even know these organizations exist. Because they don't tout them on the news and tell you all about them. They could. But they don't. So, you have to reevaluate this idea of nationhood. Politicians, are they there to serve you or not? Or, what are they serving? Or, who are they serving? You see? And if you get anywhere at all they'll probably say, now look, and they'll sit you down, you know, like a little child, this is how the world really runs, you know, people are just, they're too undisciplined and crazy to have a thing called democracy, as you think of it. We'll give you a democracy, so we'll give you A, B, C, D, E to vote from, this panel of people, and that's as far as your democracy's going to go.

Now, this A, B, C and D and E, etc., they all serve other organizations that are supranational. And some of them you don't even know exist, these organizations. But they're all around you. And you go all the way back, if you delve into it and get wrinkles and gray hair delving into this stuff, you see how far back this particular overlay of the system, which is seldom talked about, you see, except in bits and pieces but never as a complete overlay of the system, is about eugenics and too many of you. Unless you are one of them, meaning the ultrarich, you see, and from very good old families, you see. It isn't just to be, just to be rich. You've got to belong to very old families who've bred into other rich old families down through centuries, if possible.

Look into the Darwinian groups and the ones in London, there's still one in London, it's the Darwin Club, they changed the name of it. They had the website there. They were quite open about themselves and all of you, you see, and you are the problem. Going all the way back to Malthus and even before Malthus. You could get executed in the Middle Ages in Britain and elsewhere if you inadvertently rubbed against some member of nobility by accident, or if you fell or they fell on you, or stumbled or whatever. You see, you were the lowest thing on the planet, by your monarchy and so on, you are the lowest thing. You were a different species, long before they coined eugenics and Darwinism, you see. Although they claim the term eugenics comes from the Greek, of course.

But anyway, the fact is, that's reality. At one time you could be locked up in jail in parts of Europe, including Britain, if the peasants found a silk handkerchief or a scarf. Because only the wealthy elite were allowed, allowed to wear them. Now, that attitude has not died away, believe you me. Even in the hard-communist countries you never find a defector, and the defector's came from an upper-class of bureaucracy in the Soviet bloc countries, who lived just as well and sometimes better than their counterparts in the West, financially, material and all the other benefits. None of them ever defected, and they tell you that in their writings, because they were deprived of and they wanted things from the West. None of them did it for that reason. It was for ideological reasons.

You're living in a system today where there's a pretense getting used, again, by those at the very, very top, and using what appears to be left, to bring in the Disney version, again, of a happy world, where everybody will be happy and you'll all be equal as long as no one's got a different opinion from the authorized one, on anything. And that's the fear today. And it really doesn't look good for people who still want some kind of democracy, a say in things. Even the right to complain, that will go too.

You can always read the letters that were exchanged between George Orwell in 1984 the book, and Aldous Huxley and his Brave New World. Basically Huxley thought that there were many, many more scientific techniques that could be used to sway the public and alter the public and train the public and even shape the public, including altering DNA and so on, and perfecting types of workers, or worker bees, for division of labor, different types, and using drugs on them and different other techniques too. Whereas Orwell of course, he used in 1984, he actually published in 1948, and I think it was called The Last Man initially. That's what he wanted it to be called but his publisher changed it to 1984, because it was published in 1948, or put out then. Orwell's system, I've said it before, it would be an intermediary system to get toBrave New World. And we're going through both of them right now.

You constantly read about from, again, publications, scientific publications on DNA alteration and the different kinds of in vitro fertilization, the so-called taking out of defective or bad genes and replacing them with supposedly good ones, etc. etc. It's the dream of those who envisage power over the whole planet from long ago. It's a dream which they're working towards. Because it goes right back again to eugenics and, well… You'd be surprised if you could get into the old, old libraries in Britain that still have some books left, you'd find lots of books churned out over a long period of time over the criminal class, and how do we alter the criminal class and stop it? They had all kinds of theories then of altering, the finding out if they could get out, find out if there was a marker in their genetic makeup that would make them be a criminal, a gene in other words, a defective gene or string of them or whatever, and how they could replace them. All that stuff has been discussed.

Now [Alan chuckles.] just as easily, don't forget that anybody can be labeled a criminal. As laws get passed. And speech is coming down to being criminalized. Which always goes that route too, the 1984 method of threatening the public, and again, taking away liberties and rights, or to even exist. It's interesting to me that the Chinese system, the social credit system, is what's coming down here now under different guises of terrorism, fighting terrorism. And that'll go the same way, the same way. It's already there actually, they've got it all mapped out in fact, it's a copy. And I'm pretty sure the West designed it for China anyway. But you're going to find they're already pulling away people's finances. They're try to get people off the Internet altogether, going through the providers, etc., and they'll simply isolate someone, just like in China. If you've been behind in loan payments in China, you can't travel anywhere, just can't get on, you know, transportation to even visit someone or whatever. You're stuck. You're punished in many, many ways as a bad person.

But this is where we are now in the West, the so-called countries of freedom, that's what it used to be called. But of course, freedom isn't efficient because freedom has too many opinions, according to those who want total control. And I'm not surmising this. I've read the books from the Club of Rome, in detail, very detailed books on step-by-step policies that they want, that they'd like to introduce to the United Nations, etc. It's terrifying really looking at it when you know what it means. When you see it happening in your lifetime too, where they just might target bunches of people. It will start off being, going for the real, real dogmatic people who are really crazy types, you know, who are… Or else they're fake.

If you want something passed on the Internet, and we had that years ago, remember, with all the fake sock puppets they called them. People didn't know that a lot of these arguments, the sites on the forums where they all argue like crazy, were actually just all done by computers. You were getting hammered and hammered and folk were getting, oh, they're spending their life trying to write back and fight back to what they thought was real people. They were sock puppets put out by government and the government admittedthat, different Pentagon organizations and MIT ones admitted that. It hasn't changed, folks. So, it could be quite easy, and don't… And hhhhhhhch, it's even better to me. Anybody can be anonymous on the net if they want to be, the ones who can really afford it. Like agencies and so on at the top, could put out sites there and try and get a little following, or even claim they've got a following, and start advocating terrible things to the other people. And the government will step in right away and… You see how you can set something up to make happen, to get what you want and say, SEE, SEE, you know, there you go, SEE. That's how it's done.

In the world of intelligence agencies, it's all deception. It's deception, that's how they work is through deception. And those who are deceived will do the bidding of those who are the deceivers. They're basically unwitting, you know, stooges basically, most of them. And you can't, this is the terrifying thing… I remember many years ago in Britain, I'd heard this before, of something similar, I guess there were shootings or something maybe back in the 70s or whatever. It was a lawyer, it was a woman from the US on television who was talking back to a panel in Britain, maybe the BBC or something, some organization, a show she was on. And the person was saying, why can't you just do this and do that and so on? And someone answered her, someone had gotten off with what was a perceived crime, you see. Now, anything that's tried in the newspapers can be touted to be the most heinous crime that ever happened. I mean, you're judged by the media, you see, and so that's not what law is about. They can target anybody and make them a leper to society. Very quickly and easy. And so, you can't go by that.

But again, you can see the forces being whipped up today to use social media to do the judging, you see. Because everyone's got their prejudices out there. Absolutely. It's easy to stir them up. Very easy, in fact. But the lawyer that was on the television show said, well the reason this person, who very possibly, she said, very possibly was guilty got off with it, our system is set up to ensure and to prefer that a few folk might go free rather than have one person tried and put in prison falsely. That's how you had all these different safeguards. In Britain you don't have that problem. Because you had justices of the peace and so on that were basically like [Alan chuckles.] judge, jury and executioner in a sense most of the time. So that was the difference with the US. They'd rather have a few people going free, and very iffy, iffy, you know, not guilty charges, very iffy, rather than have one person get put inside who wasn't guilty.

But again, when you're in a completely, when you're going into this totalitarian, and actually when you're in this totalitarian system you can see the anger and fury out there like never before. Now, that's coming from organization, across the board, to make it all happen at once. I remember when Obama was in, it went fairly smoothly the whole time he was in, where he did his trips to see the Queen, the usual stuff they all do and things like that. And press reports that there were more wars apparently on the go at the time, he took over from the previous group and Rumsfeld congratulated him in the media for continuing those wars. But there was no backlash on anything.

And I'm really, I don't vote for parties, myself. Because I'm well aware that it's the closest thing you're going to get, at the moment, for anything called democracy. I know that they all serve the same masters. Obviously. Since the same agendas continue. As Thomas Jefferson said, when yousee that you're under a form of tyranny, because different parties would have different programs, they'd cancel different things too, but you find the same programs continuing, especially to do with wars and so on.

So really, all we got at the moment is the right to say something. When that's taken away, it will not bode well for anybody. Because tyranny doesn't stop. It's got a, as I say, it's like the end of the train, a train has these barriers at the end of the line, but tyranny will keep moving the barriers, like new records all the time. That's how it works unfortunately. Until you've got horror on the go.

And today with the scientific techniques of manipulation, through drugs of all kinds, that are prescribed, even with experimentation to do with electrical fields on the brain and so on, there's so much can be done on people without their, nevermind without their knowledge, without their consent, especially. So, you've got to be awfully careful. And don't get whipped, I keep telling folk, don't get whipped up by emotion. Because the ones who are whipped up are getting used, someone's using them. And right now the ones at the top want the conflict to bring in the new system. I hope you understand that.

They want the conflict to get this new system through. It has to appear, oh, drastic and radical because of what appears to be, and again, appears to be radical times, so you stir it up. Then you come out with the solution. And you have to go into a new system. It's a completely new century, that literally is to be post-Democratic. I've read all the articles before and a lot from their own writings and their books and so on from universities, etc. post Democratic, where they can just get things done and tidy up all the loose ends. And you'll have experts guiding your whole lives from birth to death. Including, do they even need you to be born? That's coming down the pike too.

So, I hope you're understanding [Alan laughing.] what I'm… What I'm saying is, is not to terrify anybody. It's just simply to be aware of it. To be aware of it. And don't fall into so many traps. Because right now the whole system is full of traps. Of course, it is. Everyone's being monitored. Everyone's being automatically monitored. They're not going to spend million dollars just to watch you. They're watching everybody. And it's done with computer systems that automatically gather all the data on us all, each individually. They only do a person once in a blue moon if you're flagged so often that they want to, you know, do something about you, basically. That's what it's about.

It's so sad that in the 90s I said, you'll get maybe 20 years of freedom, a partial freedom on the Internet, until you're hooked on it. So much will be free, then they'll start drawing that in until you start paying for more. Then of course by the end of it, restrictions of freedoms. Folk will stay on it. That's what they hope for. And that's why they gave you 20 years. If they'd told you up front, you're going to pay for this and pay for that and we're watching you, you wouldn't have, they wouldn't have sold the same way. They told you it was a private, it was your personal computer, it's yours, it's private. You understand, everything that's sold to us is done through big expensive public relations companies. Every little phrase is put across there to calm you and to lead you, is given to you, for goodness sake. Everything that the politicians say is written by scriptwriters. That's the world we live in. And you have to accept, you really do, that there's a vast amount of different people in the world.

As this is a world. And you have to accept a lot of stuff. And a lot of stuff too you shouldn't have to accept. There is stuff you just simply can't accept, obviously. When you see the incredible, incredible drug system of Latin America, and the viciousness, incredible viciousness of the powers that run it all, you don't want to be like that. You really don't. I don't think you do, do you? And again, back in the 90s I said, you know, what I'd say, because I was sometimes asked on some of the shows, can't you give us a happy ending? You see, this is... Watch Starsuckers, you're trained to want happy endings.

We don't live in Disneyland. A lot of what happens in the world doesn't have happy endings for lots of people. But if you really want to know, and most folk don't, and I'm aware of that, and I don't blame them. But for the ones that want to know, make sure you can handle it. Make sure you can really handle it. And if you have a family there, look after them. Make sure they can handle it. Safeguard them from the world as much as possible and for what's coming down. If you can. Because the only defense you'll have is your own mind eventually.

And if you're defense is your own mind, is seen as a weapon against whatever authoritarian tyranny is coming down in the future, then obviously you're going to be an enemy. Just because you understand. And where we are today, and I said this would happen, I gave examples of Brave New World when the so-called savages picked up from outside the high-tech system that they lived in, he lived in the wilds. There were some folk who still bred normally outside of it. They brought them into this fabulous futuristic city where nobody lacked anything. And all sex was actually advocated, not just for free love and all that, it was advocated. And with certain conditions that you couldn't have the same partner more than twice a week or something like that. So promiscuity, all the things, and variety was promoted. And it was all fun, fun and transient superficial fun in the high-tech city type system. When people live to a good long age of course, and they didn't have the old-age diseases because they were all bred basically artificially, and genetically manipulated to pretty will guarantee they would be the Alpha, Beta or whatever it happens to be that they were meant to be by the scientists. Then they would just suddenly, rather quickly, towards a long lifespan, just simply die. And they were taught not to grieve at the dying. The children were brought in to have little kind of party songs and told how happy they should be that these people. You see?

So we're going through all that, folks. But the primitive, when he tried to ask them about things that really stuck to them, and having a family and children, not the state bringing up children, you would know who your parents were, etc. Which, gave you a link to the past and all the generations before you, or as many as you knew about. And that was so important to the psyche of the savage. But the people who lived in the city, they weren't nasty to him or angry about it to him, what he was talking about. They were polite. And they laughed politely. But that's the key, they laughed politely at him... thinking he was kind of quaint and strange, not just old-fashioned in his ways and his thoughts. Because his idea of beauty was good literature, for instance, or Shakespeare stories and things like that. And to them that was all just nonsense and passé. They lived for quick thrills all the time.

That's where we are today. Most folk like that system. It's not quite there but you can get the vision of it as it materializes around us. But most folk like the system. As they say, you can't blame them. And they'll go along with any change that comes their way. Even to their detriment down the road. As Aldous Huxley said, they'll accept things that perhaps you shouldn't accept. You persuaded into them with techniques you don't understand are even being used on you. That's the sad part.

But really, I've never seen such organized push, we're living through what we saw, what the world's saw really around the time of the late 1800s, of anarchism, what appeared to be anarchism, and revolutionaries. We're seeing it promoted, and obviously directed. And funded. And we haven't seen our own government step in to stop it. That's awfully telling. Because it means there's a higher structure and those at the top know to stand off, it's meant to happen, and bring in a new system of austerity.

It ties in with all the bank bail-ins that will happen next. Because they're talking right now, as they said they would after the 2007/8 collapsed. They said it would take another eight or nine years before the next wave hits them, of payback time. The currencies have all been devalued incredibly since then by the way. Then you'll be brought into a state of… What the elite would love to have is a rationing system. Rationing. Because of a crisis situation. And all you hear is crisis, crisis, crisis, oh, we're frying and were being baked off the planet and all this kind of stuff. Crisis, crisis.

That's what they hit upon, the Club of Rome said it too, we hit upon this, that man would be the enemy, therefore man was the enemy of the planet, that would fit the bill. That's what they all agreed upon. And when they agree, when all those different organizations agree, it's like an old, they'll all stand firm with it, till the end. Regardless of contrary evidence, etc.

Now, I meant to read an awful lot of articles tonight, [Alan chuckles.] but as usual I prattled on. Because I don't plan these talks. Or if I do have a vague plan, I generally don't [Alan chuckles.] continue it at all, [Alan chuckles.] or even get near it sometimes. I like to talk to people as though I was talking to someone across the table just having a chat. So anyway, I'll mention some articles here just to sort of fit in with maybe what I've been saying. Maybe. Here's an article here and it says…

'We're almost out of ammo': Reserve Bank considering 'extreme measures' to save economy - news.com.au / 15 Aug 2019

So they're talking about, Reserve Bank to start, again, quantitative easing. Which means nothing except inflation, folks. More and more and more money buying less and less and less as it's inflated basically, they devalue your currencies.

And so, Australia is coming out and mentioning and all the rest of it too, underemployment they say, and the hidden work epidemic is hurting Australians, so their reserve bank, their central bank is really coming out with it too.

And mind you, you're finding all the central banks are going along with the same mantra right now. As they do. Everything is global, folks. It is global. It has been for a long time. And it was meant to be, all the centralized banking systems and the Bank for International Settlements. The IMF too. I was going through stacks of stuff from the IMF today and it was just astonishing how much the information they're putting out themselves, if you care to go into their sites, you can go in there. And most folk, again, can't be bothered doing that digging. But it's interesting [Alan chuckles.] if you can stand a few more gray hairs and watch your life just slip away from you. But it is interesting. They have their own terminology, naturally, because they don't want the average person understanding what they're on about. It really is quite amazing to watch them. And austerity measures, etc., all these things, these are the terms they're all using now.

And then you have this one here too. This article is not too bad actually. It says…

How China gets what it wants from American companies - money.cnn.com / 5 April 2018

Now, you're always hearing about, oh, everyone's quite happy chomping away and being quite content until the politics from different nations, or companies that run your country combat other countries' companies at the top, because every country is run by companies, big corporations. It really doesn't get into the complete free trade agreements which were signed. And you have to dig into them actually if you want to understand anything at all. Because don't forget, when China was given free trade access by the WTO, the World Trade Organization, the deal, and I did so many talks on it too, as we floated through everything getting made in China.

Our companies were paid by our governments using our tax money to move to China. You have no idea the amount of operation this was. And China was to be exempt from paying taxes basically, from stuff it would send back, all the goods and services sent back to your countries, all the products, they could be free of import duties in your countries, but they could charge import duties on your stuff going to them, for I think 15 years. And it could be repeated for another 15 years if they claimed it wasn't going so well and the companies that moved over there, if they claim they weren't getting the full, that they'd lost profits until they were fully up and running over many years, they could also live tax-free for a while, the same deal. So anyway, here you have "How China gets what it wants from American companies". Because you're supposed to have a balance of trade. Well, the balance of trade has just been a big, like a seesaw with the end pointing at the ground towards China, as all the cash [Alan laughing.] runs towards China. Then when it comes to importing, it's the opposite way around, it's all flowing from China, you see, we don't make much anymore, in a service economy.

But it was planned that way. It was planned that way. And the free trade agreement they made for the so-called Common Market, which turned into the European Union with a central Parliament, is the big boss. That's what they sold there too, was the idea to have free trade and you wouldn't pay all these taxes and so on. But now they're up to their eyes in debt, in a service economy. They had the articles out in the 1970s about that. So, this isn't... this free... this service economy idea, it's perfectly understood that top economists wrote incredible, well documented publications out in the 1970s in Britain and in the European countries about what it meant to be a service economy. You paddle, and it's like a dog in a swimming pool, you paddle and paddle until you can't, your energy is gone. You're not producing anything. And you start borrowing money. Then you're in debt. And when you're in debt you're owned. And who owns you is the boss. That's how it works.

Anyway, I'll put this article up, "How China gets what it wants from American companies". Because naturally they want to continue the same way with the same imbalance of trade. And let's be honest, how can you possibly simply balance trade anyway? It's not an exact thing. If they're making it, they've got the factories in China and you don't have them here, how can you possibly compete with it? You can't compete with it. It's nonsense. We're all in the same boat basically. But I'll put this one up and you can read the articles and how they are in talks to avoid a trade war it says.

Another article is, again, how they're pushing the same thing the CFR was pushing a few years ago when they said it's time that the big powerful people like Bill Gates and so on, the big philanthropists took their proper role in governance of the world. Well, we don't vote for these folks. Do you realize we're getting a new system introduced with you acquiescing to it, and yes, you acquiesced because you don't say anything about it, because you don't quite get what they're saying to you. [Alan chuckles.] You sort of.... You can't have a democracy and you can't work alongside folk who are just self appointing themselves because they're all incredibly wealthy and powerful. That's not a democracy.

Stratospheric aerosol injection tactics (Alan: …which they're using at the moment, they worked out the cost...)and costs in the first 15 years of deployment -. Iopscience.iop.org / 23 Nov 2018

They've been using them since 1998 of course. We were all called crazy when we all came out and said that in 1998, the people who actually noticed them. Everybody thought you were nuts... because they said you were nuts, and the media's saying you're nuts, and the television would say you're nuts. And the general public would go along with it because they don't think for themselves. Again, authority figures say that you're nuts so it must be true. But now of course, it's out. And it's okay now that it's out, there's no big fuss about it. Hm. To save the world, you understand. But one of many articles. So I've got this one here and I've got another one too from Harvard.

Harvard panel oversees geoengineering project - nature.com / 30 July 2019

Because Harvard has got stacks of stuff out there on stratospheric aerosol injection and different techniques too of supposedly cutting the sunlight hitting the earth. They aren't shy about it. Of course, it's just stuff that they want, they're trying, or want to try. They never mention the fact they've been doing it since 1998. Because if you get the bill for all the folks that have been dying off of respiratory diseases, [Alan chuckles.] I think it would put them all under.

Could dimming the sun save the Earth?
(A: Once again, you've got this person doing his... the philanthropist, you understand, the same guy who decides what he wants to do across the world, he...)
Bill Gates wants to spray millions of tonnes of dust into the stratosphere to stop global warming... (A: …global warming, you see…) but critics fear it could trigger calamity
dailymail.co.uk / 12 Aug 2019

You're a critic if you say that's bad for you, breathing in stuff like aluminum oxide and various others, and cadmium and all the others, it's not… It's probably good for you, I guess they could convince you that it is good for you. If they tell you it's going to save us all, it must be good for us, right? There you go. I'll put that article up too.

And Greenspan, I remember Greenspan before when he used to come out, like some royalty. And all the media would present him, in the 80s and 90s, if he stepped out there, it was all silence, just like, the King is going to speak. And he'd stand there and look at his audience, then he'd just… Good show business, awfully good, he would just, he wouldn't say it right away, whatever he was going to, then he just says, "cool it." And that's all he'd say. And the media would go, wow, wow, Greenspan says "cool it," the economy, you know, investments and so on, too hot. But now he says…

Ex-Fed boss Greenspan says 'there is no barrier' to Treasury yields falling below zero - marketwatch.com / 16 Aug 2019

So you're in this negative interest rate [Alan chuckles.] where you will be charged for everything, naturally. If you're still using the banks, because most folk are cashless, so you have to use the banking system, weather they go to a real bank or not. Then they can use that money overnight, they can lend it out across the planet, any savings that you have. And make a good killing off it, off millions of people savings, overnight. And then give them no return at all. That's not bad. It's a good deal. And it's a new normal. And most folk already are quite used to it since the crash in 2007/8.

Our Meatless Future: How The $90B Global Meat Market Gets Disrupted - cbinsights.com / 16 Jan 2019

You're going to see more and more of this as they try and get you off meat. Because that's a big one for the guys at the top that run the planet. I should say, men and women actually because we are equal opportunity tyrants, that's what we have. At least that's Democratic, I suppose. And I've got one here too…

Leaked climate change report says we must change eating habits to save the world
metro.co.uk / 5 Aug 2019

The Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) is currently meeting in Geneva to debate issues relating to the environment.

Remember too, the whole point of it, and they admitted it years ago, is to start cutting population. And you do it by removing energy. That's heat in the winter, electricity, etc. And air conditioning for the hot places. And then you start reducing all the different types of high protein foods that you can get. For those who haven't quite figured it out yet. And then you'll be prone to what Bertrand Russell suggested, having a good black plague every generation or so, maybe twice a generation, to reduce the population. Again…

Could the next sin tax fall on red meat?
accountingtoday.com / 13 Aug 2019

Meat could be a target for higher taxes given criticism of the industry's role in climate change...

So, it's all your fault, you see. And they give you amazing statistics here which have no bearing in reality about how much of the land is used for farming. It's pretty tiny really when you think about it. I've got stuff going way back to even documents from the 50s and 60s which talked about bringing down the amount of farms that are allowed to operate. Because it's too many people living healthily, by the way. And these are from official sources at the top.

But anyway, it's all your fault for living. It's all your fault that those who want to be in charge, who think they are in charge of the planet, see their own future being disrupted by all of you. You know, because these folk at the top want to go on forever with their own children and offspring, all the better people, you see. But all of you, you've gotta cut back and start chomping on stuff that's…

Have you any idea of the snobbery involved in organic, in basically vegetarianism? You've got classes of them now boasting about what they can afford for hyper organic foods, the stuff that's never seen the rain from the sky, it's from deep wells and stuff under domes. I read the articles years ago. Now it's in your face. It's like the brand-name stuffs for bags they used to have, the women years ago if you were anybody at all you had to have the right handbag or whatever purse or whatever it was. Or watch. And it's the same thing, same technique, snob appeal, and they boast about what they can afford for the best kinds of truly organic, and non-genetically modified too, no pesticides, nothing to keep insects off because they're grown under these basically sealed conditions, the air is filtered into them and so on. Amazing.

That first started off I think in Japan, that's where it broke years ago, under the domed ones. And then Germany and other countries too. Then we find out they're all over the place for the ultra wealthy and elite. And the politicians often get actual cards to them. Hm. Interesting. But the rest of us at the bottom, well, you know, just... That's it, you see. If you had the right genes, you understand, you wouldn't be so poor as you are now, that's what they tell you. You see.

So, this is pure eugenics. Survival of the fittest. Meaning that most, if you were fit, you see, you'd be rich and powerful, etc. etc. Important. You'd be a somebody, as the royalty used to say at the parties. When folk came into the parties, and they'd say, who's that, they'd say, you know, to the top butler or somebody. Is that person somebody? Oh no, he's not a somebody, my Lord, you know. That's… We're still here. We're still there, folks.You never get rid of that. Never. I don't care, even if there's no royalty you could never get rid of it. It's in human nature. Unfortunately.

President Bolsonaro tells Brazilians (A: ...he's their president...) to 'poop every other day' to help save the environment as he comes under fire for a surge in Amazon deforestation - dailymail.co.uk / 12 Aug 2019

So, there you go. So, don't eat meat, right, that's what the rest of them are telling you, and you can start to control, you know, other habits as well. It's not going to stop. It's not going to stop. Really. It's not.

But I want to just touch on this too tonight, it's awfully important because…

Canada joins Christchurch Call to Action (A: ...after the big shooting in Christchurch they had…) to eliminate terrorist and violent extremist content online pm.gc.ca / 15 May 2019

(A: And that's wide-open, violent extremist, or extremist content, right. You're right into the tyranny of socialism and censorship. And believe you me, it will go, it will be even further than China's at the moment. Because people who are given power to act as judges over the existence of other people, are terrifying people. They're terrifying. They really are. Human nature doesn't change, folks. I don't care what era you live in, it's much the same, really. It doesn't change.)

The internet bridges divides and helps us build... (A: …blah, blah, blah.)

But it has also increasingly become a tool for terrorism and violent extremism.

(A: So they go on through this too and they got a...)

National Strategy on Countering Radicalization to Violence, which the Government of Canada launched in December 2018. (A: ...by the way.)

And they're chomping at the bit to go. Because they've already been listening to conversations of Canadians, on the phone, and putting everybody into the categories, for those who don't know that. They want to go to the next step now, where you won't even be able to feed yourself. This is where the social credit system is going. It's an excuse basically for tyranny, I believe. And most folk are terrified into complying. Even the majority of people who really don't know anything outside of the regular 6 o'clock news on television, that's how your coerced into it, they'll find out quickly what they can say, what they can't say, what they can… right down to eventually what do you think... what do you think.

A few years ago, I mentioned about the GIRFEC program being carried out in Scotland, they had one for England too, a different name in Wales, where every child got an advocate basically assigned to them by the government. Every child, at birth. They would start monitoring them for any oddball thoughts, or if they didn't get on with every person that they'd met, even if it's in kindergarten for goodness sake, to see if they got any possible radicalization instincts in them already. So they could basically, you know, undo and tighten different bolts in your neck I guess and your head, before you grow up to be an adult. This is horrific, the thought of this, what's going on here. Horrific.

But they also wanted from the various psychiatric associations when they started up years ago, a long time ago, the right to test everybody all through their lifetime on psychological evaluation. Well, since psychology and psychiatry is heavily, heavily politicized, according to the culture of the time, and the trends of the time, what an incredible tyranny that would be. Well, they still want that, folks. They still do want that. Honestly. And they have the behavioral insights teams already monitoring us all, in all the countries, I did talks on that before. We are paying them to monitor us. And these characters are acting like judges over us. All the time.

Well, I guess you'd better just throw your free thought and free speech and your democracy out the window and make it official, for goodness sake. Really. This is sad. And it's, phew, rather scary. There's no system where they'll get everyone agreeing on the same things all the time. It's just impossible. And you have to accept that. It doesn't mean you can't have different systems of managing conflict or preventing conflict. Of course, you can. But no, this heavy, heavy hand… until we're all supposed to be clones of everybody else, clones of your tyrants' desired puppet, you know, they want to make us all into puppets. That's not living.

I mentioned too that with this tremendous hype, and everybody is I think fed up, because once the Epstein story goes, they'll have nothing else to talk about really these days. Except, how are the rich and famous doing and your celebrities, the stars, etc. Because there's nothing else out there, really. And Epstein was a good story for a while because it had all, as I said before, it had all the different parts of intrigue. It made a good movie and it's gone now too.

Jeffrey Epstein and the Myth of the 'Underage Woman' - theatlantic.com / 15 Aug 2019

But I said it would bring in eventually the talk, if he was still alive, they'd have the debates in court, they'd work it out in court and use it as a form basically to put the next step across. I'm sure they would. Because it's a system, not Epstein but the system is pushing to do away with these ideas of age limits. So…

France votes against setting minimum age of sexual consent amid backlash telegraph.co.uk / 17 May 2018

(A: And that was from last year actually.)

President McCrone accused of missing opportunity to protect minors.

(A: So I'll put that article up for those that want to read it themselves [Alan chuckles.] and don't believe it. But it is there. And it's from the Independent I believe.)

Women demonstrate to call for legislative change to set a minimum legal age…

But they won't do it, you see. And this is where it's going. I knew it would too anyway, but this is what they've been wanting for a while, the intergenerational sexual activity, is what they've said at the top, over years. Another one says…

Drop age of consent to 14, says academic telegraph.co.uk / 16 Feb 2007

(A: And that was from another newspaper in the UK. It says…)

The legal age of consent should be lowered from 16 to 14 for young people who are less than two years apart in age, according to an academic.

…so I guess a 16-year-old person with a 14-year-old, I guess that's what they're saying here. But of course, it's to bring it all down. And step-by-step you can knock the pillars down, eventually there's no pillars left, and they'll have intergenerational sex at any age, that's really what it's about. We know this. We know it, folks. They've written about it. And they've sexualized, hyper sexualized all of society since the 60s with the culture, you know, being changed through television and movies. People are addicted to television and movies, addicted to them, and all your opinions pretty well come through fiction today, they really do, you adapt to them very quickly. You adapt into them and adopt them.

And then you have... hhhuh, an historic Airport in Berlin, this Tempelhof it's called, is now a drive-in, changing it to drive-in sex booths as, again, we go down the tubes and so on.

Drive-in sex booths proposed for Berlin's historic Tempelhof airport - cnn.com / 14 Aug 2019

They've got so many prostitutes and, well, rape problems too. Prostitution and drugs, of course, that's getting, it's so bad everywhere. But society is, again, being pushed into it. This is nothing, there's nothing new. They had the articles out at universities in the 70s and 80s about the coming massive transformation of society. And we're living through it today, still, you know. There's more to come. It wasn't unforeseen. And they were teaching this stuff at universities in various social sciences and so on. And then you have…

Lawyers say Epstein victims to sue financier's estate this week
Reuters.com / 11 Aug 2019

The "Child Victims Act," which takes effect on Aug. 14, gives people a year to sue over allegations of sexual abuse, regardless of when the alleged acts occurred.

But I do want to mention the fact, we're really going into the next phase of austerity. I used to do talks on that, after that last crash, and how they churned out all these different articles and PDFs, other publications from universities on it, on high finance, etc., investments. Because the next step of the plan, and from the United Nations too, was to bring us into austerity, folks. That means, oh, we can't live like this anymore, you're living too well. And if you live too well then, you're healthy, you eat well. And if you eat well, you might have more children. And if you eat well, that means you can afford good food and more children, etc., etc. And every child, they worked it out too, every child born needs this, this, this, this and this, and they will consume… And they've all worked out how much you're going to consume per person from being a baby all the way through your life. It's just incredible. Talk about eugenics.

And believe you me, thet're are awfully, awfully nasty people out there with big, big plans. And to be honest with you, I really don't, don't see how you can avoid them. Because the power, what's happening today was planned a long time ago and step-by-step folk have given up their right to participate, and even bombard their different agencies from government, bombard them with different kinds of complaints or objections or something. But we don't really get information anymore in the new system, do we?

Not so long ago they used to publish all the time of bills that were coming up, in all countries, before they were passed and so on. So's the public, the whole idea was so folk could say, no, that's terrible, we can have that, etc. etc. And then they can get in touch with their politicians and say, you vote for that one, we won't vote for you again. But they don't even tell you anything anymore. It's simply done quietly.

So, we're not in democracy. We're in this intermediary phase between democracy and basically the expert management system as they call it, a world run by experts for a socialistic type system. Where the CFR said they were awfully close, and their goal was to communism. Because they like that system, it's easier to control everybody. If you simply are brought up in a system where you obey, you're trained to obey, that's it, folks.

Anyway, sorry for hammering on, but I'll put the links up tonight. And for those who want to go into it, and the banking system too... You should really look at it because they're all getting ready for the next phase of austerity. And with it comes, really, inflation. Which means more and more your money's worth less and less all the time. Less all the time. It's incredible.

I read something about one of the actors back in the early 1900s, in the old silent. He was supposedly the richest actor of his era. He got something like about 1 1/2 or, well, maybe 2 1/2 maybe three, maximum, million dollars in his time. And when they said, [Alan chuckles.] it was worth about 500 million today [Alan laughing.] I mean really, that's what it would be, that's what you would need to buy the same kind of things, the purchasing power of the dollar in the States was back then. I might be off with the figures a bit but that gives you an idea of how crazy it is, really, 'eh.

And it all happened through bank crashes, which are never fixed. Because it's not meant to be fixed. We've been living on a fake system for a long time. A long, long time. And it's backed by nothing, really. So, accept the promise to pay by those who supposedly… And so much of it's written off through loans to other countries. Which can't afford, they can never afford to pay it back. And it's understood that they couldn't. But that's another story.

Anyway, sorry to prattle on like this tonight but... I hope folk, and I know that folk are, by the emails and so on, watching what's happening. Because they do understand that we're going into the next phase of the new system of governing, you might say. We're in it, really. It's just a matter of training the public that they're in it now. I think that's what it really is.

Now remember, you can help me tick along and keep going by donating @.com website. There you'll find out how to send money. Aug. 25, 2019 (#1735)

Hi folks I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on August 25, 2019. I get the impression that most of the media in the world is rather sad about the fact that the Jeffrey Epstein debacle, you call it that way [Alan laughing.], or exposé, is over pretty well. Because it leaves them with a real dearth, a void of news. Because we live in such a censored system today, we hardly get anything that really matters to us in any real honest detail. As I say, what we do get definitely is the gossip stuff and Jeffrey Epstein managed to fulfill a lot of roles with the sex scandal that's like a soap or good movie. But sex, subterfuge, possible blackmail. Possible big intelligence agency operation… [Alan chuckles.] Which everybody pretty well agrees upon. And then the clumsy way it was all ended, or appeared to be ended, that no one really believes them. And then the sudden silence again about it from governments, etc. It's quite something, isn't it? But it's over. A lot of folk will say it's sad. I'm not kidding you.

Because we live in such a censored, literally a censored system today with the most powerful people, the most powerful organizations running the show now. Rather openly too. And they're not beating around the bush about going after different people, who just say things, or even think things, or even ask questions, for goodness sake.

We live in such a polarized society now, at least it appears to be, if you really believe the media. Without realizing it, most of what you get from the media now with the classes of different groups, etc. in the States, is often orchestrated by the intelligence services themselves running both sides of it. That's rather standard too. If you fall victim to jumping on board through emotion, you're some kind of loser in reality. I'm not kidding you. Because I gave talks years and years ago, about what was shown in Britain many years ago when Britain had some type of press, where they could at least talk about other countries. That was the favorite of Britain, they could always criticize other countries. Or show, give documentaries on other countries on certain things that happen. But they would never mention what was happening inside Britain itself. Naturally.

But I can remember they showed a documentary about, a long one too, about what they called racism in America and so-called neo-Nazi groups. They showed you a place in I don't know if it was Chicago or somewhere, wherever it was anyway, one of the big cities, New York or Chicago. They had a raid, they did a raid on a supposed neo-Nazi outfit there. They caught, they rounded up about, oh, well over 100 people. And by the time they sorted out all the people who attended it, you find that most of them belonged to different government agencies that were intent [Alan laughing.] on finding out who the neo-Nazis were. [Alan laughing.] So really, they actually arrested two people, and they just walked in off the street, it was winter and they wanted a coffee and a free doughnut. [Alan laughing.]

I really have to laugh at this kind of stuff as they orchestrate it by your own government agencies. They keep a lot of mythologies alive in a sense because certain powers benefit from mythologies like that. But it's quite amazing to watch this happen. And that particular documentary was a long one. It showed them doing the same thing in different cities in the US. It was pretty well the same results, actually. So, they had so many different agencies, not just the FBI, they had local police agencies, all undercover, all doing the same kind of things. And generally, too, the organizations had been set up by government agents posing as the leaders of these groups and so on. So you have to be awfully, awfully, awfully careful, folks, that you don't fall into these traps. Really. And if you think a clash on the streets with well-funded groups, [Alan chuckles.] well-publicized groups [Alan chuckles.] is going to fix anything, go away. Because that's not how the world works at all these days. It doesn't work like that. Not in the least. Not these days.

Really, it's like a massive social experiment to watch it all happening today. These are the techniques which were used in European countries, even long before World War II started, where they created… The communists of course were the first ones, based in the Soviet Union, and once they got that over, they were trying to do the same in Germany and other countries too. That caused real clashes in the streets with different factions. They were very, very real indeed. Because communism was trying to definitely take over. Today communism mutated into the appearance of social justice often and uses the same kind of rhetoric and language. But you can tell by what's being pushed, it's the same type of socialist government control.

Don't forget that in socialism the state is all-powerful. You can't fight the state by creating the opposition of itself. You can't do it. So you have… I mean, even the Nazi organization, remember, it was national socialism versus the Union of Soviet SocialistRepublics, or the Warsaw Pact countries after World War II and so on. So anyway, you definitely have the semblance of the same thing being pushed today.

Nothing you're being taught really is true about the past when it comes to these big organizations and the wars. Because you can go into looking at the funding of the Soviet Union, very old articles and books about it too that didn't have an axe to grind at the time, many of them. They told you about the massive aid given to the Soviet bloc really, right after the revolution. The US put tremendous government money and organizational power into feeding the people and clothing them and so on. And so did Canada and other countries too, they thought it was, the way it was publicized, it was going to be a good thing, you see. And we're all schmucks in a sense, to fall for sob stories and human-interest stories. That's what's counted upon with propaganda.

But you've got to understand too, that the Soviet system wasn't just meant to stop with Russia or its satellites. It was meant to spread around the whole planet. Remember? This idea of democracy was laughed at. Sometimes quite rightly so in fact because we never really had it anywhere. And the Soviet system always promises you, and this is the thing, it's always for a better tomorrow, a utopia down the road, just over the horizon, you might not live to see it but if you have any children at all, which is probably these days very unusual almost, then, you know, your children are going to see it. That was the kind of promise that the people were taught to believe in.

All through the Cold War too, even during World War II, don't forget that the West kept the Soviet system alive. Tremendous, tremendous money and goods and weaponry and so on was all shipped off to the Soviet Union, all through the war. To the expense of all the Western countries that supplied the shipping and so on because many of them got sunk by U-boats and so on. Books written about that too, and how the US supplied them throughout the war with aircraft and heavy-duty weaponry and tanks, etc. etc.

But not only that, when it was all over and done with, and eventually they nicknamed Stalin the big bad bear again. You know, because we lived in a world of shape shifters apparently. Because it was Uncle Joe became a Big Bad Bear. Because you always need, for the public's control that is, an enemy or perceived enemy to make them basically hug their own governments. That's what that's for, that Cold War type mentality. So, they turned him into a potential foe. Now, if you have a foe why would you feed them all through the Cold War? Why would Canada and the US be competingevery year for the contract to supply the Soviet Union, to all the countries, with massive amounts of grain, etc.? Because they did right up to the bitter end of the Cold War.

So nothing's ever as it seems to be. Don't ever think it. And again, as I've said before, you'll find with some of the excellent books written by defectors, or had written for them basically, most books today are all ghostwritten, in every country. So just because a person has a name on it, even folk you might know actually in different, even near-to-your-heart businesses, you'll probably find that their books are ghostwritten if you really dig into them. But that's how it's done. But some of these people who worked with them, on their own life stories on the KGB, etc. in Russia, give you a different story altogether of the class system which they belonged to themselves.

I can remember what they did in Britain too after the Cold War, was to admit, I think it was shown in Canada too. They admitted that really, they had a class system definitely in the Soviet Union. Because power creates the class system. Then eventually you have those who are in at the start of it all who get all the metals and the gongs, etc. and given their holiday homes, etc., in the forest, and servants to take care of them. Because they're very important people, you see. Then you have this class system. Then their children become the future generals or they also work in the KGB. So, it was a hereditary organization right to its bitter end. And afterwards too when they change the name of it, after the Soviet Union changed, it's still the same, they still… It's much like the Western world too. The Western world is awfully good at hiring from its own ranks of civil servants, intergenerational civil servants, agents, of course, and secret police and all that kind of thing. That's how most countries do it and Russia is no exception.

So anyway, we're living in a system where most of the past isn't taught to you. But all the defectors in Russia, of all of them, none of them ever complained I think that they'd left the country because they weren't getting enough of the material goods that the West had to offer. They already, at that level, these defectors from the wealthy families you might say, or important families, had all the material goods. They live the equivalent lifestyles, even the bureaucrats who left, they had equivalent lifestyles with better housing or apartments and all the latest gadgets and gizmos and electronics, all that kind of stuff, as their counterparts in the West. So it wasn't because they lacked anything that they left. But the rest of the public, as in most countries, [Alan chuckles.] you're left eating the lowest kind of foods as they keep the budgets restrained and all the rest of it. You know, this is…

Remember too, the Soviet Union shared its data, and the West shared its data with the Soviet Union, from their scientific associations. That always used to surprise me because every year, every year you read about the big scientific meetings and specialists' scientific meetings, or different areas of science and so on, every year they go back and forth toward the Soviet Union. Even though if you did a basic study into the Cold War, at that period, and the books were put out there, just churned out about the Cold War, what the strategy meant, and it said that the country with the most leading expertise in scientific areas that could be applied into industry, or weaponry, would become, they would become as the winners, you see. So, if that was the case, why would you allow, [Alan chuckles.] like, your top scientists in all different areas [Alan chuckles.] to go over and meet their counterparts in the Soviet Union and exchange all their data?

I mean, come on. You gotta use your own head here. And really laugh at a lot of it. Really laugh at a lot of it, an awful lot of it. There's nothing really that comes out, even during the Cold War era, this will happen, again, it's kind of happening again, as they make the enemies reappear as the big bad bear, etc. And China, far from becoming your supplier of all your goods, as it was set up to do by us of course, I hate to sayus but there are countries that own us as well, they set them up to be the manufacturer. Now the Chinese are supposedly a big threat as well. Well, you have to get off this bandwagon, or on this roller coaster, that leads you in endless circles your entire life if you really believed in it all. Because it didn't really happen that way. Nothing happens by itself like that. It's made to happen. It is made to happen.

And, it's planned that way. The greatest big things that happens in our lifetime happen to be planned that way. There's nothing that's unforeseen, really. If a meteor came in, perhaps, they'd have a bit of a chance that… And even then, the big boys have made stacks of preparations across the planet for a wealthy elite to live, with a scientific elite, so that they can hopefully survive somewhere in the world, or some of the many groups will survive if a massive impact happens because of something from outer space, as an example. But for the rest of us, no, we're expendable. We saw that in so many of the disaster movies, the kind of Deep Impact type movies that we've seen.

We also saw it with the terrible movie [Alan laughing.] with it's tremendous story of an elite surviving after the earth's crust just happens to start breaking up and shifting and all that, then the seas just overwhelm previous nations. That was 2012 I think they called the movie, where, the elite, again, the wealthy elites would, could buy passage on these specially designed ships. Designed naturally in China because they were fast, the only places left really who could manufacture in a hurry since no one else has got the industry, they deindustrialized, gave it to China. So, the elite would all survive because they could buy seats on it and berths on it. And a scientific elite would survive with them.

Even in the movie itself remember, they said too that when they got on board the ships, when these people were all selected, they're talking about all the rest of the crew, the rest of people and so on, they're selected for their genetic potential, of good genetic, good genes basically, good health and genes and intellect, etc., for a stock to repopulate the planet. So again, eugenics there. So, you get the ultra rich and wealthy, who naturally must be better than anybody else because they're rich and wealthy, right? That's literally in eugenics, Charles Darwin talked about this himself, you know. And Galton Darwin too. Quite amazing.

So yeah, so the rich would, obviously had proven themselves worthy because they became rich, and if they held onto it for a few generations then they were worthy to go. But the rest of the people would show by, their merit would be through intellect and scientific abilities and things like that, and technical abilities, so they would be chosen for that. But they'd have to also have the proper genes and good genes so, they did genetic background checks and all the rest of it like that. It's amazing how they bring it all into it, 'eh? And you think you're living in a classless society. [Alan laughing.] You have to have a chuckle once in a while, 'eh? Don't you?

But again, Orwell did say it in 1984, some are more equal than others in such utopias. Hm? And that's the world we're going into right now. Academia unfortunately is a tremendously snobbish field today. It's so snobbish, with so many, I guess just too many people across the planet going into it. It reminds me of Kung Fu. And I can remember it, you see. I can remember when kung fu was made famous on television by the series called Kung Fu or Caine or whatever it was with David Carradine. All the youngsters and children were going around kicking themselves and giving themselves bruises all over the place by trying to emulate what they saw. This became awfully, awfully popular naturally. Then the movies came out as well about kung fu. Everywhere you looked, there was kung fu. If you go into a Chinese restaurant, in Britain for instance, you'd suddenly see, and I mean suddenly, see these guys that came from China, and their chests were out strong and proud, you know. Because everybody in Britain thought, well these guys must all know kung fu, you see, so, they give them more respect. And these Chinese guys could see that, so, they strutted around as though they were all champions of kung fu.

Of course, when you talked to them, they'd say they didn't know it at all. It was really this… just as entertaining to them to watch it on TV as you. Because they didn't, they'd never studied kung fu either. At least that was honest. Whereas, but again, the people perceive it all differently, they must allknow that. It's the same in academia. Which again, it's like getting an infection. If you go into the higher learning courses, and you pass exams, which are meant, broadly speaking, for most folk to pass, right, then you get a little bit of praises from different masters and so on. And you get the little bits of paper. And in some cases, you might get called a different title, you see. And you swagger around, just like the guys in kung fu or Chinese restaurants, you know.

They've trained the public to look up to the people, you see, who get turned out, I mean churned out of universities, mainly with useless degrees. Because they'll never get work in what they're doing. Most people in… Well, so many people in different scientific areas literally make a career, and they get courses in this by the way, a career on how to live off grants for your entire life. So, they get taught how to procure the grants. They have courses in them, you know, and how to… Like salesman, and you become the salesman, or you employ the companies to do it for you, to get grants. Then you can live off grants. And you can.

For years how many times did you see, like, say, the heart and stroke foundation, and it did this for a while, silly little [Alan chuckles.] at the end of the year you've gotta show something for the money, right, that you're getting. They would say something like, some countries such as France have said a drink of red wine once every evening will extend your life and cut down blood pressure and help your heart, you know. And folk would lap this up. Well, did you know what they said, that… So everybody would start, you know. And all the wine manufactures were awfully happy then. Then maybe two or three years later, you'd see the same organization telling them, white wine was better. [Alan laughing.] Then a few years later they'd tell you that no alcohol at all was good for you. [Alan laughing.] So, come on here. Come on, 'eh. Come on.

And if you, have you noticed in the newspapers they have, they had these aggregate sites too. If you click on something from a newspaper or whatever, they'll take you to an aggregate little news thing. They'll try and lead you in circles reading silly articles after silly articles to pass your life away. As they monitor you watching them and reading them all. But they'll take you into these little sites, scientists have found… There's a thousand scientists have found, you know, every day, something. I read the article a few years ago on it and I think I mentioned it on my radio show in fact. And I said, I read it off, a bigger study on these reports that said [Alan chuckles.] the majority of these reports are found to be untrue in two- or three-years time. Because some other scientific crew will get a grant to find out something that's opposite. They just make stuff up. That that's how bad things really are today, 'eh.

So, you can get a career making things up and passing it out there as real news. I even read the articles from guys who worked and got employed by big Pharma countries to give them great writeups on certain drugs and so on. They actually admitted that, without giving their names out, they can't do that. They did two or three shows on television some years back where, with the person there in the shadows, but admitting to what they'd done, and making a good living off it, and they publicized this kind of stuff. There's so much deception out there that it's not funny at all.

It seems to be the norm across the board is deception today. And it can't be anything else I suppose really, when you think that most things today are built on a very materialistic scientific basis where everything must generate income. Money. Either personally or some other way. So, they've gotta give out lots of, any kind of articles, just spew them out, to bring them out to get income, etc. And deceiving people then is okay, apparently. I mean, governments do it all the time, right? And they do. Of course, they do. It's sad to me to really think that conditioning of the human mind, it's been almost so perfect that most folk never question anything at all anymore, they just accept the authorized view on things, like Brzezinski said they would do eventually. We're long past that stage. We passed that a long time ago. Most folk really, really do.

Even the sciences of conning people are so tremendously accurate now. Because we're so well studied. So well continuously studied. In fact, if you are not easily malleable, or manipulated by powers, from people that you wouldn't even meet generally, they're finding out on the Internet, you see, they know exactly what will get you going in a certain article or whatever it happens to be, and they'll give you a whole bunch of other ones to follow. Because they're watching you and they'll give you all these suggestions. It isn't just the big ones that are doing it, like Google, you know. They're all pretty well doing it. And there's lots of deceptive ones too that say they're not, but of course they are. Because they're making money off you and studying you and passing the information on to others who study and watch you and manipulate you.

As I say, it's so sad because everything goes down to money. Everything in the system depends on money. Even though money is, we've been taught to believe in it, it's not real. It's not real at all. Money at one time had to be physical. To be accepted it had to be physical, something you could hold. Even the weight of money, they called it, the weight of money, when it was coin, at one time a coin, you could live on a coin for all week, maybe a month if it was gold. And longer than that. But the money system, since it is in control of everything, is the most powerful instrument in existence. I don't care what it's called or if it's even abstract today, it's still the most powerful thing. Because everything on the planet depends on it. Everything. And don't forget during the Great Depression you find that all the factories still existed. The companies that supplied fuel for factories and everything else all existed. The vehicles to transport goods, etc. all still existed. But everything stopped when the money stopped flowing. Which sounds kind of crazy, doesn't it? But that's what happened.

No one works when there's no money to get paid with. It's a powerful thing. And governments are panicking because then they can't govern because the folk, what is there to govern? The people won't listen to you. And also, you'll get blamed for helping it to happen in the first place or allowing it to happen. So, you've got a system where gangsterism runs the system. Now, gangsterism is often very, very legitimate in a sense. I guess that's the right word for it, really. When it's necessary, or it's the, it's become, it's made itself necessary, and there is no competition, then of course it is. It's become a legitimate form, when there's no competition, even though it is gangsterism. Because it was based on nothing and yet money is supposed to be based on something, you see. Then it's a con game. And it's the biggest con in the world of course.

Countries like Britain, and many countries have the same kind of system, had money going way back for centuries based on weight. It was worked out with different metals and from the top right down to lesser metals and the value per pound, the weight of a pound. The pound was a weight. So, you had 240 pennies, for instance, would give you 1 pound. So that was how you measured the pennies. And you had the same when it came to silver. Which, again, it had to be of so much of the coinage, like six pence or even three pennies, they had three penny pieces which were silver at one time. But there was enough of them all counted out had to weigh 1 pound. And that's why the pound is still called the pound today in the UK, it was based on the value of that. So, no matter what happens you'd always have that same thing on the go.

Of course, the great guys who helped take it all over with the Bretton Woods agreement and all the rest of it, took everyone off the gold standard. And gold was at the very top. And then silver. And the British pound was based really on sterling, sterling silver. So, it was emulated across the whole planet, that same kind of standard. You still had gold currency at the top of it too where you could have guineas at one point in gold and that kind of thing. So but really, gold was at the very, very top. Then you had silver. Then you had brass. And then you had pennies. So, it worked out really well until they took you all off it. Well, if you're all off it and then there's nothing tangible anymore, well then you can inflate it whenever you want to. And what they mean by that, they keep just printing money off... and now they just add it to a computer screen and that's your money.

Keep adding zeros to the end of the number and that's where we are today. Each time they do it, you see, it becomes, whatever currency… [Alan chuckles.] whatever currency they pretend it was based on becomes more and more diminished in purchasing power. Just like back, and you can do it on the Internet so easily now, on what, say, 1 million dollars or 1 million pounds was worth in 1900 in purchasing power, when you compare it to today, how many millions you would need today to get that same amount of purchasing power in buying different articles and so on, that's how they work it out. We're so devalued. And with every crash they always devalue it more. A crash is often designed to be so with the compliance and authority of government in order to bring and lessen the worth, the actual buying, purchasing power of that currency. That's why they do it every so often. And it's getting ready to do it again, as you all well know.

It's a racket. There's no need, actually, there's no need… that you couldn't live on 1 pound today if it still had the same value it had in, say, 1900. You'd live on that for a good week, awfully well in fact, and eat awfully well too. There's no reason why you can't. It's because of the cons of money. Until eventually you have to earn 10,000 pounds a month to pay a very, the rent, and a little one room place, for a month. That's where you're going with it all. But again, it's a racket.

So, governments are not really what you think they are. Definitely not today. They work with academia, the conmen that are churned out, with the tremendous arrogance, the same arrogance that you used to see with the class system. They churn them out. And they automatically are trained, in a communistic fashion, because a lot of the techniques used today are from communism. Communism was way up there in using scientific methods and study in manipulation. Part of the communist technique for planned change was to enforce the belief in, that, don't trust anybody over 30, for instance, was a common slogan. To get the generations separated. Because with the younger generation you can plan the changes much easier because they will implement it. They won't listen to any other folk who have experience and wisdom so you can get rapid change.

Universities today are turning them out the same way. And they are arrogant. And they swagger. And they actually will look at anybody older than themselves as though they are obsolete in a sense. Because they've been trained to see them that way. It's an anti-human system. Because what the system is being managed by is a system, or where it's supposed to go is into anti-human system. When you have rights taken away from you because of your opinions or your thoughts even, or even asking, being curious and asking questions can get you in trouble. That's where it's all going. Then you're not living in a really humane human system at all. And that's planned behavioral changes, that's what we're going through right now with all the changes where opinions must be standardized.

And they really mean standardized opinions. They have all the professionals that they churn out of universities in different areas getting good money, getting paid, you always bribe the henchman. And you can have henchman of the mind, of course. These are the scientific managers, the psychological managers of the mind, paid awfully well to manage us for the masters at the top who pay them awfully well. You'll find with these characters who work like that and have no conscience about it, there's a high level of psychopathy. And that's not there by chance either.

We also live in a system where the traditional values, that kept us, the values we used to have kept us secure to an extent, even through terrible times. Because we could help each other out, we had common cultures for instance, and values, and folk would help each other out. Before all these pretended social services, all these incredible agencies that, multilayered to dominate everybody and families and everything else that they have today, people helped each other out. It was the humane thing to do.

Often people, even atheists would say it was the Christian thing to do. Because it was, the values came from our, an old religious background, regardless of the religions themselves. And so, it worked well in times of crisis for the people. But that's been destroyed as well. You're supposed to basically rely on various forms of unemployment, welfare, social assistance, experts again, that are churned out from colleges and universities to take care of things for you, you see. And again, that's all politicized. Now it depends who you are, if you want help, what category you belong to. That's how bad things are now as they divide up into multileveled victimhood areas, you see, who gets priority and help and all the rest of it. Well, I'm so surprised that people even put up with this nonsense.

Because you see, power will always derive more power from, and guaranteed power from areas that will help the most. That's why it will keep certain areas and certain groups of people suppressed. They'll count them for a voting block. When your income, and literally livelihood, just survival, depends eventually on the state supplying you with financial needs and so on, then you can pretty well guarantee a voting block for that, you see. It’s guaranteed. Every group of people out there, I don’t care who you are at all, if you belong, identify with some kind of group or other, you’ll be used down the road by those at the very, very top, who have divided and conquered everybody.

The US had so much going for it for such a long, long time, and volumes were put out by the United States. And yes, the money was in the early and the money managers were in their early and they took over unfortunately the same role that Britain had, under the pretense of being the policeman to the world until they’re exhausted. As many in Britain and academia at the top at that time, who worked for the big organizations, the Royal Institute of International Affairs that runs everything, who planned the global society and so on and who planned for the US to take over, and Arnold Toynbee and others mentioned, the US would literally run itself into the ground as the “policeman of the world”, that it would be exhausted by wars and bankruptcies and so on. Because wars are expensive. And then you could have a massive welfare state out of it too. And that all further destroys you because it’s nonproductive. And yet more wars come along, and you’ve got a dwindling tax base as the ultrarich all bank offshore in real tangible goods like real estate, that’s why they call it real estate, hm, and everyone’s left with useless currency that doesn’t work anymore and it’s so devalued.

Old story, mind you. But it's a shame because the US had a lot going for it. Because it was an industrial giant, with great resources and a large population, very quickly grown basically, a large population. Then naturally gangsters move in, and the system basically bleeds the general population for taxes and so on, which often go off to the very areas I'm talking about now like science and technologies that end up dominating you. And then again, from academia once again you still have eugenics running wild with so many different, ha, areas that really are simply practicing the beliefs in eugenics and inferior types and all this kind of stuff.

And don't, I'm telling you, don't think that you're in some kind of top... It's like Julian Huxley was a eugenicist, remember. And the left-wing praises him for being a founding member of Planned Parenthood. But he believed in eugenics. And he said all the helpers and so on would eventually, he said, expect to get into this, it was almost like he was talking about the arcs in 2012 and that kind of scenario. He said, they expect to come into this upper echelon, get to manage the planet, only to be terribly disappointed that they themselves don't have, don't fit the bill in a sense, didn't have the right stuff. I'm kind of paraphrasing but that's how he put it in his speeches and his books. So, they'd be used and then disposed of, you see. That's always the way it goes.

Because in their mind they were going to be, and he coined, he used the phrase too, it was often said that he coined it but that's not quite true, but he certainly used this term, trans-human. He was a trans-humanist. And in his mind at the time they were the natural rulers of the planet. Old families. Intellectual elites who had money, power, and scientific knowledge too, he added that into it. So, they would be entrepreneurs, and as businesses that use sciences or employed sciences to manage everything. Like the people today who have been presented to us as stars. Because they're awfully rich. And governments basically make their businesses by giving them all the grants, for grants in everything and then promoting them as some kind of geniuses that you should follow. That's what we’re seeing. Trans-humanist.

But they also say that their goal is to alter humanity. Because humans were made imperfect. Just like the world, back to the old Garden of Eden analogy, you know, the world was left imperfect, you see. But the master builders will then perfect it. Now, they're talking about humanity and the planet and everything on the planet. The same things that came out of Monsanto years ago and those who were manipulating genes of plants, etc., they were going to perfect everything. Then we saw it coming from the geneticists who deal with biology for humans. They were saying the same kind of thing, yes, oh classed as this and classed as that and they would basically allow the inferior types to die off, etc. etc. etc. Like HG Wells did in his book A Modern Utopia.

So, we're living through it, it's just that folk get caught up in the rhetoric, so much so this overload of data that they don't recognize what they’re living through. They get caught up in the emotions. So many sites out there now are, what side are you on, this or that or whatever. And the first rule, the first real rule in any kind of warfare, or even in martial arts, is if you lose control over EMOTION, you've lost everything right away, you're a goner.

A good example of that, and you see it in some sports, at least you see it with old sports. The boxer who used to be called Cassius Clay and then called himself Mohammed Ali would goad his opponents, and by using the media before but goad, goading, sometimes starting a month, two months in advance, just goading them with little comments he'd make and so on. He was perfect for the technique of getting a person to just lose it, you see, so, by the time they'd get in the ring the person’s ready to fight, he's just so angry at him, he's lost his… he forgets everything he's been taught. And he gets beaten. So, Mohammed Ali would always win, you see. But that was the trick of it. That was a trick that he used to good effect for his particular sport.

It's the same with all types of warfare. Gaining knowledge is a battle. Gaining true knowledge is almost impossible. And in today's age. Because through the 80s, through the 90s especially libraries were given lists of books, and I read articles on it too, on shows, where they were told what to dump, all the books to dump and so on, and I read it, don't worry, it will be on the Internet. You see? And I knew before I even got a darn computer, and I only use the computer just for the show. I even said it in the 90s, when I didn't have one, I said, and I was on shows, I said I don't want a computer really because if I ever get one it will be just for shows, because it's not out there to help me. You see?

So once the books that were up there, but then you start to find that you've got different versions of the books on the Internet. Or half the books will be gone. Or you'd see whole chapters were gone. And then eventually whole books were gone. [Alan laughing.] It's quite down the memory hole. It was predicted. I said that would happen in the 90s. Everything's so obvious. And then folk, oh well don't worry, we can burn this and all the rest of it, yada, yada, ya. Well, guess what the power is, folks? Because you see, eventually, they don't outlaw this, they just make them obsolete, with the newer computers, and eventually you have computers that don't have drives, you see, for CDs and DVDs. And it’s designed to go that way. Unless you really hold onto old, old computers, and store them awfully well with spare parts and so on, so that you can still play basically old format stuff that you saved, down the road, when so much knowledge is gone.

The greatest technique that is used by tyrants today, apart from massive surveillance like never before... I mean, this is the greatest dream that they could never have in the past, is total observation of every individual. In order to keep them safe from terrorism, you see. Never had that ever before. What a dream, 'eh? They'll never stop using it. It's going to get worse and worse. They've trained most of the people, the younger folk, that it's quite normal. They don't mind. Most of them don't mind. And that's quite something, quite a step forward for tyranny really, where they've trained the victim not to mind. And the victims don't even see themselves as victims because they get all their free goodies to go along with it, etc.

Some years ago I mentioned articles about behavior modification by governments. And you've got…

Behavior Change Practical Guide for governments

Common Good behavior change
Communicators and behavior
Planning for behavioral change seminars at universities (Alan: …and so on, on behalf of governments.)
The theory of planned behavior (A: …etc.)

On and on and on it goes. And these aren't hobbies, folks. These are meant to actually be used. And they are used all the time on us, and folk don't realize it. And that's awfully sad, that, that people have given up, as predicted by the people who study you and published so many of their books and publications, you give up everything for little freebie this and freebie that, for instance.

I'll try to find one little article. Here's an example for instance, and I think I used this a few years back, by the panels that actually work with the government. It doesn't matter which government, they're there permanently now. And one of them is…

Over the last decade there's been an increasing recognition in the UK of complexity of managing the performance of public policy.

(A: Now, the same one in the States and elsewhere too, same organizations because I’ve read them from different countries. Anyway, this is the British one, or one of them I should say, articles. So...)

The Prime Minister strategy unit, (A: …right...) in 2002 published a report introducing the concept of public value to the UK policy environment. And public value refers to the value created by government, services, laws, regulation and other interventions. The report identified three key dimensions of public value outcomes.

Delivery of services and trust

(A: That's what they gave us to keep the people obedient and everything working, you must have at least these, right. And then...)

…highlighted the centrality of public preferences across all three dimensions in determining that value. It argued that value only exists if citizens, individually or collectively, are willing to give up something.

(A: ...in return for what you're offering, right.)

This might involve monetary sacrifices, i.e., taxes and charges. But also granting coercive…

(A: Here's the key...)

…coercive powers to the state…

(A: Right, where they can manipulate, they kind of force you along, you know what I'm saying...)

…such as in return for security…

(A: We'll give you security but it's going to cost you, you know. And/or again...)

…coercive power and disclosing information…

(A: They know all about you and what you're doing, what you're looking at.)

…and giving time or other resources…

(A: And as an example, they say...)

…such as blood.

(A: Right, no kidding you.)

Often then this involves changing behavior and this is much easier to achieve if policymakers give greater weight to public preferences for a trustworthy government, due process and fair treatment in legitimizing this change.

(A: It goes on and on and on.)

Now, I tell you right now down the road you're going to get, and they go into the different books and publications they use themselves such as...

Halperin Bates and Bales 2003, an introduction into the social psychological literature on the factors which underpin individual and group behavior.

And then it tells you how these, this under thing can actually be used to or actually achieve behavioral changes in the populations. It really throws out the window the idea that you're living through your own life. [Alan laughing.]   Most folk really do think, well I'm still, oh I plan things, oh I know what my opinions are, no one gave me my opinions. You know. Even what they look at has been given to them. But there's nothing new in it, folks. I mean, this is how things really work. And the public have no idea. Most of them have no idea at all.

It's kind of like what they said about communism. They tried to get communistic uprisings in different countries in the West, including Britain. But they couldn't get the workers to go up into revolution because the workers were too busy working. You see? Well, it's the same thing with all the information on what's happening and have been done to you. What's on the side of the manipulators is the fact that folk are too busy generally making the income to pay their taxes, to pay for the security, to pay to be studied by governments and agencies galore and that kind of stuff to even read this stuff themselves on what's being done to them.

But what they go through is, oh they can offer you little freebies, mousetraps and so on, if you just sign on here and sign on there, and you get a discount at the grocery stores and discount at pharmacies and discount here and discount there. These aren't discounts folks. They're charging the normal price. The folk who won't join their special cards and customer preferences and so on, they're getting penalized with higher charges. That's what it is. They're not losing money by giving you what you think is something cheaper. It's all psychology. And unfortunately, it works with most people.

Now, I had no idea what I was going to talk about tonight. Because really, as I say, there's hardly anything in the news except absolute fabricated nonsense. When I looked at one of the papers today, all they had at the top was Prince Harry, I think it was, and Megan his wife, flying off to some multimillionaires/billionaires paradise island somewhere for just the squandering of massive money and so on, a private jet yada, yada, as they tell us, the same characters that were telling us recently we've got to cut back and we're causing too much pollution and stop using, you know, fuel, etc. And they jet all over the planet on their private jets, etc.! You know what I'm saying, 'eh? Yeah.

Anyway, I had no idea what I was going to talk about because there's a dearth of news, as I say. And people are really bewailing the fact that Jeffrey Epstein is gone to an extent. Because if they'd dragged this out for a while, that's all you've got for months, maybe even a year, is the ongoing revelations, etc. of the scandal. But it's all gone now. And it won't go any further because too many powerful forces are... [Alan chuckles.] It can't expose these forces, folks, can't be done. And that's the way it is in the so-called democracy that we all live in.

But before I go tonight, 'eh, as I'm prattling on here, as I say, I have nothing ready to even prattle on about. But I'll put up a few things. One is…

To Break Google's Monopoly on Search, Make Its Index Public - bloomberg.com / 15 July 2019

They're talking about these things. It won't make any difference because that happened too with Standard Trust, the oil company. It's been revealed and actually authenticated that all Rockefellers trust was broken up into different companies, pretending to be different but they all in reality were subsidiaries of Standard Oil. That's out. So, that's all they do, folks. Everything is deception and perception management. What you perceive and what you're told makes your perceptions into what you think is reality. It doesn't. It's still all privately owned for the same purposes.

And power doesn't... I don't even... Hhhhhhhhh. D'you really think that power ever gives itself up? It doesn't happen. That's why countries go to war. Countries go to war because they both want each other's power, or one wants the other person's country for power. They don't give it up. It doesn't happen. It's the same with the corporations.

Remember too, getting back to eugenics etc., I mentioned so many times The First Global Revolution, which is published by the Club of Rome, a big think tank for the eugenicists. Amazing stuff they have turned out, by the way. An elitist system that quite openly talks about the fact that democracy is not working. Which we know is a joke anyway. It was supposed to keep us all pretending to ourselves in a self delusional state of mind that we are free. But the Club of Rome work for the elite, they're one of the big think tanks of how to implement the new system. They said...

In searching for a new enemy to unite us,

(A: That's from The First Global Revolution, published by the Club of Rome.)

We came up…

(A: ‘We came up’, right, because they were given the job of finding a way to unite the planet for the elite.)

We came up with the idea that pollution, the threat of global warming, water shortage, famine and the like would fit the bill.

(A: Would FIT THE BILL. Because that's what they were asked to do, find something that the public could swallow, right, so that they'd all have to listen and obey, in a system of being governed. Hm. That's what it really means. So they go on to say here…)

All these dangers are caused by human intervention. The real enemy then is humanity itself.

Meaning, all of you lot. Okay? And don't forget too, I mean, Barack Obama was… there's no… Anybody who is picked, I don't care what ethnic group you think you identify with, or your vote for, everybody that is elite, at the top, is all picked by the same club, folks. And Barack Obama was the same. Because he went to Africa too for visits and he told them too, because they were… Don't forget this whole idea of sustainability. The Africans aren't going to get their central heating, or central air conditioning, the average family there. They're not going to get all the fridges to keep everything good. They aren't going to get things to keep them healthy and help them get healthier and survive better. But he said, ultimately if you think about all the youth that everybody has mentioned here in Africa, if everybody is raising the living standards to the point where everybody has got a car and everybody has got air conditioning and everybody has got a big house, well, the planet will boil over unless we find new ways of producing energy. Well, he's telling us that, population reduction, 'eh. Hm? M-hm.

And lots of articles and papers too put out by the elites themselves, and the Gates Foundations and Rockefeller Foundations all go into different projections of tomorrow, you know. One of them is called...

The Country School of Tomorrow, Occasional Papers Number 1.

It goes back to 1913. A vision of the remedy of how to depopulate and so on, right, and how rural folks would not be given all the benefits of the elite who had a natural right to rule things basically.

We shall not try to make these people or any of their children into philosophers or men of learning or of science.

That was funded by the Rockefellers 1913, hm. And that goes for the world, folks. So, nothing is ever what it seems to be. We live through a dream in a sense. But the dream is managed by those who manage, and own, and believe that they own the world. If they own your mind, because if it's not yours someone else will own it, folks.

Do you realize that true right-wing government, the meaning of it, would be closer to anarchy? An anarchist basically would say, don't bother me and I won't bother you. No rules, see. The rules apply to each situation that each person who you come in contact with, don't bother me and I won't bother you. That's true, the true right wing-ism for those who don't quite know that. Leftism is a strong government, a state, the state is God and controls everything. It's the system the elites prefer because then everyone was born and trained to obey. For those who don't quite know that. Don't follow people because they're put out in front of you to vote for. They're picked out in advance and vetted too in advance. So, I'll put that up.

Again, you know, you find that Brave New World had Soma and so on and how Aldous Huxley talked about drugs being used tremendously on the populations to control them. It's just astonishing to me to see so many articles that are advocating drugs that are basically, were always put down as being illegal because of their psychotropic effect, and getting pushed as good things, that people on the love drug, it’s called a love drug, you see, MDMA, ‘eh, the love drug, you know. So there's your opinion given to you right away...

People on love drug MDMA still know who to trust (A: ...it says.)
researchgate.net / 19 Nov 2018

MDMA makes people more cooperative, but not gullible.

For recreational users, ecstasy has long been associated with a harmonious mindset. Now there’s research to back that up. In a new study of MDMA, ecstasy’s main ingredient, the drug indeed made people more cooperative—but only with trustworthy partners.

(A: You see, there you go, there's your new study. And I told you about [Alan chuckles.] all these studies. This article is from, I think it's an old one too, quite good, actually.)

Conducted at King’s College London, the study is the first to examine MDMA’s impact on cooperative behavior in detail.

(A: Getting back to what I just mentioned about the government and their psychological units and the behavioral impact units and so on, working with them. This is one of these articles, you see. And again, King's College London, given a grant, they all live on grants, all these different people, and they churn out these reports after studying it.)

Researchers gave twenty healthy adult men either a typical recreational dose of MDMA or a placebo. The participants then played an online game against an unseen opponent, either cooperating or competing for points. If both chose to cooperate, they both got points.

You see, that falls into the previous article I mentioned too about they'd even give blood, right, as an example. So, if you cooperate you get points and so on. It's just too easy. And folk are getting manipulated all the time with their computers. It really is sad, that. Because when it was announced to the population people thought they were going to have freedom maybe for the first time, really, at least for thought expression or whatever. But it's all been taken away, naturally. You can’t have that, say your owners.

Power and the Internet - schneier.com / 31 Jan 2013

Also, I just want to touch too, it's an article that's in the paper but it's just pretty typical…

Sacramento salon owner claims Californian homeless crisis is forcing her to relocate after 15 years because she has grown sick of multiple break-ins and cleaning up syringes, urine and feces from outside her premises every day - dailymail.co.uk / 20 Aug 2019

I mean, aaah, you can imagine how the folk in, say, the 50s and 60s would have ever, if you'd have given them a store like that they'd have been utterly horrified and couldn't… they'd go into shock. But now it's quite common, as all the old values that kept everything working, the folk helping each other too, have been destroyed.

Culture war. Total. You see, that's total cultural war. That's how you take down a country. Forget weaponry of all other kinds, physical hardware, you know, cultural war has been the big one to take everybody down. It worked so well. Even Gramsci said that too, rather than try to force the people to change you simply become their culture and then you start to gradually change it from within, until you… So you take over the culture industry. Or you create a culture industry of entertainment and so on. Many ways to do it. And then take over academia. You can actually plan how many generations it will take before you're in charge. Today they really judge a change of generations in say 10, 20-year periods. Boom, boom, boom, that's how fast you can get another crop coming up, with a further change in mind. A very old technique actually.

And then…

YouTube algorithm pushes videos with children to pedophiles, report says - foxnews.com / 3 June 2019

But there's no great uproar about that, is there? Again, with all the cultural war and hyper sexualization of everything through entertainment for so many years on television and so on, and now the Internet, I don't think you can get folk upset about too much anymore. And it's sad but it's true, when values are destroyed. And when actually that becomes, that becomes entertainment. I mean even the Jeffrey Epstein scandal, it didn't really have the impact that folk would have had even 20 years beforehand. But now that they're watching it like, say 40 or 50 Shades of Gray and all the rest of it as a standard fare, and Game of Thrones and God knows what else, you can't get folk… They've been contaminated, the terminology that's actually used, contamination, once it happens then you've conquered them.

And then…

Tech firms must give up their awkward secret: Humans- bbc.com / 24 Aug 2019

…that humans are listening to pretty well everything you're doing in all the different programs you're using such as Apple's Siri and Google's Assistant and the Alexa Voice Assistant, etc. etc. Of course they are, folks. And they have been. Other ones too, it gives you a whole bunch of them here that are totally spying on you. They've got articles out by different agencies, that have come out from the agencies themselves admitting that they've used these techniques to spy on people in their homes, by the police and everybody else, yada, yada, ya. There is no privacy. And I think we should get over that, shouldn't we, and accept it. That's just the way it is.

But anyway, that's about all I've got time for, really. I'm sorry if it's not too detailed, maybe it is, I have no idea. I don't really plan what I'm going to talk about. But just a casual scanning of what's given out for news nowadays and for this week especially, that's about all there is, really. Added to it too by things that haven't been said because it's obvious, isn't it. It really is obvious. With your behavioral teams working with governments and working on you with Internet services as well that it's very evident that you're being trained not to even really expect news. And that is the new system. Anything to do with governments, what they're up to, the bills they're going to pass or whatever, all that is to eventually get scrapped. You're getting trained into an authoritative way of doing things. Now that you've accepted that you're ruled by new laws, since 9/11 because of the antiterrorism laws and so on, then the next step is, now here's how you're governed, the Club of Rome idea, on behalf of the elite.

Remember folks, you can buy the books and discs @.com. List down from my main website all the other sites I have, they're all listed on the .com site. You can buy the books and discs or donate to me to keep me ticking along here. I always have to remember to keep reminding people because it's… As we all know we're all getting it, hard up for cash now. Because the currency is really devalued, I think they said 40% since the last crash in 2007/8. In Canada it definitely is so. The dollar is down. The purchasing power, what you can buy for a dollar, it's 40% less for you per dollar than it was back then. And it was bad enough then. But there you go. So anyway, go into the website and you can find out how to donate. [Order and donation options listed above.]

And I thank you for the folk who email, even for the stacks of photos. Most of them, I have a poor audience, apparently. But that's okay. That's... They're all people. I get to know different ones across the planet and their situations and so on. And it's good, it's good to be in touch with people who are real, with real, real physical problems and so on. And real financial problems. And all the natural problems that we have today because of the system we're living in. It's across the world.

It's interesting to find out just how similar all their problems are with the same, with the governments and finances, and again, this rather open tyranny, really, we're seeing today with what you're told... It's coercion. The threats you're getting now if you start to ask questions, or put two and two together which isn't difficult much in these days... I should say, it's not difficult these days but to put different things together, when your government's forcing you, or threatening you in a sense just to regurgitate the standard authorized opinions. Which obviously aren't true in so many areas. And that's terribly sad. And I think it will be the undoing of lots of the things they're trying to cover up. Unless you get honesty coming out, things just get worse and worse and worse. It builds up.

Anyway, for myself Alan Watt from Ontario Canada, it's good night and may your God or gods go with you.

Dec. 1, 2019 (#1749)
"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on December 1, 2019. After doing a lot of shoveling all week for snow of course, and ice, a lot of ice, I forgot even today, I was out doing the same thing today, just hacking away at the ice and shoveling the snow. And it was just like it had never stopped in fact, because I was still shoveling snow this year, it was this year, in April into May, I mean, pretty well that's what was going on. Incredible snow all through the end of last year. Actually, for the last September last year it snowed right through until basically [Alan chuckles.] May. Tremendous snow, it was very high. Every day it seems to be more and more snow.Well this… Here you go, it's like you never stop shoveling snow now. In the same year I'm still shoveling snow again after very few months of warmer weather. And it's getting worse every year now because of, well, global warming, you know, as we turn into an ice planet it seems.

But that's the way it goes in this amazing system of indoctrination, incessant indoctrination and propaganda that we get our whole lives now. It's astonishing really how repetitive and how much you're getting downloaded with from all the different directions. They got stuff in ads and everything now, little bits and pieces of indoctrination and propaganda. It's everywhere. Absolutely everywhere.

I've talked about it before, how we're living in a system that was taken over an awful long time ago, awful long time ago. It's quite interesting that, I've mentioned years ago too about Technocracy as an example, I'll touch on that tonight too, how it really came in in the 1930s as another little branch, and am pretty certain of it, little branch attached to the new socialistic order of control and management, by technocrats basically. I know that the Rockefeller Foundation adopted a lot of their planning because they already had it in their agenda that the world's resources should be taken over by the right kind of people, like Rockefellers themselves you know, and the multibillionaires of their day, and the big institutions that ran the British Empire as an example, on behalf of the City of London, and all the bankers and all the big wealthy families there.

So, it's all one big system. And it never went away. We know, we know that from people who were the historians for the Council on Foreign Relations, which was the American branch of the Royal Institute of International Affairs, which came out of the Lord Alfred Milner group, that the right people should always be in management of all the resources of the planet. Of course, that was what Cecil Rhodes and others were doing for the British section long before that, taking over gold, diamonds and minerals and all the things that you needed for commerce and manufacture would be taken over, and put into fewer and fewer hands. Until today you have, as Carol Quigley said, he said, that the future leaders will be running the world in a feudalistic fashion and these leaders would be the CEOs of corporations, international corporations. Well, here you are.

Part of it of course was Technocracy. Technocracy Inc. was a system, part of a system of many systems which all meshed together in one. It takes a lot of bricks to build the pyramid basically, a lot of blocks, and that was one of them. One of the very important ones. It never went away. It existed before World War II. You'll find when you go into the history books for example, and I think there are some good documentaries done years ago on how the West basically set up communism and funded it. They sent groups of their best engineers over to Russia. They even built towns for them, which were modeled on American suburbs with all the same kind of houses next door to each other and so on and nice wide streets, etc. etc.

You'd be astonished how the US funded all this stuff, funding communism, your supposed archenemy. Communism, remember, was a system which said they would overthrow all existing systems and eliminate all, all the older political type rulers who ruled on behalf of those with the big money at the top. Well, it's the folk who have the big money at the top that were funding communism, folks. Of course they were. And through it of course they could see their ideal system coming into view.

Now, they also had to bring in a system of managing all economies. That's what you have, the World Bank.

We know, again, from the books put out by the Royal Institute of International Affairs and Carol Quigley a historian for the same big organization, and CFR the American branch, he talked about how they set up a World Bank. The World Bank is a private bank, but it’s called the World Bank. And we all fund it, by the way. Everything’s public/private. We’re the cattle, the people at the bottom, the proles fund everything for big business and the big banks, the big banks, you see, the ones who do international lending and so on and lend to governments and so on. Private of course. They also set up the Bank for International Settlements, the same private organization. They basically decide what everybody’s currency is worth every day, that day and so on, and how much money you’ll owe down the road when you go bankrupt, or what land they’ll take from you and so on. That’s what it’s all about. They have the IMF which comes in, steps in if you can't pay your loans in different countries. They cut back on your healthcare and social policies and so on in order to pay back the money they are owed. It's not a charitable institution. It's very profitable for the few who own it. And it's very secretive too by the way. Years ago, I did talks on it.

Anyway, for me it's all boring stuff because it's old stuff and repetition, to me. Although, there's always folk coming in all the time who've never heard of this stuff before. It's true. Those who know it have to remind themselves once in a while that a lot of folk don't know it, who actually might want to know. Most folk don't care how they're ruled. That's true. That's very true.

But anyway, getting back to Technocracy. This is the engineers and the scientists who were supposed to run the world in this new brave system, this world government type system. They wanted to be put in charge of running the world and its economies and its finances and all of its industry, and how the people would live. That's what you're into today. And sustainability and the greening movement and all that, it's all part of it. Sustainability is to bring you down and down and down into, as I've said years ago, the United Nations agenda for austerity, you have to be brought down to poverty. [Alan chuckles.] That's what they meant by that.

And what have they done in the meantime? You've got hordes of youngsters brainwashed in school to act as basically revolutionary armies to stop us living where we're living, and to reduce the standard of living drastically, and the elimination of meats and everything else, until you get starvation kicking in.

Technocracy, remember, has us all down as energy units. I've mentioned this for years, energy units, we are classed as energy units. All transactions are classed as energy, you see. You don't think of that dollar being, but a dollar is energy, what it can buy, you see. You buy your food and that's energy too. Everything's energy, energy, energy. And if you're using too much energy you must perish according to the technocrats at the top. That's what it's about, folks.

So, the green movement, sustainability, all the socialistic socialism policies, and even Gorbachev, I mean, the communist leader, put in charge of a section of this whole thing and the green movement for America. Folk don't put it all together. And there's no clash between his policies and the big corporations that manufacture and run the system? And own everything? And really run everything that we need to exist? You gotta think about it that way. I'll just touch on that tonight too.

Don't forget too that Technocracy also has, really, the Trilaterals, again, experts in their fields who are unelected people appointed into politics and into central banking systems and so on across the world. And sometimes out of the central banking system and straight in, like they did in Italy, and Greece too, appointing their Trilateral members straight in as, to head the countries when they're being bankrupted by the central banking system of Europe.

The march of the technocrats - ft.com / 19 Feb 2018

It's a vastly different world then, again, we are trained to believe it is. That's also why terrorism comes into it. I can remember 25 years ago, at least 25 years ago, when it was fairly quiet in the world for the general population of the West, they had newspaper articles talking about the world to come, and if you had a world without warfare, what were the big tech giants involved in the war industries going to do? He says, well, the future will have to be a world where they can make their money selling security equipment and camera surveillance and techniques to monitor whole cities and countries and nations and continents. Well, when you read these articles and you read, you see the big wigs who are attending these global meetings, they plan the future, they always do. But they couldn't do it, they couldn't bring all this surveillance into the system without the guise of terrorism. That's what they use for it.

For those who can't figure it, you think it's all accidental that the US primarily and Britain went off to war in Iraq and Afghanistan, they've got everybody involved in it, you know, the Australian troops and everything over in Afghanistan, and Canadian ones too. So, they get them all involved in a war that made no sense to anybody, except those at the top. Because from the blowback of the wars into Iraq right through to Libya, again, the PNAC group, the Project for a New American Century, they publish the countries they wanted to be taken out. General Wesley Clark on Democracy Now, one of the generals who was involved in it, he saw the list and he couldn't believe it himself. He says, why do we have all these countries to take out?

Well, now you know. The blowback, and that's what it's called, they called it blowback, of these countries that are being attacked, are going to be brought into, put into the Stone Age basically. All their infrastructure, essential infrastructure, for producing food, even baby formula in Iraq, it was one of the first targets they hit by the way, had to be destroyed. Well, the folk started to move out.

Then through the UN, suddenly the countries that are war with them bring lots and lots of them in. And they're not happy people being bombed out of their homes and having their… Can you imagine being descended from people who have been there for maybe hundreds and thousands of years in some of these places, and losing that heritage and your memory, everything demolished by nations, who then bring you in? And you think they're going to be happy campers? Really, come on. Start thinking about it.

Well, because of it all too, of course you had problems and of course you've got trouble. We saw another well televised thing, it seems to be they always seem to pick the London Bridge for some reason, they've just got so many cameras on it apparently, so I guess that maybe the hope that they'll be seen on television or something. But that happened again with more folk getting stabbed, etc. And I think in Holland too other folk got it too.

London Bridge terror attack: 'the police rolled him over and saw he had a bomb vest' - telegraph.co.uk / 29 Nov 2019

But it's to get everybody terrified. So, your old systems where folk didn't go around stabbing folk spontaneously, it didn't happen out of the blue, suddenly happens and you get trained to accept it, just accept it, you're told. It's astonishing, you're just told to accept it by politicians. That happened in Britain by the way, just accept these things. Well, that was completely unacceptable years ago before they invaded all those countries. It didn't happen. But now you're told to accept it. And it doesn't matter how many cameras they've got they never stop it. Because they have no intentions of stopping it. They've got to have this happening.

The guy who did it in England a couple of days ago there in London, it was a convicted terrorist who some years ago with a gang of his pals had drawn up lists of places they wanted to bomb in London, and they were caught. I don't know if they were set up with this thing or whatever, but they were caught. And convicted. And he was put on probation! Until eventually he did what he wanted to do and that was it. Now they'll go into the farce of, well it's the probation officer's fault. Come off it! Come off it!

These guys are let go until they eventually do what had to happen. Then the folk get terrified and then outcomes the bigwigs, oh we are here to protect you, and we'll need more surveillance, and you can't have privacy of any kind at all, to keep you safe. This is Technocracy across the world. Because Technocracy was to bring in a system, and you couldn't have, you couldn't have democracy. Exactly the same of course as the Club of Rome who said themselves, democracy is just too slow and cumbersome and you can't get all the vital things done that you want to do. That's technocrats talking. It's also the oligarchy at the top talking, the richest people on the planet. As I say, most folk are unaware of it all.

What Maurice Strong and all these characters are doing, bringing in all their different parts of the sustainability movement and their Agenda 21 project for the whole 21st century, and then the sections of it up to 2030 and so on, what they were doing, Maurice Strong, they are technocrats. That's what they are picked to do. We don't vote these people in. We have no say in the matter. They're just presented to us. Or they present themselves to us, through big institutions.

So, nothing that you see is what you're trained to believe it is. Including your country or democracy or anything else. Or those you… Do you realize the massive machinery behind Whitehall and London? Massive machinery. Massive bureaucracies and departments of specialists and so on. Masses of them. They've got huge rooms, there are actually buildings everywhere where you have people in a circle just staring at screens and watching everything that's happening around them in different areas, but they can't stop any of this?

But you want more of it. The big companies that sell all the equipment are laughing because the money is rolling in. It's great money. You don't have to ask the customers to keep buying. No, you create terror and the government hands over the cash. There's no wheeling and dealing about price, governments just hand it over. It's a great business to be in for the weapons industries.

And so much of it is international, it's not even made in Britain. Most of it's not made in Britain actually, all the cameras and everything. Which always seem to go down when something serious happens, like the 7/7 bombing for instance. Isn't it strange, they all go down at the same time when anything big happens? [Alan laughing.] And you believe it's all just coincidence, 'eh?

We're living in a system that had to be, it was made to be, every problem is not just an accidental blowback from accidental problems. These are all manufactured and planned and carefully orchestrated, to change the whole planet and put it under control of the right people who already financially control it and own it. But there are masses of bureaucrats and technocrats and scientists, etc. and social engineers and behavioral insights teams and so on that are put in charge of us who manage us all of us.

D'you realize even, I was thinking too of the THX 1138 movie that was put out back in, oh, was it the 70s maybe. A very old movie. Robert Duval was in it. They had to work underground to keep all the power going and atomic energy and so on. They had never seen the surface, a lot of these workers. When one of them goes kind of rogue between getting drugged, because you must take drugs and you're monitored to make sure you take the drugs and so on. And you're psyched out too, you get all these different tests to see if you're doped but still able to function properly at their job, etc. But he kind of breaks away from it and stops taking these pills and starts to think for himself for the first time. He tries to escape. But he's caught by these Robocop's eventually with big, long sticks like shock sticks that Taser them. But you see him as he is getting tortured, it seems to be just plain torture from you watching the movie, as these Robocops torture him with long sticks, into different positions, in the stomach and wherever he's getting prodded and so on. It then pans off back to this big room of screens, again, with white coated scientists observing everything and observing his reactions. He's literally getting a thorough physical of all his nervous system and his brain scans, as this is all happening. Well, we're here folks. We are here. [Alan chuckles.] And that was written about years ago, do you think these guys just make up this stuff by themselves? Do you really think that? Hm? It's all here.

But I was just thinking about that today, in fact as I say, I was out cutting ice and cleaning snow most of this darn week and I didn't have much time to really look for anything to even talk about. Which does often happen, especially in winter. Sometimes I'll gather stuff to talk about and I'll just toss it away and just prattle on with whatever happens to be in my head at the time, which is more spontaneous and I think that's the way things should be.

But today as I was hacking away at the snow and everything I thought about this whole sustainability thing and Technocracy, and again, the scientists being sent off to the Soviet system, and had purpose built communities so they could build the Soviet, the communist empire... that supposedly was going to overthrow the whole world structure. Why would your own governments, and even the British one with their monarchies and so on, why would they fund and send their top, top scientists over to the Soviet Union, and their top engineers over there and build homes for them, streets and streets and towns and communities, why would you build that for your supposedly, people who are going to overthrow you and slaughter you? Why would you do that?

There's something here that they don't want to tell you. [Alan chuckles.] Things are not quite as they seem to be or as they are presented to you. That's the whole point I'm trying to make here. And I really mean that. Things are vastly different, vastly different from the way you're trained believe them to be. You're taught to believe we're stumbling down through time, on this mud ball here, and accidents just happen, and experts jump in when accidents happened to deal with the problems. You're trained to believe this.

The future is planned. I've done so many shows for so many years and have gone through so much history, often from the big players' books themselves that they put out, their memoirs and everything, and when you read this stuff 70 years ago or 100 years ago, of their dreams and aspirations for ruling the world, and in your own lifetime you saw all of it come to pass, well, you're not reading fiction and you're not reading Santa Claus letters put out by the bigwigs. This is planned. And they all belong to international massively wealthy organizations, to make it all happen. It really is astonishing.

Who do you think is funding all the Color Revolutions across the world? And even the Yellow Vests in France? Hm? How are all these folks who are protesting for maybe a year or two in France, where do they get, how are they feeding themselves that they're not working but they're protesting every day? Think about it. And now of course they're being awfully good and they're protesting, I think they said, Amazon to do with this Black Friday sale and all the rest of it and how they're ruining the environment by their commerce and their capitalism. So suddenly they've changed and they've hit...

Black Friday backlash: Protests against Amazon erupt across France - bbc.com / 29 Nov 2019

Of course, they'll be, maybe, I'm sure they'll all want to get you off meat and everything else too, and then have you on the GM food that's soaked in pesticides and herbicides and God knows what else, hm. That's what I was thinking about today, all the stuff that just goes through your head. At least it goes through my head anyway.

I'll just touch on a few things tonight, just to put some stuff in that I found. When you look at Technocracy, let's go back to Technocracy for instance, right. I'll put some links up to, I mean you can download their old manifesto, Technocracy, again which was their agenda, part of their agenda. They talk about themselves as a revolutionary movement, a bloodless, they called it, revolutionary movement that would just take over and take over and take over. But they would manage all energy resources including everything you eat, that's all energy. And what you would do, money would be replaced by credits, like Bertrand Russell said, same kind of thing, tokens dished out and they would buy so much energy. Because you need energy to live, like electricity, whatever it happens to be, and you need food and things like that. That's all energy. This is what it was all about. And that's of course is what sustainability is all about.

But it came out that...

Shock: Elon Musk's Grandfather Was Head of Canada's Technocracy Movement
technocracy.news / 14 June 2018

(Alan: His grandfather, Dr. Joshua Haldeman. I think he was a chiropractor. They were closed down in Canada by the police in fact, RCMP, because they were classified as subversive. As I say, it's often hard to distinguish when... that you can smell things that are connected, like communism, Technocracy, that kind of thing, everything goes together, socialistic movements where it's all control and orders, and their democracy. They'll use democracy to get in and then they take it all away from you, that's what they do. Because is not efficient like the Club of Rome said, the big think tank, the think tank that was given the job of finding a reason to take all your rights away, that you might believe, like sustainability, you're killing the planet, therefore you're an enemy to the planet, therefore you know, yada, yada ya. Old stuff, right. But here you have it, this thing starts with...)

. . . identifies Elon Musk as a Technocrat on the basis of beliefs and actions. What we did not know is that his Canadian grandfather, Joshua Haldeman, was an avid supporter of Technocracy, served as Research Director and ultimately became the head of the Technocracy, Inc. party in Canada.

(A: They had it in different countries and the States too. I think a University in the States, they gave a department at one point to Technocracy.)

(A: But anyway, folk never catch on to what it's all about, what's going on here. Is it just coincidence that Elon Musk's, his grandfather left of course the country in fact, kind of ran out of in a sense, and here you have it now, you have Canada and the government of Canada using our tax money to fund [Alan chuckles.] to fund his projects of changing, again, energy into electric cars, 'eh. Isn't it something?)

(A: It's interesting too, that Technocracy, because it was based on energy, they use a lot of terms from electricity and science, but electricity for sure. And I think new converts into it, and it was always, it was almost a cult like thing, very cult like and secretive. It had greater levels of indoctrination for the members up to the top. They even had their own salute form, you know, a hand salute and so on for the public, it was very Nazi-ish in some ways. And they all wore gray suits by the way, the gray men, they wore gray suits.)

(A: The technocrats really saw humanity and the whole planet, really, and all life forms as energy that could be quantified and measured and even given value. Rather dangerous, isn't it? And they named their apprentices or the novices, inductees, the new novices into their system and they called them farads, after Michael Faraday. And they had other names of other scientists as you go up the ladder basically. Faraday of course, I think they chose that because you probably remember him from your science classes and chemistry and so on and the electrical energy that Faraday really was a pioneer in the electromagnetism and capacitance. Which it's still used, it's farads, it's to measure the units of capacitance in electricity and components and so on.)

(A: It's a bit ironic of course that they chose Faraday because Faraday himself was, he belonged to the Glasites basically, it was an offshoot of the Scottish church that spread through England and went to America too eventually. But they didn't believe that government should interfere or be involved in religion or have any power over religion at all. You find that Faraday himself turned down so many titles from the royal societies and the Royal Institute, etc. Because he wanted to be a simple plain guy, he said that himself, didn't want titles. He was such a famous scientist in his day, influenced all other scientists in that field that came after him. He would be appalled to see that inductees into something called Technocracy, who wanted to take over the world's resources and manage it, as they said, properly, by the proper people, meaning themselves, he would have been appalled by it because Faraday himself, he believed in peace. He didn't believe... He was even given offers, big offers from the British government to create chemical weapons against, for Britain's war against the Russians in the Crimea, and he refused to have anything to do with making weaponry for the government's purposes.)

(A: But you think about, hhch, you think about it too, Elon Musk's car is a Tesla. Hm... Nikola Tesla. You think this is all coincidence, folks? You think it's all coincidence that your governments are all funding people who literally are never elected to do anything, they're given all this strange leeway to do whatever they want, that affects all of us? Isn't it interesting? It interests me, it's quite fascinating to see it all in action and to realize there's a much bigger organization running this whole system than you'll ever imagine and many compartments to it, with different names but all working together as specialized departments. It's fascinating really, isn't it. It says here...)

One of history’s recurring themes...

This again is from Patrick Wood, awfully good website he's put up. He worked with Anthony Sutton who put out a lot of excellent books in fact on the system and a lot of different parts of this big system that rule over us, and with the technocrats and the Trilaterals of course, that are appointees, they're just appointed to top positions everywhere. They were all previously members of the CFR, they are elevated up to Trilaterals and they have this almost incredible authority, but they've never been elected by anybody on the planet basically. They're all over the place. They're in central banking systems. They're appointed to even take over, as I say, like Greece and Italy when they had a bit of financial chaos, these guys were just thrown right in there to run the country for them. Nobody was asked if they minded. That's how it's done, folks.

Then even, Gro Brundtland who is a part of the elders group, it's called the elders for sustainability, the whole world's socialist movement basically is really a cover for total management of the planet by experts, unelected experts. That's what it really boils down to. You see, efficiency, efficiency for those who just say, you know, we could run this world so well, but the people wouldn't elect us, so we just got to do it and get appointed to it until it becomes normal, and once it's normal then we'll have our new system. Very much like you see in Things To Come that HG Wells had in his book and the movie, that kind of thing, where they go off into the future and these top scientists, then their own children by the way, and grandchildren, had the same positions running the world as engineers and scientists. Very interesting.

Because it's an old movement, even before they gave it the name Technocracy it was already there and under different guises. So anyway, I'll put these articles up. Then you also have as I say, Patrick Wood did an excellent job, he's written some books like Technocracy Rising, the Trojan Horse of Global Transformation, and,Trilaterals over Washington Volumes I and II.

I think when Jimmy Carter was in that was in that was the first time anybody in the public had ever heard the term Trilaterals. And he was surrounded by these appointed Trilaterals in his cabinet, his political cabinet. Since then they've been all over the place. They're everywhere actually. Trump is appointing quite a few right now in fact, Trilaterals in the top positions for those who don't know it. [Alan chuckles.] These are the guys who get things done, the real movers and shakers. They're not responsible to the public for anything, or criticism. The public don't even know they exist, generally. But anyway, I'll put some of these articles up. And again…

The Last Utopians
canadashistory.ca / 1 Jan 2018

(A: Is a good little article, I'll put that up as well. It says…)

Grey-suited Technocrats (A: ...and it shows you the pictures.) rally at the Hollywood Bowl in Los Angeles in 1941.

That's just before they got banned basically for being subversive and so on when folk started to catch on what they were up to. [Alan chuckles.] It had so much in common with the Soviet communist system. Because they all believe, and it's interesting too because Carol Quigley said the same thing. He says, when he was talking about the conspiracy theorists, you know, and Quigley wrote Tragedy and Hope, the big book, plus The Anglo-American Establishment, excellent book to read. He gives you the real version of history from their own records because they have their own archival records of history as they make it, in the CFR, and the Trilaterals,actually because the Trilaterals have all been members and still are I guess members of the CFR as they go up another degree.

But Quigley talked about it, and he says, yeah these people who are talking about that we're communist and so on, he says, they're not completely incorrect, he says, because our goals, OUR goals he says, right, are very similar to communism. Well, communism was for a rule by experts, folks, scientific socialism, etc., a complete rule by experts. And this mess, like the Club of Rome say, of democracy where different parties oppose each other and things can't get done and blah blah blah, you see.

Last week I mentioned too, we could never ever have total efficiency. If you've got total efficiency, we're not human anymore. And you're not free. Not free at all. Whose definition of efficiency will you be living under? Well, the characters I'm talking about tonight, you see. Exactly. The characters who will drug you and dope you in many ways you won't even understand and scientifically engineer society as they've been doing all along anyway.

But anyway, in The Last Utopians it says in here that they came out as Technocracy Inc. as I say in the 1930s during the depression, the financial depression. So, it was a good time to launch it. But as I say, this organization, most organizations existed before under different names. Now of course folk, if they're presented on the television advising some politician or some government, you think nothing of it. Well, you don't elect these characters, folks, anymore than you elect all these different characters from the CFR, the think tanks that run... you don't vote them in so why are they, why are the governments obeying them rather than obeying the public?

Mind you, the public are seldom asked these days. They train you out of being involved, don't they? Leave it to the experts, isn't that what they say? Ha-hum. And it's sad to say but the US still used to, not too long ago, used to always remind governments that they're supposed to be run by the people, not being ruled by government. Hm. Big difference.

Anyway, this article here, The Last Utopians as they call it, it's not a bad little story about it. But again, it doesn't go into the fact that they wanted to do away with borders. Just the same thing, the coincidence 'eh. Karl Marx wanted a united Europe, right, the elimination of borders, and a centralized government for Europe. They got it. The Royal Institute of International Affairs under the old group the Alfred Milner group, wanted a centralized government for Europe. Same thing, you see, borderless. They set up the United Nations for the same thing. They wanted the same thing for the Americas. Well, the technocrats wanted a borderless continent basically, Canada, Mexico, Central America, into one single nation under a regime of engineers and technicians. M-hm. You think it's all coincidence that all the different names they give to these, all want the same thing? They all ARE parts of the same thing. [Alan laughing.] There you go. Anyway, it says in this article that...

Political parties, along with money and all the trappings of the present price-based economic system — which Scott (A: ...one of the guys who was a founder in Canada.) saw as incompatible with the distribution of industry's output — would be things of the past. The economy would be based on energy (the capacity to perform work) (A: Hm...) and the new currency would be "energy certificates," (A: exactly the same as Bertrand Russell said.) qualifying every citizen to an equal share of the continent's wealth. (A: Ha, ha, ha, ha, ha. The utopia. Believe that if you want, right.) People would work four hours per day, four days per week, between the ages of twenty-five and forty-five.

(A: There ya go. Yep. And again, pigs might fly. But it says…)

As originally conceived, there would be no democracy in the Technate(A: That's what they call it.) — no elections, no parliaments — because, the Technocrats claimed, even in democracies, questions of fundamental importance are never submitted to popular vote. (A: Which is true. That is true. You've been weaned off it carefully as these characters took over to be involved. And you don't even expect to be asked.) Instead, there would be a single disciplined organization under one jurisdiction that would be responsible for the smooth functioning of society.

(A: There you go. Isn't that wonderful. One single party system, 'eh. Isn't it something?)

As John Darvill, the current head of Technocracy in British Columbia has since put it: "You don't get on a plane and vote as to whom should be the pilot."

(A: So, in other words, you know, you should use the same technique with ruling you, your countries, that's what they're getting at of course. It's quite interesting. It still exists today, as I say. But it's actually elevated high above what it even was then, and I would say even into more kind of socialistic secret societies. And the ones at the bottom, the old characters, might not even know. But as I say when you look at even the elders that run in the CFR, and the United Nations, that's what it's called, the elders, well, you see the same agendas getting pushed by them all, exactly all the same. They are the same, they are the one, they are one system. And it mentions here too…)

Walter Fryers, now ninety-four, remembers: "We were astonished when the RCMP padlocked our section premises and took records, furniture, everything. No charges were made."

Other Technocrats were not so lucky. A Regina chiropractor, Dr. J. N. Haldeman, faced trial as a member of an illegal organization. He was acquitted.

But yet he left the country. I guess that was part of the deal, [Alan chuckles.] I don't know. Because it was classed as a subversive organization who wanted to take over and get rid of government and they would be the government, you see. Obviously. So anyway, I'll put these articles up for those who care to look at it and put things together for themselves.

But you cannot deny that we have no say in anything. In the so-called democratic countries you've been weaned out of any idea, in fact most countries you never get an idea, you've never been asked about anything, what matters. Switzerland is a different country. Switzerland is far more rights for the public, and the government cannot do anything on any major scale without asking for a vote across the country. As it should be, you see. And in that way the people always hear about who wants to take your rights away and dominate you, and they vote against it. So, bills and that don't even get passed, but the public get a vote on the different bills that are put forward. In the Western societies we don't even have that. It's inefficient, you see, giving you this idea of democracy, for goodness' sake.

Margaret Thatcher was honest, I've mentioned this quite a few times, I remember it quite plainly. I used to be intrigued, because I've never really trusted any politicians I must admit. I can remember in Britain when Margaret Thatcher got in, and at that time I was traveling in different countries in Europe. When she went across to Europe, I would hear her giving pretty well opposing speeches in other countries from the ones she was giving in Britain sometimes. She wasn't any different from any other politician on that score. When she retired and left, then she became a member of the same, the Trilateral group. She said, I now belong to a group which is unelected, and we know all the other members that we worked with and got to meet, with different presidents and prime ministers and heads of the different civil service in different countries, and we can make agendas and get things done without interference from political parties. So, you understand how it works, this is how it works. This is how it works.

And the US, remember, is supposed to be a republic, a constitutional republic, set up so it couldn't be broken or taken over by any other group. And that's long gone as you well know.

Anyway, I'll put this article up too. But Canada was a big place for it too. Canada was very big for different communistic policies, and quite a lot of communists in fact. I remember too when the first defector from the Soviet Union, the first defector we know of in the Cold War after World War II happened, he left the Russian Embassy in Ottawa and he came across, trying to get in from the cold as they say, he had been hunted by his own people. It was McKinsey King that was in at the time and McKinsey King panicked when he was told by the RCMP this guy was trying to get access and get sanctuary and be taken in. Because at that time after World War II they had all this propaganda that suddenly, you know, the nastier Soviet system became awfully, you know, Uncle Joe, he became Uncle Joe Stalin as he was fighting the Germans. And that propaganda was still so, he didn't want to upset the… didn't want to upset the Soviet Union.

But luckily the guy got taken in by other people [Alan chuckles.] and talked about it. He had a whole list of all the high-level bureaucrats throughout the Canadian government that were communist members who were actually sending all the data over to Moscow. Canada was very, very big, never changed by the way, on that. But again, I'm getting off the topic. I could go into whole talks on the communists that ran Canada [Alan chuckles.] and their histories and all the rest of it going back to the 20s and 30s. So anyway, I'll put these ones up on Canada for those who want to, because there's not much time in an hour, is there?

And this is just a quick search of things too to get, that came up before I started talking so... I'm sure you can all do your own research and find a lot of it too. It keeps you… It will make you… If you're really interested in it to see what it is, it's only one part, it ties completely into sustainability and the environmental movement and everything else for that matter. Right down to even who will live and who dies eventually, the right kind of people.

Because it's a class system, very much so. Although they pretend it's not. Remember, energy units, and the more you produce the more energy credits you get; you understand that? The United Nations says that the definition of a good global citizen is a good producer and consumer. Well, if you retire and get sick or you're disabled, you're not a producer anymore. Think about it. What are they offering you now? And it started in Holland initially and spread across... Here's a pill, 25 cents, that will get rid of you, you know. It's cheaper than keeping you alive, etc. etc. That's your healthcare. That's what it's come to, folks.

You'd better think about this. I'm not... I'm quite serious about it. Quite serious. And if you get taken into emergency you better be very careful now. Because they'll hit you with the three wise men, you know, or women, it depends, who will, their job is to suss you out fast, fast. And if they think you may have a terminal problem it'd be far easier to convince you, and they bring in a very suave, good, you know, someone who's really trained in it, very friendly character, up to you, he'll give you a little talk and get you ready for the final exit, very quickly. Very cheap. That's the world we're in.

We’re getting managed like little carbon units, you see. Because we are, I've mentioned it for years and years, we are based, we are carbon-based creatures. All life on the planet is here. It's only in Star Trek you had silicone-based systems. [Alan chuckles.]   But not us. We are carbon. So, carbons got a price, hm. Energy, 'eh. You are energy. And you consume energy. But I'll put it up anyway.

Patrick Moore: Should We Celebrate Carbon Dioxide? - thegwpf.org / 15 Oct 2015

Getting back to the technocrats who are appointed over us all.

The march of the technocrats - ft.com / 19 Feb 2018

And the proxy Article 50, remember this is the one they’re using to try and keep Britain in, or Britain could use to get out if they wanted to, if they could satisfy the European Union. Actually, the whole thing's a farce. We know darn well they could have got out of they wanted to when they first won the vote, that was all legal. If the man had taken a little cabinet with him up to see the Queen and got permission, they could’ve literally taken over right there. We all know this. We all know it. It wasn’t meant to happen. Different things are on the go. Obviously. But the guy who created the Article 50...

Brexit Article 50 creator to be keynote speaker at Insider and Scotland Is Now Top 500 Business Breakfast insider.co.uk / 18 Oct 2018

(A: In other words, this guy was at a business breakfast, etc. Kerr his name is...)

John Kerr, Baron Kerr of Kinlochard is to be the keynote speaker at the Insider and Scotland Is Now Top 500 Business Breakfast early in the New Year.

Kerr, as a crossbench or independent peer is right at the heart of the parliamentary debate on Brexit as it goes through the machinery of government.

He has said: “I don’t feel guilty about inventing the mechanism. I feel very sad about the UK using it. I didn’t think that the United Kingdom would use it.”

(A: So, he invented that clause 50.)

Former diplomat Kerr has been key to the development of the EU over many years first as British Representative to the EU at the time of John Major's Government.

(A: And he's also, guess what? … Naturally, a real doer, he is a technocrat and was a technocrat by being a Trilateralist. He is a Trilateralist, an appointee. These are the guys who do things. None of them are elected, folks. They're just put there, and they get it done. And they all know what the job is, never to be discussed to the public, naturally. But he was…)

He was Permanent Under Secretary to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in the time of Tony Blair's Government before becoming an independent peer in the House of Lords in 2004.

His business career has been as a director of Shell (A: ...you know, the big petroleum company.) and then chairing the group of directors who brought about the creation of Royal Dutch Shell plc in 2005. He was deputy chairman and senior independent director of the company until 2012.

(A: And guess what, you know? Remember the big company, Rio Tinto, that was a Rothschild and Queen Elizabeth of England, the company, they were the big co-owners of it, he was…)

He was a director of Rio Tinto Zinc from 2003 to 2015.

There's a proper Trilateral member. You see. Remember, taking over the world's resources like I mentioned before, and so on, so the right folk are in charge of it all. This is a real mover and shaker. But he's only one of many, 'eh. One of many. But yeah, he's a Trilateral member. There ya go. Appointed by his private secretive club, 'eh. But you all think you live in democracies. Ha! [Alan laughing.] Then an article too out from the United Nations itself…

Business leaders join UN to rev up sustainable development investments - un.org / 16 Oct 2019

There's the CEOs, right, big corporations, to join the United Nations, to rev up sustainable development investments. Again, that's techn... You would call that Technocracy, you see.

Remember too, as I mentioned before that old David Rockefeller, you know, many years ago and before he was old, was a big player in all of this, these movements. He ran the CFR group for the US and had a big say, he was on the board of it, and he was the chairman of it. Also, he was up there with the Trilateral Commission. He belonged to the same British organizations of course, of globalization because the Council on Foreign Relations is just a part of the British system of the Royal Institute of International Affairs. Private organizations. The elite club as they call it, you know. He said the same thing, that competition is a sin. He didn't believe... And don't forget what his father had done. They had taken over the resources of all energy for America. Remember that, that's what the whole idea was. All energy resources of the era had been gobbled up by Standard Oil, and the other departments they had for all other factions of energy. [Alan chuckles.] This is ongoing, same club the City of London group were involved in and so on.

So, here's your CEOs as Carol Quigley said, the new feudal leaders, the feudal leaders are CEOs of big corporations.

Business leaders join UN to rev up sustainable development investments un.org / 16 Oct 2019

(A: You'd better understand what you're reading and hearing when you hear these. Most folk don't because it's not spelled out to them like I'm doing here.)

The Global Investors for Sustainable Development Alliance (GISD), a UN-supported coalition of 30 business leaders, works to provide decisive leadership in mobilizing resources for sustainable development, with the core objective being to identify incentives for long-term sustainable investments.

(A: And of course, they want a depopulation program. Of course they do. You take energy away from people, down goes your hygiene, down goes your food supply, and your protein and everything, and you start getting sick, hm, you can't heat yourself, you die off, you die off, you die off. And this is what they say they must have. It's quite amazing. It really is.)

(A: And who was the guy who was at the head of this meeting? António Guterres. You might as well call him a communist, 'eh, the United Nations, International Socialism. But he told business leaders…)

António Guterres told business leaders. “They are committing to cooperate across borders, across financial sectors and even with their competitors, because it is both ethical and good business sense to invest in sustainable development for all people on a healthy planet.”

Did you vote for any of these folks? No. But it's in-your-face, folks. It truly is in-your-face. It really is.

Also too, I’d like to put up an article on the late Patrick Moore who was one of the characters involved in Greenpeace and all the rest of it. This article is called…

Patrick Moore: Should We Celebrate Carbon Dioxide?
thegwpf.org / 15 Oct 2015

(A: He was talking at the Global Warming Policy Foundation it's called and he said, should we celebrate carbon dioxide? And he talks about it. He goes to some of his history and how Greenpeace started, how he was really against nuclear weaponry initially, that's how they started, when the whole planet was being threatened to get blown up. Another big fake thing as far as I'm concerned. Fear is great for changing the system and putting all the power that you have personally into the hands of those who rule over you. Or even creating those who rule over you, you know. That's what fear is all for. He says…)

The contention that human emissions are now the dominant influence on climate is simply a hypothesis, rather than a universally accepted scientific theory. It is, therefore, correct, indeed verging on compulsory in the scientific tradition, to be skeptical of those who express certainty that “the science is settled” and “the debate is over”.

But there is certainty beyond any doubt that CO2 (A: carbon dioxide.) is the building block for all life on Earth and that without its presence in the global atmosphere at a sufficient concentration this would be a dead planet. Yet today our children and our publics are taught that CO2 is a toxic pollutant that will destroy life and bring civilization to its knees. Tonight I hope to turn this dangerous human-caused propaganda on its head. Tonight I will demonstrate that human emissions of CO2 have already saved life on our planet from a very untimely end.

(A: If you bring down your CO2, and cut it to zero, all life on the planet would die. I hope you understand this, folks. But he goes through how the environmental movement started off with the right idea, and then moved off into whole different areas, into the sustainability, on behalf of their masters way above them. [Alan chuckles.] Of course, they don't even know they even exist, actually. Yeah, it's quite amazing. He goes to the history of it. And it's awfully interesting. Awfully interesting how people start off.)

(A: I think too, I think even Lord Moncton also was involved with Greenpeace too. He again was disillusioned too when it moved off into other radical areas, you see, and lost its track of what it's supposed to be. But any organization that starts off with good intentions will be quickly taken over by the single world organization that runs everything. Very quickly. Very, very quickly.)

(A: It's the same with what they used to call the Patriot Movements at one time in the US where they had lots of good, educated speakers on their histories and so on and what happened and who is taking over what, etc. No conspiracies but they had the facts to present. They were quickly infiltrated. The same in Britain as even the BBC turned out people as experts in conspiracies, and they grab all the conspiracy stuff and add ridiculous stuff into it, and then ridicule to it. That's counterintelligence. That's why it works, if you don't understand that. You must copy all the good stuff that people are saying until the people who were sticking to the facts, the basic facts get lumped in as conspiracy theorists or chasing aliens or something, whatever it happens to be.)

(A: He's a PhD and he's a member of these organizations and he talked at the Global Warming Policy Foundation, right. There you go. The tells you a lot about it, what it's really all about, and how they’re basically getting used etc. etc. M-hm. He says...)

The first principle of ecology is that we are all part of the same ecosystem, as Barbara Ward put it, “One human family on spaceship Earth”, and to preach otherwise teaches that the world would be better off without us.

Well, that's exactly what they're doing. The world would be better off without us. You've got the... It's so interesting too, that many years ago in some of the books I read on communism they talked about how they would unleash basically the atheist and nihilist, the nihilists on the world. And communism did that too.

Even the French Revolution was a precursor to the same organization actually, with the big revolution. They started killing off folk in the rural areas to bring down the population, control the food supply. They took a lot of the farmers, in the French Revolution, in the different areas around Paris and different places in France, and they put them on barges in rivers and sunk them. Of course, the scarcity of food goes up, the price goes up, etc. etc. Then you bring in their own experts to… And folk again turned to the government, no matter if it's a revolutionary one, to save them all, as the same government's destroying you.

What they did, of course they let the prisoners out of the Bastille, that’s the standard thing to do. Castro did it too in Cuba. When they got in and the US was getting flooded with all these guys who were hardened criminals, from Cuba. Russia the same thing, the Bolsheviks let all these murderers and so on out of prisons to cause mayhem in the streets, etc. And they could recruit them too for their murderous policies. Always the same agenda, 'eh?

So, what the Club of Rome tells us is that mankind's the enemy. We are all the enemy, you see. And you've got these radical young armies being trained by your own taxpayers' money through the schooling system and propaganda on their television programs and dramas and movies, that the people are the enemy, and the system that feeds you is the enemy, food is bad too, the stuff you're eating is all bad, and you're just wasteful, wasteful, so we'll have to restrict all energy, until you'll probably freeze to death in the winter perhaps, or, boil over in summer heat in some of the hotter climates. The nihilists and the atheists. It's an awfully good term to use because that's what it is. You see it today.

But anyway, as I say, this one article is awfully, awfully good and I'll put it up, the late Patrick Moore. Very intelligent guy. Well educated in his field and who was an advocate of so much of the policies. [Alan chuckles.] Until he saw it getting taken over and being completely waylaid for other purposes. Quite amazing.

I've got many articles I don't have time to go through on the Trilateral Commission and the different members, who recently had been appointed even with Trump and different people too. One of them of course was Kenneth Juster, his name is. Member of the Trilateral Commission. It's so interesting too what he was involved with, Mr. Juster. Because they're big players, you know, but they're kept fairly quiet from the public.

White House Makes It Official: Kenneth Juster Will Be Next US Ambassador To India - swarajyamag.com / 2 Sept 2017

He was a member of the National Security Council. Now he's been appointed ambassador to India. Mr. Juster was a Partner and Managing Director, from 2010-2017, at the global investment firm Warburg Pincus. Warburg families, very close ties to Nazi Germany in the 1930s, were fully exposed by the late Anthony Sutton. And since Warburg Pincus had massive investments in India, Juster presents a huge conflict of interest. Isn't that coincidental, it's all coincidence, isn't it? [Alan chuckles.] And so, that's how things really work, isn't it?

And of course, I got articles too from the United Nations calling for, oh, basically the ban on all kinds of speech now. To keep us safe, you understand.

UN plan on Hate Speech - un.org

It's because there's so much coming out in the public that's got to be squashed very quickly. Very quickly, because the last thing they want is another generation of young folk, enough young people who can think for themselves, who can take it in, what's happened in the past, and see what's happening now, and you might have about 60 or 70 years to live, they don't want anybody who understands what's been happening to go on very far from now, actually. People with memories are a problem. And again, awfully, awfully strict now on squashing your freedom of speech. It's got to be done. It's gotta be done.

And of course, Facebook is one of the big ones that are using it. Facebook and all these organizations are big, big technocrats, as I say, put out there for the global structure. These are not self-made people. You really believe this stuff? Do you really honestly believe it? Hm? Do you believe the Hollywood version, hm? But anyway, I'm going to just mention to finish up here, again another article on the Homeland Security. It says that they're going to hold the biometric data on…

Homeland Security will soon have biometric data on nearly 260 million people
qz.com / 7 Nov 2019

…229 million citizens in the US by 2022.

That's a couple of years time. Aren't we free, 'eh? Aren't we really, really free? Isn't this wonderful, this freedom, isn't it? Isn't it great? As I say, the United Nations is putting throughout the different, they're demanding that the hate laws are put in, if you discuss things, and stop using certain words and all the rest of it. The complete language police are in power now, you see, they've got to shoot everybody up.

If you can't converse by using the right terminology you can't get the point across. Just like Orwell talked about in 1984, isn't it? Isn't that what he said? Where he had, there's a meeting in their canteen, their food place, they're having their meal. Nothing, even the meat isn't real. As they say there too, it looks like meat, smells like meat, but there's no meat in it at all, that's what they said. That's where you're going, folks. 1984. Published in 1948. By someone who knew what was going to happen. He was up there. But he also talked about the book at the table in the canteen, a guy from a different department, the department for basically the dictionary, or words, you see. He showed him the latest dictionary. He says, the latest dictionary is getting thinner and thinner. He says, oh, I see brother, I see, so when it's really this thin, very, very thin, they won't have the words to even express or communicate revolution. So, you couldn't be a counterrevolutionary to the system if you couldn't converse. Isn't that amazing?

Well, here they are taking all the proper terminology out, that you must used to describe things, take it away because it's hateful and it's nasty and it's bad, hm. There ya go. Isn't that just coincidence? Isn't it, 'eh? It's just coincidence, don't you know?

And just to finish that, talking about nothing's really real in the system that we're born into and that we're running in today, because it really isn't, you're not free. You've never been free. You're never asked about anything that matters. If they do give you some kind of vote, like Brexit, they won't go through with it. [Alan laughing.] That's how it's done.

But here's what George Orwell said in 1984, the book. Run by experts, 'eh, in the system back then, that's what it's all about.

Every record has been destroyed or falsified. Every book rewritten. Every picture has been repainted. Every statue and street building has been renamed. Every date has been altered. And the process is continuing day by day and minute by minute. History has stopped. Nothing exists except an endless present in which the party is always right.

-George Orwell, 1984.

For myself Alan Watt from Ontario Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on December 8, 2019. I hope you're all doing okay out there and getting by through this winter with all the prices of fuel and everything going up, as it's destined to do, or predestined to do of course because that is the agenda. Excuse my voice for being a bit raspy because it gets that way in the wintertime if I don't put the humidity on. And of course, tonight I didn't, I forgot about it and that's what happens. It gets so dry in the winter it's just amazing.

I always laugh when I wake up every day and see the same kind of repetitive stories over and over and over. Mass propaganda. We've never been under such incredible mind control in every possible area as we have today. Mind you, back in, say, the 70s or even the 60s it was impossible because even with TV they didn't have enough stations across Europe, especially, definitely not in Britain, to give you this incessant propaganda on all the major topics that you're supposed to really believe in. Because we're being managed so well by those who run the world and own the world and so on.

I mentioned before about, for instance, the technocrats and Technocracy Inc. etc. You can still download their old agenda, which is still in operation today in fact. But of course, the big grandparents of the ones I mentioned before, who were put forward as fronts basically, and front engineers, for much more, put it this way, wealthier people even above them at the time. They were supposed to take over the world's energy supplies, all the resources that humans need, and then bring in an ordered, managed society. Tidy, a tidy society, get them off the countryside and so on and bring in big corporate farms. And efficiency, efficiency, efficiency.   And lo and behold, their grandchildren are coming forward today and just being announced to you as just, just the saviors of the planet. And they have the right to have public-private partnerships where you fund their projects, and they collect the profits. It's a pretty good deal, isn't it? But that's what we're living through, for those you haven't quite clued in on it yet.

When people are presented to you, out of the blue, you've never heard of them before generally, as multimillionaires or billionaires even, and given all this, all the rights to do, even take charge of areas of the climate, you might say, or even the sky, or outer space with the satellites and all that, all these kind of things, and the resources on the planet too, and in the planet as well, you've got to stop and say wait a minute here, is this a new kind of system we're living in where we don't vote for anybody? Well, that's exactly what it is.

Remember what they said through the Club of Rome, a big front group for the United Nations and this whole agenda for being an efficiently controlled society. A very old idea, remember. Before it was called Technocracy it had other names too. The big ones, the big empire builders from Britain in London, well they're based in London, were all on board with it long ago because that was always their ambition, take over all the resources of the planet, own them all amongst themselves, get the public to pay for the big, big things and big projects, and bring in a world where they would dish out, meagerly, enough energy to maybe just keep you alive.

Do you understand what they're talking about? Everything is energy units. You are an energy unit. That's how they work it out. And eventually what Bertrand Russell said was, who was in on the whole thing too, they would issue credits to you, like tokens. These would really be energy tokens you could buy food, which is energy, with these tokens. You would get so much per month according to your class, which is either the top class or the lowest class, that's all, no in between eventually. You'd just have, you couldn't save up your credits. If you were bad or you've got antisocial behavior, or disorder as they say in Britain now, they would stop your credits coming in, get you on your knees until you couldn't feed yourself, until you pleaded to be forgiven and you'd get on board with it.

It's all here, folks. It's all here, actually. It really is. And folk will never clue in, even as it's happening. That's always astonished me in all the years I've been talking about the big, big agenda. And people get confused because they see parts of the agenda with different names and think, well that's the only ones that are doing it. No, no. There's many bricks in the pyramid, folks, and they're all specialized in their areas. And they all work together. They are one. That's just it, they are one, you see, different components of the same one and we're living through it today.

All their talks about austerity, I did the talks from the United Nations about the coming austerity has got to be implemented. Well, that's a form of poverty. I might touch on that again tonight too, where Maurice Strong, another player in the same organization by the way, sustainability for the planet, that was the big thing, that's always been everything with them. Meaning, population control and reduction. Of course, if they start taking away your energy units for heating, even for producing food for you, you'll start dying off, you'll get sick, etc., if you can't heat yourself, you won't last too long, and the population starts going down.

And by the way, you've got the big fanatics out at the top at the United Nations, and Guterres as well, talking about, hinting actually at going further and further and the pain it's going to cause. Well, it's going to cause a lot more than just pain, folks. And it will all seem to happen by itself. You'll have a financial crisis and it will be a partial collapse. They'll say, we need a new global system with the right experts or technocrats running it all, you see, on behalf of those who own the planet. You might think the billionaires own it. No, no. They're above, way above billionaires. The billionaires are the front men, hhch, that are put there by the ones of the above them. And they'll bring in the system. And the folk will adapt to it thinking, well, what else can you do?...

It's just like a war scenario and that's how they see it at the top. It's a war upon all of us, you see. It's always been like that. And folk don't know, you know, generations have gone through this war, and they don't know what's been behind it. They think things just happen. Oh, there's great depressions, it just happens by itself. Really? And then they have world wars. Oh, they just happen by themselves too. Really? Hm? Okay. And then it's more and more financial crashes.

Then you have your free trade agreements that put all your factories, we paid, the taxpayers paid for their factories based in your countries to be put over to China and set up. We paid for all that. But anything that really matters, as I say, you're never asked to vote on. I think the only thing that they've been asked to vote on was Brexit, and they just laugh at that when you say, yeah, we're going to leave, they just laugh at you. It's quite comical in a sense.

But the public always seem to think things just happen independently, we're stumbling down through space on this ball of mud and things just happen by themselves. And then you need experts rushing in to help you get you out of the mess that happen by itself, you see. You know, there's more millionaires and billionaires getting made today through hedge funds where they bet upon bets upon bets of investments. They make nothing physically. It's astonishing the conology we live through. It really is astonishing. To me anyway. And the fables we're taught, absolute fables. I was thinking about the movie Highlander. It was a bit of a classic in the late 80s maybe and they did Highlander I and II and then they did a TV series, I think. But on the second one this immortal fella, naturally, ends up designing to save the…

At that time, you see, the hole in the ozone was going to kill us all. That was in between the Ice Age which they gave up on because it wasn't happening at the time, and then they swapped over to global warming years later. But in between they came up with the ozone hole. Now, the ozone hole can only be detected by NASA. They had special planes that would go up in the high, high atmosphere, almost in the stratosphere and they could detect the ozone. And you had to take their word for it, you see, that it was getting bigger. It's only the poles, you see, that ozone holes are there.

But of course, what they didn't tell you, now they admit that it's a natural phenomenon, because literally the way the earth spins and so on and you have this magnetic pole as well, you do have this thinning at the north and south poles. But for years and years you heard, oh the crisis was, oh we're all going to get cancer, all going to get cancer from the ozone, and the ozone hole is caused by you people. Yeah.

And guess what? Back to energy again, your refrigeration units. You understand how they could clear whole vast areas of the planet if they took away their air conditioning in some places? Think about that, folks. And don't scoff at the idea either [Alan laughing.] you'll see coming one day. And if you can afford it, as they keep upping and upping the prices for energy units, you'll see it happening for sure.

But in the Highlander movie the guy, this immortal fella, eventually designs something which will basically shield the earth by giving constant cloud protection all over the planet. And eventually, he doesn't know, he becomes an old man, even though he’s immortal, they keep going back and forth between these ideas he’s got, or with the character. He becomes an old man, and no one has seen the sun or even stars for God knows how long, in maybe 80 years or something.

They find out eventually through again, ecoterrorist I suppose you’d be called back then, who wanted to get into this big company who caused the shielding, they raked in all the cash to save you all. That was basically almost their motto, to save you all we must shield the planet and you’ll have to pay for it, hm. They find out through these little eco-warriors that the shield’s basically protecting nothing because the ozone hole is gone. And the ozone layer has been rebuilt. Even though it wasn’t depleted in the first place, that was another fable told us.

But anyway, that was a movie. That was a movie, and everybody laughed and enjoyed the movie and yeah, yeah, yeah. And then of course in the 1990s, about 1998 in Ontario for instance, they started the daily spraying in the sky. And the first time they were much, much, it was about two thirds lower, honestly, the first time they tried it. I came out that day and looked out and I thought, my God, I thought, is this a sci-fi or has a been war started or something? Because the trails were perfect crosshatched, like knots and crosses, all across the sky. Perfect it was. Much lower. Very thick layers. And even, I pointed it out to different people, and they were astonished themselves. But what astonished me even more was the fact that they didn’t pay it too much attention. They would say, oh my God, what is that, but that was as far as they went with it. I’m sure they forgot it the next day. But eventually they got higher and higher with the trails. And they keep doing them of course.

And since the Geoengineering studies have been, some of them have been published as they tried this and tried that and spraying the skies and so on, and you can find these studies yourselves in some university libraries. I’ve got some stuff here from some of them. You find them at Yale too who published stuff, and Harvard too, on geo-engineering. Some of their professors in these big universities have huge shares all built up ready to go on the chemicals and stuff to spray on us. It’s like a make-work project for themselves where they’re guaranteed to become billionaires at least. But they’re actually ones who are promoting it all and on behalf of the masters who already own the planet as far as they’re concerned.

So, you’re living through an amazing, amazing system. We truly are. And it is a war, a constant war upon the public’s minds. A lot of it has been so successful that they’re beginning to breathe easier at the very top. Since the days of Thomas Malthus, it’s been about too many people. If they keep feeding, if they get fed and they get heat to keep warm, they’ll breed, you see, and their children will survive if they get fed and get warm as well. So, you’ve got to stop that and reduce the food and reduce the heat and all that and let them die off, hm. You understand this? But it’s never gone away, for those at the very, very top. Because it isn’t just the fact that they believe it’s overpopulated with the wrong people. They really believe it’s overpopulated with the wrong people, which is all of you, because onlythemselves are really people, I hope you understand that.

It's like The Madness of King George, good movie. Based on fact actually. [Alan chuckles.] But the king's sitting there with his wife at some ball and all the different guests were coming in through the doors. His wife was saying, well that's someone, so and so, who is coming in, and they'd have titles and things like that. And people who didn't have titles, the king would say, is he somebody? Oh no, dear, he's not a somebody at all. So, in other words, you're either a somebody or you're nobody. Well, that's never changed. I hope you realize it's never changed.

Do you see the arrogance of some of these front people they put in front of you who are now managing, helping to manage your life that you don't even, you haven't met them, you don't vote for them, never will get to vote for them, but they're bringing in systems that you must adapt to? Hm? But you do see the arrogance of them, hm? Very old agenda. Multigenerational agenda. It's really astonishing to me to witness it. And it's quite amazing to witness it because a lot of things you always know because you read their books and lots of the reports from the think tanks that they have and the findings at big meetings and so on. But it was presented to the public at the time as almost, like a pie-in-the-sky never-never kind of thing, like a myth or fairytale or something like that.

But in reality, if you realize you can work intergenerationally, you can set up an organization, say 200 years ago for instance, just one organization, of many that all work together in specialized areas, but one of them, and they get a foundation, and then you make it a charitable tax-free foundation, that still invests and rakes in incredible amounts of money, and then you fund the NGOs, nongovernmental organizations and various movements and so on and so on and so on, and they can cover educational systems and all the rest of it with what's to get taught, you can achieve your goals in that one organization over a period of 100, 150, even 200 years. And in that time, you've hired and retired generations of workers inside the organization, all dedicated and getting paid awfully well to make it all happen. There's nothing that they can't do that way, you understand. That's why they came out with these big foundations. As I said before, Adam Weishaupt mentioned it too, that through philanthropies, through philanthropies he says we can achieve our objectives.

Don't forget the old illuminati idea or high, really high free Masonic organizations are completely elitist. Not like the little guys at the bottom in the Blue Lodge, the ones at the top are completely and utterly elitist, and then they go into the noble orders, etc. etc. etc. Nothing has really changed. Except they're much closer to their goals now.

But the public themselves through the 20th century were, at the beginning of the 20th century and a good part of Europe or especially in Britain too, after so many wars for the Empire as they called it, and draining the public, you had all these skinny people in Britain malnourished and then they went right into a Great Depression, like the rest of the world, manufactured too.

The people in America even forget there was another huge depression in the late 1890s before the Great Depression with a handful of bankers managing it then. We've seen that scenario done so many times over and over. It gets monotonous. But yeah, two or three bankers get together and decide, and lenders, but the big boys not your little local branch, and decide to crash the economy, rake in the money like you wouldn't believe it and end up owning all the bonds that are out there because they get sold off for peanuts. Very old idea.

As I say, Briton especially, it's called ‘the poor man of Europe’ when it broke into the 20th century with the worst malnourished people, you know, the general working-class people were completely malnourished, in the whole of Europe. And nothing to help them. Terrible situation. But that wasn't good enough. They didn't die fast enough.

They always thought to themselves with the advancement of technology and science, etc. etc., they could eventually have machines do all these things. That's what HG Wells saw because he was let in on the big secret and he became a propagandist for them. They started up their working-class group, because you must get all sections of society on board, the best way to do it is to lead the problem areas. So, you put your leaders in and then you guide the working-class around in circles, and maybe off the edge of the cliff eventually.

But HG Wells was a founding member of the Fabian Society, remember, along with George Bernard Shaw who didn't mince his words as to what would happen with the excess useless population. Nothing's changed. They all work for the… Don't forget who funded, who put out the big funding for the Fabian Society. Don't forget it. The Astor family. The guys who supposedly made their huge masses of money off of primarily the fur industry in the Americas. Lots of scandals too and a lots of officials were bought off by them in the States and Canada too. When you go into the history, some of the richest folk funded supposedly the movement for the Fabian Society, where they, again, they would bring in a scientifically controlled society, that was the idea behind it, with the right folk managing everybody, you see.

Eventually they could do away with the politicians. They were all for communists, because communism was getting there faster, you see, with the same idea. Communism was supposed to have the right folk, the specialists running their world and it would be more efficient, it's always efficiency, you see. They ended up in a ruinous way altogether. Whereas the Fabian Society, that was, they boasted from the Fabian Society, Bernard Shaw did it too, that they had a direct line to Moscow, the Moscow's desk and back and forth. Trotsky was in touch with the London branch all the time.

Folk have no idea what these things even mean today, you understand that? That the same group of people, the same, use different strategies, and some of them were experimental. They called the Soviet Union the second great experiment, and the first was the United States of America. Different techniques, different systems, and study them, how they work for efficiency's sake. The same groups the Royal Institute of International Affairs in Britain where all the top... nobs you might say, Sirs and all the nobility at the top, studied the Nazi system very carefully, the role for it initially too because once again, it would bring in a national socialist system of managing it using science and so on for efficiency.

It's just amazing to see they study all the different techniques for the same things, and then after it all they make you think you're free again for a little while and you’re Democratic, and as they use democracy to smash the systems that exist, you see. They smash the systems eventually into absurdity and bring absurd things forward for democracy. And at the same time, they promoted the whole culture industry to push, again it was, I grew up through that whole area too when they broke out with sex, drugs and rock 'n' roll. That was the big thing too. Lots of scientists of the time came out with that, they were all for it and said this is great because we must dissolve the bond or even stop it from occurring between the sexual act and bonding. If you bond you might just have a family, you see, you might take care of children. Hm? They didn't want that! And they were awfully successful with it. Awfully successful.

But the folk went through it with wrecked marriages, I think almost went through it, with wrecked marriages, some were, some were. And TV and movies were just full of all the things they're missing, complete fantasy, you know, so you'd never be happy with whatever you had. Of course, the state set in with the abortion industry and, we'll take care of any problems from all of this. And they always downplay the venereal diseases because they didn't want you to think about… People still think today that there are couple of shots or even a few pills might get you over the worst of things. That's not necessarily so today. It wasn't necessarily so then either.

But that was too negative, think on the positive. Just perpetual childhood until you drop dead basically, and having lots and lots of sex, in the Freudian way, you see. Because Freud said the same thing, if you're unhappy it's because you're not having enough sex. And to get you happy, maybe you've dropped out of work so take these pills and once you start having sex and start working again, obviously you're fine, you're cured, you see, that's it. That was the answer to everything.

Rather than just telling the folk the truth that there's a whole war on your whole system to destroy everything in that system to rebuild from scratch again. That's what the purpose was. And let's be honest too folks. If you're in a system that's so crazy and mad that people have breakdowns, running off to work in all kinds of climates like Canada here, folk would run off to work to factories in cars and highways where all the cars are spinning their wheels like crazy and sliding all over the place, but they've got to get there for 8 o'clock, you know. It's just madness.

So, if you have a breakdown and that, the whole idea is to have sex and take these pills and get back to your work and you're fine. Rather than say, this system broke you down in the first place, obviously. But you're not supposed to think about it. The experts are put forward for you to believe. Bertrand Russell said that,we'll train the public, and in the 40s and 50s he said this, this is in his books, he said, we'll train the public, and they are training the public, to believe in experts, until a mother will be unable to change, he called it, a nappy, but it was a diaper, on their own child without expert advice. And it's much worse than that now, isn't it? It's been incredibly successful.

And of course the TV, which is where a lot of folk reflect, they become a reflection of television, they copy what they see. They dress how they're supposed to dress. Whatever is in vogue is how, what they wear. Or their hairdos, that's always been the way with it too. What’s promoted on television and the lifestyle is what they do. It's astonishing how perfect it is in that respect. Then folk then start getting the idea that this is how it's supposed to be, from television. If it's on TV it must be the way to be. You see? And if you're not happy there's something wrong with you. When the people you see on television, all fictitious programs, those fiction programs, are obviously happy. And the ads are always tremendously happy, you can give orgasms with toothpaste and things like that, you know, it's amazing. Everything… ECSTASY, just pure ecstasy by what you buy. Astonishing that.

Whereas in reality people are living with an existential crisis today and that's, this is what they know at the top, and they talk about it like that at the top. Because you see, the purpose that was always there in society has been taken away from us all. People are not getting to bond. Certain alternatives to bonding are being promoted because they don't, they won't produce children. But people are not getting lifelong mates, you see. And one thing that made people mature, especially the guys I suppose, and maybe the girls too, was having children. It gave them responsibility. It forced them, forced them, whether they like it or not, [Alan chuckles.] but it forced them into being responsible.

There's no system in life that's completely perfect in any respect at all. But you've got the good and the bad, and that's never, that hasn't been taught for a long, long, long time, the good and the bad, you see. But the purposes have been taken away from people for most of what nature provided them for, basically. Nature doesn't care if you can provide for even children, it doesn't care at all does it? But the fact is, people would do their darndest to make sure that they could somehow get through. And let's be honest too, the so-called great empires of Europe would never have been built if the peasantry had just decided they were too poor to have children. They had to fill all these uniforms for the armies and so on and so somehow, they always got through, didn't they?

But once you're in an existential crisis, you have all sorts of things being promoted and coming out. Why do you think they've dumped all the drugs on society, as never before? NEVER before... never ever? And just in the last year or so just seeing the tons and tons, it wasn't just a few ounces of this and a few ounces of that, it's tons and tons of cocaine at every big drug bust that they get now, across the world. The whole world. And loads of all kinds of drugs you never heard of before. And stacks of them coming from China too.

Let's... There's no war on anything... There's no war anything at all to stop anything. If there was, you'd see it. And believe you me they'd be efficient enough to stop it. They would. Absolutely. So, it's intentional, folks. It is absolutely intentional. And you see the fentanyl too, the killing of people and they just, they're like, oh my, what can we do? Well, there's lots they could but they're not gonna, hm.

This is the time where you take down society. You're watching something from a science fiction happening today. It was in the 1990s they started to put out lots of, even before that in the 80s but the 90s for sure they put out these kind of futuristic science fiction films on terrible chaotic times on the planet, a future generation where there’s big gangs in the streets fighting and killing each other for food and stuff like that or whatever it happened to be. And they'd be dressed like punk rocker types and stuff like that. They kept showing you these movies and churning them out. People would say, oh that will never happen, and they couldn't imagine seeing it.

Well, you're seeing it, you've got tent cities everywhere. These things were, this is predictive programming [Alan chuckles.] what you are seeing when you're seeing these things. You're seeing what's already been discussed in top think tanks. And then, they've already discussed, how do we bring this about? Well, look around you. You see the people dressed the same way you saw in those old movies. You see them with the tattoos covering them, on their faces some of them, the spiked hair on some and all other armbands. All that stuff that they showed you back then is out there, folks. And you think it's a just coincidence, 'eh? [Alan laughing.]

It's astonishing to watch this. And it is, in a sense it's a bit, say, a bit of a privilege in a sense to live long enough to see a lot of this come in, knowing it was going to, and always trying to figure out how are they going to bring this part in, how they can bring in that part, how are they going to make this happen? And you watch it all happening. And there's you doing it all and watching it all, you could tell people, but they'll never believe you. They still think that an expert will come out, because they've been trained not to believe anybody except an expert. If an expert comes out, because they are the only ones you believe who speak with authority, when they come out and say, oh it's youcausing climate change that's caused all this problem, you know. And you say, really?

It's all the folks that have been, you know, using energy and things, we've caused the whole problem, 'eh? We've caused what they claim is overpopulation, for instance, it's all our fault for that. And to the very generation who, most of them are not having children [Alan laughing.] or not getting married to have any, [Alan laughing.] they're going to take the blame for it all. Isn't that amazing, how they can convince you of anything, 'eh, that you’re just plain bad, it's all your fault.

But the families who keep telling you to stop breeding, and I've got books going back into the late 1800s and from Britain and other parts of Europe, where an elite then were trying to get the people to slow down the breeding and have less children. And in those books, some of them put out by ministers for instance, you know, Christian ministers, they’d have the statistics of the day where they go through the elite families at the top, who were telling everybody else down below them not to have children, and the elite families were having seven, up to 10 children, some of them, you know. Quite a lot of them, actually. No problem there, you see.

You see, the problem's never been about them having, the problem is you having children, all the wrong people having children. That's what it is. And all the folk who went through, the generations who went through maybe two children at the most and a lot of them only had one, right, to please the masters and all the propaganda of their time, it's still not good enough, you see. Because now you've got to bring them in from all over the world. They say it's to pay off your national debt. Well, you can't even get jobs to pay off anything, never mind bringing in people who also have to get jobs.

So, you're being lied to on a momentous level. When things don't make sense, then something stinks, folks. Logic has to be logical. When it's not logical something's stinking, you see. And you've got to go by that. It's quite simple, use your own mind, your own brain.

So, you're living through an agenda and the organizations that were present at the beginning of the 19th century and in the 20th century, all working as one in their own areas, are all bringing it all together, you see. Academia is a big part of it of course because you must always, as Lenin said, make sure that teachers are paid awfully well, out of all proportion to their worth actually, but pay them awfully well because they have to indoctrinate the next generation of children. That's why they get paid so much.

Look what they turn out, people who can't read, a lot of them. But they know all about communism, how good it is. They know all about sustainability and how they should not have children because it's bad to have children. It's bad to eat meat. It's bad to have heating. It's bad, bad, bad to have any industry at all. No, that's total indoctrination camps. Total. And then they come out all worried about their genders and totally screwed up until they're ready to commit suicide a lot of them, folks.

And you're paying for it all to happen with your tax money. And do you get asked about that? No. D'you get asked about anything where your tax money goes? No. And yet many of you go out there and vote again, each time you go into vote. What for?! [Alan laughing.] That's really, I think if aliens came to this planet and saw that happening, well why on earth are they voting because they don't have any rights. They don't have any say in where their labor goes, which is your tax money. Don't forget that taxing your labor, hm, was consider slavery up into the 20th century and then they gradually changed that. Hhch, and now they've changed an awful lot of things now, and we don't have any, [Alan laughing.]and they're still doing it too… But anyway, I'm kind of off the topic.

The fact is, they have all these specialized areas managing the world, and the world must be united. Because the ones at the top always wanted to dominate a world system. So, you must have a common currency across the planet. That will come in the next crash. They'll say, oh we've got to have rationing cards and so on to get us out of this, while we get through this terrible, over this terrible hurdle, across the world. And then we'll start giving you your electric credits, you see. And the whole system comes in as it was intended to and was discussed in the 1940s. But to most folk it will be coincidence. As always. Quite amazing.

What always astonished me was that the Communists, and the elite as well, the financial elite, always wanted, they hated the middle classes. They hated them. Still do. They call them pretentious and copiers and so on of those above them. And that's never changed. So, the agenda was always to eliminate middle-class people. Middle-class people in Britain for instance, were generally people who owned their homes, even the humble home, as long as they owned them. But generally, they were also people who are professionals of some kind or even the lower-level professionals but they didn't see themselves as laboring classes.

But it was different in America where they often don't think that. They'll call themselves middle-class because they were earning a lot more money and could live the higher lifestyle. But here in Canada for instance, here's an article here, this is Justin Trudeau. It's Alberta, the big oil fields and gas fields in Alberta. Big steer country too for cattle and all that. It says that they're getting so fed up, and they've been fed up for years actually, even since Pierre Trudeau the father of Justin was in as prime minister. They got fed up then too because he was taking so much wealth from the different industries out West. They've never really, they keep, they've never stopped, they keep sucking them, sucking for tax money and so on. Don't forget too that all resources have to go into the hands of the real technocrats. Don't forget that, folks.

So anyway, Alberta is even thinking of, they call it wexit, the same thing as Britain. Because they're so fed up of getting, they're getting hammered for taxes and so on and all the red tape they have to go through just to produce things, etc., with all the enviro-friendly stuff you've got today which really is just antibusiness. That is the purpose of a lot of it too, is to shut you down.

But anyway, it says…

Trudeau is greenish. Canada's oil-producing prairie provinces see red.
washingtonpost.com / 28 Nov 2019

Trudeau's Liberals lost the popular vote to Andrew Scheer's Conservatives, and they were completely shut out of the oil- and gas-producing provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

These prairies areas are just fed up with it all. Disgusting. It's the same with the dad, with Pierre Trudeau who was, I mean the guy was a member of the Comintern, Communist International in the 1950s, the dad. And folk have never quite got... They get mixed up with it and they say, well then communist is different from communism, surely, from being liberal. Really?! Well, Khrushchev from the Soviet Union, the premier there, he came over back in the 60s and he said it, oh we don't call them Communists, we don't, meaning Moscow doesn't call them, the agents, Communist, in the States and Canada, he says, here we call them liberals, he says. For those who don't quite get it. [Alan laughing.]

But the agenda is the agenda. And they'll use communistic techniques because it's the same parallel agenda as Carol Quigley talked about with the CFR, the Council on Foreign Relations, the establishment as they call themselves. He says, we often get mistaken for Communists, what we do, because our goals are so similar, agenda so similar, it's professionals experts running an efficient society in a socialistic fashion.

So, there is the exit… and Brexit… and Wexit, etc. for out West in Canada. I'll put these articles up because I'll probably, I seldom get enough articles out there.

Wexit: Alberta's frustration fuels push for independence from Canada - yahoo.com / 25 Nov 2019

And talking about the elimination of the middle class, it was imperative, you see. Pierre Trudeau, when he got in, Canada had pretty well no national debt and when he left it was massive. Because you see, the socialist Communists, the elitists who basically are bringing in this management by professionals and experts, they believe according to Paul Martin who was a premier of Canada too, a Prime Minister, he said that debt is good for a country. He couldn't explain why it was good, but he kept saying it. And you'll see it in that awfully good documentary, it was called Oh, Canada if you ever get your hands on it. It's quite good.

Here's Canada now, here's… [Alan chuckles.]   Isn't it amazing, folk can't really figure out, Pierre Trudeau, the father, right, end up making a massive hole, the debt hole basically. Here's his son in, right, for the far left who boast about how almost communistic it is, everything's to do with fairness, you see, so they staff different positions with people who often have no qualifications at all, they just have other certain things that they need, put it that way, to get them in the power right now. And now they're putting in a minister, a politician in charge of the middle-class prosperity. Yeah, you heard me right.

Chris Selley: 'Minister of Middle Class Prosperity' isn't a joke. It should be nationalpost.com / 22 Nov 2019

(A: They've destroyed, you see, the middle class has been destroyed. Absolutely. Canada's wages were pretty stagnant from the 80s to the present. And that's when the big boys put a brake on it basically TO keep you stagnant. So anyway, it says…)

Should a government need a minister whose job is to ensure Canadians are prospering? One might reasonably hope that's the goal of pretty much any minister

(A: So they say.)

Wednesday’s Cabinet shuffle featured the usual head-scratching reorganization of portfolios and outright invention of others, “bigger” being for some reason a stated goal.

Joyce Murray, for example, becomes Minister of Digital Government.

(A: I think that's appropriate, because all they do is give the finger.)

It has a very pre-Y2K ring to it, but then again the government in question accepts payment for access-to-information requests by cheque, and sometimes fulfills them (if at all) via CD-ROM, and it can’t manage a simple payroll system. So maybe it’s not such a bad thing to have someone on that job specifically.

Then there’s Ottawa-Vanier MP Mona Fortier’s new job.

(A: This is the one who's to be put in charge of a new position called…)

. . . the Minister of Middle Class Prosperity.

Because we're sunk, by design. And it's really just a token post because it's meant to go down and down, get worse. This article here I've got too is about how bad the economy is. We know it's bad. It's not getting any better. It's got to get worse because, as I say, like so many countries now, all the big manufacturing was given to China. GIVEN to China, we paid for it to go to China through agreements that politicians have done. Don't you understand that your governments have never worked for you? They're serving something else. Do you get that?

Eventually with a service economy where you import all the stuff and pass that around through middlemen until it gets to your hands, I said it before, it was described in Britain by top economists in the 1970s when they were discussing, if they ever truly went all the way into a European amalgamation, the fact at that time they said it could never happen, if they did, they said, it would be like a dog in a swimming pool, in the service economy, paddling and paddling until it ran out of energy and drown. Well that's what's happening to us now.

We had to get to this stage because we produce nothing. Multilayers of industry go into making knives and forks for cutlery, from the raw ore, to the ingots, you know, to different factories, and then the mixing of different materials with the iron, etc., to make them stainless, or put chrome in, whatever it happens to be that they use, or nickel, and all the way to the... and then to it goes to about four or five different areas of industry before it finishes up as knives and forks for your plate, for your table. All gone. It's the same for everything else we used to make. Everything you needed was made in your own country not so long ago. The youngsters now who are about 20 or 25 or maybe 30, they can't remember that. They think it's always been made in China. They think that's natural.

We're still paying for Third World countries to come up and up and up under the free trade agreements, first set up by the Royal Institute of International Affairs in Britain who gave you the United Nations by the way, and who run it at the top, really. And the World Bank. And the, you know, all the other world banks that are attached to the IMF, etc. and Bank for International Settlements. This all came from one institution, based in the City of London. And they set them up eventually in the United States. Which still thinks it's independent. [Alan laughing.] As it fights wars for other nations, 'eh?

So anyway, here you have a minister in charge of prosperity for the middle classes. Of course, what can you do? What's any politician going to do to make business happen and to make you more prosperous? Don't forget some of these free trade agreements regarding free trade and prosperity partnerships. Prosperity… Well, prosperity is true but not for the people, folks. It's for those who owned the big businesses that are often set up with public-private partnerships paid for by the taxpayer, and then they own them at the top, these private companies. It's a new form of slavery and the folk haven't figured that out. It really is. Why are we paying billionaires to set up their businesses, paying for the maintenance of their businesses whether its roads or whatever it happens to be, and paying for all the repairs, and they laugh all the way to the bank?

Then you had this incredible, which had to happen, and again the technocrats talked about, one of the things about Technocracy in the 1930s was that everybody had to be put down and listed, and all the details, all the intricate details about everybody would have to be put out and on, if nothing but even on paper form, all the details of who you are, what you are, everything about you, all information. No one could be independent, and everybody had to be down as a citizen, you see, a productive citizen. Well, that's what the Internet's enabled it all to happen, if you haven't figured it out.

That's why it's being mandated, I mentioned last week too, I'll put it up again, how Homeland Security in the States is going all out now for complete facial biometric recognition.

Homeland Security wants to force all travelers including US citizens to undergo face scans when leaving or entering the United States
U.S. Homeland Security proposes face scans for all citizens leaving or entering airports - dailymail.co.uk / 2 Dec 2019

Just like China. At the same time that they're always banging China, but China's putting it in at the same time as the US, and Canada is putting it in.

China introduces mandatory face scans for phone users - news.yahoo.com / 1 Dec 2019

Because again, in Technocracy you consume energy units, you see, meaning you pay for it all. And they're going to make sure that you are going to pay for everything that you use. Of their resources. It's not your resources. No, it's their resources, you see. It's great how they can flip an idea and get the public to flip with it until you, well yeah, I guess it's theirs. No, it's not! You're trying to say that the ones at the top who end up owning it all, it really is theirs? Well, how do they own it all? You just accept that they own it all. [Alan chuckles.]   And they just took it. [Alan chuckles.]   They just took it by every little bit of paper they sign, we now own this, you know. Really? Really? That's how it's done.

You have no idea the system you're in, you really don't, and the connections between all these different organizations that end up, as I say, being the pyramid. That was essential for Technocracy that you would have to be monitored from birth to death, folks. Everything about you. Instantly retrievable. Where do you think George Orwell got his ideas, you know? And you've got your ministry of information retrieval, all these different kinds of things.

Then you have Facebook, and you think that's independent too. No, no. These are front people put out there in front of you to follow and believe in, that they're somehow superior beings and you should do what they say because they're somehow geniuses, that's what you're taught, and geniuses must be more intellectually correct than you are. Well, how, where's the connection to that? Hm? Not that they are geniuses. But Facebook is building tech to read your mind…

Facebook is building brain tech that could read minds and ruin privacy
vox.com / 5 Aug 2019

Facebook is building tech to read your mind. The ethical implications are staggering.

(A: It's a part of a group of stories called...)

Future Perfect

Finding the best ways to do good. Made possible by The Rockefeller Foundation. (A: ...quite naturally, 'eh?)

Facebook wants to create a device that can read your mind — literally. It's funding research on brain-machine interfaces that can pick up thoughts directly from your neurons and translate them into words, the company announced in a blog post last week.

(A: Then you have, there was an organization too that the United States government is involved in, that Obama was in, to map the brain, they said. D'you think they don't know everything about the brain already? What d'you think that's all about? And other countries are involved in it too. So, I'll put this article up for those who want to read all through it. It's maybe a page.)

The scientists are aiming to grow its lexicon over time. Importantly, Facebook also wants to develop a way of decoding speech that doesn't require surgery. The ideal would be a noninvasive wearable headset, though that's harder to build.

(A: And of course, they've already talked now recently again, I think Musk mentioned the fact about implants into your brain, floating the idea naturally, you know just floating the idea, to get used to the idea. That's what they do, you see, it's a trial balloon. And then…)

Brain-computer interfaces' fast slide from sci-fi to reality

(A: Well, don't forget when you're next to a computer you're inside that magnetic field, electromagnetic field. And there's many frequencies come off of it. And you know, who's to say it's not here already. Hm? And I'm pretty certain it will be because what ever we are dished out with is often 40, 50 years old.)

Then there's...

There's a wildly popular conspiracy theory that Facebook listens to your private phone calls, and no matter what the tech giant says, people just aren't convinced it's not true
businessinsider.com / 14 Aug 2019

Facebook and Instagram have repeatedly denied doing as much.

Despite those denials, and evidence from experts to the contrary, the belief is widely held and seemingly unshakable.

(A: Then he goes through different scenarios the people might find familiar, that's happened to them too, or something similar. Such just talking about a trip to Buenos Aires and...)

Hours later, idly scrolling through Facebook and — what's that? An ad for vacationing in Lisbon? How could it have known?

Well of course they're all listening to you, there's so many admissions now, because the public are ready to accept it. That's why they're putting out the admissions now. Get you addicted to things, oh well, oh well, every time it's another, oh well, you know, that's it.

Amazon is developing high-tech surveillance tools for an eager customer: America's police
nbcnews.com / 8 Aug 2019

(A: I think I mentioned that one too, but this article, it gives you an example of what we're talking about here as well.)

Amazon partners with police to fight crime – – what this means for you.

(A: Hm.... Quite something.)

Then you got this one here…

New cabinet must make the best of an uncertain economic outlook: Don Pittis - cbc.ca / 25 Nov 2019

This is Canada. So, as I say, here, getting back to Canada, Canada's Minister of Prosperity for the Middle-Class, right. [Alan chuckles.] It's like something that, the Soviet term getting dished out, the Minister for Middle-Class Prosperity, you know. But it says how bad the economy is. Because we are, we're at the end of the service economy. We really are. Most of them are up to their eyes in debt, if there's any middle-class left at all. Never mind all the lower classes too, everybody's up to their eyes in debt. And it's getting worse. They all have nice-looking new cars and everything but it's all, all on credit, folks, it's all getting paid off by the month.

And again, getting back to the United Nations and Mr. Guterres, I mentioned it before, the same article that...

UN chief says humanity's 'war against nature' must stop news.yahoo.com / 1 Dec 2019

(A: You see, this is how they reverse things. They've got a war against all of you, using nature, you see, saving nature, so they must kill you all off or a lot of you, to save nature. This is the kind of stuff they dish out, but they're getting very vocal with it. He says…)

"We must stop our war against nature, and science tells us we can do it."

Guterres, I would call him a communist, not just an international socialist or socialist international now, complete communist this guy. And Mao, it's a form of the old Maoist religion too. Because really the whole, it's amazing how they can follow these communists like that. Then they make them, they deify them. They were teaching that Maoist philosophy supposedly in universities and they came out total communists, pretending it's a different kind of communism from the old Soviet communism. Just like the Trotskyist communism was supposedly more advanced, more modern than the old Leninist communism.

What a joke! But again, as Carol Quigley said in the Council on Foreign Relations, we have all kinds of people, he says, fascists, communists, he said, we have dictators, we don't mind, he says, as long as they're on board with their same agenda. Do you start to get it? [Alan chuckles.]

Every group that you might join, you see, will have a leader. They supply all the leaders to make sure you all end up following the Pied Piper's to the bitter end, 'eh. Until finally you're just actually going around in circles and then you're going back to where you started. That's how it's done. Always supply the leaders for the people.

As they prattle on about how hot it is, how hot it is, and you hear about the fires in Australia, I'm going to put some articles up, so many. Actually, this one from, I think it was the United Nations at one point. But they're saying that in Australia sometimes about 80% of the fires that you see on television and so on are started by people. 30% of them are put down to definite arson. The rest of that 80% are put down is accidental and so on and carelessness. And again, don't forget in the middle of winter, when we're in the middle of winter they'll be in the middle of their summer, the hottest times of the year you see. So I'll put some of these articles up.

Australian fires: Why do people start fires during fires? - bbc.com / 14 Nov 2019

Australia bushfires: Firefighter accused of arson in 'ultimate betrayal' - bbc.com / 27 Nov 2019

But right now it says…

Coldest summer day on record
weatherzone.com.au / 4 Dec 2019

Australia's lowest summer daily maximum temperature record was broken this week.

(A: So even though they are in summer, right.)

A surge of unseasonably cold air swept over southeastern Australia during the opening days of summer. This air mass-produced thick snow in parts of Tasmania, Victoria and NSW and held daytime temperatures as much as 15 degrees below average in some places.

And folk will go and freak out, well it just shows you that the weather… NO, this happens every so often. And don't forget that in that lower part of the hemisphere you also get icebergs in the southeastern tip going past them as well, that's quite normal as well, from the South Pole. Parts break off every year as the shelves get bigger and bigger, they break off and float as icebergs. That's what happens for those who don't quite know that. But when people see these articles, oh my God, Australia's, the weather's going berserk.No, it's not. And then you have…

Snow Falls In The Sahara Desert For The First Time Since 1979, And It's Just As Beautiful As You Think - sonyaz.net

So, in other words, it’s happened before, it’s happens every so many years, maybe 30 years, sometimes 40. Of course, the climate fanatics go, oh the weather is changing, my God, it’s terrible. Because you must believe in it. Because everything for the big, big plan, for the big agenda, for the great work of conquering everybody and bringing you all down, it depends on giving up all your rights, being herded into cities, Agenda 21, and depopulation, as they withdraw energy and food, it’s all there, food is energy, remember, and things you really need, and the protein supply and all the rest of it, and you all just drop off.

Eventually maybe in 50 years they’ll have a much lower population. But they won’t stop there. Because they don’t really need most folk now as laborers, now that they've got all the different technology and robotics to take over. That's what HG Wells had too, in the movie, Things to Come. It's all the descendants of the revolutionaries, the proper folk who properly would manage the world, you see, who took it over, and the Freemasonry of the Air and the scientific elite, you see, you saw the descendants eventually running a paradise. And all the ordinary folk down below them who were just so fed up because they had no challenges left, you see, for the people, you're meant just to be kept like animals, happy animals, you know, playing yourselves, hobbies, things like that, while the elite went off and evolved into higher things, went off into space and so on. That’s that they were showing you there.

Task Force on Climate-related Financial Disclosures | TCFD - fsb-tcfd.org

Because, you see, all the big people, whose not named at all in any of our daily papers, they’re all involved in going on into this great future of accumulating incredible wealth, off the shmucks who believe that they’re at fault and you’re all guilty for destroying the planet, as they train you to believe that you are, you see.

There’s a good article, it’s from Global Research. Now, Global Research, there’s no doubt about it, they’re Marxist in their philosophies. They have even mentioned in this article someone who also still believes, it says, climate change and how we are bad for the planet. But it brings up some good stuff. But the general article itself, if you use your mental filters and understand what you’re dealing with at times, it’s got a lot of good information on who is benefiting from all of this.

Climate and the Money Trail
globalresearch.ca / 4 Dec 2019

The hidden truth behind the Climate Debate at COP25, Madrid. This article was first published in September 2019.

(A: It was a good one.)

Climate. Now who wudda thought. The very mega-corporations and mega-billionaires behind the globalization of the world economy over recent decades, whose pursuit of shareholder value and cost reduction who have wreaked so much damage to our environment both in the industrial world and in the under-developed economies of Africa, Asia, Latin America, are the leading backers of the “grassroots” decarbonization movement from Sweden to Germany to the USA and beyond.

(A: This is not news. To some of us anyway.)

Whatever one may believe about the dangers of CO2 and risks of global warming creating a global catastrophe of 1.5 to 2 degree Celsius average temperature rise in the next roughly 12 years, it is worth noting who is promoting the current flood of propaganda and climate activism.

Green Finance

(A: It's quite a long article. It goes into Al Gore of course...)

Several years before Al Gore and others decided to use a young Swedish school girl to be the poster child for climate action urgency, or in the USA the call of Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez for a complete reorganization of the economy around a Green New Deal, the giants of finance began devising schemes for steering hundreds of billions of future funds to investments in often worthless “climate” companies.

(A: This article goes into, again, royalty, Prince Charles and so on...)

Bonnie Prince Charles, future UK Monarch, along with the Bank of England and City of London finance have promoted “green financial instruments,” (A: They call them green, 'eh.) led by Green Bonds, to redirect pension plans (A: Your pension plans go into it.) and mutual funds towards green projects. A key player in the linking of world financial institutions with the Green Agenda is outgoing Bank of England head Mark Carney. (A: He used to be the head of the Bank of Canada at one time. They move them around like musical chairs, so, so much for your having different countries, 'eh?)

In December 2015, the Bank for International Settlements’ (A: The BIS, that's the big one, the really big one…) Financial Stability Board (FSB), chaired then by Carney, created the Task Force on Climate-related Financial Disclosure (TCFD), to advise “investors, lenders and insurance about climate related risks.” That was certainly a bizarre focus for world central bankers.

In 2016 the TCFD along with the City of London Corporation and the UK Government initiated the Green Finance Initiative, aiming to channel trillions of dollars to “green” investments. The central bankers of the FSB nominated 31 people to form the TCFD. Chaired by billionaire Michael Bloomberg (A: ... naturally…) Of the financial wire, it includes key people from JP MorganChase; from BlackRock–one of the world’s biggest asset managers with almost $7 trillion; Barclays Bank; HSBC, the London-Hong Kong bank repeatedly fined for laundering drug and other black funds; Swiss Re, the world’s second largest reinsurance; China’s ICBC bank; Tata Steel, ENI oil, Dow Chemical, mining giant BHP Billington and David Blood of Al Gore’s Generation Investment LLC. In effect it seems the foxes are writing the rules for the new Green Hen House.

Of course they are, because you see, they are one big group to start with and belong to the same organizations. They're bringing in their future that was designed at least a couple of hundred years ago. The ordinary folk never quite get it, that the elite see themselves as a different race from the rest of you, and they're important and you're not so important. As the economy goes south down the tubes you got less and less importance in a world where they don't need you anymore. They can bring in lots of people from other countries if they really need to, to take the menial kind of jobs, until the robots are all taking over of course. It may take a little while yet but that's how they'll do it.

You’re living through an agenda, a very carefully orchestrated one. And getting back to the Club of Rome, don't ever forget it, it was given the task of finding a reason that the public might be conditioned to believe, with repetition and so on, that they are the problem and to unite the world, they thought of all kinds of scenarios that would terrify the public's so the whole world would have to come together, but nothing really flew. Even the UFO invasion idea didn't work either. [Alan chuckles.] And believe you me, Prime Minister's talked about this, and Presidents, about UFO invasions, if only the world was inundated by something from outer space, we’d all have to come together and all work together for a global society and new way of living. Hmmmm? Yep. McKenzie Cane in Canada said it, Reagan said it many times. Quite something isn't it, that the folk, they don't know.

Of course, even with all the Sci-Fi's and that, not enough people would fall for that. So, they came up with, oh the world's dying, everything's going to die, oh, the climate’s going berserk. Most folk can't remember, mind you, from last year to this year what the weather was like. They really can't. So it's easy to terrify them. And children are definitely terrified. They're getting completely indoctrinated into nightmares with it. And they'll grow up really true, truly believing it all. Why would anybody lie to you?

There's all these different documentaries on it, with hypnooootic voices behind it, generally women's voices. Canada's awfully good for supplying them by the way, so many documentaries made for indoctrination processes and they talk in a veeeerrrrymeeeeasuredtoooone, and very hypnotic. You never forget that; you’ll be terrified for life as a child.

So, we're definitely going into it big time. And here you are, you know, it's all your fault, the Club of Rome said, that will fit the bill, humans therefore are the problem, mankind is the problem and famine and plague's and drought and desertification, these would all fit the bill, you see. That would fit the bill. Man's the enemy. There ya go. And they all signed on to it. Every government signed on to it. Everything that happens on a global agenda is signed on by your politicians. They never mentioned that to you, did they?

All the politicians signed on for total free-trade and through the negotiations for China and the GATT Treaties, knowing full well what was going to happen. Bingo, lots of unemployed people! And then the taxes have to be taken from whatever work is left, that they used to get coming in from all the different levels of industry, all gone. So you wonder why there's no middle class left? And they're going down the tubes? Up to their eyes in debt, pretending and pretending and pretending they're okay? Well, there's a lot more articles, as I say, but what's the point at the moment?

As long as, you know, if anyone begins to understand what I'm talking about, it's a big success, folks. This is a triumph for the individual, for one person at a time. Honestly.

Because when you see the incredible indoctrination that everyone's had, the screeds of libraries on psychological warfare techniques, and they call toolkits for training the children, and toolkits for getting different ideas across that you must make them believe in, that work awfully well... All these neuroscientists, psychologists galore, behaviors all working to indoctrinate you for what they say is a better future, they've decided that if you believe this it will be a better future… It doesn't matter that it's deception that's used to get there. You have no idea how much of it is embedded in everything you watch for entertainment. All through your whole life long. Little bits and pieces that are just stuck in the stories. Even in children's books to make sure they, the constant indoctrination of your politically correct updates. It's just astonishing. Think about it, folks.

Remember too, that this is a terrible time of year for people like me who depend upon donations or folk buying books and discs and to get me by. Because I've got a lot of expenses too and things just literally fade off as folk look at all the different things that are dangled in front of you for Christmas. Even though there's a constant sale on the planet as far as I can see now with their black Friday, then cyber week and yada, yada, yeah, right all the way into Christmas. And then it will be about a whole month of sales after in January. Unfortunately folk literally are trying to put off their existential despair, and that's what it is, existential despair, trying to supply things that are missing in life on an emotional level with all the goods that are dangled in front of you.

But try and remember you can still send out a few bucks my way, hopefully, and keep me ticking over. Because it's really serious and gets really serious this time of year. And believe you me, I don't bring in much money. If I did, I'd be making stacks of movies and having a lot of front people. And I don't compromise either by the way, I'm not a front for any politician, or for any particular other nation either for that matter.

You might be surprised with some people to find out who you are following at times. They always supply your leaders, and that's some of the first shows I ever did back in the 90s, to tell you how it was done, how they supply your leaders for every, for whatever shade of group that you think you belong to, you've got a leader just for you.

Anyway, as I say, send some cash my way. Go into .com, see how it's done. There's different ways to get it to me. [Options listed above.]

For myself Alan Watt from Ontario Canada, where it's snowing because it's winter, that's what the climate does in winter, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Dec. 22, 2019 (#1752)

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on December 22, 2019. I hope you're all hanging in there, in the colder climates, that seem to be impervious to the supposedly global warming we're having. Because the temperatures here have been absolutely frigid for a long time. I found that in the last few years the winters are lasting longer and becoming heavier in fact with snow and so on. But right now it's not just the snow, it'sincredibly cold temperatures, often down to about 10°, 15°, 20° below the freezing mark, in Fahrenheit that is, at night. And not much better during the day. I think the other day there it was, it didn't get above the zero mark. And this occasionally will happen at the end of December into January. Although February is often the worst month for being cold, very, very cold temperatures.

As I say, the more global warming we get, the colder it is here and the longer the winters, for sure. Mind you, they were spraying like crazy the other day, the trails back and forth across the sky. Where I am in the Sudbury area, I'm well outside Sudbury, and Sudbury itself only has two or three planes a day going up and down, the sky was littered with the trails of jets back and forth all over the place. So, I won't even go into the things they call, as you quote the actual articles from universities and so on, and people involved on the panels of geo engineering as they call it, when you quote them you're called a conspiracy theorist.

Isn't it amazing today, where the psychological warfare is so great that you're immediately slandered by the establishment or its agencies just for noticing things. I remember too, years ago, I was thinking about that too, I was on a show by Stanley Monteith. He had a really good show. He asked me, he says, tell me something about yourself, what made you...? He knew I was up there in understanding what was happening and so on with information and he says, what made you, brought you to the stage where you understood things? And I quipped, I joked, I said, well I think I was born with a form of autism that help me see the world as it really was. And I don't think he really caught I was joking about it, but that's how it really is.

Maybe you're lucky or unlucky, it depends on how you see it. Because ignorance, they say, is bliss. And having knowledge about what's happening doesn't make you terribly happy at times. Because you see an incredible evil, and that's the only word I can use is evil of powerful institutions and sometimes countries and things that they do. And again, the incredible gain that those at the top of these different institutions and countries gave themselves financially, and for positions of power as they get boosted up the ladder. Because there definitely is a big global agenda here.

We are so brainwashed; we're brought up to be brainwashed into Plato's cave. I used to give talks about Plato's cave, and it became awfully popular and everybody started to use it. But the idea is, if you're born in the cave, and you can never look backwards to the mouth of the cave, so all you see is the shadows cast by the far light on the walls and so on. The elders will sit and discuss what all these shadows mean, because you haven't got a clue what's outside, or even if there is an outside. Until one person gets out and travels about the world and comes back and tells them, and they want to kill him because he's disrupting their belief system of reality.

All their reality is now in jeopardy and he's threatened to be killed and murdered. Well, that is the real world you're in. We're all in Plato's cave. We're brought up to be in Plato's cave. When you go through - and you should take some time and do it - so much of the declassified information on psychological warfare from government agencies. You'd be astonished at just that alone, never mind the much, much bigger and deeper and secretive agendas to do with brainwashing you, hhh, the average citizenry.

Because we're targets, populations are targets of global agenda, quite naturally, and those at the top want to fill their pockets awfully well as they bring the world into terrible conflicts in order to get the resolutions further along the road to the global governmental system. They have no problem at the top of filling their pockets. In fact, you can see what's going on even with some of the, like, Biden's son in the news and the money he's been getting for nothing basically. The thing is, the people at the top really believe it's their right to plunder you. They honestly do. You have to look into the people who are at the top, they have a very deep belief that they have the right to plunder you and there's nothing wrong with it. And that's a fact.

I could go much, much deeper but I won't.

But we're living in a world today that's on the edge. It's always on the edge, mind you, because we're brought up living in crisis, one crisis after another, financial or war or whatever it happens to be. As I used to say, and I thought back over the 20th century, even from the 19th century, it was just one crisis after another. People don't know that there was a depression in the 1800s, one in the late 1800s, there had been a few, but in the late 1800s when three bankers in the US did a similar thing that Soros did much later with Britain and crashed the economy and plundered it.

Then, in Britain for instance, you had wars on the go. The Boer War. They had occupied a good part of India too, and Africa. But they had the Boer War with the Dutch settlers because they all wanted the gold and the diamonds and so on. Because those at the head of the Alfred Milner group it was, their Kindergarten and so on, that became the Royal Institute of International Affairs/Council on Foreign Relations, they said quite openly that they wanted to take over the world and bring into, they called it, a British system.

Well, the British folk would probably say, well that's quite nice. But it's nothing to do with the British system. Until you get out of the cave and realize that the British system isn't your system. [Alan chuckles.] You understand? And nothing's changed. The group that ran it in Milner's day often, they have their descendants running it today, in fact, some of them. And again, filling their… Very, very wealthy today with the plunder they've got and so on. But that's their rightful place to do it, you see. As they're helping you all come to a world peace, it's only right they reward themselves with lots of loot, you understand. That's how they rationalized things.

But it's fascinating, as I say, to have the insight into it. So much of it growing up, at least you could glean from books in some of the libraries in Britain, I'm sure they're all gone, most of the books have gone now, mind you. But back then you could peruse lots of books put out by, under memoirs and so on and biographies and autobiographies of people who were players in the game, the big game for world Empire and world control. They would tell you their goals to do with gaining finances, etc. and having a secure financial system across the planet. As long as they themselves run it, you see, that was part of the plan.

But they also believed in, really, accumulating the world's resources under a handful, or maybe even a dozen or two dozen corporations. Everything that you would need as a nation or a bunch of nations to survive, everything, that's your energy, your food, everything, to be eventually owned by a few corporations. Then you would have total power over the world. All for peace, you understand. In reality, you'd have billions of people totally subservient to you and you have a massive bureaucracy deciding how many calories would get dished out here, there and elsewhere. Well, nothing's really changed. It's just more dressed up in scientific terminology today with many disguises, sustainability, etc. etc., to achieve the same goals.

But those at the top, still of course, and they do have incredible power over everything you need to survive. All kinds of energy. You try and survive in Canada, you could bring, where I am, my area here in Ontario, to its knees. Where I live, if they forbid you to cut wood, for instance, to heat yourself in the winter, they've done their best already too and lots of folk are quite happy forking out massive sums of money either for oil heating for furnaces or propane in this area. But a standby for so many people, especially in emergencies too, because when the electricity goes out with the winds and storms and so on, then you have to have some way of healing yourself, or you die. You see, [Alan chuckles.] that's what happens. So, you need the wood as a standby.

But I can remember even as far back as the 90s when some of the far, far global left-wingers at that time wanted to ban chainsaws, for instance, and things like that. These are things which are vital for even the emergency survival. So you can imagine what happens when you have a few companies, using government, mind you, again, getting them to pass laws and so on, so that you must, you must use their resources, their energy, which the corporations own and so on.

So, you're living under a fascist system that pretends it's really there for the people. It's socialistic. But really, socialism, fascism, is the same darn thing, when government is used to enforce policies of corporations. You have to get out of the terminology that can mislead you as they, as I say, keep camouflaging themselves all the time, all for the social good, you understand, as they take your rights away from you.

But getting back to Technocracy as I've mentioned before, that was their agenda, that they would own all, the people at the top, the proper folk, you see, the folk who should, who saw themselves as entitled to run the world and own it all too, would be dispensing of the energy here there and so on, in a humane way. Because they were, they had far more virtue, you see, than the average peasant. And nothing has honestly changed. Except the [Alan chuckles.] colluding with so many different sections and paying scientists off, to give them their proper propaganda to confuse the general public so's you can give up all your rights and so on and just accept it, again, for the greater good and for your own survival.

Crisis, crisis, crisis. So, from the 1800s, bank collapses, all brought about, and these collapses actually, it would be billions of dollars in today's money, that the three bankers that collapsed the economy in the States happened. In fact, it was their big crash that brought about, that helped eventually the next part of the con, we need an organization to stop this from happening, and so they gave the Federal Reserve to America, you see. And the bankers who caused it all ended up running it all.

It's quite fantastic to see the cons that go on. That's what I was talking to Dr. Stanley Monteith about, was how the cons, you can actually see them, how they start them, and how they built to what they want, and step by step by step... The public are always in a state of panic, or fear, are only seeing to the end of their nose and no further. Because they want to survive, that's a survival mode. And they're stampeded from one step to the next step, to the next step, all parts of the plan. Until you're totally in a system of, a form of slavery really, that's what it is.

Slavery can take many forms. Again, don't be deceived by terminology. Slavery, remember, was being used, you're being used as an animal by those who own you by using your labor to do whatever work that they the owners wanted done. That's why they couldn't tax labor for a long time. They always wanted it, were chomping at the bit. Because after all, and they had meetings, I remember even getting the papers on it, the meetings that they had about slavery in the 1800s. The Rothschild family were involved in drafting up a very clever plan. And this isn't conspiracy, you can actually find it, where they advised America, the slaveowners of America, and they weren't all in the South by the way as you well know, hopefully. But they advised them, it's far better if you could introduce the taxation form from, and get money from the work of everybody. That way you won't have to feed the slaves. And when slaves get old you have to keep them and feed them, otherwise the rest of the slaves might just have had enough and overthrow you. You see?

That was honestly discussed, as a matter-of-fact business proposition. But he said, if you could just have a system, that they'd already brought into Britain actually, very early on, of the centralized banking system where the government would be helped, helped is the word I guess, to borrow from the centralized bank, which was still private but given a very national name, you see. And with a guarantee that the money that was borrowed by the government for whatever it was, you know, like an example, foreign wars for instance, would be paid back to the bank, that helped fund it all, by the bank's right to tax, they could also disguise that by having a separate government agency set up, an independent agency that would do the taxing for this bank. [Alan chuckles.] No kidding you. It's fascinating to read this. Then the population would have to pay taxes on their labor, you see, and after a generation, that's only 20, 25 years or so, they could say that the public would accept that, they'd start to forget that it wasn't always this way. We adapt very quickly, you see.

That way, you could have wars across the world for plunder and different things like that, borrowed from the bank to finance it, and the bank would be happy to get it all back in tax collection. It wasn't unusual, that used to be the way in the Middle Ages when kings and queens, when they didn't have the kind of governments that they have today. But kings and queens would borrow for the treasuries or their armories or whatever it happened to be, and they brought in foreigners to collect the taxes. They would lend the money to government on the condition that they would literally go around and collect the taxes. Long history of it all.

But it's astonishing, as I say, labor couldn't be tax for a long, long time. Because you are either free or you were a bondsman, you were held, under debt, you see. And even tax that they claimed you owed was then considered as debt if you didn't pay it off. Fascinating stories to it all. But again, everybody pays it today.

Why? Because you're afraid. You're afraid, and as long as you're earning enough to get by, and you've got lots of entertainment and so on, you tend to put these things to the side. Oh well, you know, what else can we do, yada, yada ya...? And no one wants to stick their head up and say, well stop paying your taxes. [Alan chuckles.] And you know how far you'll get with that anyway.

But we're all slaves. Of course, we're slaves. I've mentioned before Charles Galton Darwin who was one of the many people who helped work with Bertrand Russell and the Macy group and all the other groups to help create the present system and culture that we're living in today, with the changes that they would bring in. Because the whole culture was reinvented basically post-World War II, for those who didn't know. It was authorized by even the president of the United States at the time at the end of the war. Britain played along with it too naturally.

So anyway, this system is well underway. Many things have been achieved. The same goals that were set up back in the 1800s, late 1800s by Lord Alfred Milner, that became, as I say, the Royal Institute of International Affairs, private organization, with a royal charter, set up a world empire based on the British system. As I say, getting back to my original point, you understand what they're saying has two meanings. The British system is a completely different system ruling over Britain than the people who were brought and raised up in Britain understand it. They have no idea either. But the ones who own them all, the British system, you see. It's quite fascinating.

And yeah, it's the Plato's cave syndrome. People are very docile today. Getting back to what I says with The Next Million Years by Charles Galton Darwin. He said in his book, slavery has always existed in one form or another and I suppose it will continue to exist. You understand what they're saying? ...in one form or another. And everyone who votes thinks they're free but they're not. They're not free at all. You have so many obligations put upon you, even to be a citizen, and part of the obligation is to pay taxes. You see? If you pay taxes on your labor, then, no, you're not free at all, you're a slave.

But you're a self-sustaining slave because you pay for your own clothing, for your food and your shelter, and to keep alive. You pay for it all yourself. And it's far better that way. And even pay for either a retirement fund, or into one, or whatever it happens to be, to take care of you when you get old and sickly. Of course, now of course we can get euthanasia, and it's much more efficient, isn't it, for the system that we're in. We truly are run in a very clever system. And it's not conspiracy. Actually, it's perfect in a sense because most of the folk never figure it out. That's how perfectly you're raised in Plato's cave. Perfect conditioning works very, very well.

It is perfect conditioning, where people you know will say, oh that's crazy! That's crazy, you know. Because it's unthinkable that these things happen. They're trained to believe things in the way that you do believe, and you might even go off and fight for things thinking it's all right and true. And many did. That was the way in my generation, they thought that was the right way to be, to fight the terrible Cold War of the terrible communist system. Never realizing of course that so much of that was bogus too and those who ran it all, way above you all, were going to use it to bring in a global society with all the learned things from the social Soviet experiments incorporated into the new system.

The same thing they found in the States when they had, the Congress sent out the commissions to investigate, I think it was actually the Senate that sent them out. Norman Dodd was sent out under the Reese Commission to find out why the big tax-free foundations, these multi-, really, billionaires, really, who ran them, who owned them, these private families and that and their private foundations, that financed armies of NGOs and social movements as well, why they seemed to be promoting communism? Your top capitalists were promoting communism. Eventually I think it was the head of the Ford Foundation at the time told Norman Dodd, he said, we work to change the culture that eventually the Soviet system and the American system can be blended together eventually down the road. So, the techniques that the Soviet used, they found out what worked and what didn't work, were blended into the system.

I would say we're far more obedient today, especially in America, than they used to be. At one time Americans individually would stand up when their rights and freedoms were threatened. But today, much, much less so. Much less so. So again, perfect conditioning works awfully well. Then again, every country under the United Nations had a department, after the war, the Culture department. Britain, America, Canada, all these different countries, a Department of Culture. And I used to think when I was young and at school I thought, why would you have a Department of culture when we are the people and we are the culture?

Well, the whole point of it is to change the culture. And committees that work on what they saw as necessary changes that would have to be made in the culture, after World War II of course they planned to destroy the cultures as they stood, and especially marriage. All the Marxian concepts, again, had to be fulfilled, the communist ones. The end of private property eventually, they hope to achieve, except, except for the very, very wealthy who wanted to wipe out the middle class. And they've been awfully successful in doing it.

They would bring in a form, under the guise of free trade, of countries being interdependent. Meaning, no country could be nationalistic and totally independent in a peaceful world. So therefore, they'd make you all interdependent. So, for vital things you would need as a nation to survive you'd have to import them, you wouldn't be allowed to grow them or whatever it happens to be in your own country. So, you have to import them, you'd be interdependent. As far, right up to Margaret Thatcher’s day, she was pushing the same terminology, interdependence. Which obviously means you're at the end of sovereignty, if you need other countries for your basic survival, then you will not be sovereign. They had articles about that too, giving up sovereignty for peace, etc.

The same thing was pushed, the exact same thing was pushed when 9/11 happened. The dust hadn't settled before all the papers, on queue at the same time across America and Britain and elsewhere, would you give up, and the man on the street interviews, would you give up personal sovereignty or national sovereignty for safety? It was all orchestrated in advance. Of course it was. Nothing changes. But agendas go on. It's very sad, to me it's very sad to look at the old books in say the 1970s or even earlier, much earlier and you see the powerful players who were involved in the big think tanks that also had the ability to set up processes and committees to implement their policies from the think tanks, from the policies they came up with, and to see society being worked on queue step by step by step, including with industry where they said they would deindustrialized the West. Deindustrialized it, you understand?

Maurice Strong in Canada with his Biodiversity Treaty etc., part of the same sustainability agenda, was very vocal about the complete deindustrialization of the West and bringing us into a preindustrial climate basically economically. So, you’re talking about subsistence, folks, basic subsistence. Austerity. When you see it happening and you see the people and you read their books of the players who help set it all up, and again implement it, you have no option but to come to the conclusion that this is an agenda. Of course, it's an agenda. They tell you in their books it's an agenda.

The United Nations' Agenda 21, it's called the United Nations Agenda 21, the agenda for the 21st century. It was also called the Millennium Project. They blended the two together. Now it's, the next part is 2030, you see. But the agenda for the 21st century is for the whole, all the different things have to be implemented and working before the century is through. Big changes.

The end of rural living, right, with the guise that it will be unsustainable to have roads in the country where the occasional houses are, and houses that don't have anything to do with farming so they shouldn't exist there, etc. etc. Get everybody into the cities. And of course the only folk you'll have in the country will be, like the Russian elites in the Politburo and all the civil servants who will have the dachas in the country, you see, that will be paid for by the taxpayer no doubt.

Nothing changes. Except, except actually the occasional person here or there catches on to it. And for every person who has a natural ability to catch on to it, and figure things out, you'll have 100 put out there to thwart you. At least, you know. For every person who wakes up, by themselves that is, has an innate ability to do so, that person is a threat. That person is noticed right off the bat. There'll be a hundred at least as I say copycats put out, well-funded, who will use the same material that you're putting out and then spin it off into ridiculous things to discredit the material and the people who put it out, like yourself who start it off perhaps. That's called counterintelligence.

Because knowledge is power. And this kind of knowledge is awfully powerful. And so, it doesn't just get along by itself. You must bring in all kinds of confusion into basic data, basic information, and when you bring in all the confusion and the ridiculousness of some of the things that are attached to it, you've got a good chance of discrediting the true information. And yeah, you will be often sucking blood off people next, or something like that, or whatever it happens to be. You understand what I'm talking about, I'm sure. That's called counterintelligence.

Well-funded. When you see people who have books that are just churned out... I've seen people who put more books out per year than I go to the bathroom. Well, of course they don't write them. If you go through their books, sure enough, whoever really, or agencies that put them together just take all chapters of every other book out there by genuine people, throw it together, then put in the spin. That's how it's done folks. It costs money to do all that. Big money. Big money. Absolutely. Even to get your books promoted across the world takes big money.

You gotta start thinking about things. And stop just following people. Counterintelligence. Counter, counter, counter, you counter the intelligence by ridiculing it eventually. And when you see something that's absolutely ridiculous being promoted by someone, and that person is promoted by others, you've got to say wait a minute, these people must see what's going on here. Of course they see what's going on. There's very little out there today that's genuine. Very little. Honestly. Absolutely. And other folk who are put out of the picture altogether, completely, financially and so on, that's generally how they get you out of the way. The dirty tricks that go on you would not believe behind-the-scenes. Because people really want to believe they're free. They truly want to believe that.

It's a sad, sad commentary that most folk, and I suppose it's the same with the studies they say were done on revolutions in the past. But most folk go by the statistics of previous experiments. Like the US for instance, in its war for independence, whatever the real cause, and I really have my suspicions about it too. [Alan chuckles.] And I think people should have some healthy suspicions about things, of the founders and so on. But they say there was only 3% of the US population at that time, 3%, so you could say three men at that time, three men out of every hundred actually partook in the fighting against Britain at that time. So, I would imagine that's a pretty good average of times from other experiences of humanity in different countries for different things too. It's always a small minority who actually do the heavy, heavy work or dying or whatever it happens to be.

But in the society that we live in today of information and excess data, where I've even read the articles put out by counterintelligence agencies talking about data, overloading the public with data, data, data, you see, until they switch off. Then you give them conflicting data. First, it's an image that's very similar to the data, like a duplication. Then you put the spin onto it, and then more spin. But eventually you've got opposing mirror image data that causes total cognitive dissonance, they call it, and it works awfully, awfully well this technique. Today with mass communication and everyone's carrying their cell phones and so on and getting the same news from the same sources and so on and so on and so on, it's so simple to do. So simple. And very effective.

But we are living through an amazing time when we are seeing, they call it a deep state in America. Well, London's got its deep state. Of course it has. I've talked before about assassination squads that the MI5 and MI6 have. Remember the movie too, The Good Shepherd? Which is very tame in actuality of how things are done in reality. I had to laugh to do with the whole thing, with Britain and the Skripal case with poisoning and all that and blaming Russia and yada, yada, ya. There's so much evidence that came out since then to really make it a laughingstock to an extent, even though it's serious and deadly and all that. But you can never ever, ever use your own conscience to judge how far governments are going to go. Because they go way, waay beyond any conscience of you to get what they want. That's when you start learning about things.

There's countless cases of folk getting assassinated, not just down through history, but even in recent history, or even the last hundred years and so on in the Western countries. And of course accidents are easy, easy to do, hit and runs and so on. In the US it's very, very simple with drive-by shootings for instance. Many of the cases of the drive-by shootings hit people who literally were targeted for extinction, and oh, they just happened to be in a bunch of people walking along the sidewalk and boof. No, no. No. No.

The best assassinations, in that case, cheap to do and so on, are to use a lot of people to get the one person you're after. Aircraft have been downed before with other passengers just to get the one person. It makes it look more plausible. Well, just, oh, engine failure or pilot error whatever happens to be, this kind of thing happens. Absolutely, when it's worth it they'll do it, believe you me. Because that's how it's done.

But we're so trusting, because you see, the higher you go in anything to do with agencies, etc., the more psychopathic ones, just like big business, get up to the top, into the top echelons of power. And they will use these forces with impunity. And they have no conscience. And they don't have nervous breakdowns about things. When you reflect on it, they don't need pills, or viruses in the brain like the articles in the last three years, that they would destroy recent memory, they don't need any of that stuff, you see, they don't have posttraumatic stress syndromes. Just the opposite in fact.

These folks exist in their assassination squads. Sure they do. They used to have up on YouTube some of the assassination squads of other countries going into hotels, very well organized. You can see the training involved, as the first little team goes in, blah blah blah, sets it up, the second team go in, they go into the room, bump off the person that's supposed to be bumped off, and the next ones, the cleaners go in and clean up any fingerprints and so on before… and then you see them all going to the airport, picked up on security cameras. Yeah, yeah, this happens all the time, this kind of thing. Absolutely.

So, we've got to grow up. And it's not pleasant growing up from a nice security, the feeling of a child, you see, if you're lucky enough to have decent parents, if you're lucky enough. Because remember, your parents have been under attack too. If you have parents, in fact, in this day and age, under tremendous attacks to destroy them and their relationships, etc. And to cause incredible dissatisfaction by many different techniques too. And definitely the children suffer. But if you grew up with a happy childhood, and a good schooling, where everything seemed happy, happy, and the teachers weren't brutes, then you're probably well indoctrinated into the world is all quite nice. Because in reality it'snot.

I remember years ago going over how much money is taxed off us, that we could get our hands on, the records that is - because we don't get much truth and anything at all, from very secretive governments - and how much money we spend. Forget their wages and so on and the big handouts they give to their pals or relatives in the big corporations and so on, because most big businesses today are funded by the public. Public-private partnerships they call it. We used to just call it grand theft but now it's public-private partnerships. It sounds much better, doesn't it?

But when you realize how much money we're spending for wars? …for wars that have got nothing to do with defending us, the ones who are paying for it all. For wars that don't even benefit us with plunder, we don't get the plunder either like they did in the old days. We're just in it for other reasons altogether. But when you see where it all goes to, how on earth could you possibly call yourself free? Why would you even vote for such a system as that? And why would you ever believe any politician when they promise you anything? Really? Really, I... Perpetual childhood... Brought up by good parents in cotton wool and lots of fairytales, and decent happy schooling and you were never hungry, etc. etc. Well brainwashed. Well conditioned.

As I've said before, not everyone can handle truth. We've all experienced that, I'm sure, talking to some people, who are nice people, but you see their eyes clouding over. Because when you give someone truth on something and you're not berating them, like some kind of street evangelists, accusing them of anything, but where you're just telling them some quiet truth, all truth requires a response from the individual. Because knowing something, just knowing something makes you have to decide things. We're quite happy to decide things if we don't have to act on anything. But some truths almost demand that you act… Even if it's just something so simple as occasionally telling a person about the same conclusion you come to on a matter. But when it comes to overloading a person, never overload a person with too much information. They'll switch off. Quite naturally too. When you've had a lifetime of indoctrination, especially with the drivel they give you today called news, d'you really expect them just to say, oh I understand it all, okay thanks for telling me, hm?

I've seen over this last while, some top reporters, top reporters who've played the game, because they all play the game too for their own survival. But top ones admitting now that they go into sites for news, which they would never have dared to go into before. Because you can't get anything real on your main so-called aboveboard media. It's that bad today. It truly is. There's also technique being put into place which folk haven't quite caught onto. It isn't just the banning of factual news. It's the purposes of it. The purpose being, you're being trained into a system for a global society, a different society from the one you had when you have a nation. And the society is training you now into a system, a global system, where you'll be run, again, by professionals, the experts, the technocrats basically and you'll only be told enough to keep the system going and anything really relevant you will not be told.

Very much like the communist system of China right now. Very, very, very similar indeed. Where you don't have to know all these things, they'll tell you what to think about. They'll tell you what you should know. But they'll definitely, a lot of things will be forbidden to think about or even talk about, etc. We're seeing that being implemented here now.

So, it's for a post-nation state basically into a world state we are being trained. And eventually, very quickly, maybe 20 years maximum, by 20 years, everybody will just accept what's given, dished out as news, even though it's nothing there really. But they'll accept it as all being quite normal. And things that they weren't told, if it ever crept out one way or another, it wouldn't even anger them that they weren't, that they won't expect to be told anything that really, really matters to them. Because you're going into a collectivist society.

Now, I'm just going to mention a few articles. I did, for once, ha, I've got a stack of articles of things I've been thinking about and looking things up and collecting them. Because we are going through astonishing times. These are historical events that are happening, and most people are being kept in the dark about it or treating it like it's unimportant or whatever. Astonishing events are happening. And it's not conspiracy theory when it's out of the mouths a lot of the people involved in it. It's just amazing. But that's what we're in today.

So, I'll mentioned some of course that will tie in with the big agenda. When you do realize that you're in a system that's to be run efficiently, that was always the goal of technocracy, to run a system efficiently you couldn't have a democratic system. You might use the illusion of a democracy, but you can never have efficiency and democracy. Couldn't happen. So, as I mentioned before, people couldn't have all the rights either in an efficient system. In an individualistic system you definitely, it would never work. You had to make a collectivist society and train the public to be the same. To dress the same, to look the same, do whatever it happens to be, do the same hobbies, same interests, same, same, same, same. Then of course you give them the same news and they won't question it. It's long past that phase.

Now it's into the system of not just preventing pregnancy, as they overload you with sex and destroy marriage. Because believe you me, if you could promote sexuality as the novelty of the new, the new partners that causes their excitement, that's what they push, you understand that? So, you're not going to be happy with the same partner, that's intentional. Simple warfare. What makes people bond together? Well, this is what makes them bond together and trust and all the rest of it. How do you destroy it? Well, here's how you destroy it, entertainment, blah, blah, blah. All done, folks. Old news isn't it?

Then of course the state picks up, as I say, the problem of it, the fallout from it like pregnancy. Oh, they'll deal with it. Again, collectively the taxpayer is forced to pay for these things. If you're not paying for wars and bullets and bombs for big corporations to plunder countries, you're paying for other things too that you've got nothing to do with. And you might even be against in fact, but you're forced to do it. You're coerced and threatened if you don't pay up for these things to be implemented.

Now they're going into the phase again for the elderly. I saw this coming years and years and years ago. I even gave talks in the 90s, I says you know, they start first on abortion, and get used to that, it's okay, you know, dehumanize a baby into a fetus, you know, a term, and just dehumanize it. And eventually go for the elderly, well, you know, they're old and, hhhhh, you're just stupid, old, smelly geezers, you know. Dehumanize them. Then...

Quebec court invalidates some requirements for assisted death - montrealgazette.com / 3 Oct 2019

Hm. One of many, many articles. And I don't want to depress people. People want to be happy, happy all the time because of entertainment, makes them want to, they seek distraction. And distraction generally comes, you don't want to go into anything that's really, really serious. Until people can't go into anything serious, until eventually they've got phobias if you hit something serious. Oh no, don't say that, don't read that article, aaah, don't... You know, they freak out.

I mentioned before about the assisted death and how, again, Quebec really, really pushed it fast and hard and copied the Dutch system, etc. I mentioned too before about one article I think the last week, about them holding down an elderly patient who tried to get up as she was being euthanized.

Dutch Doctor Acquitted for Euthanizing Woman Who Had to Be Restrained as She Was Killed - faithwire.com / 13 Sept 2019

These are humans! Again, the dehumanization process first of all, and then you make it, oh well you know they're going senile. Well, you see, Canada is now going to take the next step, which had to come, where they could actually try and encourage you, that if you're going to die or go senile for instance within say 3 or 4 or 5 years, why not just take euthanasia now? As time goes on, they'll convince the people to go along with that. Very quickly. Because you could be a burden on society, make you feel guilty that you're still living. I'm not kidding you. This is all what's going on right now. So, I'll put this article up there. And…

Canada Moving to Allow Human Euthanasia For Certain Diseases and Illnesses While Bullying Hospice to Murder Patients As Part of Palliative Care - thewashingtonstandard.com / 16 Dec 2019

... for those that want to read it. For those who want to be happy-happy, just continue on your merry way. Until it's your turn maybe for, when the state decides that, why should they keep you alive? Remember what, hhhch, one of the founders of the Fabian Society, George Bernard Shaw said? And there's an audio that out there, it's actually an early film clip of him saying, that, when we are in control, meaning this true socialistic system of Technocracy, he said, when we are in control you have to come to us and argue why we should keep you alive. Even if it's a healthy person, if there's no work for you, for instance, why should they keep you alive? Hm?

So anyway, it mentions Quebecers who went right to seek medical assisted death, after both had been turned aside by their physicians. Because now they're going into it you see, the same as Holland went into it, and started to add more and more categories. Like, oh, they're depressed. Even for teenagers, oh I'm depressed, I'm a teenager. Oh, big deal! I can see the end of the world and you're being depressed when you're a teenager, until you really mature, 'eh?! These are called growing pains, and being depressed on and off is part of it. And who says you're supposed to be manically happy for the rest of your life? …except for the ads you see on TV, hm, buy this and you're a-ha-ha-ha. No. You're not supposed to be happy all the time. There's a stable state in between.

So anyway, they're going further and further, and they keep adding to the different categories to have you bumped off, you see. Now they're having lawyers debate it all. And of course, they've been teaching this under bioethics since at least the 90s, openly. When they first gave us on television, oh here's a bioethicist. Well what's a bioethicist, you know? Oh, it's someone who's trained in ethics of biology, meaning the human condition. Oh really? Wow. So these folk are the ones who decide if you live and die, you see. Yeah, we went through a course on it, and we've decided that it's not, it's not fit we should keep you alive, even though your mind's okay and we could keep you alive, but it costs a few bucks and we could use a few bucks for this big corporation that's going to go off and have wars and so on, you know. That's how it's done.

That's the real world. As I say, you wonder why a lot of folk can't handle the real world. It's a horror show, this real true reality, folks. It certainly isn't a human or humane system. Although the ones at the top will say it's survival of the fittest and they see themselves as the fittest. That's how it is. Very simple. And then this article too…

Why everyone is talking about free cash handouts—an explainer on universal basic income - cnbc.com / 27 June 2019

Most folk don't understand what it is. But again, that's what Bertrand Russell discussed in the 1940s they'd eventually bring in, and they'd give you credits issued by the state. Now everything is electronic, you're issued so many credits, or doesn't matter what they call it for money, it's credits. But it's a method of controlling you as well. But it will be announced actually as a wonderful thing for these folk, who will get a guaranteed income for sitting at home and having no work and no purpose and being depressed, you see. Then of course down the road they'll actually have you euthanized for it. You don't want to live like that with no purpose, do you? Do you really? Do you really want to live like that, and have no, and be a burden on people? Well after all, we're giving you free money every month, you know, just for…

You think I'm kidding, 'eh? [Alan chuckles.] It's an agenda. An agenda. M-hm. So, I'll put some of these links up for some of the stories. As I say, so much of this stuff now you can't even say anymore. Because the ones at the top meanbusiness, you know, the teeth are showing and the glove is off, the velvet glove is off the fist, the iron fist.

Jobs of the future are clustering in a handful of U.S. cities, study finds - reuters.com / 8 Dec 2019

Oh, wow, a revelation, 'eh? Agenda 21, everyone must move off the rural areas into the already overcrowded cities. Then you have the UN declaration of megacities and super cities, etc. Then they give a whole list of, remember the military, Department of Defense, the big think thank I read it on the air years ago, when they said that we'll have the end of the nation states, into a global system but they'll be, the closest thing to any sovereignty will be super states, actual states, or cities, within this world conglomerate. It's all there, you know, you're living an agenda. You understand, if things were just developing willy-nilly, you would/could get all kinds of alternatives to everything. Nope. Noooo. You're going along a definite agenda, folks, with the super cities, where...

Jobs of the future are clustering in a handful of U.S. cities, study finds - reuters.com / 8 Dec 2019

Yeah. And that is what's happening. They're building high-rises in a lot of the cities. But it's to bring in the ones who are involved in the electronic tech industry, computers and so on. Of course it is. These people are now nomads they call them, nomads according to Jacques Attali in his books. Up at the United Nations of course, that's where he is. He's the one who said in Winners and Losers in the Coming New World Order, and then the other one too, A Brief History of the Future, where everybody's got their nomadic devices, you know, that's what your little communicator is. You'll travel around the world, you'll just go to where the work is, when you're called. You'll have no real basic home or permanent home, etc. etc. For the up-and-coming technocratic types, you see. It's all there.

But the cities of course have to be super cities. You need to get off the land into these super cities, by the end of the nation-states of course agenda. But the people living through it, even though they hear it, still don't want to believe it. Even when it's happening. Even when eventually they'll end up in a super city and at the end of their national sovereignty.

I think I mentioned too the previous week that…

Columbia professor who fled communism resigns, says university is becoming communist thecollegefix.com / 6 Nov 2019

A Romania-born academic says he recently left his tenured position at Columbia University because the Ivy League school is "on its way toward full blown communism," according to a Romanian TV interview translated by a Romanian-American immigrant.

This is a guy who was brought up and left Romania because of the communistic system, when it was under it. And now it's [Alan chuckles.] he says he's left his tenured position at Columbia University in the States because it's gone full-blown communism. To change the future you must always get to the young, you see, up-and-coming managerial class. You brainwash them and you promise them utopias, and they become tyrants over the rest of the public, to make them all conform. Mind you, they get paid well to do it, and folk do an awful lot of things if they're paid well.

Another article too...

Afghanistan War – The Crime of the Century - ronpaullibertyreport.com / 17 Dec 2019

I remember it when they first went to Afghanistan, how they planned it too before 9/11 happened of course. And in they went. Remember, Russia, that was its Viet Nam. And the US already had its Vietnam, remember. It was supposed to learn from that, don't get bogged down in a long drawn-out war that you can't really win, or you wouldn't be allowed to win, put it that way. That's for sure. The same thing happened, they went right in after the Soviet Union had exhausted itself in Afghanistan, and other places but mainly Afghanistan, and took over from there. They did the same darned thing up until this day. And they're bogged down, they've got no further forward. Everything's corrupt there as it's always been. And there's a graveyard of Nations, Afghanistan, that's what they used to call it. Invaders always get bogged down, exhausted, bankrupted and that was it.

Mind you, the US did, and I hate to say the term US, the US is just another satrapy of world ownership, of their true world rulers. The US did put in roads to big areas for heavy-duty mineral resources. They built them and all that, thanks to the taxpayers of America. Just like Britain did across India and that, putting railroads, etc. for the owners of Britain to take all the loot out and the resources, they did the same thing for the US in Afghanistan and paid for it all, thanks to the taxpayers. Then they even guarded the convoys of [Alan chuckles.] Chinese trucks coming into take the resources out; it was a deal they'd made with them. It's just astonishing the things that go on, isn't it, 'eh? Really. If you dig into the corporations really that own it all, it's the same old bunch again that are awfully well known for being involved in heavy-duty mining and minerals.

But anyway, this Afghanistan War, the crime of the century,I'll put that up too. It's not bad. It's just the truth and folk don't want... Forget politics or forget Ron Paul and politics, but the facts are the facts as he puts them out there, at least on this particular issue, put it that way. I'll put that up too.

Then this article too, it's interesting. Boris, the new Blair... You've got to understand how you're presented with people that you're supposed to like or dislike or whatever in politics. It's all built up with them, and they play their parts awfully well, whoever the politician or leader or pretended leader happens to be. Like Boris. Amazing guy this Boris Johnson, as they want to call him. Although he's got a long, long [Alan chuckles.] family history from all over parts of Europe and elsewhere. It's called...

Boris: The New Blair
firstthings.com / 14 Dec 2019

(Alan: It's by Peter Hitchens and he gives you some of the personality type of Boris Johnson and the history of him too. Now, it is true, he's been put in there as the conservative leader of Britain, right. This guy, remember before he was the mayor of the City of London. If you're the mayor of the City of London you're part of the folk who own the country. You know. But Boris is good at playing the part of the clown and so he's being put up as a change from Teresa May, you know, that's all. It says...)

...attended the most expensive and snobbish school in the world, Eton. He speaks the language of P. G. Wodehouse’s heroes in a whuffly, archaic voice that invites derision. Yet he has persuaded legions of the nation’s poorest and most deprived people to vote for his Conservative Party— a party they have been brought up to hate.

(A: It's really interesting too. There's a lot went on in the Labour Party and I really don't play politics because it's all corrupt. But with the Labour Party, and Corbin, Corbin's been having trouble for the last two years and it was in the papers as to who was causing trouble. Because they wanted someone else in and they got Boris in. They'll be very similar to what they had in, again, the old alliance of the hands across the water, or the pond, putting the US and Britain for the next war.)

(A: This is what everybody's really uptight about because it looks like, you know, that's what they're doing right now is getting ready for the next war, for Iran. As we well know. It's well-publicized, if you care to look.

And it's on the list, it's got to be fulfilled, everything on the list, every country on the list has to be knocked out into the Stone Age, you see.)

(A: So behind the clown face of Boris Johnson, of course, he gets elected in as some kind of savior. Everybody's so sick of Teresa May and the Brexit idea that just went nowhere. Again, they hammered this archaic system of Socialist Labour of Britain, that's totally international. Why vote for a system that's going to make you, you know, international? Why would you have a national vote for it? to start with? Think about it.)

(A: But apart from that, there was, he was hammered and hammered and hammered by certain factions to split them up and to make the public think that he was really against certain things that were just naughty and bad and nasty. That was all intentional.)

(A: Remember too, there's a bit of leeway amongst political parties. As Carol Quigley talk about, the ones at the top are allowed a certain amount of competition. But the ones at the top always play the game once they're in. They all swear allegiance to play the game for the ones who really own the country. Anyway, it says here...)

Which is more radical? A patrician swell (A: ...a swell, is like a big swell guy, you know.) who openly lives in the nation’s most famous house with a woman who is not his wife, after a well-publicized life of unfaithfulness to the woman who actually is his wife? (A: [Alan laughing.]) Or a lower-middle-class ultra-leftist (A: That’s Corbin.) who used to take holidays in East Germany and has an incurable liking for Latin American revolutionaries and unlovable Middle Eastern Islamists?

(A: But it's, when you look at it from a perspective of just, where did the time fly, this is of someone who is pretending now, they've sold you, as a conservative. Isn't it amazing, 'eh? Boris Johnson, a conservative? Ah. So, it's really something.)

(A: Peter Hitchens explains it because he was a Marxist too. Everybody that was churned out of the universities back in Hitchens’s day, they turned out as a Marxist. Why would a country, too, and these universities, believe you me, really do exist on big handouts from the government, the taxpayers. Absolutely. Maggie Thatcher went through a lot of derision about that too when she said, well we've got to keep subsidizing these private places like this because they turned out our future leaders, who must know each other and meet each other when they're students, you know. But here's Peter Hitchens, who went through, and he became a Marxist. He says...)

As a former Marxist who knows what happened to the revolutionary cause, that it shifted from storming the barracks and the railroad station to infiltrating the TV studio, the school, and the university, I would always go for the cultural and moral action, as against the political gesture.

The patrician Tory leader Boris Johnson is the revolutionary, the harbinger of the future. The bearded militant Jeremy Corbyn is a relic of a dead past. Just twenty years ago, and perhaps less than that, Mr. Johnson’s personal life could have been tolerated in a prime minister only if he kept it secret, (A: ... about his private life and so on. And it says...) as his Edwardian forebears did. But to live openly in this way would have been an explosive challenge to the establishment and especially to his own party. Even now, some of his aides no doubt have misgivings about it. But I am sure he will overcome them. He genuinely sees nothing wrong in what he does, and so others learn quickly to see nothing wrong in it either.

And there's other reasons too, which it doesn't go into here. But it's a good enough article about it, how they can sell you anything, can't they. They really can sell you anything. Like they sell the Americans, they gave the Americans the choice of Hillary Clinton to vote for, and people literally would have voted for this Satan, at the time, and presented you with Donald Trump because no one wanted Clinton in. And Trump of course, literally, I couldn't believe that folk believed... And there was no choice for people to vote for in America in reality. There really wasn't.

The little bits that I listen to and read about from Trump, it didn't make me any, you know, any poor Trump or anything. Because I listen to what he said at the beginning before he got in and much of the stuff he was talking about then he's done. Right down to even increasing surveillance on every citizen and really helping the research and development for more surveillance equipment, in top companies, and not just American companies either by the way. No, no. It was rather open to me what was going on there. And now it should be open to everybody. But there was nobody to vote for. But they can really sell you it, can't they, they're awfully good at selling you these fake leaders.

Another article too…

Epic cop-out! World’s climate chiefs at COP25 (A: ...conference of parties, they call it.) decide it’s just too complex, (A: ...the whole idea of saving the world, for the climatic, and carbon and so on…) so they kick the carbon emissions can down the road rt.com / 16 Dec 2019

(A: …until next year, right. Because they just can't get through with they want to get through, to tax us for existing, you see, through this con of carbon dioxide, etc.   We truly, I'm telling you, we really are in Plato's cave and everything, if you were brought up in the cave everything will be real to you. All the shadows are really just, you know, these are ancestors, this is the spirits of your ancestors going back and forth in the cave, that's what they are. It's got nothing to do with if you look back, if you were able to look back and see the light outside there and realize that, no, there's people passing and animals passing outside the cave there that's casting these shadows, you see. You mustn't see that, you see. We're in the cave. Anyway, this says...)

The disgraceful collapse of the COP25 gabfest in Madrid, while it was running two days over schedule, is an indictment of everything that those in attendance purported to stand for.

Because people are just fed up with it all. Because at least enough people are now starting to see that this is a complete financial scam and also for total control of the planet and everybody on it. Of course it is. Yes, it is. And that's not conspiracy theory. It's from their own mouths for many years passed and I've got, ha, stacks and stacks of their own publications and what they've been saying for many, many years. Quite amazing. It really is quite amazing, isn't it?

Now also there's, as a matter of fact, from a politician, like again, Ron Paul, a matter-of-fact article on the system...

Congress is Trump’s Co-Conspirator Against Liberty
ronpaullibertyreport.com / 10 Dec 2019

Imagine that President Trump spent his phone call with the Ukrainian president threatening to withhold military aid unless the Ukrainian government agreed to use the money to purchase weapons from a US manufacturer. Does anyone seriously think that foreign service professionals and deep state operatives would be so shocked and offended by Trump’s request that they would launch efforts to impeach him? Would Congress view this as “high crimes and misdemeanors” or applaud Trump for carrying out one of modern presidents’ supposedly most important jobs — acting as salesmen for the American military-industrial complex?

Well but of course, he won't go into the fact though, the truth, the fact if Trump went off and got the wars over and done with and really went, you know, hammer and tongs against Syria, because that's on the list too, they haven't finished that off yet, and also Iran, that was part of the reason he got put in. Not by the people. And they got to get on with it, and really, they're building up now with troops, got more and more troops going over, quietly, all the time over and over to the bases around Iran. They're building up to it. No doubt Boris will be, he'll do his Tony Blair bit, that's part of the previous article I mentioned, he's kind of like Blair now, right, getting ready for the big one. And Trump will be, every media outlet will be suddenly praising Trump, suddenly, overnight if he gets the wars going. That's a fact. That's just a fact, folks. And...

Neoliberal Economics Destroyed the Economy and the Middle Class - paulcraigroberts.org / 16 Dec 2019

That's by Paul Craig Roberts who says some good things now and then, you know. But it's true, it's been your life, that was part of the agenda too, eliminating the middle class. A long, long agenda, that one. Once your factories were all given across to China, and all the levels of manufacturing were gone, then a lot of the [Alan chuckles.] middle class have gone as well. Naturally. Sure.

In Holland again, that's got to be oh so good, and prove to its citizens that the governments are on board with the whole, you know, sustainability agenda, you see tractors, you know, farm tractors…

Fresh evidence that UN watchdog suppressed report casting doubt on Assad gas attack - hitchensblog.mailonsunday.co.uk / 14 Dec 2019

That's Syria's Assad. Awfully important article actually, where people who are paid to be watchdogs went in there and they said that the heavy powers wanted them to say that Assad was behind these gassings, but he wasn't. This is a good article. I'll put up the links for this one, for anyone who cares to look. Most folk don't care if it's not titillating, you know. Because we're entertained to death and folk want to be entertained even through what they think is the news.

Goldman Sachs is reportedly in talks to admit guilt, pay $2 billion fine to settle probe into Malaysian investment fund markets.businessinsider.com / 19 dec 2019

(A: …Malaysian investment fund, which they'd set up and so on. But they still come out great because you see, it says...)

•Goldman Sachs is set to pay a nearly $2 billion fine and admit guilt to the US government to resolve an investigation into its so-called 1MDB scandal, The Wall Street Journal reported on Thursday.

•A deal would involve Goldman admitting it ignored warning signs as billions of dollars were stolen(A: Hm...) from a Malaysian government fund it worked with.

So, here they are, I think the whole, it all came altogether that the cost of it to Malaysia, that the Goldman Sachs had been given or work with $4 ½ billion, so regardless with the $2 billion fine, they're still $2 1/2 billion better off, aren't they? [Alan chuckles.]   That's not bad. But again, it pays to have friends in high places, or actually be the people in high places, isn't it? You can get a lot done that way. But it's not a bad article. But billions of dollars were stolen, 'eh, so, there you go.

It's the same Goldman Sachs that paid and admitted that they got paid to write glowing articles for the admission into the EU of Greece, glowing articles after going over the books. Of course, Greece was not fit at the moment, at the time, to go in with the kind of money that they owe and so on. You can trust your banks, you know. Yep. Isn't that how the ads all go, 'eh? It's quite good. And this article too is…

How the War Party Lost the Middle East- buchanan.org / 2 Jan 2019

By Patrick Buchanan, that folk love to hate as well. But the article's all right in itself. A lot of facts in it. Facts are important. For those who want facts. Sometimes a lot of folk don't want facts, they just want again, titillation and ooo and aaa. Or as they said in the Bible, they called it itchy ears, you know, itching ears, just tell me more fascinating stuff, that's what folk want because they're entertained death now, isn't it?

And then we'll go into this one here.

Putin and the 'Biden Memorial Pipeline' to China - journal-neo.org / 7 Dec 2019

Another not bad article. It goes through some of the history going back to 2014, deals with Ukraine and so on and pipelines, etc. This was much more than you hear about for what happens, generally there's money behind it all. [Alan chuckles.] There's always money behind it. Money for somebody but never for the general population.

And then what's happening, it's a good lesson to what's left of the world actually, it says…

Swedish justice ministry manipulated crime statistics – study - rt.com / 21 Dec 2019

How they underreport certain things to try to make the situation look happy. But remember, Sweden has had an awful time, mass, mass, mass migration. And of course there's fallout. Of course there's fallout. I've read some of it myself until they stop giving you most of the data on it. It's been very quiet in Sweden according to mainstream media. But here you go. This article is about how the justice ministry, there's your justice ministry, how of an oxymoron it is, 'eh, when it's lying to the people that it's supposed to serve. Plato's cave, 'eh, there ya go, back in it again.

I guess that's all I probably get time for. There is one article about…

Visiting Britain's political prisoner - informationclearinghouse.info / 28/29 Nov 2019

That's Julian Assange, by John Pilger. I'll put it up. Interesting to see what you go through when you have to visit these high security prisons. It's so demeaning just for the visitors to go in and out of these places. It's just incredible what you see. Never mind the people that are actually in them. But I'll put it up for those who want to peruse it.

Anyway, that's my time up. Unfortunately, it shot in as always. I could go on for another, easy, another hour or more if I just read other articles, which [Alan chuckles.] it may be best not to read these days. Because we're living in amazing times. There's so many powerful factions now, very powerful factions that could be terribly dangerous, to everyone. We know that.

Even down to the wars that are coming up, we know that. The old, the list that was published in the 90s, it's still there, of countries to be taken out. We all know this. These powerful institutions won't stop. They won't stop until they get their wars underway and so on. And out of the wars the whole world gets changed to the next step, which is all worked out as well. Carol Quigley said that, wars will change all participants in the wars, the victors, the defeated, it doesn't make any difference, they all get changed along the same road basically for, what he called, a form of planned progress.

For myself Alan Watt from Ontario Canada, it's good night and may your God or gods go with you.

Visiting Britain's political prisoner

Dec. 25, 2019 (#1753)

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on December 25, 2019. And as they all say, doesn't time fly, 'eh? And it does. [Alan chuckles.] It's getting faster and faster all the time. And for many of us, and for me for sure, it's like living through Groundhog Day over and over. Because we're living through such an amazingly scripted agenda, with… like a big business plan like I've always said, step by step by step, where things have to be accomplished along the road, by that certain date. Just like a huge big business plan. That's what we're living through.

A lot of it becomes boring because there are no surprises. There really are no surprises. When you realize that you truly, and this is a good time to talk about Christmas and so on and what's happening. Because literally a whole, the whole culture of the West is to be utterly destroyed. I hope you understand that. And it's a complete war. It's total war.

For those who think that things just happen by themselves by accident, the accidental view of history, not at all. It's so well orchestrated and so well formulated and organized and planned and implemented, with literally an army of people across the world all connected, working together to bring it into being, with big foundations with money backing them and so on and so on.

We're living through a system where they give you the leaders. Back in the 90s when I came out and talked about what was going on, I only came out, I said, because I couldn't believe that the public, that even in a country like America, the last bastion for at that time free speech, had stations there that were alternate stations, radio stations, but they were still navel-gazing. They didn't realize that there were huge big agendas across the whole planet all coordinating the thing together for globalism. So, I came out then thinking, I'd better tell these people what they're seeing is only the surface of the thing, they don't realize how intensively intricately organized this is. It's incredible.

But again, it's published works too from all the big players in the past and in the present that let you know what they're doing and where they're taking it and all the rest of it. If you want to believe their reasons for it, it's up to you. But the fact is, during World War II and afterwards certain organizations were given, or gave themselves the power, put it that way perhaps, to reshape the West and the world and rebuild its whole culture. It meant, and they were rather vocal about it, they hated Christianity and they wanted to eliminate the past completely for the West.

Very much along the same way as Year Zero would be for the Communists. Even going back to the French Revolution where they talked about a new calendar, and they tried it with different, I think it was 10 days to their week or something, the way they worked it out initially, but it kind of fell apart. But they never stop and of course Cambodia was the same, Year Zero. So, the whole idea is to remake history starting from its proper place, where they themselves who've conquered you are on top and managing it all in a properly efficient technocratic way, you see.

But it's in-your-face today. It truly is in-your-face as they go in for the kill to stop any, any last vestige of free speech, by making it illegal actually, which is a terrifying thing about it, to even ask questions. And if you can't ask questions then the next generation is… gone, if they can't ask questions. And they're under tyranny of course then.

I was looking through, and I've looked through, every year I look through the, especially since this incredibly deceptive, hm, massive prolonged Middle Eastern, especially Middle Eastern war that's on the go. For reasons of course which they never tell you the truth. To see the West financed huge armies, from Al Qaeda, and then different guises of it all, ISIS and ISIL and yada, yada, ya. It's all the same group basically funded by the West.

I remember doing the shows on it from, again, the newspaper, the papers in London and so on. They'd print it, oh we're supplying them with arms, we're training the supposed freedom fighters, you know, as they pretended that Syria for instance had a civil war on the go. But it was all in-comers financed from the West, from the US and Britain and so on. Our tax money was funding it all. They would land all their equipment for carrying on the war in Qatar and distribute the arms and so on from there. So, this went on for years and years and years. And it's still on the go, by the way. It hasn't stopped. The same agenda was published in the 1990s, the PNAC group with all the list on it. So, it's the same thing on the go, on the go, on the go.

But during all that time, do you realize that every Christmas there's less and less Christians? Not just because in the West we're getting atheized. In the Middle East they were getting slaughtered with all ancient, ancient churches, some of the first churches in Christendom, totally destroyed and wrecked and people slaughtered. I can remember being in communication with some people in some of those churches over there that were getting done in, with armaments from the West, there was nowhere for them to turn to, no one would listen to them, for help. They were completely, not just expendable, but I think that's part of the eradication process. There's no doubt about it. There's other players in the Middle East too as we well know that wanted this to happen as well. And still do.

But you had all these people, well, the ones that were left, getting homeless, trying to get into the West. And they couldn't get help. They couldn't get help to get in. Then as soon as they mentioned they were Christian, and different branches of Christianity from that area, Coptic and so on, boom, that was it, the door shut on them, in the West.

Because this is, you talk about genocide. We're living through genocide. And the governments are all complicit because your governments have got nothing to do at all with what you think they are there for. Nothing at all. The people who rule you, we don't even see them most of the time. Nevermind this farce of voting!

It's interesting that Boris Johnson got in because he's all for this hands-across-the-water idea of this alliance, that they all get together, just like Tony Blair's day, and retake different countries and bomb them out of existence, that's left standing across the Middle East. That's the agenda, and it's not going to back off, folks. It could only back off if enough light was truly shown on it. I don't think that's going to happen.

Everything's so completely taken over, you understand. In fact, there'd be a massive backlash if you mention any truths today. That's so sad. But yeah, people are dying and getting slaughtered and annihilated. People who literally have kept themselves to themselves. They're not peddling drugs across the planet. They're family people, with ancient traditions going back. And let's be honest, I don't see why everybody else that's got ancient traditions can't survive here. That also tells you there's a plan at the very, very top to eradicate it.

So, you will see this unfortunately getting worse. It's not going to get better. In the West as well we can see totalitarian elements grabbing power for themselves and governments going along with it to shut down free speech altogether. It's so sad, as I say, especially in America that was the hope for a lot of places in the world because years ago, and when I came out too, they had lots of alternate radio stations. It was a kind of an America first at the time. But they were navel-gazing. I came out and literally filled in the global agenda. It did help change the way that it was approached. Because a lot of them out there today, [Alan chuckles.] actually a lot of them, maybe, a lot of them, maybe, I wouldn't say all but not far from it, literally are intelligence agencies behind them running the show. If you haven't figured it out. It might not be even… Well, it doesn't matter.

You see, you don't have a country if you live in it today. You don't have it. Most folk have never figured out that what runs a country is not for them, [Alan laughing.] it really isn't, and there's a bigger, bigger agenda on the go. And we're living through total war. But as I say, America used to be the hope, because it was the only one had written into any kind of constitution that you had the right to free speech. And no one, and that meant no one, underline no one could take that away from you.

I remember Bill Cooper years ago, one of the guys that, he kept up on what was happening. He had his own show for years. And he wasn't perfect. No one's perfect. We are all human. He did get killed for coming out and talking and talking and talking. And he knew he would be killed eventually too. And they did. They sent two, at least two SWAT teams right up to his home to assassinate him. Tried to lure him outside, and then shot him down as they said he was trying to run away. On his own land, right, and trying to get into his own house, and they said he ran. The man had one leg, for those who don't know it, the other one was artificial.

But he was assassinated and at that time it was evident to many in fact that government had taken a different approach to the supposed tolerance issue, tolerance of different factions and Christian sects and all the rest of it. There had been a big deal too about a big show to the public. When you see a show well-publicized it's meant to cast a spell and there's an intent behind it.

When they did the Waco siege as they called it, where they could've gotten the character they were after that ran his group, he was the head of this group, that was registered by the way as a religion. And I don't care what you think of it, the fact is, hhhch, if they go for one branch of anything and one form of any kind of religion, eventually they'll work around to you too. You'd better start thinking about that.

They made a big show and they went in with heavily, heavily trained, and for the purpose, SWAT teams, like an army raid in fact, and they came out shooting. Because when the guy came to the door, folks came to the door initially, the Feds just opened up. And that was on video at the time. But the whole thing was to show you them wiping out people who had rights, they stood up for rights, and this silly thing called American rights and freedoms and constitutions and Bill of Rights and so on. They're such a nuisance, you see, it was time you started to learn that you really don't have them.

They wiped the people out there. And they burned a lot of them alive too. Very, very, very high, high Masonic occultic show. And they bowed, you saw all the different… um, I call it, well, they're not even mercenaries, sometimes mercenaries have a code of honor even, but these characters are just scum. That's all you can call them. Which, governments often recruit in times of tyranny to be used against the public. You see them bowing towards the flames in a big, big circle as they, as the night wore on, and then burned all the people and children as well. That was a message to the public that, no, you don't have these rights and freedoms anymore yada, yada, ya.

They'd already set up other groups too before and wiped them out as well with assassination squads. Well known at the time. At least at the time, again, American radio had different, it wasn't a monopoly today for supposed patriot radio. You had a lot of real independent groups who were not out for money or backed by big, big bucks and big people, or even not backed by the intelligence agencies, some of them were but there were still some at that time, at least some that were still independent and trying to really follow their own consciences and do the right thing and tell the public what was going on.

But as I say, that was then, that was in the 90s. I've watched the total erosion by, again, intelligence agencies, there's no doubt about it. There's NO doubt about it, folks. Remember, in intelligence the idea with counterintelligence and so on is to create cognitive dissonance by giving you groups that all seem to oppose each other. But eventually, they'll even have each other on, as they bring all their followers into one big herd and spin it around for you and so on and so on and bring you back into the con game of politics.

At one time the people were savvy enough never to trust politicians. Any politician. ANY politician. And believe you me you're getting no political messiahs, ever. I watched it with Trump getting put in and I knew darn well, because of so much around Trump, it was not for the American people. But they did a good spin on in it, he's well-financed and so on. The whole idea was, if you get the wars going again in the Middle East and finished all of them off, Syria and the rest of them, and Iran, then he'd be the big, big hero again. But there's been a bit of a hold up on that for a while, so he's been getting bad press. But if he gets the wars going they'll be all happy again and you'll suddenly see him praised, and he'll be given, again, more titles, ancient titles, more ancient titles from the ones he's already been given to get it all going.

But the thing is, we're living through amazing times of persecution. I'll put up some of the links of, for those who don't know, that a lot of ancient Christian groups, not rich either, have been slaughtered and slaughtered and slaughtered, intentionally, folks. By paid mercenaries by the West. Sometimes not just for the West either, we know that. And persecution is definitely, definitely rearing it's awfully, awfully ugly head.

Christian persecution 'at near genocide levels' - bbc.com / 3 May 2019

Because once it gets going in the West, in so-called wealthier countries, you'll see… you'll see terrible things like what happened during the Bolshevik era and after that too, into the communist era as they want to call it and the Stalinist era where you'll just get disappeared people all the time, as a nuisance. Because the message is now, you've got to be one of the herd. If you're not a ruler, you see, in the ruling group, then you've got to be one of the herd and just be one mass mind, and all the same, same thoughts, same talk. Everything's been brainwashed into you, just parrot it off, and then you're a good little citizen. That's what they want. Believe you me.

Because you can smell it coming, you can smell it coming across the West. And there's no doubt whatsoever as to who the fake parties that you have, in all the countries, who they are serving. Tremendous evil, there's no doubt, absolutely no doubt, at work today. It's in your face. You smell it coming. You smell the same techniques that were used before to implement mass extinctions in fact. You can see the hate. The true hate is often from the ones who claim they are being hated. [Alan chuckles.] The true hate are the ones in power who've got this ability to promote their laws and agendas and so on. …in a wild fanaticism, in fact, of self-righteousness as they pick out their targets and want to eliminate them. Using of course front people called police, no doubt, or domestic militaries or whatever you want to call them and do the job for them. It really, really is that bad.

But we're living under total war. This is total war, when as I say, many of the groups in the past came out and publish stacks of books, especially in America when they moved to America a lot of them, lots of books on the agenda and what they wanted to happen and so on. And there's no doubt about it, that the entire culture, everything that made you work, made you strong and made it work had to be completely and utterly destroyed. That means complete family unit, sexual morality, everything had to be utterly, utterly put into, well even Adorno mentioned it too, he said, right down to necrophilia, and that wouldn't be enough then. This would have to get promoted, all this terrible stuff that you're seeing today, to eliminate anything of the past. So's the past couldn't reconstruct itself, you see, to make you strong again.

You understand, what they're saying is that everything that gave youlife and meaning had to be eradicated. Meaning, that's why they're always telling you about new truths, they give you new truths and new realities, you see. And their realities, as they keep changing it to utterly destroy your mind and logic, is that there's no objective reality, everything is subjective. It's all, you know, let's all have our own opinions on everything. And oh yeah, it's all relative, etc. etc.

But of course, there is objective reality. Look around you. See what's being destroyed. Find out why, it's not hard to find, and you can see where it's all supposed to go. Really. It is very difficult for people in this day and age, very difficult for them to admit to themselves, or even what they see especially, when they see that there are people who actually, groups, well organized, heavily financed groups, who ultimately hate them, with a pathological loathing, and they're all they're all right, and they exist in powerful places.

So, as I say, this is not a happy, happy Christmas message that everything's going to be wonderful. In the 90s I said that on some shows I was on, I said I won't be a cheerleader for the public. The public have to come to, you can't hang onto any kind of freedom if you're going to keep silent about it. It's going to get lost, chipped away. So, you can't be a cheerleader for the public.

This idea that others must do your work for you, forget it, folks, you know. Everyone who says, oh, the government wouldn't do this, and the government wouldn't do that, somebody would stop them or somebody would do something about it. How many times do you hear that? Well, come on. These people aren't going to do anything for themselves. Never, ever. They'll all want others to do it for them and cheer them along the way. But just like the messiahs of the past, if they don't accomplish what the people want on an earthly plane, they'll go for the people that failed to do it for them. Because they always know what they want the leaders to do.

This is Christmas as I say, what's left of it... what's left of it… And it's not a matter, you see, of, you understand this isn't a matter of disbelief or atheism or agnosticism. The primal cohesive factor in the West's cultures, it does matter what country, was Christianity. The religion is one of the primal glues of societies that call themselves civilized in the West. It gave you your basic morality that made you strong and made you survive. Basic morality. It stopped you from ripping each other off, and stealing, and doing it, and blah blah blah and blah blah blah. You had basic commandments that made things, you know, it doesn't matter if you fulfilled them perfectly, the fact is, it made you, it forced you to think about things, and stopped a lot of folk from being kind of, um, following the psychopaths you might say.

But when you think of all the generations going way, way back for centuries and centuries and centuries, down through Canada the US, other countries, and back, all the way back to Europe and so on, right back to, you know, centuries ago… That was all, you're the result of all of that, for what they accomplished. And let's forget the class system. The folk at the bottom built everything. Sure, they did. And they died. But they passed some knowledge onto each generation. And all the peoples worked to bring us to where we eventually got to. Then you get more coming in, different folk coming in wanting to destroy the whole system completely, because they know better, and of course they should rule instead, shouldn't they? Isn't that what it's all about? Isn't it? Of course, it is.

But Christianity, and it doesn't matter about the atheists either, the Christmas gave you all something that bound you together. It's a bonding process of your culture. It's tradition. If you toss all your traditions out the window, believe you me, just like the communists did, they'll give you new traditions, very glum dower traditions believe you me. Because there's no spirit in it, and you need a spirit.

I was thinking today too, of even the songs that you hear at Christmas. Not just the carols and all that but the actual hymnals and so on. I may put up a couple of links in fact for anybody that wants to see them. There was one that was done in Berlin in about 1990 I think it was. It was traditional old hymn songs for Christmas. And they have excellent orchestras there too and choirs and singers. But they also, about 10-15 minutes into it you'll see they bring out in eastern Orthodox Christian group and the Friars and hear them singing. And it's just beautiful Russian type harmony. Beautiful harmonies

And again, your… these religions, hhhch, we had tough times for thousands of years. The planet is not a happy place to be on when you're fighting, battling nature to survive. I hope you understand that. The groups that want to take you down today want to take away your heating and your food and everything. Think about it, folks. We are here today because folk struggled for centuries and centuries and centuries, and social levels too, to get to a stage where we could ALL get heating and food, etc. etc. The ones at the top hate that because, my goodness, as HG Wells says, we breed. Oh, we breed for goodness sake. If you feed them, what happens, and you heat them, well they breed, 'eh. 'They', he always said 'they'.

I hope you realize that you're in a very hostile situation with very well-organized groups across the planet taking over, that you don't vote for as I've said so many times before. You don't vote for them. And most folk won't even know they exist or what they are, who they are or even where they are. They're all connected through Internet of course and their organizations. And the massive paychecks they get from these big foundations that nongovernmental organizations are funded from, massive. They have retirement benefits like you, like CEOs would have, for these NGO leaders. When you see these young folks getting put across the world right now, just appearing in their 30s there, 'eh, mainly women at the moment, that's the in thing, but from the right backgrounds.

Look at Finland, is a good one too when the latest Finland got in, this young woman who came from the right background if you read her bio, that’s how she was, apparently how she was selected. But then you’ll see too, I think the four other parties are all led by women now too. Well, you have to go into the organizations that set up to bring and create future leaders, folks. They didn't just appear on the scene by themselves. They were picked at school for goodness sake, often Junior school, ha, and groomed for positions of leadership. That's what Common Purpose in England was about, one organization to create leaders for the European Union for the different countries.

Well, you're seeing them emerge now. They're presented as just young clever people. No, they're not. They're picked and groomed and trained into international socialism to obey a superior group, you see, above them. And beneath them they see you as utterly inferior, a herd. But they're not appearing out of nowhere. And they have thousands of these folks sitting in the wings across the planet.

Because life today is incredibly deceptive. And everything you look at, it's not just false information or fake news as they call it. It's slanted news or slightly altered realities and so on. That's how it's done all the time. Or bits of stories, as I say, they won't come out and tell you that the backgrounds of these young folk that are just appearing there and getting picked up by left-wing parties... No, no. They were picked and groomed from childhood.

Which is rather ominous because such people will be hard to break out of their conditioning if they ever go into the mass genocide mode that's happened in history before. I hope you understand that. I hope you really understand that. You're not dealing here with… the old idea, well let's pretend we're just happy parties all conflicted and arguing with each other. No, no. They're way beyond that stage. [Alan chuckles.] Long ago. M-hm. Long ago. And the same agendas continue.

But elected Boris Johnson there in England, the guy who is bought and paid for by the City of London and presented in front of the public as, again another British Savior. It won't happen. Already, and it's so amazing to watch Trump and him at the moment, both off to see the troops somewhere and do their serving. Boris did his serving, he loves publicity, but they all do, don't they, as they dish out some footage, some troops in one of the countries that perhaps they shouldn't even be in. You can see them getting the armies ready, on board together for the next launch of the next big war that's to happen, you understand. And that's tragic.

That's part of the reason we're so bankrupt too, mind you. And being bankrupt will work along just well, because the ones who rule us all have a new system set up when they bankrupt us all, in the new global system, totally electronic of course. Along the lines of Bertrand Russell as I mentioned before with his credit system. It works perfectly together in the social credit system, you see.

So, I think people should not panic about anything but be very aware what’s going on. And be very careful about following people. Remember, because I do know how a lot of the movement was taken over, and they always put out people there that will parrot the same stuff, as the true ones, you know, with the same information. In fact, they'll take your information [Alan chuckles.] lock, stock and barrel and just present it as their own. But then they'll tack on their own spin, vote for this person, they're wonderful or whatever, or they love to have peace as we common people, so vote for them. All that nonsense, you see. And they're fronts, folks. They're fronts for big.… They're actually fronts but the big organizations that run the world and are taking us down the merry path right now. Truly. And you can't stop people listening of course because if you get rat poison out there, 5% of what's in that corn is poison, the 95% must be real corn. And that's how the stuff is presented to the public. Or else you'd all turn off, right? Wouldn't you? I'd hope so. [Alan chuckles.]

So when you see the two of the alliance, part of the Five Eyes alliance, get together with others too, and shake hands and play to the troops, you know there definitely will be more wars coming up. Because the list has to be completed, as I say. And more than the list. Like Carol Quigley said, that war is meant also to introduce social change, planned socialist change, you know, so that the correct folk can run the world and run you and your countries. Because war opens up the venues for them to step in and fill the voids and implement a big plan of course. So, all sides in a conflict are changed, you see. It's the lie of preserving your system is just that, it's a lie. You don't go to war to preserve it, you go to get conquered as well as the ones you go and conquer, by other folk behind-the-scenes. That's how it is.

But anyway, getting back to the Christian, Christmas time and so on. It gave us a culture that worked to an extent, better than other cultures, there's no doubt about that. And it gave us the ability to reflect on ourselves, and it forces us to reflect on ourselves, which kept a form of peace too sometimes. And it helped people go through terrible, terrible persecutions down through the eons. And when you hear even, one of the links I'll put up as I say to the Berlin Christmas concert really, you'll hear the Eastern Orthodox guys come in. And the Eastern Orthodox Church and Russian Orthodox, you wouldn't believe what they suffered with, utter abject cruelty. I've heard some of the guys talk about what happened to them, it's beyond just torture. The hatred cannot be expressed to you by those who really hate this thing called Christianity.

And remember, the churches, they really did cater to the ordinary folk and they were part of the communities and so on. And it got them through. And there again, then you hear them, at the end of the Soviet era, in the last year really, singing, and the feeling behind it, what they're saying is just astonishing. That's what the whole thing is about, is touching something called spirit and soul in you. Doesn't matter what other religions people are into, they can't help but be stunned by it and mesmerized when they hear this kind of singing, put out by people who truly believe. And you need that sometimes to get you through life when things aren't going well.

For most folk today, since the whole of our system of solicitation is completely under the last vestiges of attack, literally planned organized intelligent attack, it's the only thing sometimes that gets them through. And it gives them the ability to stand up. That's why it's so terrible, they always want to destroy religion, it makes folk stand together and stand up to tyrants. That's the last thing that they want when they've got to put the last few of the boots into you, you might say.

So, for the folk out there who've been listening for years, don't be depressed about things. It's going to be tough and terrible. But we, as long as you have each other and you truly have a faith, kind of faith that rises above all the baseness of the corrupt and the evil people out there, then it can help you come through terrible times. There's no doubt about it.

So I wish everybody Merry Christmas, [Alan laughing.] when again, we see another year of further decay and destruction planned for us all and more wars, etc. But we've got to always stick together and don't be fooled by the front people that are put out there for you to follow and who lead you up the garden path. A lot of these fake Christian preachers that are multimillionaires and maybe some multibillionaires, that obviously don't work for you in America, they do not, folks. And why America is always, has been carefully linked to wars in the Middle East is rather astonishing to outsiders. It's very cleverly done.

But the fact is, you've got to really look at who's using you. And stop being used. And stop falling for this election time Christianity. If they can't say it all year round, forget it. And forget them too. But don't fall for the voting, and suddenly all the ones who are pushing the same agenda, all the front people, the fake fronts you got there, are suddenly Christians again. Just forget it. Look at, look at what they do, listen to what they've said before and tell me they're Christian, folks, hm.

So, fool me once, 'eh, shame on you, fool me twice, shame on me. That's how it should be for all of us. So anyway, for all those people out there, as I say, I won't stay too long because of got to get this out, up on the site. And I can’t play anything unfortunately for myself because really the arthritis bouts in my hands are awful. And my thumb especially on my right hand is, it's like a beacon. I could probably light up a room in the darkness it's so red and swollen. That's unfortunate but maybe I can, maybe eventually I can get the swelling down and eventually play something again before I'm in… Well, while I'm still alive and kicking, put it that way, and able to do so.

So, I really wish you all out there, and I mean all of you because I get to know everybody with their emails and so on over the years and their trials and tribulations that are human, we all go through them. It brings us all together as humans and going through the realities of life. So, I wish you all the best and have a good, safe and pleasant Christmas time.

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on December 29, 2019. As they say, time flies, doesn't it 'eh? I think it's the only thing that's free, is that time can fly, because you can't get it to tax. So far. Maybe that will come, mind you. It really is flying in. I think part of the problem for me anyway, as I said before, is that when you've studied so much of the big organizations that all work together on this huge pyramid, to bring the world into their new world order so to speak, a managed society, an expertly run society from top to bottom, with all the ones at the bottom of course paying for the ones above them, but that's the system we're really flying in towards now.

And it has so many trappings of previous tests that they've had, experiments you might say. The US, the USA was called 'the great experiment', to see if humans could really be independent and free and have a workable society without killing each other or stealing from each other and so on. And they did pretty well until they got a government in, and then government stole from the people. It's been downhill from then.

But really, when you're looking at the first great experiment, the second one was the opposite, you see. It was to be a totally controlled, scientifically managed society run by experts, and that was the Soviet system, the socialist system as they like to call it. They would have a semblance of participation by the public, so Soviet really meant 'rule by councils'. It sounds awfully nice on paper but in fact it was a sham. Because the councils are NGOs, etc. that spoke for different departments of society and segments of society and workforces too were all appointed by the Politburo. Everybody had to be on board with it because if you're not of course you had… you suffered, hhhhhh, a rather short career. [Alan laughing.] And that's really how it runs.

So anyway, the big boys of course studied all this, and they studied Nazi-ism too which is national socialism. Don't forget that Hitler was given Time Life Man of the Year Award when he was there, I think he had it twice in fact by them for getting Germany on its feet so quickly. So, from the Nazi and from the Soviet, which is international socialism, as opposed to national socialism, to basically the whole communist system that we're used to seeing that supposedly disappeared not long ago. But really, the ones who rule the world took what was the best parts of each one of these experiments, you see, and put them together.

They found… The whole idea is control. All of these systems were about control. And ultimate control. And positive freedom and negative freedom as they like to call it. How much positive freedom could you have without the people kicking the government out, for instance? So, you have to get some negative freedom in and put restrictions on them and that's how it really works. Tony Blair was right into that from his mentor and his mentor was Isaiah Berlin, who he actually went to see when he was put in office and asked him, is it possible to have an equal balance of positive and negative freedoms for the public?

Of course, that's where we are today. We're taught that we're free. You're only free, mind you, if you go along with the flow of information that affirms the agenda. You're free and you're fine, you can say all you want to say about all the things that are politically correct to say. And you can do your social preening, as I like to call it, it isn't just the usual virtue signaling, it's beyond that, it's much, much higher than that if you want to get ahead in life. And you can see these newcomers, these politicians today that really have no skills or talents but they do know, being good psychopaths, what's politically correct and they make sure that everyone knows that they keep spouting the same stuff over and over and therefore they're real champions of the people. Which means that the bosses at the top that run the world have put them in charge of things, because the people really have no say in anything. And that's the sad truth of it, they have no say in anything.

So, you're in a new real Sovietized system, the more perfected Soviet system in fact where the people think they're free. At least in the Soviet system, you see, they knew they weren't free, although they'd all tell you they were because they knew the penalty if you didn't say that. In the West we're all taught that we're free. Like Bertrand Russell says, we'll teach the people that they're free and they'll believe it because the government keeps telling them that they are, you see, you're living in the best country in the world, with the best healthcare and the best this and the best that, you see. And the people just parrot what they hear. They have nothing to really compare it to.

But we're in a global system, an old, old plan of course. You have different factions on board with it that are key players, very cohesive groups working together who will all benefit from it financially especially. And if you have the finances then you benefit socially as well, you get status. You get extra privileges in this new system. Because it is a privilege-based system. The biggest privilege of all of course is if you've plundered the planet and you're awfully rich, then you have all the privileges you want because you decide what they are and everybody follows suit.

I have to say, and I've said it before, even at Christmas time too, you've got to look at what you're losing. Look at what you're losing in your culture, all the things you're taught to hate in fact about yourselves. Because you're being taught to hate yourselves, if you come from what was called the first world countries, even though you were not privileged [Alan chuckles.] as they call it, privileged, especially white privilege in Britain for instance. The Britain that I knew was not a great country at all as far as having all these privileges. You didn't even have enough food at the time too. Don't forget that Britain was in rationing all the way up until the 1950s, and even then, beyond it because folk couldn't afford the meat. That's how privileged the country was for the ordinary working people.

But we're not supposed to talk about that anymore, you see. Everybody else suffered but we never did of course. Utter tripe and rubbish. As we're forced into a world system where we're getting mushed together, and told to love it, this new system, by our mentors, our new mentors you might say, who are really your new police in a sense. Because there's never been a society even dreamed in science fiction so totalitarian in its scientific surveillance and manipulation, not just surveilling but manipulation of the mind as we are in today. And it's nothing to where it's supposed to go.

As I say, looking back, looking back at even the 20th century, look at what you did have. Look at the music the people had reached in the 19th century, look at the height of music had reached. It reached the height as well of architecture and so on. But definitely with music as well and classical music and so on, which is a science in itself and it was taught so well. And there's nothing, nothing can beat it. That's why I put songs up there at Christmas too. But there's nothing, nothing can beat that kind of music. And what you tossed out the window now too, was the religious music. Because it had some of the best minds in the world in their areas coming out with fantastic beautiful, beautiful songs. No one can say it's terrible. It sounds…… It lifts you up. That's the whole point of it. It's supposed to affect the soul that's inside you. And anyone who doesn't feel it doesn't have a soul when they hear that kind of music. This is just absolutely true.

When the humans together literally reach out for something, which they know it's there, they know it's there, hhhch, that's got a… a… I can't say magic I suppose but it does have that kind of feeling all to itself. It's very unique. And it must be tossed out the window because that's the very thing, that's the very thing, folks, that totalitarians hate. Is the big idea, you see. Big ideas is what they use against you. But they also say that big ideas is what they fear the most. And that's why they had to destroy the vestiges of religion, by every means possible… fair and foul, you see, so they can bring in their own scientific formula where you just simply obey your commissars. And that's what's here today.

It's really… it's ruthless. It's got all the trappings of the Soviet, or the Bolshevik Soviet era and it will get worse and worse as time goes on. I listened to a little audio by someone in Ireland talking about that very thing and how he was mentioning how people that he knew in the newspaper industry had calls from policeman, policeman calling them, they hadn't broken any law, for saying something. They were told that the authorities were concerned, the way that you're thinking, you see. You understand where this is all going to go?

This is horror we're looking at. The scientific technique that's being used is mainly through your fiction, your brainwashing. There's nothing you're going to watch that is not full of the PC updates. You're supposed to be updated, it's like a computer program and you adapt into these updates. If you're still doing old think, you know, old think, what you thought of yourself, whoa, that's a real dangerous thing to have in this day and age, who knows where it might… It might go into a big idea that catches on.

Mao Tse Tung of the communist revolution, he said he wasn't afraid of bullets and guns or armies, what he's afraid of the most was a big idea. Because something like a religion, they can't argue with it. They can't debate it. They can't debate belief in people who believe, you see. It has a tremendous force against tyranny, obviously. That's why it had to be smashed.

And it wasn't like looking in the past and saying that systems were perfect. They never were perfect. And every institution of religion becomes corrupt. In every country, over time. Just like governments become corrupt. So much so that you find that in the US founding fathers, they knew and warned about corruption. Because they knew their histories [Alan chuckles.] in the 1700s. They knew the histories of Europe and going all the way back to ancient Greece. They understood that governments become corrupt and that's the way it goes.

When you're in a system of socialism that rewards those who implement the agendas that are mandated by their bosses, corruption flourishes like you wouldn't believe. Tyrants of all kinds at all levels of classes right down to the bottom that push this stuff on their fellow humans get well rewarded for doing so. I've always found, it's always astonished me, when money comes into something how people will suddenly change their opinions, or they'll look at the floor and, well, you know… And that's how it goes.

D'you realize that that, that again is a secular way of looking at life, isn't it? Because you live in a materialistic system. Even in psychiatry today the whole thing about it is your 'investment,' what's your investment in this relationship with so-and-so, you see. It's all financial and material investments. And they can't argue with anything beyond that, you see, in a materialistic system. So, you get into a realm of thought, soul experience and something higher and above yourself, that terrifies them. In fact, they'll come against you with utter fury and hatred, as though they're demonically possessed. [Alan chuckles.] Maybe there's a bit of truth in that too, 'eh?

Because when you look, I look, I keep looking at the old system of the Bolshevik revolution and the secret police that were formed, that weren't so secret actually initially. And the NKVD. Then the Cheka, of course. Where did they find these people? that would take people into basements by the dozens, every day, for months, and just strip them naked and shoot them all? Day after day after day after day, 'eh? Where do they find these...? What kind of hatred, and I mean it, what kind of hatred drove these characters to do what they did?

I mean, that isn't just, that isn't a quiet removal of someone. This is, that was utter, utter mad and I call it diabolical hatred. There's no doubt about it. And yes, evil can definitely manifest itself in every tangible form as history shows us. Therefore, we should never waltz into something just because the flow is going this way. And it is going this way at the moment, isn't it? We know it.

I mentioned years ago and I said, look, they brought the Internet out, they'll make sure everything's for free. But before I even had a computer, I gave talks and I said, I'll get a computer just to do the talks, to continue them and when I'm done, I'm done, out goes the computer. Because it's not there for me. I said, right now everything will be put out as that it's free, it's free, free, it's all, everything is free, and it's a personal computer. Why do they call it PC, a personalcomputer, why do you think they called it that? It's pure psychological nonsense. It's a selling pitch. It's not personal because the last thing you've got is privacy, and it's not personal, on a computer. Or any gadget today.

And hhhhh, they couldn't bring the system in without it. They really couldn't. And you say, who's they? Well, look, look around you. Who owns the money system? What is the money system? You can't even get politicians who can explain that one. But we're taught to have faith in it. Even though it keeps getting collapsed every so often and you get plundered over and over. And folk get richer and richer as they crash the economies. Certain folk do. Of course they do.

Because really, no economy has to be crashed. The magicians at the top that make money out of nothing could keep it going for as long as they want if they wish to. It's backed by nothing. There's nothing tangible getting moved from this corner of a big room to that corner over there, or this other pile, like it used to be in the Bank of England with the gold bars. That's how they used to do it. That's all gone. There's nothing now. It's just someone's word that this country owes X amount to this other country, etc. etc. etc.

So, you have that level there and then you have the myriad of people who have, in all ages, they prosper by serving the ones that have the power above them. I gave talks years ago about psychopaths and how under tyrannies you have the top psychopaths, maybe even one at the top. Around them, you have the high clique around them, you see, it's very much of a hierarchy, a layered hierarchy. So, the guy at the top, or woman, doesn't matter, then you have the ones around them, the psychopaths who worship the one, the leader. Because psychopaths despise and will use everybody beneath them, but they grovel to the ones who've got more power than themselves. That's a psychopathic mentality. So, they will respect something with more power than they have. That's how the whole strata of how the system works all the way down to the bottom.

Right and wrong of decision-making doesn't even come into the equation once you have that kind of system on the go. Because every layer is getting well-paid and funded, etc., and you're suddenly a somebody, every layer will push the agenda, whatever part they have to play on it, they push it. They'll say all the absurd things, that you're living in the best country in the world, like they did in the Soviet Union. They will have goons who will lift you, come in the middle of the night, arrest you, drag you off into some, whatever it happens to be, either a loony bin or to Siberia. Because you're obviously mad since you're complaining about this utopia of the Soviet Union, you're obviously mad.

We're going into this whole system so rapidly, it's astonishing really how fast it's working. But again, it's happening at the right time. They knew exactly with the Internet today and in real-time the pulse of the people, in conversations and chats and all the rest of it. They know that this generation now, with about 20 odd years of intense brainwashing, they know they're ready for the next push as they call it. That's what they call, that's what you call these stages of movement, as a push, so that they push the next phase, where they know, or they believe they know, that they can come against any opposition and punish you. Because they've made everyone pretty well dependent on this Internet system, this wireless system too, for their banking, for everything that they do to basically survive.

It's not a new idea. It was discussed, as I say, by Bertrand Russell and his cohorts in the groups he belonged to who helped bring, who helped shape the culture that we're going through today by the way. That's how old this part of the system was designed, long ago. The idea was that eventually you'll get credit systems dished out by government to a kind of bank account, they'll call it credits, call it whatever you want, it makes no difference, or dollars. It doesn't make any difference as long as it's put in there every month by the state. You might not even have to work. Because that's where they're going today with it, universal basic income. They know with robotization and all the work being given to China, all the physical work, there's not going to be enough jobs, there's not enough at the moment for people to work in the West. So, there'll be a universal basic income eventually and it goes into your bank account every month. It'll be enough to pay your rent or whatever you need, basic food and so on.

If you're bad, you'll be punished by the government will withhold it. You'll have to eventually repent and go through a penance, etc. You'll be judged electronically, it's already happening, because of things you might say, or even think, 'eh. Like the policeman said to that journalists, 'eh, we're concerned about the way you're thinking, you know. This is where it's all going, folks. Punishment by... …even strata, strata of technicians that are not elected into power by any of you and by the electronic systems that they all work for. They seem to be the new censor police, aren't they? They just know what's right, you see. Because their bosses tell them what's right. As long as they can swagger around and feel important, they'll do with their bosses say, that means punishing all of you. And that's a sad, sad commentary about human beings. But it's very, very true.

But we are going into an awful tyranny, where you're told that up is down, left is right, etc. As Bertrand Russell said, give them, the children, I can train them to believe that snow is black. In other words, they can make you believe anything. And you'd better say it. You'd better say it. Like Winston in 1984, in George Orwell's book. O'Brien's torturing him and he says, if I tell you, if I say I can fly, Winston, he says, you will believe it. You'll believe it. It's not enough that you say it but you'll believe it, he says. And this is where we're going. This is an old, old agenda, folks.

But with technology and the advance and rapidity of advancement and with research and development of technology, you're living in probably, it will be the most efficient concentration camp on the planet. The planet will be one, in fact. The restriction of movement will always come in, that's the agenda for the 21st century, the abolition of private vehicles eventually. And you will, you'll be restricted to your little area in your ever-crowded city. Because you have to get off the land for this particular century if you're not needed by the big corporate farm industries.

This is not make-believe. This is, I'll put up some links tonight to their own writings for Agenda 21 and 2030 and so on, and sustainable development, the Rio Summit, etc. Things that most people maybe have heard of, but they've never looked into it. They can't be bothered. It's too, oooock, I won't be able to look at that, that's by bureaucrats and so on. Well it may be time you start looking at what you think is for bureaucrats because you're run by them. They've grafted private NGO groups for sustainability, right down to population reduction by the way, onto your local councils. And you're supposed to be voting councils in. Well, you didn't vote these characters in. They just graft themselves onto most of the councils around you. That's what you're living in.

As I say, most folk don't care. Young people will not care. Because they, to them this is wonderful, all these electronic gadgets. At the moment they're fairly inexpensive for them, very cheap for them. They can get it one way or another through paying them up or whatever, through credit, or buying them even used. But they've got lots of gadgets and apps and all the rest of it. So, their whole life is taken up, and it's amazing isn't it really, their whole life is taken up by electronics.

Isn't it amazing that literally something, I mean, they'll say we have to always adapt to technology, and it changes society, and they'll give examples like the steam engine. Well, when the steam engine came around we didn't all start to blow smoke out our heads, you know, and stuff like that, and copy a steam engine. No, we didn't. But with electronics our whole society is supposed to change, and our behavior, and the fact we're getting monitored by the stuff all the time.

They boast about it, that it's going to get more and more and more intrusive. That is the agenda. That's not paranoia. That's not a conspiracy theory. That's a fact, that's their statements, to be more and more intrusive. Until you're watched 24 hours a day. It's like that movie The Circle, you know, and many other movies too. Statements from the big leaders themselves, even Donald Trump when he first came for election, when he was running for election he said that he wanted to increase surveillance and surveillance technologies, big time. It was already big time, but he's gone further with it. It doesn't matter, it wouldn't matter which one they get in, they all do the same of course, on behalf of the big boys that really run it all.

But what a lie. This is not a life when you've got to police your own thoughts. And they're training you, I gave the talks years ago before it got this bad. They are training you to police yourself, they call it self-policing. The United Nations came out with different PDFs years and years and years ago and booklets. You can send off for the booklets that they sent you; you pay for them of course. They tell you the agenda. And it's Technocracy, sure enough. But it's much, much bigger than just Technocracy, that's one part of it.

That's basically the managerial part of it with technocrats using the different computer systems, analysts, etc., whole batteries of them to manage, along with behavioral insights teams that literally monitor us. If you're, we're all flagged if you're still thinking for yourself and you have the occasional contrary thought, or even if you look at certain sites to get more information on certain topics, which are not illegal to do, right now. But they won't be… It's not nice that you look into this particular, why are you looking into this particular topic, what's you're problem, why don't you just lay back and let us govern and manage everything.

Haven't you noticed, folks, haven't you noticed, you don't get news anymore. What chapter was that, at the end of, what page did that start at? Because we don't get news. I said it would happen, we don't get it anymore. Most newspapers are giving you really entertainment. Even politics now, what passes for politics is actually entertainment. If you haven't noticed every politician is a showman or show woman today. They all want as many hits as they can on social media. Oh, it's the hits, oh my God, how many hits did you get today, blah blah blah… for saying nasty foul things at some opponent or whatever it happened to be. It's literally, everything's entertainment now. And that also goes to prove that they're not running any country. Something above them certainly is.

Getting back to what I said before, I look back at Christmasses for instance in a different light than a lot of people. How I look back is the countless generations that went before me and the terrible times a lot of them had to live through, of poverty or plagues or whatever happened to be at the time. Or wars. It was the one thing in the year that kind of bound them together. Even people who had neighbors that were, they didn't like or whatever, or just mistrusted, they would see them coming to church, years ago, with their families. Then they start to, you start to say, well I guess they're just ordinary people too, you see.

It brought us back to our basic humanity, and our little transient life on the earth here. You could have some compassion for other people. But don't forget that if you want to destroy cultures one thing you must destroy is first the religion, it doesn't matter what their religion is, you've got to do it, and then you defeat them. Then you destroy the family unit, you see. This is how, this is well known in warfare techniques. But that's what you gotta do.

Why do you think, and I did the talks years ago when the first Gulf War was on, and then the second one, Dessert Storm was on, and then Operation Iraqi Freedom… [Alan laughing.] that really showed you the US troops cussing and swearing at the people in Iraq saying we're bringing you democracy, you stupid f'ers. That's what they said. No kidding you. That should go down in history, that, that should be, you know. This is civilization coming to these people supposedly? And cussing and swearing at them, to copy a system that we don't even have back in our own countries. We have agendas but we don't have democracy. [Alan chuckles.] That is such a joke.

But anyway, think about it. Just think about it. We're living through amazing times. And it's truly, truly agenda driven. It's not just happenstance, going along willy-nilly, the accidental view of history. This is the planned view of history, and you're living through it. And it's not going to go nice or well for folk. Because you're being spied on so intently now, there's massive files on everybody. This is admitted to now. Including everything you've ever looked at. Or try to find out about. Anything at all, it doesn't matter how innocent or whatever it happens to be, they know ALL about you. And they're watching like hawks. You're flagged by algorithms that flag you and then real humans pop in, oh, what's this, what's this about? As I say, in Britain and elsewhere you get a knock on the door or you get phone calls from authorities. What are you thinking about? Well, why are you thinking about that? We're not sure we like the way that you're thinking. Is it a crime? No. But you're, we're not happy with the way you're thinking.

This is going to be the worst hell on earth. And it's enabled to happen by masses of entertainment. Very cheap entertainment. Not very good entertainment either. People guzzle like never before entertainment, they're living on it really today. Rather than, it's a great substitute for reality, isn't it? It's just pure escapism. And yet, it's not just escapism from the elites' point of view, that is your brainwashing techniques. You're getting brainwashed all the time with entertainment. It's astonishing.

It really is astonishing to me that things which at one time were speculative, many, many years ago of what was to come, and we debated lots and lots of different things that we thought would be brought in, and sure enough here they are. Even though lots, most folk say, oh that's impossible, that will never happen. Yet here we are.

Here we are, where your thought crime, you've got thought crime. And now you have intrusion into your life not even by thought crime, because it's not a crime yet for certain things, it will be eventually, very, very shortly, for a lot of things that you're not supposed to think about at all. And I mean that, it will be forbidden to think about things. It's bad enough it's forbidden to speak about things, but forbidden to think about things? Because then you're a danger, you might spread contamination as they call it to other people and lo and behold you might get disturbances, there'll be people, you know, fighting back about something. And the authorities don't want that, do they?

Astonishing too, as I say, all these old things were debated many, many, many years ago with groups, who really were the true futurists in a sense, putting together that which was happening, that which was speculated to happen, and research and development, and the goals, it's about politics but big agendas of rulers. Because we're ruled, we're not governed, we are ruled. They used to say you're governed if you elect the people to govern. But ruled is a different thing altogether. You're given the semblance that you're, as I say, Democratic, but it's a joke, isn't it? It's a complete joke that it's Democratic. If it's Democratic you wouldn't have groups authorized by government to crack down on what you're thinking or saying or whatever. That's not democracy. That's tyranny.

Now, tonight I want to put some things up before I forget, or I just prattle on. The first thing is, don't toss your history out the window because you've been taught to hate it, or institutions within it. Because institutions have all had their purpose. In different times in history these institutions helped pull people through terrible, terrible situations. Don't ever forget that.

In a purely secular society, you can have all the psychiatrists you want and all the drugs that you want but when you've got a sickness of the soul because it's being imprisoned, nothing's going to help that. Believe you me. Nothing that they could give you anyway.

Here's an article here...

UN approves Russia-backed (Alan: They call it Russia-backed...) 'cybercrime' treaty that America and Western powers say will censor the internet
dailymail.co.uk / 27 Dec 2019

The General Assembly approved the resolution, sponsored by Russia and backed by China, on Friday.

(A: I love these, in this democracy, as we get these experts, these high priests that just appear, you know. With every new science that they come up with or variation or segment of science, they suddenly have experts, instantly there to tell you what to do. Like the bioethics committees that were launched in the 1990s. No one had heard of them before. Suddenly they're getting launched out of universities to tell us when we should die and things like that. They're experts in bio, ethics, you see, experts in it, yeah. Like you're not yourself, but they are. M-hm. Guest who will be using them and who are using them? Anyway, back to the article here...)

The movement will now set up a committee of international experts in 2020.

Critics have already said the language is legitimising crackdowns on expression.

Well, I'm really shocked, aren't you? Right? Are you really shocked about this? And this joke about oh, it's the Russians. No, come on. The West... The West sets up all these things, folks, you're living in it.

(A: And the United Nations is almost completely funded today by the United States and Britain. Yep. So, come on. Come on. Where d'you think, where IS the United Nations? It's IN New York City. It's in New York, for God sake. It's not on some, on the South Pole. And by the way, it was the Soviets at the time, the Soviet communists at the time who wanted it to be set up in America. Isn't that interesting too, like they foresaw the future or something, 'eh.)

(A: So it's a Russian, they call it a...)

...Russian-backed cybercrime treaty that has alarmed America and Western powers who fear it will censor the internet.

(A: We're already getting censored here, folks, in the West, without this one. The West leads censorship. The system that Russia, that China is using for it's social credit system was invented by the technicians in the West. I can remember, I kept all the articles from years and years ago when we were sending them over to China, the different organizations to set up there. The technicians that work in Silicon Valley, they went over to China to set up for them before they set up for you. They were already setting it here quietly first naturally, setting it up. So anyway, it says...)

The movement will now set up a committee of international experts in 2020.

The panel will work to set up 'a comprehensive international convention on countering the use of information

(A: ...to counter the use of information, isn't that interesting? Isn't that like counter-intelligence?) and communications technologies for criminal purposes,' according to the resolution.

(A: Right. Well, you've got to understand everything that's put out on paper, it's got a different intention before they even put it on paper, and then it's broadened. And of course, for criminal purposes, don't forget they're going to criminalize speech. Already it's rampant in the West right now, right, speech and terminology. And it's a criminal, so now it's not just it's being naughty or bad or asocial or whatever they want to call it, now it's going to be criminal.)

America, Western powers and other rights groups (A: I wonder what rights groups they're talking about?) have already warned against the move as they fear that the language is code for legitimising crackdowns on expression.

(A: Who's writing this stuff? Huh?!? The West is leading all of this stuff, folks. Have you watched the news in the last few weeks? Huh? But this is the Daily Mail Online, I wonder where their heads have been all this time? And it says too that…)

A number of countries have increasingly tried to follow suit (A: …after China, you know, using its social credit system.) and crack down on internet usage.

(A: Hm. I love the terms. So, you've got usage and you've got criminal this and criminal that. And intelligence, because it's counterintelligence, 'eh.)

India is set to cut off online access in Kashmir in August after it stripped autonomy to the Muslim-majority region.

(A: They got big problems in India right now, right down to citizenship now. You think the West is getting it all. But it's amazing that this was discussed back in the 60s that many of these groups have never got on with each other, for centuries and centuries, and they never will, you know. Anyway, it says…)

Iran is also taking much of the country offline as it cracked down on protests in November.

I'll put this one up. But yeah, I mean, we aren't lagging, anybody in the West. We are probably, I really think everything's tested out here before they're tested out anywhere else.

The next one too is Australia, their bushfires... It’s the height of summer there, remember. It’s their summer, which is our winter. But it says…

Australian Bushfires: A Smart City Conspiracy?
tottnews.com / 23 Dec 2019

Australia is committed to the Agenda 2030 plan, which advocates for the implementation of radical changes to the central role of ownership rights of land and natural resources over the next decade.

Linking this plan, authorities are currently developing a number of smart city initiatives in direct response, promising locations full of ‘sustainable’ programs that monitor a variety of human activities.

(A: Now, most folk don't even know what the 2030 is. You can look it up. I'll put some links up for you to look at it. It's again, the United Nations agendas, which they claim are nonbinding. Although they have advocates grafted onto all your local counselors, right, your local councils. Your LOCAL councils, not just your state or provincial councils but your local ones as well.)

... could it be that current bushfires in Australia are part of this plan as well? What is the hidden agenda?

In the following, we explore the Australian bushfire ‘crisis’, including the course of events, weather and geoengineering, CLARA’s high-speed train network proposal and links to the UN-driven smart city agenda.

(A: Well, they're quite right there, actually. Because I gave the talks many years ago on the Agenda for the 21st century, and 2030 is just one of the parts of it for the whole century. You know, there's the 21st century, 2015, 2030, and so on and that's how they work it out, what has to be achieved by each little segment of time.)

(A: Sustainability is a big, big thing. As I say, no private vehicles eventually. You'll have to use supposedly public transportation, so the railroads, etc. But also, they want, too, folk off the land. They came out with the human habitat corridors years ago, that was part of the agenda, it's written into it, where so many people will live along the lines of these major highways or even routes of train tracks, but outside a certain distance, maybe 20 mile out the side of it, there is to be nothing, no people at all eventually.)

(A: You have to be all put off into the cities, that's for sustainability. They don't like this urban sprawl, they call it, you know, your better folk, the ones who look at all the maps from satellite, they just don't like urban sprawl. And they know how you should be living. It truly is Technocracy Inc, for those who haven't, you can download their old agenda from the 1930s. It's still there. Many of the folk that were part of that are ruling over you today in fact, their descendants are. It says...)

...could it be that current bushfires in Australia are part of this plan as well? What is the hidden agenda?

I can remember there was a doctor, Report from Dr. Day they called it I think, going back from the 1960s I think it was. There was a doctor that attended a big international conference through the UN and so on and he came back and told his pals that he worked with, his colleagues, about the agenda. He said he couldn't believe it, but they said that they wanted to get folk..., that was in the 1960s, he says, they want to get folk off the land. And how are they going to do that? And during the talk this, again, expert said, well, there's many ways to get the folk of the land but eventually if we have to, we'll burn them out. There you go, you know. Quite simple.

I remember the doctor published a book about it on his colleague Dr. Day. Dr. Day was dead by then I think but this other one published the book on it. And you can take from it what you will. Again, you have the big problem of guaranteeing, or trying to find out if it's really genuine or not. It certainly falls into the big, big plan, doesn't it?

(A: This is quite a good article, I'll put the whole article up. In fact...)

GEOENGINEERING IN AUSTRALIA

(A: It goes into the geo-engineering efforts of Australia are creating...)

...clouds, rain and the atmosphere has been largely hidden from the public, as a secretive network of government agencies and private business interests continue to manipulate the weather around us to their personal benefit.

And that's the truth of it. I mean, it's, there's plenty of documentation and some of it's in this actual article itself. I'll put that up too for those that don't get it. You won't convince most people who go with the mainstream authoritative news, you know. The same authoritative news will tell you everything's fine, the economy's fine too, you know, everything's just fine, what's your problem? And you can’t help those folk, they will always go for the authorized version.

Also, I'm going to put up an article from the Guardian and it's about Malcolm Roberts in Australia and it says...

Agenda 21 is conspiracy theory. But don't dismiss Malcolm Roberts as a harmless kook
theguardian.com / 13 Sept 2016

Malcolm Roberts promised, and Malcolm Roberts delivered. After announcing on Facebook that he would address the threat to Australian sovereignty from “Agenda 21”, he raised it in his first speech as an Australian senator. After extended remarks intended to refute the scientific consensus on climate change,

(A: Which, it's not consensus. It's for the group that work for the IPCC, they all have a consensus. They get paid for it. The rest don't, there's thousands that don't, top scientists don't go along with it.)

and a comparison of himself to Socrates, Roberts said that:

people are waking to the UN destroying our national sovereignty through implementation of the UN’s 1975 Lima declaration and 1992 Rio declaration for 21st century global governance, often known as Agenda 21 – more recently as Agenda 2030.

And it goes on and on. I'll put this article up too. I love how they pooh-pooh you away, here's what you're supposed to believe, the headline is what you’re supposed to believe. This is how it's done on news, on television too.

Agenda 21 is conspiracy theory. But don't dismiss Malcolm Roberts as a harmless kook

That's your headline meant to ridicule all the rest of the stuff the guy is saying. Because Agenda 21 is not a conspiracy theory. It's published by the United Nations. I'll put the link up tonight for those who would download their PDF on it. It's quite astonishing how they try to twist all reality. Knowing most folk will never look into anything and to find out for themselves. It would be too much of a shock, you see, to realize that, yes, the people are telling the truth here, that there is big agendas going on and you are being lied to, very blatantly too.

And…
Tens of thousands of Aussies engaging in ‘Agenda 21’ conspiracy on social media
news.com.au / 22 Dec 2019

World population: What happens if we reach over 10 billion people?

Then they go into all the different fear agendas that are put out there to make you just buckle under and leave it to the experts to come up with these big massive figures out of nothing, out of nowhere.

Years ago, I saw this was happening, I was giving out the status of the government for censuses and so on, on the populations in the West supposedly plummeting. Which would be a good thing, right? You're reducing your population for sustainability, you think you'd get a little gold star. But no, then you get punished for not having enough people to pay off the national debt, so you're supposed to import people. In other words, it's all bogus, folks. There's a big agenda here, big agendas, many of them actually, all working together and overlapping each other. There's nothing to really guess at here.

Also even look into the silly, I think the Wikipedia goes into it, and that's not the best source either, it's very, very bias in so many things.

Agenda 21

Agenda 21 is a non-binding action plan of the United Nations with regard to sustainable development. (A: You understand what sustainable development means, folks? It's to do with population control.)

It is a product of the Earth Summit (UN Conference on Environment and Development) (A: That was Mr. Maurice Strong on behalf of the Rockefellers at the time, and the Rio Summit too.) held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in 1992. It is an action agenda for the UN, other multilateral organizations, (A: Well guess who they all are, ‘eh?) and individual governments around the world that can be executed at local, national, and global levels.

(A: The big thing here is, you see, none of you vote for this. It's way above what you… How simplistic is your thinking when it comes to government? This is way above governments. But the governments will write these things into law. It says…)

The "21" in Agenda 21 (A: This is from the same organizations that pooh-poohed it when people like me used to talk about this years ago. Now they're saying, oh the 21 in Agenda 21...) refers to the 21st century. It has been affirmed (A: Oh-ho, that's okay then.) and had a few modifications at subsequent UN conferences. Its aim is achieving global sustainable development.

(A: But they never tell you what IS sustainable? Well, the perfect number of you lot, you know. They don't need you all anymore because, you see, your purpose is to work for the elite and they don't need you all now. Step-by-step they bring it down. When it's time.)

One major objective of the Agenda 21 initiative is that every local government should draw its own local Agenda 21. (A: You see, initiative, really.) Since 2015, Sustainable Development Goals are included in the Agenda 2030.

And it goes on and on and on. So, this is something that's to change all of society, bring it under a global system, bring down the population, regulate your life from birth to death, folks, for sustainability and consumption on everything, energy use, you name it, blah blah blah blah blah, this is the big agenda, and where you're going to live. Also this goes into…

Agenda 21 in One Easy Lesson
americanpolicy.org

Awareness of Agenda 21 and Sustainable Development is racing across the nation as citizens in community after community are learning what their city planners are actually up to.

As I say, they grafted themselves on these organizations. They just grafted themselves on. And then they tried saying, well you see, it's voluntary really, you know, it's nonbinding… as they ram it down and take people's property away, etc. through different sustainable goals. There's an article here too on how things are implemented so quietly you wouldn't even know.

Your Hometown and the United Nations' Agenda 21
thenewamerican.com / 10 Feb 2011

(A: It gives you an example in California, how...)

...the California Air Resources Board (ARB, or CARB). The company was not charged with, or even accused of, illegal emissions; like many other businesses, it had merely failed to notice a new regulation posted by CARB requiring all semi-trailers, shipping containers, vans, and rail cars with diesel-powered refrigerators to file a report with the agency.

Once you see what the fines are for that, they didn't tell the public or publicize it, they just started fining companies that didn't even know about it. How do you get a, how would you like a $200/day fine, and some of them were up to $86,600 in fines. You see, this is not democracy folks. This is tyranny when you get this stuff done to you.

They'll do the same on you eventually down the road. They've already had agreements drafted up on how many miles you'll be allowed to travel, until, as they start weaning you off the road altogether. The electric car is only a temporary stopgap basically, it's not meant to be really that practical in the long run. They just want rid of the gasoline engines and then eventually they'll start doing the same with the electronic ones too, take them off the road.

ICLEI, which is grafted onto your local councils. Go in and asked them about, do you have a local government for sustainability group, ICLEI grafted onto your counsel? And they, because everything that gets passed now, it goes to them now, even though it's supposedly, as I say, voluntary, right? A lot of these people who make up these councils, you know, are retired or semi retired civil servants of all kinds. They're told to go in and join these particular groups and then graft themselves on to your councils, to rule you. Until you can't move without getting permission. And you couldn't afford to get things done because they'll simply ban it all under sustainability, environmental studies, if you want to put up a garden shed or something. That's already happening. So I'll put these up for you. And...

ICLEI Oceania
icleioceania.org

ICLEI – Local Governments for Sustainability is a global network of more than 1,750 local and regional governments committed to sustainable urban development. Active in 100+ countries, we influence sustainability policy and drive local action for low emission, nature-based, equitable, resilient and circular development. (A: I like circular development. That means you end up always going in a circle trying to get permission.) The ICLEI Oceania Regional Secretariat (A: I like the terms, Secretariat, 'eh...) serves the interests and needs of local governments in Australia, New Zealand and the Pacific Island Nations.

And they give you their websites and programs. Not bad for a voluntary thing that ends up being dictatorial. And that's what it is, folks. They're all over the place, folks. Most people don't even know they exist, because they keep quiet, 'eh. And eventually they become just normal, literally part of your local government. Well, you don't vote them in. Did you vote to go global and be governed by some global entity? If you don't have a direct say in anything, you're not living in democracy.

Australian Water Sold for $490MILLION (A: There ya go, right, in the middle of a massive drought.) to Foreign Company During Drought
australianews-today.com / 12 Dec 2019

A multi-billion dollar Singaporean food company is selling 89,000 megalitres of Australian water to a Canadian pension fund.

The mega sale of Australian permanent water rights comes as the country is crippled by one of the worst droughts in its history.

On Tuesday, New South Wales brought in a complete ban on hoses as part of the toughest water restrictions implemented for more than a decade.

(A: Not bad, 'eh?)

But no such problem existed for food and agriculture giant Olam International, which sold the 89billion litres of permanent water rights for an astonishing $490 million.

(A: Everything's a racket, folks. We are run by rackets. But you'll never figure them out they're so incredibly, I mean, beyond the movie The Sting sort of thing. It's sting upon sting upon sting, you'll never really figure it out. It's a racket.)

(A: ...what's Canada's pension funds doing, involve there too, 'eh? What on earth does this say? Anyway, this article goes into where this is all about...)

The water rights are in the lower Murray-Darling Basin.

Dozens of firebugs blamed for destructive Queensland fires
brisbanetimes.com.au / 20 Dec 2019

(A: This is mainstream of course.)

Almost 100 firebugs (A: That's fire setters…) have deliberately started blazes across Queensland (A: That's Australia.) that have destroyed homes and consumed thousands of hectares of bushland.

(A: There's bigger movements going on right now. There's even been firemen, that's quite normal actually. [Alan laughing.]   Actually, they always use firemen too, that were caught in one place there, where one particular fireman was seen setting fires, by police. And he rushed right back to his station so he could get on the engine and go out and fight it. It's quite amazing what's going on.)

(A: But anyway, there's a lot more people involved, too, setting fires. The folk get in on the act you might say and it's up to you whether you want to figure out, we'll never really know if they're coordinated or paid to do it or it's all just happenstance and like a crowd, a crowd rush thing where they all jump on board with it. But they've got adults and juveniles involved.)

...31 adults and 67 juveniles - for deliberately setting fires.

(A: 98 people altogether, in one area. That's in Queensland. One boy alone...)

A 16-year-old boy found to have started a fire that razed 14 homes in central Queensland and dealt with under the state's Youth Justice Act.

Everything NSW fire services could have bought if their budget wasn't cut - crikey.com.au / 11 Nov 2019

Good article. It shows you how everything is set up so that when it really, they really start getting the fires, that they're not ready for it because they don't have the cash. Lots of cuts off the budget. It's amazing how things work together. But then they always use, oh, it's climate change. No, it's not climate change. And then…

Extreme heat in 1896:
(A: Just to let you know that all this record-breaking thing is nonsense.)
Panic stricken people fled the outback on special trains as hundreds die. - joannenova.com.au

That was the headlines back then at this particular time that it happened. Back in 1896. Folk were dying in the streets and so on it was just so hot. Even the middle the night it was just so hot. 109°F at midnight. And the temperature didn't fall below 103°F.

Again, it says here that…

Colleges are turning students' phones into surveillance machines, tracking the locations of hundreds of thousands - washingtonpost.com / 24 Dec 2019

This part here goes into universities and how you're getting trained by them too, by point systems, even in universities and colleges, for attendance and so on and so on. You're prompted. You're trained and trained and spied upon constantly. Most folk will go into it thinking it's all quite normal. I think people can drift so far into it with the scientific system. Scientific tyranny is the worst of all and Bertrand Russell said, if there's going to be a tyranny, he says, I wish it to be a scientific one. That's the kind that he preferred. Total control over the mind of the people basically. And how can you fight if you don't know, if you're unable to recognize what it is, if you're conditioned it's all quite natural?

Again, I'll put up...

George Orwell - The Freedom of the Press - Orwell's Proposed Preface to ‘Animal Farm’

It's awfully good where he talks about so much of it happening today with their speech, what we think and what we say, and how they were censoring it. He was taking as an example the Soviet system. As I say, they learned from the Soviet system. The system we are in now is actually part of the super Soviet system on behalf of the top capitalists of the world.

Former chaplain to the Queen (A: ...of England.) quits church (A: He is the chaplain to the Queen ...) quits church and converts to Catholicism as he attacks Church of England's transgender stance and failure to defend Christian values - dailymail.co.uk / 21 Dec 2019

It’s true enough, that. I don’t know what the Church of England stands for anymore. I mean, I don’t… I think they’re embarrassed to even pretend that they are Christian. I really do. I think it’s that bad there. Because they don’t stand for anything at all. Even the people that attend the churches, [Alan laughing.] they don’t stand for anything. I remember too there was the archbishop, he was of the Church of England, he was a druid as well, you know, like Winston Churchill, he joined that too. They all join all the different free Masonic organizations and that was one of them.

Christian persecution 'at near genocide levels' - bbc.com / 3 May 2019

I just thought I’d put that back in again since it’s this time of the year. No one really cares as poor little ordinary family groups across the Middle East have got slaughtered for months, and actually for the last few years.

MALCOLM: Christians remain persecuted around the world - torontosun.com / 22 Dec 2019

And hardly anybody lifted their head to even, nevermind shed a tear but even to bother looking. It was almost embarrassing, in fact, to look at what was being allowed to happen with the use of our tax money funding all the weaponry of the groups that were doing it. Terrible. Terrible. Very ancient churches and peoples. It’s ordinary people’s too, you know. M-hm. They’re the quietest most pleasant and nonaggressive people pretty well in the Middle East actually.

[Alan chuckles.] So you always make great enemies of the future. Because they’ve been doing the same with Pakistan too, you see. And they're terrible enemies, India and Pakistan. So, you arm both sides and you make a profit, then you sit back and down the road in the future you say, oh that's terrible what they're doing to each other, you now. As they use the weapons against each other, right. Really something. Ah, the best enemies money can create, indeed. Whereas we've always created the best enemies that money can buy.

Queen faces a costly £86 million repair bill for Prince Charles's London home Clarence House as it gets set for a New Year makeover - dailymail.co.uk / 21 Dec 2019

Well, I'm glad they're doing that for poor Prince Charlie. 'Eh? Poor soul. The poor soul. It is 6 million pounds repair bill. And that's just one of his homes, 'eh. I don't even bother looking at the PR because they have public relations professional teams that are permanent who work for royalties now turning out all the stories about them to make sure we all think about them and try to personalize them into being real people and all that. I looked at other articles too, but the money is being spent on them over this winter. And I went… shake your head, folks.

Dumping Dollar? Russia and China agree to bilateral trade in national currencies - countercurrents.org / Jun 6, 2019

Quite something.

So that's about it for tonight. Now, I had to rush through that lot, I hope I haven't gone way too overboard with it all. But that's some of the more important things I wanted to put out, some of the articles to show you. I use Australia too as an example of the conology that's used upon us all, the global agendas, the agendas for the 21st century and 2030 and so on.

Really, it's all to do with depopulation. Step-by-step. Two or three weeks ago I read the articles from the United Nations and the big organizations admitting for the first, IPCC, that's their panel on climate change, well-paid scientists to come up with the same answers. But they said the same thing, that they've got to reduce the population and they definitely, they said they want to get teethnow, to reduce the population.

It's enough to get mass abortions on the go. But this, now they're killing off older folks. Now they want to literally step in, they've actually floated the idea, one of the guys a few years ago, they bring in the same professor every so often to push the envelope and he said then, he said, it's time maybe we should think of rather than let people retire at 65, actually think about just letting them die off or killing them. I hope you understand what I'm talking about. This isn't just speculation and some zany little ole, little bizarro talk show thing on the TV. This is mainstream stuff from universities and getting promoted and getting aired on national television in places like Australia. And Britain, we've had it there too.

It won't stop, you see. And it's always presented under, we want to help you, we want to help, do you really want to live for another five years? I mean, you might have a twinge of pain here, but we can kill you right now and it's a lot cheaper. We could use your pension then; you wouldn't be alive to spend it. You've got to start thinking, folks, and get off, they're here to help you.

The one thing that Ronald Reagan said that was absolutely true, absolutely true, and you seldom hear a politician saying anything that's true. But he said, made a statement, he says, the worst thing that Americans would hear, and what they most feared to hear, is to have a knock on the door and people saying to them, we're from the government and we're here to help you. That's it, right there. Very simple.

I guess maybe we'll get little calls now, hey, and they'll say, wait, you know, did you say, or you were thinking about…? I was thinking that, yes, I was, yep, is that a crime? Well no, no, but we're concerned that your thinking, you know, is… M-hm. Yeah, okay, there ya go.

We're still alive and kicking at the moment. As I say, I came out way back, years and years ago, not to be a cheerleader for the people. The people, the mass of the public will always go along the same road, take the path of least resistance and they'll adapting to most things, you see. But I came out to let people who really craved knowledge, to give them seeds of the knowledge where they could look up themselves and find and study and read, to satisfy them. Because some of them, because I know, I'm that way myself just how… you have to know, you have to know. It's a strange thing in a domesticated society, it's a strange thing to have this desire to really know what's running the system and what it's about.

And the whole system today is conology, keeping you quiet and pacified, stacked with entertainment, and stuffed with it, and just play and play until you're retired. And then go into senility. Well actually, they don't want you to go that far, as I say, before that they want you to take the euthanasia pill. Much, much easier, isn't it.

Life has to be exalted again and put on a pedestal, back up on the pedestal that Aldous Huxley's brother Julian Huxley said. He says, we must knock them off, mankind off its pedestal and put him down in order to, so they can do with humanity that which they wanted to do. That's happened, you see. At one time when man was still up there and we thought there was something special in human life, was there was something sacred about human life. Government couldn't just ride over the public like this, they couldn't do it. Under the pretense at least of democracies, they couldn't do it. That's all gone now, and they're gone and they're on a roll now, folks.

Anyway, I hope you're doing okay, all of you. Thanks, for all the people who've emailed me. I like to get in touch with them all and find out what's happening. It's important, because we're all people and we're all connected. We are connected on the same journey here. It's good to catch up and hear about their little trials and tribulations that we all go through. We've all got them. We're all human. And that's what also binds us all together I think is the fact that we are human. And hopefully we care about each other.

For myself Alan Watt from Ontario Canada, it's good night and may your God or gods go with you.

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt (Guest on Reality Bytes Radio with Neil Foster) - Sep.2, 2020

Neil: Okay, it seems we're live again.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: Welcome back to Reality Bytes. I've still got Alan Watt and you know, kind of technical things, to try and get backup recordings just in case this doesn't work. So anyway, we'll start again.

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: I was talking about Ireland and the protest that's been going on there over the past few weeks. It was up to 10,000 people a couple of weeks ago. And the latest protest being outside the studios of RTE, the main television and radio provider in Ireland for the BBC in England. I was wondering if the elites would expect this type of thing because it's not the usual thing you see across Europe. It's mainly mass protests in the streets, there's nobody actually targeting any specific institution if you like.

And it speaks to the people in Ireland for that, realizing that RTE are now the enemy, and always have been. It's pretty obvious what they were reporting of the previous demonstrations and protests which cited a couple of hundred people actually outside Custom House, when the pictures clearly showed thousands of people. That was the reporting that RTE did, then of course they marred that reporting with the Antifa scuffles which came to nothing really. Antifa of course has become the supporters of the government apparently because they seem to turn up at every antigovernment demonstration supporting the other side, which is quite strange, considering they're trying to bring down governments.

But Scotland on the other hand, I know you talked about the Irish problem, the Scottish problem, etc. in the past Alan. And Scotland seems to have gone kaput completely. There doesn't seem to be any resistance there at all, unless you know of any.

Alan: No.

Neil: My son says nothing is happening there and everybody is just complying.

Alan: M-hm.

Neil: England is a funny mix, I think. There seem to be some things happening in London and Manchester and other places. But nothing, nothing really like this that grabs the attention, apart from the highjacked event in London at the weekend with the usual suspects coming out. Well, he didn't mention lizards but he may as well have. There was a speaker there who mentioned closing the schools, which was again, a bit of a giveaway because that's exactly what they want to do. It struck me that maybe Ireland is on the right track, it takes a small country, maybe even Ireland, to actually fight back and say enough is enough.

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: The government in Ireland has been corrupt for years. It was corrupt when I was there, and it's still the same people in power, they're just switching them around...

Alan: Sure.

Neil: ...giving each other a thumb. But if you spoke about the Irish problem in the past, and the English problem, and the Scottish problem, and you've mentioned that there's something about the Celts that doesn't like taking orders from people basically and won't be walked over. And now as I say, the Scots seem to have been walked over, but the Irish are still going. What would you put that down to?

Alan: It's, well, Scotland was gone a long time ago really. It was, the SNP was a Trojan horse, you know. It was, again this, get the people to really vote for Scottish independence, which isn't independence as you know. The same as Ireland, you don't wake up from independence into the European Union, which is an even bigger group of fanatics at the top. So, they fell for it.

When you look at all the members of the SNP at the top, they used to be called the Communist Party. That's what they used to be, these characters. They're international. That's their slogan, international socialism. Folk have no idea that communism basically was set up and advised with the Comintern years ago and so on to get back to their own countries after the meetings in Moscow. They'd come back. Like Pierre Trudeau did. He led the Communist Party for Canada in 1952 over to Moscow. He came back and then they ran as liberals, you see. That was the trick to it. So, get in by any means you can, and once you're in you start to implement the international agenda. Which again is almost like an open border system, and masses of migration, and displacement of your own people in a sense too. This idea of cheap labor doesn't really wash. Lots of the labor that came in, it wasn't needed in the first place. And that was flooding in even after World War II.

But once the SNP got up and running, they promised you a wonderful utopia, as always, to get everybody on board with it. They push women's rights and all these rights for all these different people. Before you know it, you've got people coming into the country that get positions in, I think I heard recently in fact that the SNP were giving the votes to people outside the country. I mean, what kind of nation is that? It's not a nation, you see, anymore. Pretty well destroyed.

Ireland still had the remnants of religion, you see. Even though it was hammered and hammered for a long, long time. The Communists biggest enemy always, always, always was religion. Religion gave them a basis of culture, a cohesive culture which is awfully hard to destroy. Even when you, hhhch, pretty well took most of the religion away, the culture was still there, it was based on the religion, you see. So that's why they haven't been able to completely annihilate Ireland yet. But they're really going at a pretty good there. They've put all the right Trojans in again, into the government systems across the board. And they're all paid off from outside sources. That's the big one too, I mean massive funding from all outside sources to individuals.

We don't live in any kind of democracy. Hhhch. We've lived in an almost hypnotic state since World War II, since the big world organization that really runs the world, which you see at the WEF, the World Economic Forum. They're quite open about their agenda. And it is based on a form of Technocracy. And Technocracy in the 1930s was a form of communism, a more perfected form of where communism was supposed to go, where experts would rule the world, you see. You find, I think Elon Musk’s grandfather, or even father was part of the system too and was thrown out of Canada at one point in the 30s for subversion. [Chuckles]

So, their idea is to take over the world's resources. Which tied right in, when if you look at the Lord Alfred Milner group that came out with the Royal Institute of International Affairs and the British Empire, they ran the British Empire, this private club that morphed into the Royal Institute of International Affairs, with the American branch called the Council on Foreign Relations. They took over the world's resources. Everything that you need to live as a human being individually and collectively in a nation, they would take over. That's food supplies. That's energy, all energy. And don't forget that food is energy. And your heating, electricity, your gas, whatever you're using, all energy would be controlled by them.

That's exactly what's coming out of the World Economic Forum today with the big crew that decided they have the right to rule the world. Behind all the sustainability for climate change, it's the same group that simply changed it into Covid, post Covid and austerity. It's the same bunch. WE are the problem, too many of YOU, that's what they say, you know. It's always been, on their own websites they go into this in quite good detail with Klaus Schwab prattling off his same old mantra, there's too many of you and that's the world's problem. So, they're going to make you come to a decision where you're going to accept sterilization. I really mean that, that's where it's all going.

Neil: Yeah. Well of course there's many ways to sterilize people and abortion is one of them.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: They've been pushing that hard in Ireland for the last five or six years. Or, well, longer than that actually. But they've really been preaching it hard.

Alan: Oh, they're also going to definitely go into, they said at the last meeting last year, the same crew as I say, the WEF, it's the same crew that runs all the climate change agenda and so on, the same bunch, and the Club of Rome with them. But they said last year that people were not listening to their advice, as they said it, on cutting back on consumerism and so on so they'd have to do something more drastic to make the people listen. And bingo, you get Covid breaking out around November, December. [Chuckles] And here we go into rationing, you know, regimentation of the public in a wartime scenario. It's all out there.

Don't forget too that Bertrand Russell, this is a big group that's been on the go since before World War II, during World War II and after World War II, that runs the world. The same group. Russell himself who belong to all these groups talked about bringing in a form of credit control, they'd give you credits issued by the state. Today it's universal social credit system and you get paid that every month. You would get paid not to work even, you know. That was in the 1940s and 50s he talked about this.

They're unfolding the whole agenda under the guise of Covid that they couldn't get through with sustainability and the climate change agreements. Under the climate change agreements, they said last year again that humanity was the problem, too many of you. Yeah. Then the Club of Rome came out right after the Covid broke out and said, we'll achieve all our goals for sustainability using Covid. And that's exactly what they're doing. Yeah.

Neil: I think you mentioned on your broadcast on Sunday, you talked about the rationing and the rationing of fuel during the war years, and how it continued after it for quite a long time.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: I was speaking to a lady in the supermarket yesterday, quite unusual. She was talking about she wasn't going to use the self-service checkouts, blah blah blah. She was behind me in one of these disabled carts, and just chatted for a few minutes. She suddenly turned around to me and said, why, how did you get in here without a mask? And I said, because I just ignore them. She said, you just ignore them? I said, yeah, I just walk in the door and don't listen to what they say. I said I have never worn one. And she says, oh, oh. She said, I was at a meeting yesterday, an educational course or something that she was on, and she said there was about 25 people there and a couple of them had masks on, and the lecturer stood up and said, before we start, I've been doing this class for 10 years three days a week and I've never asked anybody to wear a muzzle, so if you don't want to wear that thing take it off. [Chuckles]

Alan: [Chuckles]

Neil: She said by the end of the class nobody was wearing one. I just thought I'd throw that one in there because there's some positivity somewhere, you know.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: Getting back to England. England is a funny mix of people anyway but there seems to be, I would have thought that the north of England would have been protesting a lot more than they are, as opposed to the south. Because, you know, the South is still pretty affluent compared to the rest of Britain.

Alan: Sure

Neil: And they've not really, when a recession hits there they get brought down to the high levels that the people up north usually thought they enjoyed. But they don't really suffer that much, and it's not really hit them yet. Do you think that if something goes, again, the Irish, because it's an island, for the elite it's kind of a target because it is an island and it's easy to shut it down, it's easy to stop obviously food getting in and stuff like that, and fuel for that matter. Do you think the rationing could come in there first, or somewhere similar, where they can shut off easy?

Alan: They have enough operatives in Ireland managing the system that they could do it, sure. And they certainly do have operatives inside the system. Ireland has had its operatives in there since even before World War II running the system. It's a covert system we're living under. You have one that they call democracy which folk actually think exists, and the other one is the one that really runs the system.

You'll find, I mean, I've got books going back, one especially is the 1930s, 1937. It's published by the Rockefeller Foundation, and it was for the British Empire, you know, The Future of the British Empire. But what it was, was a book about the transition from the power of Britain having it solely, you know, naval power and the whole thing, and the old Empire, and sharing it with the United States. So that the members of the Council on Foreign Relations there, that's the American branch of the same group, talking about the future, and that the war hadn't started, you know, but they talked about the war, the coming war with Japan. That was in the book. All the members who attended, the names were on the back. Top politicians, top bankers, central bankers of every country attended this. And the top Communist Party members. Because remember Quigley said the same thing, we don't mind, we've got communists, fascists and dictators, we don't mind, all these different members of the group. That's how you run the world.

The terminology is mainly to distract the public, the general public. They're kind of puppets in a sense, and feints, like boxing feints. We get carried away with the terms, we lose track of what they really are, but they're all used for the same purpose.

So, they talked about a post-World War II system, in the book. It was a big thick book too, for members. They talked about restructuring, after the war, which hadn't started, remember, with Germany either, after the war they would restructure the culture of Europe. That's exactly what they did with Hopkins who worked for FDR during the war, setting up a system they'd introduce into Japan and Germany after the war where they'd eradicate their history, you know, and they teach children that there was no history. Very much like the Communists would do with Year Zero. That the only history they had was something that was ominous and bad, so you mustn't be taught it. It was too upsetting, so you weren't taught it. But it wasn't just for them. Quigley said himself in his own books, who was a member of the same organization, he said, all sides in a war are used for change. He's admitting that there's groups above all this that cause and bring on the wars, and then they direct the changes which they desire, and which they have planned. That's what they use it for, that's how it's done.

Neil: You mentioned Germany there and it's interesting that, you know, Germany has been made to feel guilty, you know, they use them, Germany particularly to be made to feel guilty about the atrocities of the past, which of course they got nothing to do with them.

Alan: Absolutely.

Neil: What is it, 80 years ago now? It's good to see so many of them start to get out of the street and say no, no, no, no, we're not going back to that.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: So obviously that eradication of history has not quite worked, and a lot still remember.

Alan: It's lucky. Actually, it was really a lot to do, this is the double whammy, with the Internet, you know, which is not heavily censored. But at least on the Internet there was ways of communicating material to people, of their history and their past that they didn't know. And what a shock it would be to be at the age of about 40 sometimes, and for the first time you're hearing a history that you didn't even know existed. In your own country. But I take the same idea and put it across the world, we're all given fake histories pretty well, you know, to a great extent.

Because we're managed by this supra national organization, that do have their members. I met some of them. I've talked to them. One of them actually was the head of the WHO a few years ago, and the head of lots of other organizations. They rotate them around like musical chairs to these organizations. These people are unelected, and they become heads of countries, and heads of the United Nations at times as well. So, they do exist. They call themselves different names like, The Guardians, and The Elders is another group. It sounds very innocuous, The Elders, oh that's just old folks. No, no. These people literally have, everything that's happened with the United Nations and all the agreements in sustainability and all the rest of it comes from them. They tell the other organizations what to do.

They have a site up there by the way, that you can look up. Again, it's misleading. There's the exoteric for the public, they'll think they’re just ex-important people that all know each other. Like Maggie Thatcher, she was a member of it too. But in reality, they dictate to the other ones. They have power to put people in positions of power inside these countries. So never, I mean these are the same people who push for opening the doors completely for mass migrations from Africa and India into Europe in the last few years, you know. That's a lot of power to have.

Neil: I was going to mention that because, I don't know if you saw the thing about Sweden that's happened recently with the, supposedly somebody burning a Koran and it set off riots in I think it was Malmo. And I thought, that's just what we need right now there, one of these uprisings again. But again, it's like Sweden being punished for not locking down its citizens, you know, would set off something like that and cause some trouble.

Alan: Sure.

Neil: And maybe it will spread across Europe, who knows...

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: ...if there's enough Muslims in Europe to cause that kind of trouble.

Alan: Of course.

Neil: But of course, that will get frowned upon. That will be religious freedom or something.

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: Going back to Ireland, now they've got in a law that only 15 people can gather outdoors. 15.

Alan: M-hm.

Neil: And any organizers or protests can now be fined about €10,000 or something. So, I said to the lads in Ireland, what you need is a thousand organizers with 15 people apiece...

Alan: Yes!

Neil: [Chuckles] ...get around it that way.

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: So, you can't get fined. And if all those 15 people just happen to be together, well, that's just coincidence.

Alan: Isn't that something though, eh.

Neil: Yeah, but 15 people. That's... I mean, that's got to including a restaurant with outside seating. I mean, you can't have 15 people...

Alan: You see, the people are doing it all wrong, you know. What you have to do is get black jeans and T-shirts and facemasks, and just say you're having a demonstration. You know?

Neil: With matches.

Alan: Yeah, with matches. Yeah. And they'll leave you alone. The cops won't go near you. You can just have a party and just say you're talking party politics. It's quite simple.

Neil: Yeah, as I said, it was good to see the police in Ireland turn the street back a little bit and let events ensue, and let it go a little bit out of hand, they stepped in and kept the Antifa people from proper beatings, shall we say.

Alan: There ya go. [Chuckles]

Neil: [Chuckles] But yeah, I think the Irish have got the right idea, just get them in a corner and put them in their place basically.

Alan: Well, yeah, I watched it leading up to it. What got me, because I know quite a few people in Ireland, and some people who'd come in as migrants from Africa in Ireland, they were all talking about something, and I'll say what they're on about, it's because some of them had been stabbing white folk in Ireland, during the Black Lives Matter raid, you know, pulling down the statues and stuff. They actually were stabbing some folk. They had picked on some young guy and his girlfriend, hhhch, and so they were divided on whether to applaud the guy that did the stabbings on the white fella, or if it was going too far. I mean, this is all generated from outside the country as you know, by the folk who really run and bring them in and finance them. We know the names of a lot of them too that are doing it.

Neil: The video of that stabbing was quite horrific.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: How that got past sensors on Facebook and all that, I don't know, but there you go, it was out there. Apparently, that guy that did it was bragging about it on Facebook...

Alan: Yes.

Neil: ... and doing all sorts of things. He was arrested and released.

Alan: That's right.

Neil: As far as I know nothing was ever done about it.

Alan: It won't be. You know, you see, you've got paid... I'm afraid to say your judges and so on, they're paid off literally from external sources. It's the same, people can't figure out why these mayors in the States and so on and the politicians and the Democrats are all on board exactly, sworn to the same agenda that makes no sense to the public. It's because they're getting paid for it. This is what it is, they are bought and paid for. All of them. Folk have a hard time believing this but that's how it really works.

Neil: Yeah. It's funny, I mentioned to you in an email that I came down to the City Hall to state my case of why we shouldn't be mandating masks, etc. I went in there knowing full well that they were going to mandate it anyway, but it's good to get on the record that you're giving them evidence, etc., so they can't turn around and say they didn't know when something does happen.

Alan: Sure. Yeah.

Neil: But I came back, and I looked up the… Because when all this was going on, I usually go into the office and say I'm not interested in that and blah blah blah. But just like [?] I looked up when the next election was. Because one of the ladies there was basically making racist remarks about the city next door, the next city to us. They'd simply say, we don't want them coming in here spreading a disease. [Chuckles] And I thought, what does she thinks she's saying? She's a black lady. And I thought, if a white guy had said that it would be, what?

Alan: I know.

Neil: You know but anyway, I went back to see when she was supposed to be up for reelection, and apparently her term ended this May. And so, did the deputy mayor. So, they're not even supposed to be sitting on the commission but there they're making decisions. So, I don't how that works. I've got to look into that and say, when is your term finished? As far as I can see on your own website, it's already done, so how are you making decisions?

Alan: Sure. You see, people don't realize that you're living in so-called perception management, through television, a very old science, you know, nowadays anyway. You can literally create whole perception, misperceptions actually, but directed misperceptions you want to the public to believe in.

You can get a small group and make them appear like there's thousands there. Look at the BBC that's used mass gatherings in India and used it pretending that it was in Iraq at one time after 9/11. These were mass gatherings in India for something totally different and they tried to pretend, oh, look at these thousands of people happy and rejoicing that the US is being attacked. No, it wasn't. It was completely fake, and they stole it from a different demonstration inside India. This happens all the time.

So, it's perception management. The general population have been raised, I've mentioned this before, to be literally naïve and you believe the mainstream media is in authority. When I was growing up every person, every working person knew who owned the different newspapers. They knew. Because they had gone through, a lot of them had gone through the 1930s as young men, you know, people my parents age, in the 40s and the war and all the rest of it. They realized that all information was a propaganda war, and they knew who was who. Then in Britain of course you had complete cartels that ran the whole system. It was very much like Hollinger in Canada and the States, you know, with Conrad Black and a lot of reporters underneath them that ran stacks of newspapers, all the way to Israel in fact.

But nowadays they've done such a good job to bring it back to, we are the authority. It's only because they're on every night of the week, the same characters giving you the news, that they are the authority. It's perception management. So yeah, you don't realize that you're living through a play. And I really mean that it's a play. What you do with big plans to change your countries, never mind the fact you've set up all the top politicians, they're all bought and paid for. Quigley said it too and he applauded it, he was all for it. He didn't believe the people had the right to sort of choose things for themselves.

If you take everything that's been happening in last, oh, since last year even, and before, never mind all the other things leading up to it all, sustainability was the mantra. There's too many people, the Club of Rome, etc. They want a postindustrial, a postconsumer society going into austerity. They signed all the agreements at the United Nations years ago. I did all the radio shows on it explaining it to the public. Well, here it is.

So, as I say, look at the Covid thing. It broke out after, after Trump did one thing right.

Whoever's managing him, you know, whoever it might be, they did one thing right. That was that he pulled out of the climate change agreement. Well, that's when all hell broke loose. Because they just had their meeting, they publicized it. Soros had an emergency meeting with the WEF, and it went on saying that Trump is the greatest danger to the world right now. Now, he's speaking with and on behalf of every top corporation on this planet, that belong to the WEF, and the WHO. They're all in bed, it's all one big organization. Bill Gates is part of it too, you know.

So Covid breaks out suddenly, you know, and I thought at the time, this is an agreement with China and the world. Because they gave us horrible video coming out of China, of all places, where they can censor out anything, nothing comes out of there unless they want it out. I thought, you see folk dropping dead in the streets supposedly and yada yada, and big machines going down streets blowing this mist hundreds of feet up into the air and it was all... This is what they showed, getting us prepared for the terror, you see. And I thought, are they all working together?

Well, they ARE working together. Because we're supposed to merge with China into a global society. China is supposed to take over as the policeman of the world after all this. Well, how do you bring America down to make China the supreme power? Well, you bring it into poverty, all commerce stops, almost, you know, bring them into a wartime scenario, an internal wartime scenario, using Covid. Famine breaks out, rationing breaks out, all this. Completely, they're calling it by the way, reimagining society, from the WEF, that's where it came out of. Bill Gates put his programs out for children to learn through the computer at home called reimagining education. So, his programs are literally going to be used across the whole world to standardize one information system for every child on the planet. Right out of UNESCO's idea, the old Julian Huxley idea, that's what it's for. So, reimagining the police, again too. Eradicate the police forces. Bring, the military-industrial complex are all on board. That's why all these generals are on board with it in America and they're not backing Trump. They're going to go into a world society, they will still exist. They're all paid lobbyists for the military-industrial corporations. They're going to bring in all the electronic robots for the streets and so on.

It's all managed this way. Perception management. The general public must believe it's all real, it's all accidental, the accidental view of history, right. [Chuckles] You can reimagine 9/11 was just an accident, and it happened at a time when the PNAC group that published all the countries they wanted to take out in advance, years before, were empowered at that time so they could get started with their agenda. It's always an accident, so it's an accidental view of history.

So accidentally after the WEF came out with sustainability, we've got to go further and actually promote ideas to even encourage sterilization, voluntary, amongst the people, and Trump comes out and says no to them. Bingo, you get Covid. Then the WEF comes out again with Soros with an emergency meeting giving, and coming back with an extra speech, it's up on YouTube, I think. It's to say, I mean, here's a guy, you don't elect Soros. Nobody elects him that we all... They're elected by the higher group that runs the planet. And no one's objecting him at the top. Have you noticed that? Nope. Not one person. Not... The CIA isn't objecting. Because he's part of it. The FBI aren't objecting to Soros.

Any, if you were doing all this and you had the money, you would be one of these James Bond characters, you know, like Spector, these rich multi-billionaires that run the planet. Because that's what he would appear to be. But he's part of a big organization that's funding literally terrorism within your own countries. This is astonishing to watch it happening.

And they'll keep going, internal riots, another perception management part, after the Covid thing out came, it was the Black Lives Matter, not just in America but across Britain for goodness sake. You know. I mean, Britain is really the most lax places of all for migration. If you want to get ahead from coming outside of Britain into the country there's all kinds of programs to elevate you above even how the ordinary people live, without even paying for education. It's amazing.

So, they use these armies to terrify the public. It's like a show of strength, and they're like armies, remember. Being allowed to do what they did. That's the other key to it, the very fact that they're allowed to do what they did, tells you that it's all orchestrated and it's authorized from very high powers above you. That's what it's about.

Neil: You knew Soros was part of the club when he brought down the Bank of England, and MI5 and MI6 did nothing about it.

Alan: That's right.

Neil: That's part of their reason for being, is to protect the establishment, protect the financial institutions, etc., and here is this guy bragging that he brought down the Bank of England and he's made millions of pounds on it. And nothing's done about it?

Alan: That's right. M-hm. Nothing. No.

Neil: That he's some private individual, he just got lucky, I guess.

Alan: Oh, it's always that way. It's the accidental view. Yeah. Don't forget that Britain brought him in, when they all ran out of Europe and so on, went over to Britain. They gave him a free education in economics and all the rest of it, again, the London School of Economics eh, the usual, then he goes into investments. Then he crashes the country's bank. Then he boasts about it, yeah and Britain had to borrow billions of pounds to bail themselves out because of what I and my two FRIENDS did, he says. I mean, whooof! [Chuckles]

Neil: You talk about perception management and how it's created, they used to have a, I mean, this is called the city where we live but it's really just a big town. The main area of the town is really only, I'd say a square mile if you're lucky. It spreads out to the countryside, it's rural mainly. But we used to have a local paper and that was shut down a few years ago. Another city nearby was the next kind of local paper, so everybody now buys that instead of the one they used to buy, which is the one that covered this area. I looked into who owned that and it's the biggest newspaper owners in America. [Chuckles]

Alan: Yes.

Neil: So of course here's people thinking they've got a provincial newspaper giving them provincial news, and they're getting the same news as everybody else all across America telling them what to think and what to believe and how bad it is here and how bad it is there, or whatever. That's how easily it gets done.

Alan: Oh yeah.

Neil: I'm sure that little paper in the other town didn't cost much money for these people to take over.

Alan: Sure. Sure. And the thing too, again, you can go back into the 30s and even before that, I know the Rockefellers did it, the Rockefeller Foundation. Don't forget, Rockefeller's agenda was straight in line with the Royal Institute of International Affairs, take over the world's resources. Give a limited amount out for public investment or shares and so on but these corporations were to take over the world's necessary resources. That's what he did with Standard Oil. Of course, they tried to pretend that they did the antitrust laws and so on and racketeering laws and they pretended to divvy up the company when the government went after them for having too much power. But they simply, and it's been admitted by themselves too, they put out front CEOs with the corporations they set up, buried under stacks of fronts and so on, until you get to the real information. So, they still ran all the oil industries and the gasoline and the petroleum industry. All the drugs too that are made from petroleum, eh, that was another big part of it too. So, they created the AMA.

But anyway, you're living through an amazing agenda. Which is again admitted to. It's not conspiracy theory. It's quite open if you want to dig into it. It's just that because they own the media, you're not going to get your favorite newscaster that you've been raised with to trust, you know, coming on with the news telling you this kind of stuff. They won't do it because they're on the payroll. Of course, they are. And they know it too.

When I was small in Britain there was a guy on the BBC who came on every night. I can't remember his name. I know his face. I couldn't believe when he was retiring, and I was a child and he was retiring, the accolades he got. I think he got an OBE or something from the Queen, something like that. And I thought, all he did was get on and read the news. But you see, a whole generation had been raised believing this guy is a real, the real thing, you know, an honest guy, a decent guy and all that, a kind of guy that probably brought them through World War II with the same news reels or something, so they believed and trusted the guy. But he's reading scripts written by other people for him. That's how things really are.

That's why they keep these anchor people on the go until they're dropping off the chair, you know, or falling asleep on the set, and pay them so much money. Is because if you can keep them there for a long, long time... I mean, Walter Cronkite in the States was one of them. I mean, every time he opened his mouth, every time, everybody believed him. They really believed him, you know. It took yeeears to convince the public to start believing private news companies, but today, it's completely accepted that they're all somehow part of the authoritarian natural system. But they're just as fake as they always were.

Neil: Yeah. I think about the thing in Ireland, is that what woke them up to that type of thing, is because all this corruption was going on in the government. The program that had been going on there for years, the Rate Show [?], and they put in one kind of celebrity presenter every so often, and usually an employee of RTE funnily enough gets in there. They bring in these politicians who've been accused of all sorts of nefarious acts, corruption, whatever, they come on there and they give them such an easy time.

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: They don't ask the right questions. And this is supposedly a live program, although there's a slight delay in it after somebody got on the stage and started doing something. But yeah, they give them such an easy time. The Irish people started to see through it and say what, you know, why aren't they asking them this question, why aren't they asking them that question, you know? I think that's really what started the crusade, for want of a better word, against RTE. And I hope it continues because I think it's the way to go.

When they were there I said, you know, lads, you do need to pound in the doors and just kick it out. Because that's what's going to have to happen. And I think there was some kind of movies about this, there's been movies in the past though, or documentaries where this actually happened, that people have broken into TV studios and said this is what's actually happening and they've broadcast it live, and let's see what happens. I don't know, but maybe it takes that. Who knows?

Alan: Yeah, as I say, it's all, unfortunately, I've said this many times, the technique of conditioning children who become adults is almost perfect. Again, you can't stress enough about Aldous Huxley's comments on different TV shows he was on and radio shows, and appearances at Berkeley for lectures and so on. He went through the system. I think the Mike Wallace show he was on, that's up there somewhere, maybe, unless they've pulled it. Where Aldous Huxley, and don't forget, he called himself part of the scientific establishment that ruled the world. He mentioned there's a dominant minority at the top, at Berkeley, you know. He says, there's a dominant minority and underneath that you've got academia and the scientific elites. Now, that included psychologist, behaviorists and so on that managed the minds of the public. The Bernays types, you know, even more advanced than that of course.

In the 1960s don't forget on the Mike Wallace show Aldous Huxley mentioned that the techniques even then were almost so perfect and were going to get even more perfect, or perfected, of conditioning the general public, and there would be, sciences would be used against them so carefully and subtly and efficiently that they could make the public do and accept things that perhaps they shouldn't, that wouldn't be good for them. It was that good, where you wouldn't even notice you're going along with something you shouldn't. But today it's so perfected. Look at the Covid, it's a good example, where they have militarized society so quickly into utter submission. More so than they even had during World War II. [Chuckles]

Neil: It's amazing to be out and about in the stores. As I mentioned before, Paula doesn't go out that much because she doesn't like shopping. I say, which is great. She doesn't spend too much. But I go out you know every day or two days and it's just, I'm still astonished that so many people are complying. But every time I see somebody without a mask, I make a comment, you know, like, it's good to see you got your brain out instead of a mask.

Alan: That's right.

Neil: …you know, or whatever. But sticking on an education theme, and this guy in London who was on that hijacked protest shall we call it, who demanded the schools be closed, you know, blah blah blah. In I think it was Tennessee here, the parents are now having to sign waivers to say that they will not be in the same room as the students while getting their lessons. I mean, [chuckles] what could possibly go wrong, eh?

Alan: I know.

Neil: It's just insane. But they are actually doing that. I mean, Iiiii think I'd be refusing to sign anything, just say, well hold on a minute, you wanted home education, you’re getting home education, that's the end of it. But I'll be in charge of what comes through that computer screen.

Alan: Yeah. Uh-hm.

Neil: And as we mentioned television before, how it's a weapon, and the flicker rate on the television.

Alan: Yep.

Neil: And as the televisions have gotten more advanced, I'm sure that's...

Alan: It's actually better because, I mean, I did the old TV sets with the flicker rate and the frequency, flicker and so on, what they used back then to bring them into subliminal states, you know. But once you go into high definition, that literally, that was a weapon, because I read the stuff from the Pentagon on it, you know. They put a lot of literature out of it years ago on it, maybe it's still up there. They talked about what they could do with the high definition.

Because you see, hhch, if you go into basic techniques of even meditation you can change the states of your mind, the brain patterns of your mind, alpha, beta and so on. The old TV set could do that. That's when the children would sit and stare with their mouths wide open, you know, three-year-olds, four-year-olds stared at the TV, or cartoons, even when it changed into a different cartoon, they were hypnotized. This is well understood in psychology and psychiatry and behaviorism.

So anyway, once you brought in high definition it literally, your eyes don't see like that. If you look at something close to you, the stuff in the background behind the object is more blurred. That's how your eyes operate. So, in high definition, from the start of the picture, the closest objects and the further are all equally clear. So, it alters the brain patterns. And it's well tested already, they knew it before they gave it to the public it puts you into a different trancelike state almost. You're way more suggestible than you normally would be. They know this. And time will pass by the way, you'll lose track of time, and you won't know where it went.

But the Pentagon went further, and the Pentagon admitted that they had a whole bunch of programs, this is like 15 years ago, and even later, where they could target people, or even a whole population with pixel rates, a concentrating with colors, but very, very subtle colors, in certain parts of the screen that would affect different parts of your brain. And you wouldn't really be conscious of it because you're watching the story, you see. But they can actually manipulate it, it was very effective, and very efficient and workable. Sure.

Neil: Well that's where I was going to go with the teaching in the home on the computer. Now, the computer monitors now are more advanced as well. So, they're getting into the high definition as well.

Alan: Of course.

Neil: So, you can imagine a child sitting in the room and the teacher can basically tell them anything.

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: And they'll be sitting in that catatonic state for however long the lesson is.

Alan: That's right.

Neil: 40 minutes, 50 minutes, and then they get a five-minute break or whatever and then they go on to the next one, and the next one, and on it goes. And they sit there, before they know it, six, seven hours.

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: And the parents have got no input whatsoever, got no control over it. And these children, look, I mean, even if they actually go to the school, they've been taught not to share. They're not allowed to share pencils and pens anymore. They're not allowed to, you know, associate with each other.

Alan: Ah-ha.

Neil: You know, the desks are 6 feet apart or whatever it is. They're not allowed to play outside. They're not allowed to do this, that and the next thing. They're being taught selfishness, and who knows how that's going to be backed up on the computer, what they're really being taught.

Alan: What it is, was explained, it was explained back in the 1920s where we’re coming to now, you know. Because some of the best propagandists, the elite have always used authors. They make them stars, just like you make singers stars, the star making machinery, or actors, you know. This is admitted to by the way. If you ever watch the, hhhch, documentary put out by, about the Unabomber bomber, why he was attacking certain professors and particularly University. It was because they had, he said they were part of a system that was going to change society and literally control our minds, you know.

Then it came out, hhhch, during the inquiries that these professors HAD been involved in psychedelics and drugs and strobes and so on, which were eventually used in discos, you know. Great documentary to see that he was part of an experiment himself. And he was a professor, remember, the Unabomber. But as a student these same guys had experimented with him. That came out during the documentary, which came out from Germany eventually. But when you see how far they had gone then, and then some of these professors talked about it on the documentary, one of them was, belongs to a star making machinery, he said, where we make scientists and the people you see on TV stars. You know, who give you the stars, you know, the professor who talks science and so on, to give them these personas and backgrounds and fake reality backgrounds and so on and make them stars. It's the same star making machinery. The same ones that gave you Carl Sagan by the way. And people believe them. Hhhh, wow, these guys are brilliant! They don't realize, no, these, they're almost actors, some of them. The people follow what they say, though, meticulously like they're religious leaders. And that's how you control society.

You put these characters out, make them into stars, and the people follow. That's why they call them the 'stars' even in Hollywood, people follow stars, you see. So, you use them, you make them, and you use them. Just like the CFR put Clooney in there and Angelina Jolie and others, and they said in the CFR's own books you know, Foreign Affairs magazine, they were using them because people would follow what they said, if they were on board with the agenda. It works awfully well.

That's your whole TV, is so incredibly weaponized today, that youngsters who are brought up with that don't have much of a chance of breaking away from it all. And that's also the terror machine for Covid. Without TV people would have ignored it.

Neil: I said that to people in stores as well. I says, you need to turn off your television. And if you did, you wouldn't even know there's anything wrong.

Alan: That's right.

Neil: You wouldn’t notice anything.

Alan: And that's why, by the way, that one month or so or six weeks in the summer, I knew they would, I even said this back in February, I said what would happen. I said, they'll give you a break in the summer, rather than have total revolution, a counterrevolution, because this is the part of revolution, you see. So, they wouldn't have counterrevolution to go against it. In those few weeks you saw that, the people started to smile again. You can read the faces of people. Because we communicate with a whole bunch of expressions and nuances and so on, because we're human and we're social creatures. When that's masked and you can't see it, it makes everyone else suspicious. You don't know what they're thinking. You don't know what they're feeling. Are they pleasant? Are they unpleasant? What? You can't tell. It's meant to do this. They know this.

So, it breaks down communication. So, in the few weeks in summer they gave you a bit of freedom and the masks came off. The folk went right back to happiness. The social distance was thrown out the window and it was getting ignored. So, they can’t have it ignored, because this is a big, big agenda. And it's nothing to do with Covid actually. It's everything to do with the whole system.

Neil: Yeah. My friend living in Sweden at the moment, my English friend that I used to live with in the UK, he has no intention of going back to the UK. He says this is like paradise compared to the UK. He says there's absolutely nothing happening here. There's no masks, none of that. No social distance. He says there's nothing signs out, there's nothing. He'd been on a trip to Germany recently where even to get a cup of coffee had to give his name, address, where he was going, ID, everything, just to get a cup of coffee.

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: I've got a guy on Sunday actually who's a friend of his and he is going to be important with what's happening in Germany with the protests and stuff so that should be interesting as well.

Alan: Sure.

Nemo: But he was in Sweden for a while, so I want him, so he's got the contrast.

Alan: U-hm.

Neil: But yeah, the school thing. It's, hhhch, if you're a parent and you were even remotely aware of what the WHO wants to teach your children in terms of sexual education, and they said to you, you've got to sign this waiver so you’re not going to be in the room when he's getting taught this. Your alarm bells should be ringing off the wall. I mean...

Alan: Oh sure.

Neil: But they're not apparently, there's just so many people signing this stuff. I mean, maybe they're signing and they're in the room anyway. But of course, there's a camera on that computer so you've got to stay out of sight of it, once you sign the waiver, or they'll prosecute you, supposedly, I don't know.

Alan: It's been such a long time in the making, you see. Again, getting back to HG Wells in the 1920s as a propagandist, he was made a star. He was recruited in late 1800s, you know. He initially came out for free love by the way, but back then, the late 1800s, a time when they didn't have the abortion factories on the go. But that was part of the destruction of the family unit. This amazing guy HG Wells, that was heavily promoted, he had all the help for his books from professors of all kinds at Oxford and so on who would lay out all the details of his books. He was really a front man. He was completely on board, naturally, when you're well-paid you're on board with an agenda.

In his nonfiction books he went really far with it all. He talked about the Modern Utopia and how, like going through a storyline with his friend on an escapade, a holiday, and there would be no private transportation. That's like Agenda 21. You could travel by bus and trains. The general population with the lower IQs, that weren't necessary anymore, all the working class, had been, he said we used to think we'd have to kill them, but we realized it's more humane just to sterilize them. And this is the kind of talking walking walk-through what they foresee, what they foresaw was going to happen. Don't forget that he worked with Julian Huxley and many others, eh.

Neil: He also mentioned that carbon would be a commodity, I believe.

And: Yes.

Neil: Yeah.

Alan: He went through the whole agenda, sexually, the breakdown, because again he was all for the end of the family unit. Isn't it odd, it's the same agenda as the Communist Party, eh? And who funded the Fabian Society that Wells belonged to too? It's the Astor family, the biggest, richest folk on the planet at the time. So hhhch. And again, the famed society was again this pretense which they, where they get the working classes to follow them. That was the idea of it. So, whenever you follow, and I keep telling folk, if you follow anything, you're being led up the garden path, somebody's using you. So, they always give you the parties that's going to speak for you, you see. Just like they get the BLM, the Marxist groups to speak for black folk in the States. That's so they're already made for you to follow.

Neil: And they're all white.

Alan: I know! Have you noticed it? It's just amazing, eh. And they bus them in from state to state according to where the riot's to be. And they’re paid mercenaries. A lot of them by the way has been over there in Syria fighting with mercenaries over there, yeah, as mercenaries.

Neil: You mentioned HG Wells and the abortion industry. I think at one time he was one of Margaret Sanger's hanger's-on, or whatever you want to call them.

Alan: Yes, that's right.

Neil: What I'm seeing now, I might be thinking of the movie Time Machine. That was Wells as well. The scene by the river where the person falls in the river, and they're all just sitting about thinking, well, we can't swim. And the guy who's come back from the future, or sorry, he's gone into the future, he jumps in the river, and he rescues her. And at one point they're like, what are you doing that for?

Alan: That's right.

Neil: What are you doing that for? She was obviously worthless, she couldn't swim, [?] let's have her fall kind of thing. And I think that's where we are now. Nobody gives a damn what happens to anybody else.

Alan: Well, you're right actually. Again, there was one, a case in US I think it was on a train station on a subway station. Some guy started raping a girl right in front of all the passengers on the platform, you know. And everybody just stood around taking photographs of it with their cell phones. I mean, that's what it's come down to.

Neil: Yeah, there was a case of one of the activists in Ireland, Gemma O’Doherty I think it is, was violently assaulted by some thug just at the weekend there. He, she was arrested. As I say, people stand about and watch this stuff and don't get involved, and if they do, they do so at their own peril because they'll be axed. Just like was it, that Niemöller said, then they came for me – and there was nobody to stand up for me.

Alan: As I say, you're living through a script right now, Neil. Because as I say, look at the buildup to the Covid with China, you know. At the time, there was nothing happening, supposedly, with all these videos in China that they were putting across to the rest of the world, to terrify you. At the same time, you had Fauci saying, I don't think the US has got much to worry about, at that time, remember. So, you had all that happening. But when they let loose, the toppling of the statues, worldwide… This happened, come on here, worldwide?! I mean, it starts supposedly with a shooting inside the US. But you aren't having that across Europe. So how come this organized group is, that's allowed to go around toppling statues, in the UK... And once again it's all called protests, right. Most of them are migrants that had flooded in a few years earlier, you know, into Britain. They were warned at the time, these are armies they're bringing in here.

Well this is all shown to the public to get you scared. This is why you're seeing all this stuff, that's happening, the buildup to all this, to get you terrified to comply. Because this is an internal Army which the elite will use. We know who's funding them. We know who the leaders are by the way. They're well-funded agitators, and not just Marxists, they're mercenaries. A lot of the guys in Antifa, literally as I say, have been over working with the groups that the US was employing to try to overthrow Syria for years. You know, you had the ISIS, ISIL, the ISS, and all the fancy names they gave them. All the same groups really.

So, this is run by the world government, let's put it that way. All this is run by the world government. It's all stage play, theater for the public to terrify the public. Because when you add that shock to the Covid, right, this is another shock, my God, are they going to overthrow the whole city of London or what, this is how it appears on TV perception management again, then the folk go into a shock state. Literally, shock. When you're in shock you can't think straight, you're more compliant, you'll do what you're told because you're fearful. This is stage-managed. All of it. With professionals at the top.

Neil: Yeah. I think back to that movie The Children of Men. At the end of that movie they showed you these hordes of Muslims running through London chanting ala Akbar, etc. etc. with the Kalashnikovs. And they actually had nothing to do with the story whatsoever.

Alan: Yes, there you go.

Neil: So anyway, it was just thrown in there at the end, and you say, where did that come from?

Alan: That's right.

Neil: Because that's what they showed you, this army of immigrants basically well-armed obviously well-funded to get all these weapons, marching through London basically taking over. And we’re now coming into a stage of total depression, and all these immigrants were supposedly brought in because there wasn't enough people to fill all the jobs. Well, what jobs? What is the excuse now? There aren't any jobs. [Chuckles]

Alan: Of course. Yeah. [Chuckles] I know.

Neil: And they're still coming in.

Alan: Sure, they are. Remember too, isn't it amazing, that the communist idea, or the Marxist idea was eventual elimination of borders and the nation-states? Marx said eventually the nation-state will wither away. At the same time you've got the Royal Institute of International Affairs that runs what was called the British Empire, even today, the so-called Commonwealth of Nations, and they put placements, they decide who's going to be at the heads of them, even to this day, including India. They literally planned the whole system years and years and years ago and published what they were going to do. You're living through it. And folk are so ignorant of the facts, you know, that they can't believe it when it happens. You're living through a planned overthrow takeover of your nation, and to go under a form of world government that you don't get a chance, and it's a posted democratic system according to the WEF and the Club of Rome.

Neil: I mean TV news is terrorism basically.

Alan: M-hm. Sure.

Neil: I tried to look up and get some T-shirts and stuff out to wear around and I thought, oh it's just way too expensive. People are jumping on the bandwagon. It's like $30 for T-shirts and I thought, oh that's just crazy.

Alan: [Chuckles] Yeah.

Neil: So, I got the white ones and an indelible marker and I'm just going to make my own, for four dollars. Just write things on them and just walk around and see if I get a reaction. I got one that I did buy, which said, good people disobey bad laws.

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: And a lot of people have stopped and said, that's right. I said, well keep doing it, keep doing it, because there's a lot of bad laws coming...

Alan: Oh yeah.

Neil: ...and you'd better start disobeying them shortly because if you don't, they'll get worse. Anyway, that's an aside. What I mean, we're living in an evil, evil system.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: There's no doubt about it. And I don't understand that people can't see it, when they look around the world and see what's happening.

Alan: M-hm.

Neil: People now are so immune, shall we say, to bombings of weddings and stuff in Afghanistan or wherever, they think, oh well, they must've been up to something. You know. Yeah, they were getting married.

Alan: Yes!

Neil: Things like that, and they're just, oh well, they're over there, it doesn't matter, it doesn't matter. But they don't understand that the same laws apply within America, and they can come and bomb you anytime they want to.

Alan: Sure, they can.

Neil: But it is evil. Without a shadow of a doubt, it's evil.

Alan: Oh absolutely.

Neil: What you were talking about on Sunday, in regard to psychopaths.

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: And some of the lads in Ireland, you know, religious connotations, etc. etc., of demons, people being possessed by demons. It made me think about, I was out mowing the grass today and I was thinking about Culloden. I've been there a few times. I'm not sure if you've been there or not in your lifetime.

Alan: Yeah, I've been there.

Neil: But yeah, it's one of those very, very strange places in Scotland where you can feel, if you're Scottish I guess, I don't know how it is for people who aren't Scottish, but you can sense something went on there.

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: You can sense it. Whether it's in your blood or not, I don't know. But yeah, you get in the car or whatever and you stand there, and you look across it and you can imagine the slaughter that went on. And you get this overwhelming sense of sadness...

Alan: Sure.

Neil: ...or you know, empathy for the people that died there. Like I mean on both sides, it doesn't really matter. But mass slaughter on both sides, predominantly the Scottish side of course. But I thought about a psychopath going up there, you know, and standing there, and smiling, and thinking, this is fantastic.

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: This is fantastic, all this slaughter, blood and gore and stuff. I went back to what you were saying on Sunday about this possession kind of thing. It's the total opposite of what I would feel. And I'm thinking, well, my feeling would be empathy for the people that were killed.

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: And the psychopaths feeling would be, ah, joy I guess, and maybe a wish to repeat that themselves and to be involved in that kind of thing.

Alan: M-hm.

Neil: In that sense, I don't know if that's where you are going with that conversation on Sunday or not, but in that sense, they are possessed by something.

Alan: Oh yeah.

Neil: Because ordinary people would never ever think that that was a good thing. Not in any shape or form. It doesn't matter if the field was full of English soldiers.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: You still go up there and say, well, they were just poor lads, conscripted, and so they went into battle that they knew nothing about basically, and they were just left there slaughtered, it doesn't matter what side of the fence you were on. But a psychopath wouldn’t care, they would just see mass slaughter and they wouldn't care what side that anybody was on.

Alan: That's right.

Neil: And get joy out of it. Or get some, I don't know what the right word is... power, I suppose...

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: ...feel some sense of power in themselves that they could really be involved in something like that. Do you want to kind of elaborate on that? Because you said you kind of sensed that yourself in some people, that they've...

Alan: Oh, I have no doubt, I have no doubt at all about people like that. Well you know for instance, a good example is Winston Churchill. Winston Churchill wanted war. He was placed in there by, again, the Royal Institute of International Affairs. He didn't even know the name of it at the time. He argued with the group that put him in, you know, in Parliament. He came out with an argument. He says, we've got people running this country that we've never even heard OF, AN organization that we haven't even got a name for.

Well, that was eventually put into Caroll Quigley's book Tragedy and Hope, and The Anglo-American Establishment book. He went through it all. He gave the history of it. He said, he mentioned that Churchill too came out arguing about what they'd been doing. Because Churchill was still doing his pretense about Germany, trying to play it, soften it a bit as he pushed ahead for the war. This other group that we know now as the Royal Institute of International Affairs, before then they were called The Kindergarten group or Milner's Kindergarten because he had picked these guys and made them heads of countries like South Africa, you know, and parts of India too, like viceroys, you know.

So anyway, he himself, Churchill was a psychopath. A long history, I remember reading his lineage and the whole thing and his parentage. But the fact is, during the Boer War he went over as a correspondent, you probably know that. Correspondents were not allowed to carry firearms because if they did that they'd be put down as a combatant, and the enemy could slaughter you and anybody with you, like on trains and so on. Well, he did, he carried a Mauser semi-automatic pistol with [?]. He did get folk killed when he started shooting at the people from the train. Of course, he opened up on the train and killed a lot of people, but they made him into a hero.

He was a psychopath. His personal secretary put a book out called The Fringes of Power. It's interesting to read it because, hhhch, the guy literally had a great time through the war. They had parties every night of the week. Big, big meals and all the champagne, brandy, etc., and underground bases in different places, and places outside London. It was just like an ongoing big party for Winston Churchill, who couldn't get out of his bed before noon, you know.

Churchill himself stated, and I gave this talk years ago, he stated that, he says, this war's wonderful. He says, we'll achieve our long, our dream of a united Europe. You know. Well, who’s dream is this? Because you wouldn't find it in the general history books. But then you find it from Karl Marx. Isn't that odd, eh? How they both work together to the same agenda. Marx talked about the creation of united Europe with a parliament, United Americas with a parliament, and a Far Eastern group under a parliament. The same bunch that's today under free trade. NAFTA for North America. They've changed the name of it again too with [USMCA] the US, Mexico and Canada. But it's the same group. The Far Eastern rim group has members based in Japan and in China and Australia.

They've been working for the same agenda that Karl Marx is working towards. Under these three trading blocs they would eventually emerge under a singular world government. Well, it's happening. Well how come the Communists were all going the same road as the technocrats? It's the same with the banks and the capitalists and so on, all going along on the same agenda. Because at the very, very top it's obviously all one.

Neil: Well you've got a bit of irony there because you've got Edward Heath, the man who...

Alan: [Laughing]

Neil: ...the man who ran for Prime Minister in the UK on a ticket of, we'll never join the European Union.

Alan: That's right.

Neil: The first thing he did was sign up. And they buried him next to Karl Marx! [Chuckles]

Alan: Yeah, and also Ted Heath, he also was a member, was a member of that group in Korea. What's his name that had the cult for the weddings and everything? Mass weddings? Remember that Guru that they had in Korea? [Sun Myung Moon, who founded the Unification Church] Anyway, he would marry about 300 of his followers to members of the opposite sex on the same day sort of thing. Ted Heath was a spokesman for them, who got paid millions of bucks for that, yeah, after he got out of politics. But talking about him, what he said, the same thing happened in Canada.

You had Chretien who was the Prime Minister saying that he would never, you know, join a united Americas. Then once he was in, it said he's now the champion, within a month he's now become, reconsidering it, he's now the champion of a completely integrated Americas. Then after that you had Mulroney, Brian Mulroney doing the same thing. He ran on the same ticket, to take you out of it, you know. And he became the champion of it once he was in. So, didn't matter if it was liberal or conservative. It's all one agenda. They're all part of the game.

Neil: Getting back to the evil and this type of possession. I think Gates is a perfect example of that. Because when you see him talking, particularly the recent news that have come out with him talking about injecting genetically modified organisms directly into the arms of babies, and you see him and his wife sitting next to each other grinning like, you know, cats that have found the cream. They're clearly sick. They're clearly...

Alan: These people literally, you feel it off them, you know, before you actually, if you even heard them you would feel, if you're in their proximity, I would feel it. Because they radiate something. They radiate something that's very tangible.

Neil: Yeah. As you know in the past, I had the dubious matter of hanging over David Rockefeller’s shoulder, and his dinner table. And yeah, you could feel it from him.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: He was... He was...

Alan: Well I remember, you know, I mean again, Malachi Martin had a lot of, I believe a lot of failings because he helped sink the Catholic Church to an extent with basically the reformation of it, the reforming of the Catholic Church in the 1960s. He literally was an enemy agent. He also belonged to the CIA, you know. He admitted that in a roundabout fashion on the Art Bell show years ago. He talked about the fact that the CIA used Jesuits and other priests, because they were across the whole planet, you see, within communist countries and other countries and so on so they would get information that was happening on the spot in real time. They all work together in some cozy relationship.

But Malachi Martin himself was literally also being funded by a foreign power at one point. And ironically as he got into writing his books, as the Catholic Church was failing, because it got too materialistic you see. Don't forget, that priests can only be as staunch as the general public. If you got a worldwide attack intergenerationally and the culture of the public, that they don't even know is an attack on them, they think, it's called progressive remember by the other side, then they think it's all developing naturally. And with it becomes, comes science, science becomes elevated to a high pinnacle to fill the void that spiritual matters used to take, you see. That's what's happened. That's why you're being bombarded with science and experts, like Bertrand Russell said that they would do. They've done it. Well, the general people in the Catholic Church are only pulled out as priests from a very, almost secular society. Which means they are tainted themselves.

But Malachi Martin after helping to destroy part of the, the actual traditions of the Catholic Church, who knows why, inadvertently restored something that was sorely, it was like getting water to folk in a drought. He started to touch on the spiritual side of things, you know. It was an immediate success because that's what folk crave. We know there's more to this world than just, if you believe in nothing but secular systems, you're finished. You won't beat it, you see.

Neil: I think that's part of what's going on in Ireland. There's a lot of speakers now at these, you know, peaceful protests until Antifa show up, talking about the fact that there are aborted babies in vaccines, etc., etc. It's getting people all thinking more about their religious roots if you like.

Alan: That's right. Well, once you get into Malachi Martin's books, like Hostage to the Devil, it's called, was a main one. He did Windswept House and other ones too. Hostage to the Devil was taken from real cases, verified by other priests, it wasn't just made up. He goes into the different things that happen to the individuals with real heavy, heavy possession. As he was discussing that too, that same book, he was discussing it on the Art Bell show years ago, he did mention that he had met, because Bell asked him, have you met anybody who is really heavily possessed? Talking about perfect possession. In perfect possession there's no fight or struggle between the person possessed and the spirit possessing them, or the demon, you know. It's a happy union.

He talked about the Kissinger types as an example, you know. I guess you could tack in the Brzezinski types too, or even Stalin types. So, he said that he met, he gave an example of someone he'd worked with on and off over years in a library situation. One day he just saw the guy from a particular angle, and in him what was odd about the guy. Then he realized, this guy is possessed. And as he realized it, he said the person he was talking about, he knew, looked at him and smiled, and he says, oh, you know. They know what you're thinking at times. I call it reading, they can read you, you know. Sometimes you can read them as well. But definitely, I have no problem accepting the fact it exists. None at all. I've had too many experiences with it in other people.

Neil: Yeah, you mentioned in the past that psychopaths smell the way the wind is blowing. And that's the thing, if they see they can take advantage of you then they will.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: They can sense that you're a vulnerable person or...

Alan: It's not even a study of you. It's instinctive with them. They read you instantly. It's not even work to them, you know. That's this odd gift. That, is it a gift? Or is it a demonic gift? Or what is it that makes them so quick to literally see right through you? They know, any chink in your armor and they know what, how to exploit it immediately. If it's a woman they're after, a guy, or woman, these days, they'll immediately know how to attract that person to them and get beyond their defenses. Instinctively. It's PURE instinct. Something tells them how to do it.

So when you take the signs and symptoms of the psychopath, on one hand of the page, one side of the page, and it's a long list, you know, because there's different categories of them, which is also similar to, the whole point is, the other side of the page, put down the signs and symptoms of someone who's demonically possessed. You'll find they completely match. Complete. So, for the secular group they're called psychopaths. For the religious group you call them demonic possession.

Neil: Yeah, well, as I say, you can see it in Gates now, I mean more clearly than ever.

Alan: Ohhhhhhhhhh, yeah.

Neil: I think perhaps, I think now he's at that, you know, he's looking over the fields of Culloden and he thinks he's won.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: And he thinks this is it, this is my day in infamy, I'm going to live, I'm going to survive to see my dream come true kind of thing and that's what it's like. And he's not an old man, I guess he's got another 40 years or so to live, with the good healthcare and everything that he gets.

Alan: Oh yeah.

Neil: But he's certainly going to see his dream come to fruition, unless he is stopped.

Alan: It's a great example actually, he is a great example of someone who is perfectly possessed. You can see behind, even on a clip from a television – I don't have a TV, but I get clips sent to me on the Internet and so on. You can see in the guy's eyes that they're furtive, they're constantly moving, with that fixed expression he puts on as he's being asked questions. It's an agile mind. But behind the mask of it you could actually see there's something else definitely in the guy, you know. There's no doubt about it, to me. And to be involved in what he's involved in, he's a front, definitely he's a front, he's a higher player but he's still in the front, he's a worker bee. The real guys at the top are not workers, they don't work at all, they're not worker bees and they don't have to be accessible to the public.

But here's the key to this too, I mean I could go on for hours and hours and hours going into examples. But here's the key to it. If you go into this world revolutionary party for instance, we know that Mazzini was given the right, he was actually approved by the Scottish Rite of Freemasonry, Albert Pike at the time in the States, which wasn't from Scotland at all by the way really. He approved Mazzini to take over the world revolutionary party across Europe. And they did. Lots of books put out by him, or for him at least, they've all got, most folk get ghostwritten books in the revolutionary parties even down through the centuries. But eventually we know that Lenin took over, and then eventually it branched off from Bolshevik into communism, you see. It's all the one movement.

If you look at Madame Blavatsky who also was from Russia remember, who grabbed some of the Masonic, um, occultic terminology, etc. and put out Theosophy, blending it with India. Interesting that too, and she says, why are you taking, really, mainly India as an example, or Hinduism? And she said that, and this was part of the revolutionary party, that SHE said she was a member of, remember. And Alice Bailey, it's always AB as they take over, Alice Bailey was one of them, and Blavatsky of course was an HB, but the other two ones that were famous were always AB types. One of them was the founding member, one of the females was a founding member, along with HG Wells and George Bernard Shaw, of the Fabian Society. So, you're looking at a tradition of international revolution, which she boasted she had been part of. And at the same time, she said, our goal with blending it from India, not just for a mass migration from India down the road, hhhch, our goal is also to blend the spirit with science.

Well, when you look at all these characters that were into Technocracy, with the Bill Gates types and all the other ones working, look at even Epstein. Definitely a front man for a massive operation for honeytraps and so on and blackmail. We know a lot about that. But regardless, Epstein himself was so interested in genetics and eugenics, and also with science. He put big money towards groups at MIT for instance, who got the first information on scientific projects, incredibly interesting science and in the future of going into this idea of immortality.

I gave a talk in the 90s about this actually. I said, what is a demon? A demon technically is a bodiless entity. A powerful entity, but bodiless, nonetheless. What does it crave the most? It craves a body to inhabit. The fallen angels idea in religion was to do with those that were cast down, the rebels. You'll find today, ha, in all occultic and exoteric groups out there that run the world, they talk about Lucifer being a champion, along with Eve, breaking the rules to create progress. What's the mantra of the left? It's called progressiveness, you know, and progressive. Destroying the rules, rebuilding society, rebuilding that which was left imperfect, which is the world and humanity. That's the mantra of them all.

So anyway, you go into this idea of a demon, a fallen angel, a rebel, you know. 2 millions visibly were cast down, out of a 6 million. They could go in and out of different bodies, that accept them. You have to accept a demon in, you see. So, through the New Age, hhhch, you get lots of folk wanting power, that's why they go into it, you see, and they become possessed themselves. But the ones at the top go through all these different rituals amongst themselves to bring in the higher demons. There's intelligence, like ranks in a military, different intelligences. So, what do they crave the most? Perpetual, a demon wants perpetual existence in this world. You know, immortality. And a body that will not die, you see.

Neil: Yeah, you talked about the other thing, there's a little clip of him when he was supposedly starting to be questioned about his activities, and he had the same grin on his face as if he knows he is immune from anything, you know, nobody's touching him.

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: And Jimmy Savile was exactly the same.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: When people spoke to him, you could see that kind of malicious look on his face.

Alan: Oh yeah.

Neil: He knew he was; you know, he had these backers [?] themselves and he was untouchable.

Alan: He said he was untouchable, Jimmy Savile. In that documentary that, was it Theroux [Louis Theroux] put out there? He said that, he says, they can't touch me. And just around from Savile's house by the way, and again they had this odd thing too, with the fixation with their mothers and things, you know. I mean, Savile literally treated his mother like a goddess, you know. But around the corner from his house was where one of those, was it, who was it that did the murders, the man and the woman there?

Neil: It was in Yorkshire, Fred West, was it Fred West?

Alan: I think it was. It was one of them anyway. Was it the Moore one? There was also the Moore murders. But anyway, it was just around the corner of where his house is that happened. It makes me wonder, a lot of folk wonder too, was he having communication with Savile, back, in and out and all the rest of it, you know. Who knows?

Neil: The police actually took his dental records at one point because there was teeth marks on that body that was found at his home.

Alan: Yes, that's right.

Neil: So, I mean, they knew he was involved.

Alan: Oooooooooooo, yeah, he...

Neil: And of course, he preceded the guy in [?]. It wasn't Fred West. It was, um, I can't remember the guy's name now.

Alan: Yeah, another psychopath. Yeah.

Neil: Yeah, but he [?] and they became friends apparently. I think they were friends before that.

Alan: Sure. But when you're talking too about, say, graveyards or battlefields, you know, Scotland wasn't just the battle, that last battle at Culloden. It was predicted long before it. I mean, that area was called Drumossie Moor, you know. And Culloden was a later term that they gave just before, not long before the battle, you know. You had Culloden House for instance. But Drumossie Moor was the actual area. And the Brahan seer, he was a seer, that was a Celtic thing where you had folk that weren't possessed but they had a link to higher power. Which Malachi Martin did mention too, and it's true in Catholic theology, certain people have gifts given to them that they don't seek it, you know. People who seek gifts generally are looking for demons to possess them. But some folk have certain abilities or sixth senses.

Culloden, it's almost the culling of Odin, you know. The Odin is again the north, the northern peoples. But the Brahan seer in the 1500s was a great prophet that different clansmen used to go to for advice and so on. He talked about the place that would eventually have the black rain he called it. Well, that's oil, and they had the oil rigs not far from that site down on the coast there, northeast, with an American company that ran it at the time that [?] it to us. But the Brahan seer talked about the place that eventually would have the black rain. He said, before that the flower of Scotland, the young men, you know, would have their last battle on Drumossie Moor, 200 years before it happened. And that's exactly what did happen. It's never been explained, why on earth Charlie and the armies came right up to that particular spot. Because Highlanders never charge on the flat boggy ground, on foot, you know. But they did it. It made no sense at all.

What you realize, this was a planned thing too. It was already planned. We know that even going back to the McDonald slaughter that happened with the Campbells that were an army that worked for the English king. They were sent in to meet the McDonald clan and eventually came in as friends and guests and they were put up, and they got the orders to slaughter the folk at night, that put them up, the actual McDonald's. And they did that. It's never been forgiven to this day. So, they've never trusted the English, or British Army, or folk in employ of the British Army. But actually, at Culloden that was the final one. The king had decided to eliminate the whole

Highland race actually. So, it started at the battle, but they went through for like 50 years slaughtering the folk across the Highlands, you know, and the islands. Man, woman and children. Massive genocide.

Neil: Yep. Yep. It's interesting, the Campbells actually set up this town that I live in now in the States. So yeah, just a coincidence. And they've got murals actually up on the walls in some of the restaurant areas showing the towns and stuff.

Alan: Sure.

Neil: But anyway, is there anything else that you want to mention on that, the demonic side of it?

Alan: The demonic side is too, it's the ones that are, even getting back to Culloden. I mean it was the Duke of Cumberland that was really part of this Prussian German group that came over from, became the royalty of Britain. He's given all the accolades for slaughtering the Highlanders. But he said it too. He said, let none of them live, man, woman or child. This is a psychopath. He went down in history as a hero, for London, you know, and royalty. A man who had no compassion of ANY kind at all. Whoff, you're talking about real planned genocide that was published, you know. Even in their letters which they still have today, from the king to him, absolutely. You can't fathom it. And you wonder what, I used to say to people who'd come into Scotland, I says, they'd said oh what a wonderful islands and so on. I'd say, it's so roomy. And they'd say, yeah, yeah. I'd say, it's because millions of folk were slaughtered that used to live here. Yep.

Neil: Yeah. I was saying to somebody else the other day there, somebody was talking about Black Lives Matter and saying, oh they want reparations now. I says, well the Scots have been slaughtered for centuries, I said, maybe we should claim the money off the English.

Alan: There you go. [Laughing]

Neil: You know.

Alan: And here's the problem too though, a good part of the English army that fought at Culloden for London, that were part of the British Army, they were Scottish. But they had the ole and Scot's grays [?] and so on and they were part of the English regiments, eh. So once again they can divide up the country and get part of them fighting the rest of them. For money. It's a wonderful thing, keeping folk in poverty. Because young guys always join the military. It's almost an instinctive thing, nothing else is there.

Neil: Again, that's what we've got again, isn't it?

Alan: Yes.

Neil: Because people are going to be so poor, and the military will be dangled in front of them as a way to get out of poverty. Oh, you can send money back to your families, who are starving.

Alan: Exactly. Yep. Yep.

Neil: I mean, so okay, let's move on to something that you mentioned that's coming this winter, the winter of discontent.

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: Now, I remember when that phrase was out back in the 70s, with the power cuts. I was only a young lad then, '73, '74, something like that.

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: I remember the blackouts, the three-day week. The television went off at 8 o'clock, right after Coronation Street of course, because they had to get the soap opera out. And yeah, that was a bad time. We were basically rationing food at that time because it was for us four children. And you know, they struggled to make ends meet. That’s exactly where we're headed to now, if we're not already there.

Alan: Yes

Neil: In many parts of the States and Britain.

Alan: M-hm.

Neil: And parts of Europe of course as well, Australia, New Zealand. It's funny, that the most draconian legislation is all in the colonies.

Alan: YES.

Neil: Australia and New Zealand have been awful. I mean, they're even worse than Britain is at the moment.

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: But yeah, the winter of discontent.

Alan: Well they want to make it a, everything that happens in a wartime scenario is being put on the table and introduced step-by-step. Including down to rationing, heavy duty. Don't forget, let's just jump from here, never forget the past, the buildup to this where the Club of Rome were given the task, it's a big think tank for the WEF and for the Royal Institute of International Affairs. They are the main think tank for the future, planning the future and techniques to implement it. They came up with, not just Limits to Growth, etc. that was also parroted by Maurice Strong, all these global players. But also, they came up with how to unite the planet to convince the public to stop consuming and go into almost a postconsumer society.

The Club of Rome by the way from its very inception by well-known players against the general population, eugenicists and so on, the Club of Rome have stated from the beginning that democracy would never work. That was one of their main goals, was to replace democracy with an efficient technocratic system of running the populace. Which is massive, really heavy socialism, you know. They said that they were given the task to unite the planet, so they tried, looked at all different ways to get the public to unite and give up their rights, you see. They said that the climate is what they picked. They said global warming, famine and drought, and the like, and pestilence, would fit the bill. Man therefore is the enemy of the planet, so they'd have to direct all their arrangements and agreements and organizations to reducing the population. That's what you've had hammering at you since the 1970s.

Neil: Yeah. We've had the climate thing which didn't work. Now we're getting the pestilence...

Alan: That's what they said, recently, I mean, I put it up on my site too, links to the COR, the Club of Rome where there's a woman that's the head of it now and she said that we could achieve all, this is wonderful, we can achieve all the sustainability and greening goals under the Covid umbrella. So right now, and even in the last few days again they keep repeating it, they said that no company would be allowed to restart an open up again unless it's green and sustainable. Which tells you there is obviously a group above them who's going to decide if your green and sustainable.

Neil: Yeah. Ha, and part of the reason the pubs are closing down as well, I guess. Because people talk there, apparently, it's the only country in Europe where the pubs are still closed...

Alan: Yes.

Neil:...is Ireland, oddly enough.

Alan: Isn't that amazing, eh? [Chuckles]

Neil: I guess, as I say, we've had the climate change, we've had the, where in the middle of the plan to make pestilence, and the famine and drought are still to come, I guess.

Alan: Oh yeah. Don't forget, I mean, we've had stacks and stacks of information and meetings and University meetings and Harvard meetings and publications about the geo-engineering they've been doing since, you know, pretty well daily since the 1998, is when they started the daily stuff, you know. So, bringing on a famine or floods is child's play today. We’ve watched it. Those who've got eyes to see have watched it for years as they lace the skies with these trails and so on, then the weather changes. This is old stuff. But they have meetings about it, always pretending IF we do this down the road to save the world, it might have fallout on the public, you know. But in reality, they've been doing it all along.

Neil: Yeah. Yeah. There's been so many articles out recently about food recalls, particularly beef. Like thousands of tons of beef being recalled for some curious reason.

Alan: Well, isn't that interesting? Here's something, we've got to remember this. Whatever is to happen here we saw happening in China under the trial, before we got it. Remember all those thousands of tons of meat at the docks in China there left to rot? Same thing, this is months ago, months and months ago, January/February that was happening. So that was all the trials to see how they could work things, and then they did immediate surveys in the populace to see if they went along with it and accepted it. Any problems where they wouldn't go along with it, how do you get around those problems, how would you fix those problems to get folk to accept stuff… They tried it all out on the Chinese before they're putting it out here. All of it.

Neil: That's what I've seen recently, the massive, thousands of tons of beef. Peaches. Onions. Lemons. All kinds of stuff. As I say, the beef, the chickens of course, they're going after them as well. And it's hhhh... They've dragged out David Attenborough again, and the other one, that comedian Stephen Fry...

Alan: Oooh, yeah, yeah, yeah.

Neil: ...Extinction Rebellion being all over the Guardian this week. Let's now protest, they're all out protesting now, but that's okay. That's okay.

Alan: M-hm.

Neil: You know. But they wear masks, because they might want to do something violent and not be recognized.

Alan: [Chuckles]

Neil: [Chuckles] But that's okay. That's okay.

Alan: M-hm.

Neil: I'm sure you saw the one in the States with the, literally the city was on fire behind the guy and he's going, ah, it's a few fires but it's nearly peaceful.

Alan: Nearly peaceful. That's right. And they could even hear gunshots here and there too in the extended version of that clip, yeah.

Neil: It's madness. And people are falling for it.

Alan: Well, it's gaslighting. It's the gaslighting, isn't it. Yeah. Yep. You see, here's the key to it. Eventually the public through training through television and experts will be trained that they couldn't trust their own intuition and observance of things, and their own opinions that were formed from what they were really experiencing, you wouldn't trust them anymore. Lots of folk are like that. Folk will see on TV exactly the opposite of what they're experiencing, but they'd rather believe the TV version because they've been trained to believe in authorities speaking through that little tube.

Neil: Yeah. I don't understand how anybody can look at Bill Gates...

Alan: Ah, ha...

Neil: ...talking about injecting genetically modified organisms directly into the arms of babies, and he is making the motions with the needle...

Alan: I know.

Neil: ...and he's smiling as he does it, and his wife's...

Alan: Well, never mind that. I mean, look at the massive lawsuits that were in against him across India and Africa for giving polio to the people that he was giving the vaccines too, things like that. I mean, these are, look into the India Times and the different newspapers in India, they've got stacks of information on this. This is real stuff. I can remember when Bill Gates's group, and again, who gives him the right to go across the planet testing experimental vaccines on people? I mean, they bribe the tribesmen and the leaders and so on and that's how they can get in there. And of course, because there's no real media in the areas, there's no voice of the people who are getting infected with these things. This has been on the go for years and years and years.

But when he went into India and other, parts of Africa too. He was giving some of them a live vaccine, it was in the spray form, for oral, you know. It turns out that the World Health Organization, I don't know if they've scrubbed it yet on their own sites, but I kept all the stuff from years ago. The World Health Organization eventually had to come out and admit that they had given, they had introduced a new, it became a new live strain of polio in those peoples, that they couldn't control, you know, with the present vaccine. Whatever they introduced was a modified version of the virus, and they says...

Neil: Probably that's the only strain that still going.

Alan: That's right. Now they call that the wild virus.

Neil: The vaccine. [Chuckles]

Alan: Yeah. This is how the game is played. But this guy literally, oh, he's a psychopath. I mean, he never answers a question directly, he just skips around everything. And his hands are going all the time, you know. And you do wonder what's in that body, that physical body, because it's like it doesn't know how to control the gestures. [Chuckles]

Alan: But I was thinking too of Fauci. I'm mean, Fauci's wife you know is a eugenicist, and she's into, what is it they call it now, um, ah, to do with...

Neil: Bioethics.

Alan: Bioethics, yeah. She runs a bioethics organization for the States, under the president by the way. And gets millions of bucks sent to them too. They are deciding, through the Rockefeller foundation, you probably saw their big presentation to the president a few months ago where they said, here's the whole unrolling of the agenda, using bioethics and bioethical lawyers to manage the general population, right down to life and who gets medication, who won't get medication, etc. You talk about psychopaths, woof, there's regiments of them now.

Neil: When you look back at the, you mentioned the antitrust laws out there, and Bill Gates was prosecuted under that before.

Alan: Yep.

Neil: But when you look at that clip of him being questioned, and he's asked if he's concerned about something, and he replies, what do you mean by concerned...

Alan: [Laughing] I know. [Laughing]

Neil: And his answers to everything is completely different to what it is today. His whole demeanor is completely different. And it's just like Rockefeller, his image as a philanthropist has been remodeled, you know.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: ...[?] young folks and with that haircut and stuff like that, to make him look like a geek.

Alan: Yes. And yet he was no, he was no computer geek. He's a businessman. You had the partners that started up the company of Microsoft who all say the same thing, he was just the businessman.

Neil: Yeah, was it Paul Allen, the guy was?

Alan: That's right.

Neil: And he tried to steal his money at the end.

Alan: Yes, he did.

Neil: ...when the guy was dying of cancer.

Alan: That's right.

Neil: Yeah.

Alan: The key is too though, you see, Bill Gates grabbed a lot of the stuff, programs, etc., from IBM. So, Gates already was a front man for, I call it, the World Corporation, the real group that runs the planet. Because it's untouchable. They do what they want with impunity. They really do. As I say, no one's going to go after him. No one's going to go after Soros. In fact, they'll hammer you for mentioning his name. But the fact is, I mean, to hear a person advocating what really is the overthrow of the US congressional system, whether you like it or not makes no difference, he's advocating insurrection, along with the top politicians. And no one is going after him? All these youngsters in the street are taking their commands from hearing speeches by guys like that, as an authority, you know.

Neil: As I say, if you or I stood on a soapbox in Parliament Square or something, [?] and try to overthrow the government...

Alan: Yes.

Neil: ...and said, we're going to leave this city in ashes... We'd never see the light of day again.

Alan: No, you wouldn't. So, it tells me there is already the world governmental system. And the World Bank is all part of it. Don't forget, the World Bank is on the board of the WEF, you know. A private bank.

Neil: Well, that's another question you can never get answered, why do governments borrow money from a private bank? No one will answer that one.

Alan: Well it's magicians, you see. Because if you or I counted up the debts and income of countries, we would say, my God, we owe billions and trillions and trillions. But these guys are magicians. That's why they bring them in from other countries into the States, into the Federal Reserve. And where they would see stuff that would freak you out, they have no problem with it, they can fix it all, you know. They’re magic, you see. Because it's nothing to do with accounting, obviously. [Chuckles] It's pure magic, yeah. It's completely bogus. I mean, there's nothing backing anything.

Neil: No. I was walking down at the lake in the morning there and the City Council has got these guys cutting all the grass there. And on the best possible tractors you could ever have, and that would be John Deere's, you know. Everyone was brand-new.

Alan: [Chuckles]

Neil: You're thinking, hold on a minute, you're getting way too much money here. This is outrageous, you know.

Alan: M-hm.

Neil: And super tractors at that. And all it is, is cutting grass. They're not digging or anything, you know.

Alan: That's right.

Neil: Somebody's getting a backhander or something, some showroom or somewhere that sells John Deere has a friend or something. That's how that works.

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: But you could tell, even in that City Hall, a few weeks ago myself and Paula, you can tell the whole place is corrupt.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: You can smell, you can sense it. And you know they're not listening to you.

Alan: No.

Neil: And you're not going to make any difference to what they vote and what they don't vote. But as I say, I think it's important to make your voice heard so they can't claim they didn't know [?].

Alan: It is. Here's the key again. When you see all the left-wing politicians in the States literally sworn allegiance to this overthrow of the US government, [laughing] literally, you know. And they've already said it, Pelosi said it and Hillary Clinton said it, they're not going to accept any verdict about Trump. And another one too, the one, that Harris that they're putting up there, she said too a few days ago that this rioting and destruction is not going to end with Trump, or even if they get in, it's going to continue right through the year. I mean, what is this we're listening to here?

Neil: Yeah, we've got a little Speaky's bar here which we're actually going to go after the show. Which, I mean, people are a bit more open-minded there for some reason, I don't know why, they just are. Nobody wears masks. Nobody's social distances or anything. It's just a little shoehorn bar, everybody gets along.

Alan: Again, getting back to the key, the key is so important, is that they're all on board with the exact same agenda, not for the good of the country. They're all paid off, obviously. They're all part of another organization, obviously, that's above your federal government. I have no doubt on it whatsoever.

Also, you look at the sustainability groups that started to graft themselves onto even local councils over the last 20 years. All ex civil servants retiring, taking early retirement, move into areas and then graft themselves onto local councils to do with sustainability, etc. You know, we didn't vote them in. They just all appeared there. And now that they've made their agreements, no matter what happens, if the states, like the US refused to go along with the sustainability or the climate change agreement, they're passing it state-by-state themselves because they've grafted themselves onto the governments. And who are they working for? Someone is at the top, you know, paying them all.

Neil: Well, that's my next visit to the City Hall to speak on whatever issue it is. I'm going to ask them who they're working for. Because they're clearly not working for anybody in the room. You know.

Alan: Absolutely.

Neil: And well, as I've said, there's one guy there who was adamant that this is all going to be over in November after the election. I said to him, I said look, and he's a friendly guy, he doesn't wear a mask at the store and all that kind of thing. I said, look, we'll have a different conversation after November, because it ain't going to stop, this is going on and on and on and on. He mentioned Kamala Harris, and of course she had to admit, or her father had to admit that her ancestors were slaveowners.

Alan: That's right.

Neil: So why don't Black Lives Matter go after her first?

Alan: Exactly. And these are telling points because it's nothing to do with what's portrayed by the media. It's a different organization. This is a big organization, that's a global organization, that has so much of the power, that runs pretty well every country on the planet right now. Not them all completely. But this is the big, and they've said it, Soros said at the WEF, I mean, they brought him back on to give the special speech and he said, we've got to, Trump must be removed completely he says. Well, he's telling the richest people on the planet that this man has to be removed? Whether you like him or not makes no difference, the fact is, they are advocating the overthrow, they're advocating insurrection and overthrow of another country. And you're funding it. [Laughing]

Neil: Yeah. That would be classed as a threat if you or I said it.

Alan: Yes, it would be. Or anybody else for that matter.

Neil: Yeah. I was going to say something, Ireland again. Hhhch, I think... No, I wasn't going to say that. I was going to go onto the WEF supposedly delayed their next meeting in Davos until June apparently. Do you think there's anything in that, our or is that just a smokescreen?

Alan: It's a smokescreen. These guys are the busiest guys. They are technically world government, you know. They have their own, on their own website, they've been training folk for the last 50 years to be world leaders. I mean, that's what they, they picked children and they groomed them to be leaders of all different areas of sustainability and politics, etc. So no, they're not some simple little NGO here. This is a multitrillion dollar organization set up again by a leading technocrat of his time. And he was, you know, a technocrat, and he still is, that Schwab. So, this is, the system they want to bring in is a managed from birth to grave system for every individual on the planet. And eventually the gradual eradication of the useless eaters, as Bertrand Russell called them.

Neil: Yeah, I mean, I saw somebody reporting on [?] because of the bank schedule and what they want to do.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: I was thinking, these guys don't get bank schedule.

Alan: Remember what Bertrand Russell said? And he was a member of the Macy group, the Frankfurt school and the groups that were put in there with, after FDR and Truman to help create a new culture for the Americas. He said that by diet, injection and injunction we shall alter the world and control the people. Yep.

Neil: And of course, going along with the food scarcity, that's going on there, and the food recalls, they're also pushing the vegan stuff and the Beyond Beef and all that. All over the place.

Alan: Yeah sure.

Neil: Every day there's stuff coming out about it, the best ways to go vegan, the best ways to this and all that nonsense.

Alan: Yes. And eat crickets, eat crickets and bugs. Yep.

Neil: And these guys eat the best beef on the planet.

Alan: Exactly.

Neil: Anyway, so, we've done our two hours eventually, Alan, of technical problems.

Alan: It flew in.

Neil: And hopefully you got that. Well, we could go on and on and on, but people won't listen to more than this.

Alan: I know.

Neil: We'll maybe do it again next month.

Alan: Sure.

Neil: Hopefully you got it recorded, and we got it recorded, and between us we can get it out.

Alan: Yeah, see if you can get yours up first, and I'll look into it and I'll look at this recording here and see if it's working. Yep.

Neil: Okay.

Alan: Okey-doke.

Neil: I've actually, it's in the other room but I've actually got one of Malachi Martin's books, I can't remember the title of it. I started reading it once and I went on to something else, but I can't remember what it's called. I'll send you an email and tell you and let you that know I've got this recording done or whatever.

Alan: Okey-doke, thank you. That'll be terrific.

Neil: Okay. And I'm still trying to get a source for yeast, but I can't get somebody to reply to me to say are you posting it to Canada Post or whatever, they don't get back to you. The one I got before I think that's just a scammer because she then refused to send me a tracking number for the package, she sent to the post office so...

Alan: Sure.

Neil: But as far as I know, Ian is sending you stuff from Ireland.

Alan: Yeah. Anybody sending anything to me has to send it by regular post. Because the UPS and FedEx won't deliver here, because it's an unorganized Township they call it. We won't toe the line and just buckle under so... But regular post gets here. And even then, don't expedite it or insure it, because it always arrives, the post always arrives.

Neil: It's funny you should say that because I'm still on the list for UPS this year and hopefully I'll get started with them in September or October. They've been employing a lot, a lot of people in Canada recently.

Alan: Oh yeah. Oh, the UPS, you see, they won't deliver outside the cities. Even though they say, if you've got an address we shall deliver. They're lying. Because I've had battles with them for years where they've kept stuff sent to me, generally at Christmas time, and they won't deliver here. They won't even phone you up to tell you there's something even at the head office, even though it's maybe 25 miles away, you know, you're supposed to go and get it yourself. So, what's the point? I have to go a 50-mile round-trip for a pair of socks or something. Which by the way, they had signed out to somebody else. I said to them last Christmas, I says, have a good Christmas, I says, I'm sure you've plundered enough of the customers goods. Yeah.

Neil: Yeah.

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: Well actually they deliver out to the rural areas here, but of course there's no snow on the roads.

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: So, I mean, it's easy.

Alan: Even in the summer they won't do it here.

Neil: Well, they've certainly employed enough people to be able to do it, I'll tell you, because I get the email everyday about what's available. According to the email, in Ontario where you are, they employed a lot of people. So, who knows what they're doing?

Alan: Sure.

Neil: Okay well, we'll call that a day, anyway.

Alan: Okey-doke.

Neil Foster: Welcome to Reality Bytes Radio on 30 September 2020. And how time flies when you're enjoying yourself eh? I'm delighted to have Alan Watt back on the line again for some of his insights into what's going on. Can you hear me okay Alan?

Alan Watt: Yes.

Neil: Good. Where do we start?

Alan: Ha, good question.

Neil: I don't know if you saw it, there was a doctor Yadon, or Yeadon who was a former chief scientific officer of Pfizer for 16 years. So you have seen it, yeah. He's going on about the cases and why there's no threat of a second wave and why it's basically all based on bogus data. And there's bound to be some pushback, even in Australia on Sky News. There was a presenter there spoke to somebody in Sweden talking about this and saying that we should look at Europe and, they keep saying these cases are going up and up and up and up, but the fatalities are just basically flatlined since June and there's nothing actually happening. It almost reminded me of Michael Mann's hockey stick, you know, all these case numbers going up and up and up and up, and absolutely nothing happening to the temperature.

Alan: Yeah. I mean, the more testing you do with a faulty test anyway, you're guaranteed to put the numbers up. But there's nobody ill with it. [Chuckles]

Neil: Well this guy is actually saying that, I know we've mentioned before, that it's about 50% at least false positives, this guy is saying that actually all of them could be false positives.

Alan: 90 odd percent, yeah. M-hm.

Neil: And then a 99.8% survival rate even if you're infected.

Alan: That test remember, Neil, the inventor said it's not to be, it's useless for diagnosis. It's for laboratory purposes only, it's not for diagnosing patients. So even the inventor said this, you know.

Neil: I'm just wondering if some people in the media are starting to realize that this is a lot worse, even for them, than they thought. They've been spouting the lies for six or seven months and they're starting to see what's happening. Particularly in Australia, as I say, that guy was on Sky News in Australia, one of their news anchors or whatever he is. He must be seeing what's happening in Australia and thinking, eh, do I really want this for my children? [Chuckles] I mean, you've got to wonder. But, my niece was in Australia until recently. Thankfully she got out about three or four weeks ago. She was there for a year. They've asked her to go back, and I've tried to say to my brother there, no, don't do that, don't do that, don't let her go. But yeah, in Australia, I don't know if you’ve seen this one, it's getting even worse. They're talking about now being able to basically do as they like with you, force you against a wall or down on the ground, and take your clothes off.

Alan: Yeah. M-hm.

Neil: So in terms of Australia, okay, well, it started off as a penal colony for Western nations if you like. It seems to be going back there. [Chuckles]

Alan: Yeah. Sure. I mean, it's always had, just below the boil there, you know, in peacetime, that there's a kind of a strange civility, ha, with the police on the people. But it's, you see, they've given the order now for the voice of authority they call it at the United Nations, and some of the top politicians are repeating it, that it's time now just to literally use extreme authority over the public now. And the police are the first to react and to put it into play, yeah.

Neil: Well I mean Australia always had this reputation of having all these macho men that, you know, you watch Australians real football in the world, wrestling each other, the Australian rugby team was this big tough outfit and all that...

Alan: [Laughing] A guy in Australia sent me some stuff recently. The city he's in he said that he can see the local keep fit gym, you know, where they do all their, almost their kind of 20 minute workouts kind of stuff, and the guys now are wearing leotards like the girls. Ha, I think the old Crocodile Dundee is pretty well gone, you know, in Australia.

Neil: I always think about those gymnasiums, they're generally big glass windows and everybody can see in, and as you say, they're sitting there in leotards and things like that. Just like the people who go out for a cycle these days, men are wearing latex pants and all this kind of stuff. And I just thought, I thought back to my childhood [Chuckles] and you think, we were going out about on these chopper bikes and falling off them and skinning our knees, banging our heads and all sorts of things. These guys nowadays seem to just want to wrap themselves up in cotton wool, and you know, they're so vain.

Alan: It isn't just happened by itself. People don't realize that everything that they, hmph, the system they live in is pretty well manufactured for them. And I mean in minute detail. The whole unisex idea was literally to eliminate to the obvious distinctions between men and women, that was part of it. But it's bigger than that because it's also, and this is stuff that's been mandated by the culture creators for years. There's high level courses on how to do it and implement it in countries and nations. We know some of the culprits that fund lots of it.

So yeah, you get this sort of unisex idea where men and women are the same basically. That's also, sustainability is interwoven with all of it, completely all of it. Sustainability is a buzzword for depopulation. The same with climate change, you see. The same with Covid, it's for depopulation purposes, and the World Economic Forum and these sustainability programs, it's all completely interwoven.

But the fashion design is to get people into the look. The look now is thin-thin-thin, you see, for a postindustrial, post-consumerist type society where goody-goody people are completely vegans eventually. I mean, that's pushed from the very top at the United Nations, veganism. It was pushed years ago when I did the talks on the big five agribusinesses and the chemical industries that they own for the pesticides and herbicides, pushing complete veganism. Again, you get the overdosing of the kind of xeno- and Phyto- estrogens that affect the men as well.

But the thing is, they're all looking so thin–thin–thin, and this is the good, approved look. You see, it's approved. If you look at the rioters in the streets, oh sorry, the protesters in the States that just like this cold weather so they burn houses to get heat. But if you just look at them, they've got, you'd swear they had their pants painted on them, the black pants. Remember years ago, back in the 80s they had the kind of spandex type for the girls? You could see everything in them. It's very, very similar, you know.

You're watching all this come to the fore now. You're good, you're approved, you're one of the crowd, because you're so thin. And you're probably vegan, or you'll want, at least you'll tell your friends you are. That's all approved, that's the new approved format for the young. Anybody who's older with baggy pants, or older, you're bad because you probably eat too much, and you maybe even eat meat. You see, I'm not kidding you, this is, I've seen some of the programs from the very, very top pushing this whole agenda here. They're copying, they have no idea that what they're copying is all designed for them, their language, the phrases they use, the new buzzwords, neologisms, you know, and the fashions are completely designed for them.

Neil: I remember back when I was at university when I was doing, it was called hotel services management, but it covered hospitality, whatever kind of context, whether it was prisons, cruise ships, or whatever. But we had to do a standup talk for 15 minutes on nutrition and diet and all this kind of thing. I was working to pay my mortgage at the time so I was doing 60 hours a week working and I was just fitting in University when I could. All the books in the library were obviously out by the time I got there. So I just grabbed what I could and did this presentation on how people's bodies had changed...

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: ...the shape of the bodies, what was acceptable, what was seen as attractive, you know, 100 years before or 50 years before. I went down that road and kind of went through how the diet changed and stuff, and how people were now kind of going back to being fat because of all the processed foods and things like that. This is before I knew anything, so I obviously noticed something enough.

Alan: Sure.

Neil: I showed pictures of naked bodies and that, which freaked out the tutors of the time, although it probably wouldn't now. No, this skinny look, and I've seen articles all over the place now for veganism. Oh, I had a triple heart bypass until I became vegan and now, I'm okay, kind of thing. Well, she's okay because she had the triple bypass, not because she's a vegan. But it's maybe getting people used to being skinny, so they won't notice when they're starving.

Alan: Well, it's more than just that. That's a big part of it. It's like everything else, in the present globalist revolution. This is the elites' revolution, it's not the peoples’ in the street. They're just the useful idiots, you know. The globalists have been after this, they already ruled the old system, they're moving their system into the next part of their system, and this is what the chaos all is. It's to train the rest of us to go along with it. That's why the Covid is being used too, for sustainability, etc. etc.

But the function mainly for the US is almost over. I gave these talks many years ago, that the US was the battering ram that took over from Britain to force a kind of system across the world. All the things you're talking about now, even with your fashion and various other things, agendas, are all pushed through the World Bank based in the US, remember, and the IMF, etc. They won't give you loans across the world unless you accept all the so-called progressive policies.

That's why they tie in completely with the Marxist philosophies and the tenants of the manifesto, because the destruction of marriage is at the top. That's what Caroll Quigley talked about, he says, we, WE, meaning the elite group that he belonged to, he said, we are often mistaken for communists, he says, because much of our agenda is in parallel with the same goals. And he's talking about the Council on Foreign Relations and the Royal Institute of International Affairs. So it's the same thing. If you destroy marriage, and then you promote all other kinds of sexual activity, in fact, you could actually boost or put the depletion of offspring by pushing, dealing with the problems of hypersexual activity, which is abortion, you see, until it's normal now. It's just getting rid of a wart they would say to the women to have an abortion. So they've achieved a lot of goals. Depopulation.

No bonding because folk don't stay together long enough to bond. That was also part of their manifesto, when you look at it in depth, you know. They've achieved most of the goals. And yet, people always thought it was just this Marxist/Communist idea. It's much bigger than just Marxism. We're living through a planned society. So, the US was the battering ram from World War I onwards really, since they took over the financial system. The taxpayers of the US have been funding it ever since, you know.

Neil: It's no coincidence that there's a remake of Brave New World, just came out there a couple months ago. I haven't seen it, but it's a TV series of it. I'm sure it will be full of sex and drugs and rock 'n' roll, and everybody will be happy. But I was just wondering if some of these Australian cyclists that are going down the road with their spandex on, how the authorities are going to get them off them because they'll need to maybe get a tin opener or something. [Laughing]

Alan: [Laughing] Well one thing about them, if it comes down to smuggling food eventually, during all the present ongoing curfews, that this winter will come in curfews and so on. They'll go door-to-door to see if you've been hoarding food by the way, that's also on the emergency plans if you ever looked at them.

Neil: I remember you talking years ago about the smart fridges, and you've got all the barcodes on the tins and stuff, and your smart fringe will be telling the authorities.

Alan: Yeah, and your smart meter too, and so literally, and all the different gadgets in your home interact as well, so they know exactly what you've bought and if you're buying too much, etc. Most of the stuff you buy, even cans have got the little barcodes on it, so they've got all that data. Most folk today anyway use their credit cards. And they get their point system so that the stores they buy from have got a complete list of everything. That's part of the deal, when you say, oh I'll get a discount because I'm a good consumer at this particular store, they gave me a card. Yeah, but you've also signed a way your right to privacy as to what you've bought, and they can give that to the government and so on, which they do.

Neil: And insurance companies of course, I think I've heard you mention that before, to basically deny you insurance because you eat too many French fries or you eat too much meat, for example. Your health insurance won't...

Alan: With leotards, you see, you won't have any problems in Australia because any little bulge will show. [Laughing] So they'll know if you went and stashed a Mars bar or something, you know, in the spandex there.

Neil: Is that a Mars bar in your pocket or are you just pleased to see me? [Laughing]

Alan: [Laughing]

Neil: Yeah so, I mean, it's Australia. I mean, how far do you think, I mean, that they've gone pretty far already. I've seen that already. I know you have trouble seeing videos and things. I don't know if you saw the one of them going through the open-air food markets. There must've been, I don't know, hundreds of these storm trooper police officer types with the shields and the batons in total, whole faces covered, you wouldn't be able to recognize them. You know, you talk about who's beating...

Alan: What you're seeing, and this is the reason for it. You see, nothing in your life happens just by chance when it comes to culture and culture changes, the creation of entertainment. Remember the old Star Wars, and you saw those particular mechanical, all the troops all look the same. Black or white outfits they had on, like a chessboard idea, here's the good ones, here's the bad ones. But really were all the same, they were kind of faceless creatures. You saw the same thing in, um, what was the one that, um, to do with, that Duval was in, the futuristic one as well where they live underground and work... THX 1138 is it, THX 1138 the movie, you see it there too.

Neil: Oh... Hello? I think we've lost Alan.

Okay, we're back on here. Gremlins kicked in again. I think Alan you were talking about the movie THX 1138 I think it is, with Robert Duval.

Alan: I think it is.

Neil: Yeah, they live underground, and these police officers were, I think they were actually robots, weren't they?

Alan: Yes, they were. And as I say, with the Star Wars you saw those so-called white clad good guys fighting the black clad, they're both the same, they're troops, you know, they're like robots and you weren't sure if they were human or not. Now you're seeing the same thing with the troops, or policeman with their body armor, they look much the same as the Star Wars idea. You've been trained already that they're otherworldly, you see, they're alien to an extent which makes them more fearsome and terrifies the public. It's intentional. It's designed that way.

Neil: Did you hear what happened in Trafalgar Square at the weekend?

Alan: Not much.

Neil: What had happened was they had the usual crowd there, quite a large number, and peacefully protesting. Getting along fine with the ordinary policeman with the usual peaked helmet on. Until later when the storm trooper type of riot policeman came down on both sides of them and just charged into the crowd and started beating them. Obviously, an orchestrated thing. You've got to wonder what ordinary policeman standing around looking at that are thinking.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: Like, I mean what's going through their minds? Do you think they're just, well that's it, that's nothing to do with us, we've done our part, we've been peaceful and quiet, and we haven't beaten anybody up so we're okay, these guys can deal with that later? But ordinary police officers are obviously in the firing line, and quite literally in places like Portland in America, and other places where they're getting defunded. I think some of them in New York actually resigned because they were getting defunded.

Alan: A lot of them did. Yeah, a lot of them actually retired, took early retirement. I mean, why go to work when you get no backup to do your job from the government, local government or federal governments. Why would you go and get murdered?

Neil: Yeah well, they put their lives on the line anyway, a lot of these cases, and they're not going to get backup from anybody, I think. And even if they do get backup, then they're still probably facing some kind of, you know, court prosecution for doing their jobs. But I was speaking to somebody in the little bar that we go to once or twice a week, and he was talking about this Black Lives Matter and stuff and blah blah blah. I said to him, I says, if black people think that they're getting some kind of privilege over white people, I says, there's going to be some kind of race war going on and it's not going to end well for them. And he said, no no no, he says, there’s a lot of rednecks down here, they're just hoping that happens because they just want to take them out.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: And that's not a pleasant prospect to...

Alan: Well, this is an old idea, the Communist Party, they tried it in the States before. Going way back actually when they tried, they trained Garvey as a communist, and he was a black leader. Eventually he turned on the trainers because he realized that they were using the black folk to try to get revolution started. He was really screwed by them because they defunded him, they destroyed his income and even his big plans for a shipping company that he was getting involved with at the time.

So but yeah, they were quite open about trying to get a racial war. It was the easiest chink in the armor, looking at America, back in the late 1800s, early 1900s. They actually talked about it in great detail how they'd start a racial war, how they get anybody who had less than anybody else, and then train them, the leaders, and then agitate and eventually have riots and overthrow. But it failed at the time.

Neil: It's the whole Black Lives Matter thing where you're watching these people out in the streets, in the early days, trashing all these businesses and burning them down. It reminded me a bit of the Saul Alinsky techniques of...

Alan: It's the same thing. You see that guy Mann, one of the guys that was involved in that, he's up there on I think YouTube giving talks about, interviews on television about how he and his people sympathize, this is the same excuse they used before, sympathize with the black and so they were funding the black for pushing for revolution. So, it's, yeah, it's the same crew actually.

Neil: Yeah, he, in one of his famous experiments, as it were, was to feed a lot of black people beans I think it was and send them into the theater to, ah, let the white folks suffer the consequence of them eating beans. All it did was reflect even worse on the black people…

Alan: Yes.

Neil: ...and made people think of them exactly as they wanted to think of them.

Alan: If you look at the BLM anyway, I mean, look at the leaders of them. I mean, I'm not talking about the one...

Neil: ...that we can't talk about... [Chuckles]

Alan: Well, the ones that came out as the supposed Marxist leaders, you look at the ones who are doing the riots in the streets, it's not black folk. They're kind of white. [Chuckles] Some of them are descended from the revolutionaries, the great grandkids of some of them from the 1920s, you know.

Neil: And they're not poor.

Alan: They are [descendants] actually. I could go on about it a lot more but it's not really that wise these days. But some of them were talking certain lingoes in the streets and I've got friends who were talking back to them with the same lingos. It's quite interesting to see what's going on. You're looking at the same old, same old, same old kind of thing getting used for the final revolution.

You've got to remember too, you see, the US literally took over from the old, [chuckles] the old communist revolutionary thing. So as Russia supposedly went down, and Gorbachev gave his speech that, don't believe that communism is dead, he says, we're now spreading out to the West, a different techniques. It ties in again with Norman Dodd and the Reese Commission that did the investigation into the foundations that were funding revolutionary movements back in the 40s and 50s. The same one, same organizations that are funding them, it came out back then who was behind it, why they were doing it and so on. They said, the Ford Foundation gave a talk, that's on record and you can hear Norman Dodd talking about it and other ones talking about it. They talk to the CEO of the Ford Foundation who said to them, our goal is to seamlessly join America by changing its culture to that of the Soviet system incrementally, until they get eventually joined the two together into new type of system, not quite capitalist, not quite communist. That's the technique.

Neil: I think it was Bezmenov, was it, that came over and said, well, he says we've been very successful.

Alan: Oh yeah. He actually said something awfully true as well, because he worked in Canada for a little while in the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. That's their version in Canada of the BBC. It's tax funded. The CBC, we call it the Communist Broadcasting Corporation because if you want to get progressive cutting edge, you tune in there and you’ll probably have nightmares. He worked with the CBC, Bezmenov, and he said he met more real communists in the CBC than he met in the Soviet Union.

Neil: You had an article on your website this week from the Daily Mail back in 2018, and I can't bring it up on here because it's actually interfering with the call. But I was looking at it earlier and it's from, was it the Guardian, the Guardian maybe. They were saying that the government had banned English schools from teaching anything to do with anticapitalism. And I thought that's a bit strange coming from the Guardian.

Alan: [Laughing]

Neil: And then you read into it, and basically it said, it's just to move towards teaching them anything of history.

Alan: Yes. Sure.

Neil: To twist the whole narrative to, well, I guess it's back to year zero, I don't know. Is that where we're going to go?

Alan: Yes. Absolutely. That's the whole part of the, you see, you've been living through this revolution your whole life and you didn't know it. Because I says say, it's mainly been cultural changes, that's how you do it, the Gramsci type technique, you know. Gramsci gave the idea about that rather than hit countries head-on, and you'd probably lose if they were bigger and more financially secure, than just get in and start changing their culture, it might take you 100 years. Well, that's the technique that's been used very successfully.

When you look... You see, everybody's been asleep. A 30-years war across the Middle East and Asia, all funded by Britain and the States. Hmph. And the people in Britain and the States are generally ignorant of what's been happening. They see these things as kind of remote things that have nothing to do with them, even though they're funding it and they're sending troops to these things, and they never ask why. Which is really interesting in itself, that the people have been trained never to really go into any depth of to find out the whys of anything, especially wars, like continuous wars, like Gulf War One that literally morphed right into the Bush one, 9/11, straight you know, into Operation Iraqi Freedom, as they put them into the Stone Age.

It was all planned. Including the mass migration out of those nations. The kicker eventually was, the bulwark that held it back, or the mass migration back from hitting Europe, and that was Gadhafi in Libya. That day that they, and this interesting Masonic thing that they gave France the right to drop the first bombs, that's what they said in the papers, they gave them the right to drop the first bombs on Libya. It was so symbolic on a much high level. Gadhafi said it before it all happened, he said, if you take us out here in Libya, you'll get millions of folk every year flooding into Europe and Britain. Well, that was the intention of it.

Neil: You would think that Gadhafi for all his faults, etc. would be the darling of the Guardian because he was Greening the Sahara and showing how you could, ha, make fields out of deserts.

Alan: The Guardian is like the rest of them. I mean, whatever, I said, I gave the talk years ago when I said, whatever you're into they've got a ready-made either newspaper or system or club for you to join. They're all ready, like ready-made suits, you know. It's just like religions too, they have so many different varieties and shades of religion. Whatever you think you might want to fancy or shop, for shopping for religion, or shopping for politics, they've got it all ready-made for you. The Internet is full of that too now. You know, you've got all your stars out there, that come out of nowhere, they're well-funded by the governments.

Neil: Well, we just had a disgusting example of that in Ireland with these clowns called Jedward, these twins, and achhh. I mean, talk about nauseating. Oh, wear your mask, wear your mask, do this, take the vaccine. You know, just pathetic. Pathetic. But... Well, I lost my train of thought then.

Alan: I'd like to say too, it was Reese.

Neil: The Reese Commission.

Alan: Yeah, that's so important to go through that. Because here's a man that was sent out by the Congress to investigated all, who literally, even when he gave the interviews years later, he was still in shock to find out that everything he believed in, and you know, the reality, the kind of fake persona of the country, the nation-state, was completely different than how he had been raised, and how his parents probably had believed too. He was still in shock finding out that it was a vastly different system running the show.

Neil: I was going to get back onto the Guardian article. They said that they want to teach anything anti capitalist. It made me wonder what they were permitted to teach them. Because it doesn't say in there not to teach them the WHO sex education program, grooming them all for pedophilia. It doesn't mention that. So that's obviously meant...

Alan: Sustainability, you see, as long as they don't bear children, they can do whatever they want. That's the whole idea. It's also amazing when you go into some of the organizations that have been, were at it for years that helped with other organizations networking together, given governmental authority by the way to change the cultures. The Frankfurt school was one of them.

You'll find that Theo Adorno talked about taking down, destroying the West, right down to the very essence of everything that folk believed in, including he said, right down to necrophilia. He says, we won't even stop there, for changing the culture. Everything that you thought was nice, good and sacred and decent, had to be utterly, utterly not just destroyed but buried, you know.

Neil: I mean, if you go beyond necrophilia, where does that take you? Who knows?

Alan: Well, you know, that's... Hhhch, when you see the fare that they've been pushing for entertainment recently, I mean for years now actually, getting worse and worse, the people literally are debauched already. When they see blood in the streets and folk getting tortured and slaughtered in the streets, but tortured before they get killed, they'll already be psychically prepared for it. Probably even enjoy it some of them.

Neil: Yeah, well, sticking with that, I don't know if you saw the clip of the girl being tasered at the, she was watching a college football match or something.

Alan: That's right.

Neil: With her mother beside her. Somebody's filming it from the stands, again, getting back to these macho men, you know, they're standing there filming this huge guy, this huge, I think he was just a security officer, but he had a Taser, he wasn't a police officer. Literally wrestling with this young girl. The mother is standing there allowing it to happen. I thought, why is she, I thought she was maybe not related at the time until I found out later that she was the mother. I thought, why is she letting this guy do this? You know? And then there's people standing around filming it, and all just sitting watching the game as if nothing's going on. It's beyond belief.

Alan: Here's something that folk should understand. I've said it so many times, that we are the most studied species on the planet. It's not ants or mice or rats in mazes. It's people. I looked for many, many years at consistent repetitive studies on human behavior. When you see repetitive studies, and you'll see little things coming out every year by different organizations or MIT or somewhere or the American psychological departments, they're all getting funded to put out these studies, constant studies.

I remember maybe 10, 15 years ago noticing the studies about, questionnaires they were putting out, you know, on sex. They had all kinds of questions, and the age groups, from up to, was it about 10 years old to 15, 15 to 25, 25 to 45 and so on. About, do you mind gay sex? You know? And so on, how about gay marriage? Before it was all legalized and so on, I'm talking about the marriage itself. It's quite fascinating to see what the old, and it's not that old, it's about 20 years ago, how many folk literally were against this or against that or whatever. Or they weren't comfortable with it, that's how they'd phrase it, you know.

But every year they put out new studies, or every few years, to see if more folk had gone in. And sure enough, and they actually admitted in the studies it was because of the early education and updating of the same education in the school system that now the youngsters were way ahead of older people. And older were about 20 years old, right, but way ahead of the folk at 20 for saying that it was quite acceptable. So that everybody has been trained incrementally, into a whole variety of things sexually. Then when you see the fare they've been given from, was it 40 Shades of Gray or whatever, I've never watched these things and I don't have a TV.

Neil: Shady, shady gray. [Chuckles]

Alan: Shady gray. Which is S&M I think, isn't it?

Neil: I believe so.

Alan: S&M for entertainment, yeah. Then you've got grandmothers and everything watching it and buying the discs, or the series, you know, from the stations.

Neil: S&M, I guess is small minded, I don't know.

Alan: Well yeah, definitely small. But it's fascinating to see these studies AS they're giving you the new stuff, and then getting your feedback from people who are unwitting fools for filling in all these questionnaires. Because they don't even get it themselves where it's all going to and where it's supposed to go to. So yeah, I mean, you're watching the Adorno idea being fulfilled and folk can't even put it together. Oh, it's just entertainment. Well, what do you think he was talking about?

Neil: Paula was telling me that generally a month or so before this whole Covid nonsense started there was somebody running for election here who was totally against homeschooling, totally against it, wanted to ban it. And a couple of months before that she went full-circle, and then here we are, we've got people getting taught at home on the computer, in their bedrooms, privately, where the parent's not allowed to view what they're getting taught. There was a report came out, I think it was actually Florida, I can't remember, but they're getting very concerned that people decided, well, we'll just keep our children at home, thanks very much, and they're pushing now to get them back into schools.

Alan: Sure.

Neil: Is it because, possibly, the parents are actually teaching them real things?

Alan: Well, you probably saw the one with one of the teachers, who is also a social activist, he was the one who got his name in the paper for being concerned at the children, that the parents might snoop on what their children are learning. Because he was all for promoting all the stuff we've just been talking about. [Chuckles]

Neil: That was in Tennessee I think, and the lady had to sign a waiver to say she wouldn't be in the room.

Alan: Yeah. Some of the leaders of the avant-garde of the, you can call it what you want, the Communist Party is one way of doing it. That Reese Commission and Norman Dodd that gave the interview in fact, he, they went through some of this too if you really go into depth in their books that came out of that actual inquiry. So this is an old, old idea. And the Communist Party, if you want to call it communist, communism is a front, as you know. You can't go much deeper into that, but it's a front. And the people that they use are always used, you know, to get it all into play.

But they're not going to be the winner themselves, the people who do all the stuff at the bottom. In fact, they get rounded up afterwards, because the system, hhhch, that used them, can't allow them to continue that way when the people find out they're not getting what they actually fell for. They get eradicated. That happens.

But anyway, the cultural deprivation step by step by step is a big, big part of the total destruction, going way back as I say to Gramsci. It's been awfully successful. Until literally people, there's no shame at all or blushing in voyeurism, which is what television is, voyeurism into deep sexual affairs. And it's so addictive, which they know too. So incredibly addictive, that's part of it as well. That's why they push it so much. Once they're addicted to that you won't, no one's going to have a stable relationship, male or female, you know. Because you're going to see things there that don't really happen in natural life. It gets addictive and you want a bigger high and a bigger high, so you end up with, well, mass promiscuity. You actually see it in The Matrix movie. They showed you a lot in The Matrix movies where they go into Zion underground, deep underground, then you have this strange kind of orgy scene when they're all dancing and going crazy and so on. That's the system of the future they're showing you there.

Neil: I remember being a young boy and there was four children. You'd be sitting in front of the TV there, mom and dad, they'd be watching something. It could have been that ridiculous soap opera Coronation Street, or whatever it was, they’d be watching that, and if somebody so much as kissed each other they'd be saying, oh, you don't be watching that, you don't be watching that.

Alan: Yeah. Yeah-yeah.

Neil: You know, and now, as you say, people don't even blush if they see basically what's pornography portrayed as entertainment in a movie or something, they sit there with their parents and watch it.

Alan: Sure.

Neil: It's just baffling really. But going back to what you were saying about the so-called street revolutionaries as it were being rounded up and dealt with because they can turn on the new system as it were. Do you think, is it the same technique used on the military when they come back? Or the same process that they dehumanize them and then, you know, they pull a few out for war crimes or whatever, and just give them a bad name.

Alan: Oh yeah, they certainly do. Plus the military itself, years ago they had articles out there and they called it The Chemical Soldier. They also had, you know, talking about advancements in the soldier and how he'd be on super drugs, to be a super soldier. Well, they actually put them on lots of these drugs. And they're never the same afterwards. It would take them years to get the stuff out of their system. It causes permanent damage in a lot of them. They've got soldiers today in America that have done so many tours of duty that that's all they know, a lot of them. You can't go on like that as a human being, getting sent to hotspots, watching the misery. It doesn't matter about IQ levels or anything, you see the misery. If you go into Iraq and you see it still bombed into the Stone Age pretty well, and you see the misery caused by previous generations of your troops going in there, um, you could possibly start saying, what on earth are we doing here, you know, what have we done here?

Of course, if you start thinking that way you're going to find out, if you really have the ability to go beyond your conditioning because soldiers are incredibly conditioned. They're trained not to think and not to feel, you know, that's what the soldier really is, is just to obey. Even to survive you've got to live on your instincts basically, fast Pavlovian type responses. But if they start thinking, even in a few days off duty or they go home on leave or whatever, that's when things crash in on them and they say, what on earth are we doing here, who, what's really behind this, what's it really for? And if they start to get on the road there, that they're there for a different reason altogether, maybe even for a different nation or different purpose or something else.

Americans aren't benefiting from any of this at all, as you know, that's the big, big problem right now, but you're left with the bill. And as you pay for it all, there's less money to spend at home on all the things it should be spent on, in a post productive world. You're post industrial society you're living in, all that money that's extra, well, for taxes, is going for the military-industrial complex and to pay for all these bases across the planet. It's not meant to go on forever.

Back in the 1930s as I mentioned before when you look at the amazing books churned out by the CFR and the Royal Institute of International Affairs, when they had their annual meetings, they had annual international meetings then. They've got a group for the Far East including Australia, some of them were held in Australia. I've got the books here. They go through it step-by-step before World War II happened, 1937 I think it was, 1938, they said that the coming war with Japan... Well, there was no war with Japan at that time. And the coming war with Germany… You know, the war had not started.

But they didn't even pause to even consider in the book, and they had all the members there giving their speeches, that's what the book is comprised of, the speeches of different politicians. Central bankers were there, you know, everybody who was anybody was there. They're all listed in the back of the book. But there was no hesitation about even losing the war - which is quite fascinating - and what they would do afterwards and reconstructing the world.

Right up until America, you know, that they went along the same lines as previous philosophers and historians in Britain like Arnold Toynbee, America will be basically the battering ram for this new order, this world order, and the taxpayers will fund it, a massive tax base. But they also said that America will be the ruler for a while of an empire and then eventually it will start to lose. And I think that was like Vietnam, when the big change happened, the psychic change, that it might not go the way that we want it to go and why are we doing this anyway. And afterwards, they said, it will rally again and conquer again, maybe once or twice, and then it will collapse internally. That's exactly what's going to happen.

Neil: I think since Vietnam, after basically going out of Vietnam, they've been bogged down in these wars in the Middle East for what, two or three decades now. And they're not winning anything. They're not winning anything.

Alan: It's a 30-years war.

Neil: Certainly not the hearts and minds.

Alan: Starting with Desert Storm, it's a 30-years war. And the US, and here's Trump again doing his saber rattling against Iran, at the same time as Netanyahu has publicly said they might do a first strike on Iran, you know, themselves from Israel. Anybody who's sitting thinking is saying, wait a minute here, [Chuckles] you know, do they realize what they're talking about here?

Neil: I said to somebody recently, do you think going to war with China is a good idea? Do you think that's really going to end well? For anybody?

Alan: Remember Anthony Sutton? Anthony Sutton was the guy who came out with the real deep studies on the true Trilaterals, you know.

Neil: He did books on who funded it.

Alan: But also, he came out with the history before it was called the Trilateral Commission. He goes into Wall Street and the Bolshevik Revolution, how Wall Street funded the Bolsheviks. He gives all the data and the details and facts. It's not speculation. It's not some author’s take on something, it's actual evidence. Then he had the one about who funded Hitler. And another book called The Best Enemies Money Can Buy, how you always fund them up into prominence, then you get the wars going. We've all lived through, if we're awake at all, the transference of all your factories to China with free trade and the GATT treaty and so on. I did talks on them years ago when it was happening. I says, doesn't anybody notice that all your factories are getting, literally uprooting physically going over to China. They were even sending, in Canada they were sending foreman over for different factories to train the people over there, as their factories were getting moved.

We paid under the free trade treaty, the same with India at the moment and free trade, we paid these factories and these corporations to move, physically move and put up their offices and their factories over there. For 15 years afterwards under the treaty if they claim they've lost money because of the move, you know, in the 15 years, then they pay no taxes for 15 years, and then they can actually renew it for another 15 years, so they never pay taxes. They make stuff cheaper over there and sell it back to us again. That's what free trade is all about. Now we're doing the same thing with India, and a whole bunch of other countries by the way.

We're paying for the postage. Look at the stuff from China. Folks think it's wonderful, oh, I can order this from China online and I get this come back within a week and it only cost about one or two dollars. You can't, I can't post a letter here for that kind of thing. We're paying for it all, our tax money pays for China's posting the stuff to us, under free trade. It's still on the go yet.

Neil: Yes, it's like the Indian guy who was the head of the IPCC at one time. He was high up in the executive of Tata [?], again all the coal running plants and all the rest of it, the steel plants, all shipped over to India and rebuilding them again for free. And yet he's talking about climate change.

Alan: Was it Pachauri too that was head of the IPCC?

Neil: Pachauri, yeah-yeah-yeah, that's who I'm talking about.

Alan: Yeah! So, he got a massive grant and he started, he opened up coal mines in India.

Neil: Yeah, and steel plants. [Laughing]

Alan: That's right. [Laughing] I remember giving the talk years ago on that. Yeah, it's a complete farce.

Neil: Yeah, the guy who was writing pornographic novels in his spare time.

Alan: And grabbing the women, publicly, you know. I don't know what he was on, the same stuff as that other guy that used to be with the World Bank, he was... They're all, these drugs, they’re hypersexual, these characters, you know.

Neil: They're probably watching too much television. Hhhch, he's watching too much television.

Alan: Well, he certainly enacted what he was seeing, you know.

Neil: Yeah. Talking about the drugs and stuff, it makes you wonder how screwed up these guys are that join the Army and they’re over there actually see what's been done. I remember the picture they came back when, I think when the Iraqis were trying to leave Baghdad, or it was one of the cities that had been bombed. And there was a whole line of them, maybe a mile long of these trucks that they just strafed with whatever they strafed them, and the bodies were basically caramelized.

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: I can't understand why young men can see that on the televisions, when they, and then they'll see the ads to join the Army or the Navy or whatever it is, and think, well wait a minute, I think he's after me.

Alan: They did the studies back in the 70s and the 80s on all the coming video games, you know, even before you got the really good ones coming out. They did lots of studies. They had ones out by the way for the military years before. They even had them just at the end of World War II onwards, they got better and better. They were kind of video types, but they were actually for training people to kill. Because it's not easy to train folk to actually do the killing. You can go for the movements and so on, but when you actually kill someone it's a different thing. Unless you enjoy it and you're a psychopath, you know.

They had these incredibly good games that started off with the ones for World War II aircraft for shooting down enemy planes. And they had real footage in these kind of video things, you know. Then they went on and on from there. Then they gave, when it became all digital into the Internet, they give the plans to Japan. Japan started to lead the whole charge for making more improved video games very realistic, and the Department of the Defense in the US funded most of it.

They did studies on Pac-Man even and other ones as well all to see if it was addictive to the youngsters. They studied them all, from the age of maybe 5 right up until about 20 to see if it made any difference on their psyche and how they viewed the world or anything. And they did. They had more blunted feelings regarding humans themselves. And when it got more and more realistic, again they were invented for the military initially and started selling them to the public. Because they wanted, and I gave the talks, I says, they're going to raise a generation up for the military with these games. And sure enough, now they actually have these articles out there saying, From Xbox to the Battlefield.

Neil: Yeah, wasn't it Arnold Schwarzenegger that did a tour at one of these factories with all these wargames and stuff and he said this was, I think he was governor of California at the time saying how good it was to train the children.

Alan: Yes. It's for training a generation, and sure enough you've had them across the Middle East now, you know, literally just for years and years and years. They trained them in advance. They did documentaries only a few years ago there talking to some of them who were working, who were playing on the Xboxes who were going into the military. They even take you into some of the recruitment offices where they have the same games in the recruiting offices for them to play with. So they go in their everyday and they'll play and walk out, and eventually they get recruiting sergeants and then they get talked into it. It blunts your empathy. You're not, you're so used to seeing heads explode in a virtual world that it's nothing at all in real life.

Neil: Yeah, I often wonder if these young adults, children, I mean, I see people 40 years old that have been playing these games and you think, what are you doing, you know. It makes me wonder if when they're playing online, they're supposed to be playing with their friends, and there's all this fake battle scene, it makes you wonder if that's a training exercise going on. And you get a knock at the door one day and they say, I believe you're very good at whatever it is, some murder game or whatever, how would you fancy coming to work with us for a little while?

Alan: Well, you said that and, it's happened. Because it was maybe four or five years ago there was articles, actually ads from the Department of Defense where they were buying a lot of these used games, they had the recordings of the users in them and the different systems they'd set up themselves, the users, for the battles and all that. They actually analyze them to see the difference of that generation’s mentality and their ability to possibly kill in real life, as to the people who had never had that before in previous generations, they didn't have the games, you know. So you're quite right actually. They actually, they put millions too, millions of dollars they're putting out to buy them back, these games.

Neil: Not many years ago Paula’s son took part in an exercise, and he was in high school at the time. He wasn't even in college. It was run by the military. It was designing a system to hack into a computer.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: So a few weeks later there was a knock at the door from the military saying could they speak to her son, and she told them where to go. That's what they're doing, they're going around the schools and setting up these little exercises to find out who's got the capability to do this, that and the next thing, for any specific thing they want them for. They have their name and address and they come knocking on your door.

Alan: That's right.

Neil: It's just... aaacchh.

Alan: Again, the parents think, they can't quite relate to it, thinking it's a GAME, you know it's just a game, and they can't really, they don't realize the effect it has on the mind when you're getting trained to go out and slaughter. That's what it's about really. You see, modern warfare is nothing like the old Hollywood movies of the 1920s and 30s for World War I or II. Modern warfare is generally not going up against real organized armies, you know, no matter what they've said in the past, in the recent past. You've got really ragtag armies that you're invading their countries, and you're going into civilian populations and policing the populations. That's not what the Army is for. It's completely changed, you know. So you're regarded as the oppressors. If you can’t give a valid reason as to why you're there, then you are the evil guy.

Neil: Oh yeah, absolutely.

Alan: And they really can't see, I mean, they can't. We know it was a complete farce with Afghanistan because they were ready to go into Afghanistan before 9/11 happened. It was all drawn up and they had troops and so on all set to go. So that was part of the, it was one of them on the list of the PNAC group from the 1990s, the same group that took over with Bush Junior when he got in. So it was all, that whole list of countries was on the list to be taken out by the PNAC group. Really, the people of America have no wars with the Middle East at all, you know. Not personally they didn't.

Neil: There's only a couple of countries left. There's Iran and I think it said North Korea, or, I can't remember.

Alan: Yeah. And there's still, the US is still, and so is Britain still funding the terrorist organizations they're calling freedom fighters against Syria. You know, I mean we've been funding, this is another thing too, this is an idea about collective punishment in a sense. If you look at some old religions, there’re some heavy, heavy discussions in old religions, in theology, about collective punishment. Judaism has it, you know, if you're Jewish, regardless of your nonparticipation in anything underhanded or whatever, you still collectively will get punished, this is part of it.

It's the same thing if you look at Protestants versus Catholics to an extent as well. Even if you've got a radicalized group, a small faction in one or the other doing all the dirty stuff, the whole lot will get punished collectively, you know, in the world's eyes. Well, it's the same thing if you're sitting back watching for years and years munching on your chips and so on, your crisps as they say in Britain, and watching this stuff going on. You're paying for all that.

Neil: Yeah.

Alan: And eventually comes back to hit you collectively that the world is going to hate you for sitting and funding it all, you know.

Neil: I mean, we're getting a form of collective punishment now. If somebody breaks a curfew or something, then the whole city is locked down kind of thing. So you've got to point a finger at the bad guy for going out to the pub after 10 o'clock at night or something. In Scotland they're encouraging you to report your neighbor if you see too many of them in the garden next door. It's just getting bizarre.

Alan: I know. Well they've got to, if the folk don't stand up against it, again, collectively...

Neil: Yeah.

Alan: It's got to be, and everybody says NO. I said, I gave this talk back in 1998, you've got to relearn a word that's called NO.

Neil: M-hm.

Alan: That's all. Don't explain it, as to anything, you know, just say NO. And that's how, that's the only way, if enough folk do it, they can't put everybody in prison, you know.

Neil: Exactly. I've always said the same.

Alan: What they have planned for the people is hell. This is not going to stop. I've watched trains go by here, the houses shake. We've never had such heavy, this is full, this is goods of canned stuff and so on going to the bases further north there for NORAD, that's where they are, they're further north of me. Underground bases. And for the stuff, I've never seen so many trains in all the years I’ve been here. Every day maybe 20, 25, sometimes 30, heavy, heavy suckers. Miles long. And it's not going to stores, believe you me. What you're looking at here is quite a few years of massive lockdown.

Neil: Yeah, well they're putting reports out saying that this is going to go on until 2024, 2025. So there's your...

Alan: This could go on indefinitely, I think.

Neil: Probably if it goes on that long it's going on indefinitely.

Alan: This is to change the WHOLE structure of existence. It isn't... Covid is just an excuse. It's the whole sustainability idea. Total lockdown. Post-democratic societies, that's a big part of it. They've said at the Club of Rome, the Club of Rome is like the massive, the big think tank that manages the cultural changes for the elites. They've said it, that the whole agenda for sustainability that they couldn't get people to comply with through the climate agreements and so on, cut back on food, cut back on farming, cut back, cut back, cut back, we can implement it through the Covid and they're just overjoyed with what they're doing. They've already started it. They said that they wouldn't allow businesses to open up, any kind of business, unless these unelected panels in your community see it first, what you do and if, are you wasting materials, are you causing carbon, blah blah blah, and they're actually not allowing certain businesses to start up again.

Neil: Well, a report came out, not a report, somebody tweeted something out that they'd seen UN vehicles coming into Cork harbor yesterday and there's some speculation about what they're for. But they could just innocently be troops coming back from some exercise or whatever.

Alan: That was Cork, was it?

Neil: Cork, yeah.

Alan: Yeah, well you see, Ireland is one of the, hhhch, one of the biggest suppliers of troops for the United Nations and they go off with the white armored vehicles. They train in Ireland. They're based in Ireland, most of them. They're a big part of it. I know some guys in it in fact.

Neil: Well going back to, well, we're talking about Agenda 2030 now, and Gavin Newsom in California, he said he's going to get rid of sales of petrol cars by 2035. So I mean, 15 years and you know, I said to people here, what are you going to do when they come for your cars? And they say, well they won't do that. Well, there you go, there's California already. And 15 years is not a long time. You know, that's...

Alan: No. My Ma used to say, she was kind of up on the kind of cultural, at least all the stuff that was getting pushed out of California, or Hollywood. She says, all social cancers that start, they all start in California and spread out to the rest of the world. Anything that's avant-garde and progressive, it all starts in California and then it gets pushed outwards. And that's so true, I've watched it my whole life.

Neil: Yeah, well I guess the Irish government is taking that on board because the national bus company there have decided they're not going to supply buses between cities anymore. So there's your lockdown going to be implemented for every city, and you won't be able to get out. There will be roadblocks, as have been already in Ireland stopping you going from, get out of Dublin, or get into Dublin.

Alan: Sure.

Neil: I think there was talk of them doing the same thing in Cork as well. So who knows what those UN troops are for? Maybe they’re there for Cork, who knows?

Alan: Oh yeah, they'll let them loose at the right time, yeah. Don't forget too what Kissinger said in his talk in California. It was in the 1970s or 80s, I can't remember now. He was giving a talk to an audience in California, and he said, he was talking about the United Nations. The people were all boo-booing, and, we don't want the United Nations, it's a communist organization and so on. He says, if under the right circumstances of famine or starvation or the like, you'll welcome them in, including Chinese troops if need be. That's what he said. You can actually find his speech up there yet, I put it up years ago. But yeah, I mean... you see, their reality, the ones who help plan all this, are completely different from the people at the bottom. It's like the CIA, the CIA was never there to help Americans. They had an agenda.

Neil: Yeah, there was people in Trafalgar Square on Saturday saying that when these guys, these police officers came in, you know, to charge the crowd, said many of them looked Eastern European. They didn't appear to be English police officers.

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: So where they came from is anybody's guess.

Alan: That's interesting. I'll tell you, the same thing happened in New York after 9/11. I know from some people I knew personally there who were in touch with me at the time. One woman who was a nurse down there, she had applied for, it was a, they were afraid of asbestos and so on so you could put in your name and then you get a special vacuum cleaner for your apartment or your house. She fell for that and went for it. Well, hhhch, she was there one day, and this kind of SWAT team came in all, well, they were actually kind of far Eastern looking people. There was a woman in charge, with these black outfits like something from a sci-fi magazine. They had a GPS with them, and into the room and the whole thing and told her to stay where she was. They did a location thing, they weren't interested, they said they were there, hhhch, to check the vacuum cleaner that she got. What absolute nonsense, didn't even look at it. But they were all heavily armed by the way, you know. I heard it from other people too that I knew at the time, that didn't know each other. So they gave me the same stories of the same things happening to them in different parts of New York.

Neil: They said they appeared to be Eastern European, I don't know how they ascertained that. As I say, but they were very young. I mean, if they're very young they're hardly unlikely to be trained by officers, because they tend to be a little bit more experienced.

Alan: Sure.

Neil: They said they had manic staring eyes and were aggressive right from the start, beating the truncheons into their hands and all this kind of thing to rile up the crowd and all this kind of stuff.

Alan: Oh yeah, you've definitely got them. Some of them were caught years ago here when they did the anti-globalist agendas where they were having the globalist meetings. Huge student demonstrations at the time in Canada and in the States. I remember in Montréal, I think it was Montréal they had one of the big globalist meetings where they publicized them, etc. That was just the WEF group that went there too, they managed it all. But I remember you had the same kind of characters that would turn up at these meetings, with the masks on. Folk thought they were Antifa, you know. This is years ago. Dressed exactly the same way. But these are the only ones who threw gasoline bombs at the cop cars, they did it in Montréal. Well, they caught four of them and some, hhhch, some of them saw the photographs in the papers and they had combat boots on, these guys. So, I looked into it. For sure enough, they were members of a very secretive unit for the police in Montréal. They were doing the actual firebombing.

Neil: Yep. I remember the pictures they showed you, the soles of the boots, and they were all exactly the same, the same tread.

Alan: That's right. That was the clue for folk to investigate further. But you definitely have a super, if you want to call it supra-force already established to deal with the international terrorism. Including if the public themselves are declared the terrorists, the general public. It's already there, they’re trained and all the rest of it.

Neil: Well, we are going to be declared terrorists if we don't take the vaccine.

Alan: Well I mean, absolutely. If you don't do what you're told, not just with the vaccines, there's a whole slew of things they want you to obey. And it's not going to stop. This is a whole new way of living and it's going to be getting ordered every day as to what to do and what not to do. This is the authoritarian system; we are post-democratic.

Neil: I mean a lot of so-called protests in the past did come from students.

Alan: Yep.

Neil: In Scotland now you've got this Nicola Sturgeon, this real.... maniac leading the country, and locking students up in their dorms, and then she just kind of backtracked a little bit because there was big pictures put out on this. These student accommodation places they put them in now look like prisons anyway from the outside. They all had signs in the window saying, help me Mum, and all this kind of thing, and, let me out, blah blah blah. But what does it take for students nowadays to actually get out in the streets and say we've had enough, and we don't like the way this is going?

Alan: They're short of testosterone, I think, you know.

Neil: [Chuckles] ...and that's just for the girls. [Chuckles]

Alan: Here's the thing, you know, I can joke about it, but the people are way high now in estrogen, males too. Way higher than they used to be. Again constant studies, they keep giving the same reports and updating them every year or so. It ties in with the male infertility, you know. Interestingly, I don't know if you noticed, when the Covid thing came out, and yeah there was a massive, massive campaign to terrify the West, no doubt about it. With complicity of China. That's what I said at the time, I says, are they all in it together, China and the US, you know, all working together to terrify their people? I really think it is that way. But anyway, they did give the reports out with the initial Covid 19 idea. They said that it affected the testes of men, and could actually cause permanent damage, you know. I thought, what a coincidence. If this virus can actually do a bit more, a bit more infertility advancement for the elites, and add to the rest of the problems we've got because you've already got lowered sperm counts, and what's left in the West is very low motility, most of them are half dead, the ones that are still moving, the spermatozoa, you know.

Neil: Well then, going back to what you were talking earlier about men in spandex and things, I mean, it's been very, very obvious over the last, at least a decade anyway, young men, school-age men in college, whatever, are very effeminate a lot of them.

Alan: Yep.

Neil: And act effeminately, they hang about with girls. But not in the way like we would've done 50 years ago, you know.

Alan: Yep.

Neil: They're hanging about with girls as if they're the same as them.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: You know, they all have the same interests, they all watch the same, ah, celebrities, they all follow all that junk. They don't, there's no distinction between male and female in terms of attitudes or anything.

Alan: Again, I gave the talks back in the 90s on androgyny, that was part of the reason, where you would not just look alike, you'd behave the same ways and so on. Again, through the school system where they, with the massive campaign to stop what they call bullying, right, but it wasn't just bullying. Hhhch, any young guy that sits on his rear end for a few hours in a classroom at the age of 6 or 7 is going to be tapping his feet or something. Because young guys normally climb trees, you know and do things like that, you've got this energy, that's what you do.

Well, they want the males to conform like the females. Huge, you know, huge studies were done on it, how to make the guys comply. Well, they came out with all the different new, ah, fabricated diseases of ADHD and so on and hyperactivity. And for hyperactivity they give them amphetamine! You know, so if the child wasn't hyperactive before, ah, he's better now, he's on speed. I've watched this, and everybody's been shaking their heads watching it. Of course what does it do too? It literally shrinks the brain as it's developing. These guys never mature properly. Their IQ drops. This is the studies that prove it, it's not my opinion here.

Hhhhh, can you believe that a whole generation, really, actually, it’s going the the second generation, of male leaders who are completely nullified, when teachers just got fed up with someone asking questions, and got them to see a doctor and get prescribed, you know, to put them on drugs?

Neil: I got into a lot of trouble with this.

Alan: That's your leadership generation out the window. Yeah.

Neil: I got in trouble for asking questions at school, a long time ago, and I guess that put me off school for a long time until I went back to college and then University, and asked a lot of questions there and they didn't like it either. So nothing had changed really. But yeah, I mean, students, I don't know, it's a...

Alan: You've got a war. You see, you've been living in a war your whole life long. Most folk don't realize it. They think all these things are unrelated. No, these are all parts of the war.

Neil: Yeah.

Alan: M-hm.

Neil: You've mentioned before all these nonsense degrees that they bring out now, like flower arranging, and just ridiculous beauticians coming out...

Alan: Belly dancing, there's belly dancing too.

Neil: Yeah, whatever. I mean, and people actually, the parents of these children must think, oh well there’ll be a job in that. Well really? What job?

Alan: I know.

Neil: It's crazy. And they don't know anything. You try and talk to some of these children and you're talking to a wall. I mean, there's nothing coming back at you in the way of any intelligent conversation.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: ...for the most part, there are exceptions of course.

Alan: They did the studies too, lots of them can't even look another human being in the eye. You see, they're not used to, they've been raised just texting people and so on and they're not used to actually talking and conversing in real life with people, you know.

Neil: They're trying to tell them now that looking somebody in the eye is an aggressive posture.

Alan: This is straight out of the manuals of ancient China, and Britain by the way. [Chuckles] Because the nobility has never allowed, royalty has never allowed the peasantry to look at the people, their betters in the eye. That was a big, you could really, you could get chained and whipped for that, you know.

Neil: I think that still goes on.

Alan: Britain was the same. Queen Elizabeth I had a lot of them done that way because they looked her in the face. So did Hillary Clinton, you know that too, eh?

Neil: Yeah. I think it's the same today in Buckingham Palace. I think they've got to walk past with their head bowed and they're not allowed to walk on certain sides of the corridor and all this kind of thing.

Alan: Absolutely. It's subservience, you see. It isn't just politeness, it's subservience.

Neil: Yeah. It's getting that way with the politicians as well. They're all adopted this, ah, what's his name, Mussolini type posture with the raised chin and looking down the nose that you.

Alan: Yep.

Neil: So, you can't even look them in the eye, because they're looking down at you, they're kind of, they're not looking AT you, they're looking over your head.

Alan: Again too, it's interesting that whole phenomenon. Because when you look at how the communist, you know the early Communists were quick off the mark in adopting the Germanic filmography techniques for propaganda purposes. They had a lot of old silent ones on the hero type, the new Soviet hero. But you can see the techniques that were used. And the hero, a little guy would start off at his little peasant village, and as the time went on, he became the hero and kept factories going single-handed and stuff like that. The camera shots took it from below to make them look like a giant, you see. And so they made the screen bigger.

The same thing happened with Germany, with Leni Riefenstahl you know, she did the Triumph of the Will was it called, that movie? She used the techniques too and she made everybody look like giants with the shots that she took and the angles. And it's no mistake, what you're talking about now. Almost everybody out there has got these massive giant screens. And it's all catering to them, to make these folks look superhuman.

Neil: Well that, I can't remember the name of the movie, Inglorious Bastards or something it was called. It was about the war and that, Riefenstahl was mentioned in that. That the lady in that one, that cinema, she was helping this Riefenstahl. Exactly as you said there, they got this young soldier guy, and he was a great marksman. They made him into this great sniper, and he murdered 50, 60 of the enemy blah blah blah, and all the camera angles were like that, looking up to him, and he was up in the clock tower and he was a big hero. All exactly the same way as the movies were done in the 40s. Exactly the same way.

Alan: Oh yeah. M-hm.

Neil: They're doing the same with the politicians of course, exactly the same.

Alan: Yeah. They give you the big screens, high definition, then they seem larger-than-life. Including the celebrities that everybody's stuck on, you know. They actually get embarrassed when they see them in real life as they're pretty short or maybe even a bit pudgy, you know, and something like that. But the TV screens make them look like they're giants and superhuman. That's intentional too, then you follow the stars, you know, that's why they make them stars. And the nobodies follow the stars because they haven't found out they are somebody themselves yet. That's what they do.

Neil: Again, going back to the students. I mean, that's all they've been brought up with. They've been brought up with this whole culture of celebrity, their whole lives, and they don't see any real people.

Alan: Absolutely. Here's another big thing too, I remember talking to people years ago and they were teaching at universities, and it was a discussion about the future for the youngsters of the West. And hhhch, as they churned out more and more ridiculous degrees, the competition rises all the time. Because with the amalgamation, which again goes back to the 1930s for the CFR group, for the amalgamation of the Third World countries into the first world countries, they knew that, hhhch, this is so interesting really, the families that would succeed, they said, in the 1930s. This is your own elite, you know, talking here, the ones that manipulate and manage things. They said that the families from countries like India and China, they still have intact family units. But the ones in the West would be degraded as they progress towards a different system. Well, naturally they actually said that the children would be far more successful for the ones in the family units from China and India, than the ones in the West as the ones in the West become more freer. [Chuckles] And sure enough, you look at the students from China in the West, and the ones that have come over from India, their children, they'll study and study like crazy compared to the West. They have decent homes where there's not screaming and argument or whatever, or all the problems there, drugs. So, they are getting used at the moment for the middle-class bureaucracies that are running over us actually. But it was planned all that time ago, it's just astonishing to sit and watch it your whole life long.

Neil: You mentioned Indian people, and it is amazing because everyone you meet from, well, call it a middle-class family if you like, they are a very cohesive family unit. And they're all like doctors and lawyers, they're all very well-qualified people. Because they have that kind of, I don't know how, I don't want to call it strict...

Alan: A stable home is so important. But the war on the family was done on the West, it's still on the go, what's left of it. But I mean, it's pretty well demolished the family. If you have parents, and the parents can get on in some kind of order, right, there's an order at home, so it's not screaming, hollering or on drugs and all the rest of it or alcoholism, or affairs all over the place. If you could have a stable family at home of order the child grows up with a greater ability to be a good achiever, you know. You can't do it, you can't study at home when there's chaos, you know.

Neil: I know, and then they tend to stay-at-home longer, willingly, because of the environment.

Alan: Well, here's the thing too, I mean, both China and India, especially I'd say, they put out more for their children, you know, they'll sacrifice more for their children, financially. The West went through so much deprivation for world, even before the world wars, you know, the Boer War, World War I, Great Depression into World War II, rationing even after World War II, etc. You had broken families all over the place. Wars cause incredible shock to the system of everybody growing up in it, you know. Then you hit it with deliberate plans to destroy the family unit, and bingo, you're going down the tubes as other ones replace you and take over with stable families.

But in Britain, the biggest thing that I heard in Britain from parents all over the place and the friends I knew and so on, the parents wanted them out of the home as soon as they can get them out of the home, you know. They did not have the financial backing to even have the children back then. Because you're living in pretty well poverty after, you know, years of wars and Great Depressions.

Neil: Of course if you talk about China and the villages, Indian villages all the children there are, you know, they're valuable to the family as a working unit, you know, as a working unit.

Alan: That's what the... Here's the thing now. The ones who wanted you all destroyed understand all this. It was a purposeful thing to destroy the West. And nothing happened by itself. Always under the guise of freedom, eh? It was a complete war, spelled-out by at least, at the very least you get the communist sides of it spelling it all out. It was a deliberate war using, Gramsci said you'll use culture, entertainment, everything to do it all. And they DID it. Then they signed all these agreements to take all your work away from you. So you've got an even higher concentration of youngsters with degrees and no work to go and use them in. I remember when we were training Chinese in the West in colleges and universities as engineers and sending them back to China, and they had no factories to go back to at the time. Because it was in the wind that we were going to finance and ship our factors to them. Everything is planned this way on such a massive scale. It's not happenstance.

Neil: No. It makes you wonder what's going to be left in the West in the next 10 or 15 years.

Alan: They want it demolished, right down.

Neil: There's got to come a point where people do get genuinely disgruntled because they'll have nothing left to lose, once they've lost everything.

Alan: That's right.

Neil: Including their family and their home and all the rest of it.

Alan: Veganism [?] is just another word for nothing left to lose.

Neil: [Chuckles] Yeah. But they've just announced, I think they're going to do away with this mortgage or rent moratorium, and they have extended in some places. But you know you've got landlord saying, hold on a minute, I, you know pensioners, I worked all my life to buy those two apartments so I would have an income when I was older, and now you're telling me that nobody has to pay me any rent anymore for those? And it's going both ways. The people who did get money, to pay the rent, just chose not to pay it. And yet, they're allowed to do as they please and the poor guy who's paid for the apartment gets nothing. That's his livelihood gone. He'll probably lose his own house paying the rent for the other ones, or their mortgage.

Alan: That's the agenda. You see, the world they want to bring in, it's prearranged, everything that's happening is prearranged. It's massive companies, only maybe five companies. Just like the agri-food businesses, you've got five big agri-food businesses that run the world's food supply. Same thing with apartments and rentals, you'll have about the same thing. They want to raise up, they're already here, you know, quietly sometimes, but they're here and they'll own all rentals across the world. This was, it's an old idea, going way, way back, you know, 100 years. That's what they're going to do where the smaller ones. There's people with a few houses the think they're still landlords. No, they're going to get done away with.

Neil: Yeah.

Alan: It's big corporations that are going to own, you know, streets and streets and streets throughout the cities, like they do in New York in some places.

Neil: I saw it in Bulgaria where the old factories that had been basically abandoned when the Soviets left, and they have the blocks built there specifically for the workers. These are basically, the government owned them. If they didn't do as they were told in the work, then they'd lose everything. They lose their work, their money, their accommodation, everything, it would be on the street. Maybe we're going back that way.

Alan: I'm sure we will actually. I think it's even worse than that. What's arranged here, I mean... Hhhhh. I don't know if you've ever seen troops going into action, actually seen them going into action.

Neil: No. No. I've never been so unfortunate.

Alan: Yeah. Because there's a, a, hhhhh, a character change comes over them, you know, and commanders, as they're going into it. And that term resolute, a resolute grasp of things, very resolute, it means more than the word. It's so easy to say it, but it's a tangible thing, you know. It's when this-is-it, you know. It's a this-is-it moment and that's all-or-nothing, you know. And by the way there'll be no Geneva Convention when these kind of things take off, that's how it happens. But what you're seeing today, it's a look that they have from the superior, the higher commanders, you know, it's an all-or-nothing look. It's a hard thing to explain, but you're seeing it now. You're talking about the politicians in Australia, etc. actually come out in saying this, we've got to be more authoritarian now. You're seeing that same look.

It does not bode well for the general population.

And I think what they've got in mind here, to completely eradicate, again getting back to year zero, afterwards, I think you're going to see starvation, going over a few years here as they bring us down and down and down. Until the folk, whoever's left will beg them to bring in the, hhhch, plan that they have had on the shelves for years, you know.

Neil: Well, at the United Nations, they'll be begging for the United Nations on the street.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: And it's funny that people here say, well we've still got guns, we've still got this and that. I says, well, when you don't have any food, you'll quite quickly hand your guns over.

Alan: That's right.

Neil: They go, oooooh, I would never do that, we'll never do that.

Alan: Well, you can't eat them.

Neil: [Chuckles] You can't eat them, exactly.

Alan: If you ever go into a place where there's starvation happening, you know, different parts of Africa, and a long, long time too, you get it in Bangladesh and different places. But it's nothing like you'd think it was going to be. You don't see [undecipherable], you see lots of trucks coming back and forth anyway. You see a quietness. You walk, you go into villages, and there's folk in the streets dying, you know. It's the silence that gets you. It's not... It's not noisy. It's not folk screaming. They're past the stage of asking for help. Or expecting it. I could see it happening here. And yet you can sit there with your rifles and all the rest of it as your starving to death, you're way too late by then to use them.

Neil: Well yeah. Unless you're going to shoot something to eat, that's about all you can do.

Alan: That's right. And I can see that is part of the plan, eventually to make us buckle under until ANY memory of how it used to be is utterly eradicated. That's the intention here, brute force eradication of memories of a different time.

Neil: I mean I says, you know, I'm trying to grow what I grow. But it's very difficult to grow anything in any kind of general bulk here. I mean you're only talking, you know, salad vegetables and beans and things like that. You can't grow enough to live on. I mean you know you can can in the summer or spring or whatever. But you can't grow meat. I mean, you can't grow all the essentials you need. And certainly not water. I mean, if they cut the water supply off, you're screwed. I mean, that's it. Two days without water, three days… In a Florida summer, maybe one day...? As you say, you can see them going around in a truck with water bottles on the back saying, okay we know you've got a gun, just hand that over and we'll give you a case of water today. And that's the way it will go.

Alan: Yes. They did that in New Orleans when they had the, when the booms went, you know, when the water flooded in. The trucks went around the houses, the soldiers went around the houses to evacuate people in some of the areas, and some of the better areas too. They weren't allowed to take anything with them. When they came back of course all their guns were gone. They even took the animals and brought them into big halls, like townhalls and so on and machine-gunned them. I don't know if people realize that's what they did with the pets eh. But yeah, you've got to start maturing very quickly here when you see what's going on here. Got to mature very, very quickly.

Neil: Yeah, I mean going back to the students. No, older people would have relied on their children to defend them in times of, you know times of strife. But you got a generation now that all, 18 or 20-year-olds, they're not going to defend anybody because they are incapable, certainly.

Alan: And they're disconnected. The bonding, they're completely disconnected. They've been trained from school, just like the old technique where they were quite blatant in the 60s and 70s, don't trust anybody over 30. Then they kept reducing the age until children could only relate to teachers around 20 years old, you know. Then you could indoctrinate the children much easier with them. Everything's worked out scientifically here. But the general public have been broken. You've been broken with your bonding to each other. The Internet society has helped destroy it as well. You've got lots of people out there in the chat rooms and stuff, but who’ve never met anybody in real life, you know. You don't know who's real and who isn't real. And you tend to neglect the folk who are around you as irrelevant. It's quite amazing to study it and watch it.

Neil: Well, now the student school children are being taught that they can't even speak to each other anymore. They’re being segregated, even down to that level, even down to kindergarten, they're not even allowed. And that generation...

Alan: The thing is too, with so many families that are single-parent families, basically it's been going on for such a long time, and the guy is absent. And even if the guys are around, they're generally quiet. Because they've been trained in school that the whole world's faults/problems is theirs. You know, they're just another generation of men that's caused all these problems. That's how they're trained, to shut up in school and come to consensus with the group in school, consensus groups and so on. They've been trained literally the women are the leaders. You see that everywhere you look.

Look at all the riots across the States. And mayors coming out and telling everybody to stand down and let that happen. And the guys are all shutting their faces and saying nothing here. I mean? It's because they've been trained not to say anything. They've been trained that they are irrelevant, by the way. And then you add into it the hyper estrogen that's in their system, and the lower sperm count, things start to fall into place. Big time.

Neil: Yeah, I mean, even down to the most basic survival if you like, even if they had food most youngsters these days wouldn't know what to do with it. They wouldn't know how to cook. It's...

Alan: I knew somebody... [chuckles] I knew somebody from the States and who did well for herself, you know. She said to me, quite proudly she says, I've never cooked in my life. And was proud, you know, very proud. Meaning, you don't have to, you see, a society that was doing okay in certain cities, in certain areas and classes, the in thing was to always eat out. If you had to cook for yourself, you were obviously falling ranks in the class structure. But she very proudly boasted to me that she could make a grilled cheese sandwich, you know. And I thought, wow, I think that's what it's come down to, today they can't even feed themselves if they had to, you know.

Neil: There was a little video put up there and there was two teenagers, or two teenage boys, I don't know maybe, you know, late teens. They were given a dial up telephone and asked if they could make a phone call. It took them about half an hour to work it out, and they still, they had to be told at the end how to make it work. The same goes with cooking. I think there's no basic knowledge instilled in them. Because as you say, I mean there might be single-parent families, there might be, you know, whatever. But in America for sure, a lot of people eat out all the time. ALL the time.

Alan: It's astonishing really.

Neil: And I can't understand how all these places survive. But then you look in and you think, well, they have all the people in them so, you know.

Alan: What it is too, they don't realize that you've been trained to be helpless in an emergency. And what d'you do if that… And look at them now with all these restaurants folding, eh, deliberately getting put under. Woah.

Neil: It's not just the mom-and-pop's that are going under either. A lot of these, the Dunkin' Donuts, McDonald's, Burger King, they're all closing hundreds of stores all over the country. It's not just the small ones. But of course, that's just consolidation isn't it, and sharing amongst themselves, the big chains, I guess.

Alan: Yes. M-hm.

Neil: It will only be them left. But I guess when it's only them left they could put up the prices again, just make it even harder to eat out, if that's all you've got.

Alan: That's what they want. You see, they don't plan on going back to a consumer society where you've got a variety of choices in buying things and so on. So, they're actually fulfilling it with using Covid as an excuse, you see. So this is the post consumer society. Of course the new industrial revolution is not replacing it with anything to help you.

Neil: Well, it's not replacing it with industry.   It's not replacing it with industry, so I don't know why it's even called an Industrial Revolution. It's I guess a revolution to destroy industry, I guess, put it that way.

Alan: Yes. And also, to fool people, you know. You see, everybody's waiting, oh they're going to replace it with something. No, no. This is a complete ultimate... The Club of Rome years ago, you know, in their publications from the very beginning actually have said that democracy does not work. Now, they work on behalf of the elites that run the WEF. They said that they'd have to bring in a system of authoritarianism, get things done, and that the old system was gone. The old system of work is gone, commerce is gone, you know. They'd replace it with a new system of emergency powers basically. That's what they're talking about. And you're in it now. I was going to say, they published their books starting off about the 1970s onwards, reiterating the same thing.

Neil: I left school in 1979 and we were told then that, look forward to the future because you'll have lots of leisure time, a paperless society, blah blah blah, all this stuff.

Alan: That's right. [Chuckles]

Neil: What they don't mention is you'd have leisure because you wouldn't have a job and you'd be starving. [Chuckles] We're going to have plenty of leisure time, it's just that you won't be able to have any leisure because you'll be constantly struggling to survive. They left that bit out.

Alan: Yeah. And that's what it is. But as I say, the West has been under attack, a deliberate planned, with a massive bureaucracy working it like a battle plan at the higher levels. There's no doubt about it. What's happening now is what they said, that the people would not all go along with the climate agreement, it would take too long, so we need to get a more stricter measures to bring it in. Well, Covid came along, that's it, that's the invention for it.

Neil: It seems that the, we mentioned just the last time we spoke, it seems to be the old rich colonies that are bearing the brunt of this at the moment.

Alan: Isn't that interesting, yeah.

Neil: Do you think some of these Eastern European countries, I think we've touched on this before, last time as well, but I don't know if you know in Bulgaria for the last, I saw this report the other day there, for 70 days anyway they've been in the streets, and tens of thousands of people been turning up every demonstration calling for the resignation of the Prime Minister or the president or whatever he's called. As far as I was, I met that guy once when he opened the bridge up near where I was living and dug the first sod and all that kind of thing. He was an ex-Mafia gangster's bodyguard. So that's the caliber of the heads there. But they wanted him out because he'd sold, they reckoned that he'd sold them out to the Mafia basically. I'm not sure which Mafia they were talking about, whether it was the European Union or not, just the elites or whatever.

Alan: The CIA runs the Mafia over there. Yeah, they do. Again, the money that flows from the EU to make the roads and so on never gets there. It's always put in the papers they're going to build this road and so many millions or whatever. It all disappears very, very quickly into these organizations that are the same organizations that they're using in, that even Biden's son's involved in in other parts of the area of Europe, the same organization.

Neil: As you know I was there when they were building the bridge over the Danube, and I walked on that. The Bulgarian workers were getting paid half the amount of money that was on their contracts and the rest of it went into the back pocket of the company, FCC, a Spanish company, which runs recycling, and there's lots of them even over here. I'm beginning to wonder if that's what they built the bridge with, recycled stuff, because it's falling apart already. It's only been there 10 years.

Alan: It probably is. Yeah.

Neil: Yeah, that was going on back then and it was pretty obvious it was all corrupt. Again, like you said, it was hundreds of millions of euros spent on this thing.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: [Chuckles] And where that went, I don't know.

Alan: The whole idea in this massive EU, again, is a front where the commission at the top is pretty secretive, most folk don't even know who's in it. You don't get to vote them in, you know. They have the fake ones down below that are the politicians that can't even pass laws.

Neil: Yeah, I think they get about 10 minutes a year to talk, something like that.

Alan: Yeah. That's right, 10 minutes. [Chuckles] And well-paid for 10 minutes, absolutely. But it's a complete farce. It's a farce. Even a lot of the Soviet dissidents talked about it and says this is the REAL Soviet system, it's beyond what the old Soviet system used to be. Totally corrupt at the top. It's a different agenda than the people will ever fathom out at all. Everything we live in today that's over us is there for a different reason, and it's part of a massive, it's like a big octopus idea or a spider's web, all connected across the world. When you look at the Ukraine for instance as I say with the farces going on there, when you hear the people talking involved in the areas there, they all blame America and the CIA.

Neil: So does Bulgaria. So does Bulgaria.

Alan: Yep. Sure.

Neil: That's what they're told to believe.

Alan: It's interesting too, getting back to Norman Dodd, you know, and the Reese Commission and all the rest of it in the 1950s. They talked about all these nongovernmental organizations, that are massive armies really, with the leaders who live with pensions, you know, full, like life pensions. These aren't little charitable... These are massive armies that can be mobilized at any time across the whole planet. And the CIA has got its fingers in everything. That's what Dodd and all the rest of them wondered about, what is the CIA? You know? It's never been explained yet. But it's part of the MI6, it's CIA, it's Mossad, it's a few other ones too, all combined. It's one massive system that really works on behalf of this real global elite at the top to plan the future. And they use every country in turn to help push its agenda and then they collapse it behind them. They collapsed Britain long ago, now they're going to collapse America.

Neil: Do you think these Eastern European type countries, who should still remember living under tyranny before...

Alan: Yes.

Neil: ...and a lot of them on the streets now… I mean the elderly people as well who you know were repressed under Stalin, getting rolled out in wheelchairs and all sorts of things to protest. I mean, do you think those, are those countries that still instill that knowledge onto their children, and the children are probably a lot more politically aware than people in the West generally.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: They don't buy the newspapers. They know the newspapers are all propaganda. You know, the villages don't even sell newspapers. That's how much they disrespect them.

Alan: Sure.

Neil: But do you think they, I mean, it used to be I think, believe that America could be the big stumbling block, you know, because of the weapons, etc. But I can't see that happening, as we have just spoken about, they could take the guns off people that easily using food and water. But do you think the countries where the populations do get out in large numbers, and who aren't armed, is that going to possibly be the, like in Eastern Europe particularly where they can actually remember history, they are going to be the ones to stand up?

Alan: They have the potential to do it, absolutely. The potential is there. They still have, although they've been getting hammered too, they still have more intact family units, you know. Not all together. They're getting attacked as well. It's the same cultural changes that are forced upon them by the way. But you'll notice that Putin over the last few years has been kicking out all the different NGOs that have been doing the same old stuff as the color revolutions types and the Pussy Riots and going to churches and destroying churches. When you see the same MOs, and by the way it was the same MO they were using for the ISIS fronts across the Middle East, the churches were getting absolutely massacred and destroyed. Churches that were going way back to about 100 A.D., you know, totally destroyed. With utter hatred. Utter hatred. Planned. And taxpayers money from Britain and the States funded all that stuff, you know, to happen. Well, you're seeing the same thing across Europe. You're looking at this strange conglomerate at the top, as I say, of special secretive agencies and so on funding and managing all this kind of stuff. But Putin saw it all and he says no way any he kicked them out as enemies of the state. And that's what they should be declared here at home as well.

Neil: Well, it's not just Christianity being attacked. They recently announced they were going to make the Hagia Sophia in Istanbul...

Alan: Yep.

Neil: ...into a museum. And I can't understand why there's not been more protesting on that even.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: It's incredible. I've been there and you can't see that in any other context than being a place of worship.

Alan: That's right.

Neil: You know, you're not going to go in there and say, oh this is a nice museum. No, it's a huge part of the culture there.

Alan: Sure it is.

Neil: I just don't understand why they'd allow that to happen. I think, was it Putin or one of the others, one of the Middle Eastern countries said that they couldn't believe that that was being allowed to go ahead. I can't remember who it was. But yeah, again, talk about religion, students, young people that they have no ties to religion anymore.

Alan: No.

Neil: I say particularly in the UK, maybe more so in the States in the more rural areas, but certainly not in the UK.

Alan: Something the people should remember, whether they like it or not, you know, it's nothing to do with liking something. The elites of the show that you're seeing today at the top that run it, the ones who manage it, the long-term strategy, you know, because this is a very old war, you know. Their biggest ENEMY for centuries was religion, especially Christianity. That was their BIGGEST enemy, you know. All the planks, even in Communism that they had to follow, the destruction of the family unit and so on and man and wife and so on, was held together by the religious social sphere, you see. That's why it's always been first to get knocked off. Once you knock that out of the way, everything is easier to demolish underneath it.

Neil: It opens the door for all the ills to come in, I guess.

Alan: It's a big idea. This is a term, this is their terminology, a big idea. Bush Senior used this in his new world order speech, remember, you can look it up online. He said, I see a new world order coming in to view, and he said, it's a big idea. Bush Junior 10 years later said exactly almost the same speech, new world order. And the same date by the way, you know. You're looking at part of the esoteric dictation that they put out for their own members across the world. No reporter even picked it up and says, what did they mean by a new world order, you know, really, what's he talking about, a new world order, who's new world order, what new big idea?

Mao Tse-Tung, because these are all parts of the same revolutionary parties that do the left-hand path, right-hand path, they work together, the dialectic, you see. Mao Tse-Tung said he wasn't afraid of anything. He says, all power comes from the barrel of a gun. But when he was asked if anything made him afraid, he says, he's only afraid of a big idea. You see, his enemy can have a big idea too. Because the one thing that united folk and culture was religion. And once you have that behind you, you're unstoppable.

Neil: Yeah, I got that, that was pretty obvious back in Jerusalem when the Muslims, Christians, everybody live together, side-by-side, no problem at all. Until the establishment decided that they wanted to start causing trouble amongst them and they couldn't. I mean, the worst thing that could possibly happen to the elites I guess is if all the religions in the world turned around and said, right, enough of this, we're now going to get together and...

Alan: You see, here's the key, Neil. People can argue politics until the cows come home, if they even have cows in the future, you know.

Neil: [Chuckles]

Alan: But the thing is, and they can argue all kinds of facts and factoids and theories and so on. But if everyone has the feeling of something bigger than themselves, that's a power, you see, way above arguments, you know. Folk will go to the end for that particular backing, of something bigger than themselves. That's the big idea.

Neil: We talked about good and evil the last time and whether you're religious or not, you should all know the difference between good and evil.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: And evil, I think we mentioned this, like it's an entity, if you like.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: And physically manifests itself in people, and you can see it in the way they look, in the way they, that look in their eye, that psychopathic kind of thing. [Chuckles]

Alan: [Chuckles] Have you seen the meltdowns that they've put up there, some of the women, when Ginsberg died there?

Neil: I've seen some of that but, it's just madness. It's almost like North Korea.

Alan: They even introduced the meltdowns when Trump got in the first time, you know.

Neil: Well, it was the same with Obama.

Alan: That's not normal. I mean, that's not normal behavior.

Neil: No.

Alan: It's beyond rational.

Neil: People see that happening in North Korea when one of the leaders dies or something and they're all standing there weeping. And they think, ah, look at that, they've just made them do that, you know, that's all fake. But no, maybe it's not. It's not, maybe they are just totally insane.

Alan: Yeah.

Neil: You know?

Alan: Yeah, if people have an actual, actual belief in something bigger than themselves, that's the one thing that tyrants are terrified of. That's the one thing. It can overwhelm all common sense. You see, people would use this idea of common sense, well they've got all the guns, they've got all this power over us, they've got… But if folk have something to live for, here's the key, is to live FOR, that's bigger than just themselves, then nothing is going to stop them if they get on the march.

Neil: Yeah. It's like even the one guy in Tiananmen Square who stood in front of the tank.

Alan: Yes, absolutely.

Neil: And dared them to run him over. And the guy in the tank I'm sure was as brainwashed as the rest of the military, but he must've got something in his ear telling him, you'd better not do this...

Alan: [Chuckles]

Neil: ...or they're going to be all over your tank, and you're going to be dragged out in the street. That's what it takes, it takes people to stand up and as you say, keep saying no, no, no, all the time. To anything. And don't justify it.

Alan: They don't get it here, that they've been played as suckers since this thing started, you see. Oh, just a few weeks. Oh, just a few months. Oh, just, oh, a few more months. And this is to go on for years by the way, you know. And you're going to, you can't keep saying, oh maybe they'll back off and be kinder down the road. No, no, no. Don't start, don't go there. They lied from the beginning, they're going to lie right through it, and it's going to get more and more evil, and evidently evil as time goes on. Until you're too weak to do anything about it.

Neil: Yeah. Well, they'll back off a little bit if enough people start protesting, and then they'll come back later on and just push it again and push it again. Because people, people tend to, you know, they’ll get one step forward but then they very quickly take two steps back again.

Alan: Yes. It's all psychological warfare, massively so. They spent billions, billions of dollars just on psychology and behaviorists to put this whole program across to the public, you know. So yeah, they've tried to think of every possible way to con us. Don't forget, at the beginning this strange character Fauci who literally worked with the [chuckles] the viruses that were sent over to Wuhan, you know. I mean, you couldn't make this up in a bad movie. Here he is, he told you at the beginning, he says, life will never go back to normal. What part of you that don't you understand?

Neil: He must be clairvoyant.

Alan: You see, we live in hope. Yeah, we live in hope, you see, that it's going to, of something that's familiar to us. But they've already told us, it's not going to go back to normal.

Neil: I mean there's so much evidence coming out now and that's what started it off, the guy from Pfizer, that you've got people, one on Sky News even in Australia questioning the numbers and all this, and why there's any need for lockdowns and all that.

Alan: Yes.

Neil: Maybe they're just covering their own backside, who knows?

Alan: Oh, it's much bigger than that. They're not going to; they are NOT going to... I tell you, there's no way they're just going to back off. Unless the public, that's it.

Neil: Again, oh yeah, I mean of course the public is influenced by the television and maybe, maybe it's going to be like, what's his name, the clip from Network...

Alan: Yes.

Neil: ...where he says, you know, you are reality, you are reality, not the television, you are reality. And stir the people up that way, I don't know. I said to Paula, maybe people just need to stop throwing bricks at, you know, mom-and-pop restaurants, they need to take over the TV stations and put some real information out and see where that goes.

Alan: Yeah, really. What's coming down the pike is a long-term agenda, that was planned for years and years and worked out, every single part of it, consequences, reactions to every single part, like a massive chess game. They've implemented it. And they are dead serious. Now they'll go overboard. They're going to do head cracking in the streets shortly, you know. Terrify the public even more. This is a terror campaign.

This is what the brutality of tyranny happens to turn into. It's to get folk to comply. They'll do brutal, brutal things to make sure you all see it, to comply. And as that happens, that's when you start going after these goons. What was it, don't forget what Solzhenitsyn said? He said, when the NKVD, you know, used to come in the middle of the night and grab people out of their homes and so on. He says, they would often only be 4 to 6 of them at a time. we should have grabbed clubs, axes, pickaxes, everything, and gone for them right on the spot at the beginning, he says, and it would have stopped it right there.

Neil: Yeah. I think it was, he also said something about when you see that car parked in the street under the lampposts, you need to get out there and drag that guy out of his car and give him a good saying-to basically.

Alan: Yes. They were disappearing people and slaughtering millions over many years. Millions of folk were slaughtered.

Neil: And he mentioned the people peeking out behind the curtains as cowards, they should have been out there stopping it...

Alan: That's right

Neil: ...when they had the chance to do it. Then, well, we all know what happened.

Alan: Yep.

Neil: Well, we've done our two hours again, Alan, very quickly.

Alan: Oh yeah, it's short, eh?

Neil: Yeah. So where does that leave us? Saying no, I guess, saying no, no, no.

Alan: I said it in the 1990s, 1998 I think I says, I gave a talk on it, what was coming down the pike and I says, you got to learn to use NO. We've been trained to be compliant, to be nice and decent, and to our own detriments. You've got to start saying no, that's it.

Neil: I think it's more important as well that when you say no, you just walk away, and you leave it at that. You don't even indulge in a conversation about it, you just walk off and leave them standing there wondering what to say next.

Alan: Also when it comes to seeing people getting grabbed on the streets for whatever it happens to be, you've got to get the numbers and badge numbers of all the cops involved. Because these, they must all get fired. You must start taking action collectively to get these characters, you know, out of uniform.

Neil: Absolutely. I did see one clip from Trafalgar Square at the weekends where this, she looked like a middle-aged woman dressed in a business suit, and four or five of these thugs just got around her, threw her around the place like a pinball machine and then just threw her to the ground. And nobody... nobody did anything.

Alan: This is intentional terrorization. That's what I'm talking about, this is intentional. They want the public to see that to make you terrified it might happen to you.

Neil: Yep. Yep.

Alan: That's when you nip it right in the bud, now, you know.

Neil: Yep. Yep. Okay well, on that jolly note...

Alan: [Chuckles]

Neil: [Chuckles] What can you say, I mean sometimes you just got to laugh, and marvel at it.

Alan: You do.

Neil: And marvel at it in some sense because it's genius. You can't knock them. They thought this out pretty well.

Alan: They had all the time in the world to do it, and all the money, all our money to do it too. Yeah.

Neil: Yeah. But it's got to be stopped and that's the end of it.

Alan: Yep.

Neil: So okay, well, pleasure talking to you again.

Alan: Well, you take care of yourself.

Neil: Always informative. Okay, so with that we'll sign off and be back on, what day is this, Wednesday, we'll be back on Sunday with news and views. With that we'll say goodbye.

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

Moral High Ground for Dummies:

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on January 5, 2020. Ooooo-ooo, scary to say that isn't it? I used to always find that even at school, it's amazing how some things just give you flashbacks to different eras. I used to find it odd that we'd all, pretty well the whole class would try and stay a year behind when it was a change over time, you'd automatically put down the year as it had just been. And nothing really changes.

I think it's probably trepidation in society, especially the way that we are managed and conditioned to live under forms of fear of one kind or another, mainly from government authorities really, and their agencies, there's lots of agencies working with government authorities as you well know. Even newspapers are part of the structure.

Years and years ago I gave talks on that from different professors, including Quigley who talked about The Anglo-American Establishment and how they got Britain ready for World War II by terrifying the public that they're all going to get gassed, number one, by the Germans, and bombed out of their houses across the whole country. And to make the people… You've got to understand we're treated like a herd. And there's no time more obvious than even now as we get the same repetitions, of the same quotes in fact, of the previous wars for the last 25 - 30 years really all across the Middle East mainly and parts of Africa too. But it's fascinating to see the same quotes, you know, given to the public to terrify you, really. Which is really meant to make you behave and knuckle down as they call it.

And it's so sad, here we are in a brand-new year again, it doesn't even feel optimistic as we say. It hasn't been optimistic for a long time for most people. Because we are in a stagnation mode and it's intentional, it's managed. Folk have no idea how managed things really are. We think we're making our own decisions. We think that we're doing what we want to do, right down to even fashions. I used to give talks on that because it is fascinating how every generation thinks this is their time.

The youth are always used, always used for big agendas and they never know it themselves. They think they're making their own decisions and they're given false leaders who are well educated, way above the average person they're going to lead in fact, at least educated in their mission, which is to change society in a predicted manner for the authorities, or for the elites. And nothing has changed there. Except there's way more of them than there used to be. And awfully well-paid in fact, pretending that they are you.

I can remember a long time ago when they used the pop then the rock industry as a form of revolution. And it was meant to be that. Of course it was. Gerry Marsden, I remember him talking a long time ago, who had a few hits, and you had Gerry Nipsey, The Pacemakers, that were happy-happy songs, girl/boy type songs and that was quite normal up until then. He was talking about the change that came in with the seriousness with the Beatles and so on when they started getting serious and political. And it changed everything. The old fun stuff was tossed out the window. Because after all, the society was to change. They didn't want boy/girl getting married type of thing. They wanted a big… they wanted dysfunctions in society, to change it, and to try to reduce marriages, etc. The communist idea of course. Communism, there's different fronts for the same thing, different terms for the same thing as you well know.

But it is quite amazing to think that every generation, as I say, thinks they're doing their own thing. Nothing's further from the truth. Nothing at all is further from the truth. I used to wonder even at school looking at the old paintings of people who ran countries in Europe, including Britain too, who used to wear wigs, and tights, you know, tights, silk stockings, for the upper crust and so on. Vastly different of course from the majority of the people who were the working class, but the ones who rule them, with their buckles on their shoes and their silver stockings and their wigs and their handkerchiefs and that tucked into their bottoms of their sleeves and all that. And they wore rouge and things, eh… And this was the manly thing. You'd say, well wait a minute, who brought this stuff in here? Who brought it in? And a lot of it was brought in from France that was way ahead of most countries at that time, for leisure and lifestyles of the leisure as they called it. And unfortunately, the ones who ran Britain also adopted that too, that whole idea. And I'm sure to they thought that they were making their own decisions on what they were going to wear. It's all laid down for you.

When I was really small, I looked [Alan laughing.] at, I remember watching little clips on Mao Tse Tung, or you'd see him in the newspapers with his blue tunic type outfit on, the collarless idea. Very similar in fact to the Beatles uniform that they came out with, that they were given too. They didn't design anything of course. But part of their make up was to have this kind of outfit, the Beatles' suits that didn't have the real collar on it. Where the Mao Tse Tung one was the one that Hillary Clinton likes to wear at times even today. It's a collar that goes up, more like a priest collar, only it's just partly the blue outfit of the tunic. And they had the blue pants on to match it.

The idea, you see, under comradeship, everyone would be the same. This would help to eliminate the class system. That's also why they pushed for the elimination of school uniforms, you know. And so, you'd all be the same basically, so, they give you basically a tunic type outfit to wear. And in the West when I saw people who were older than me wearing the jeans, jeans, jeans, that was all the fad for the youth, and they had bell bottom jeans too for them. But the fact they were jeans, jeans, jeans, and again, they were blue, kind of like Mao Tse Tung's outfit. They even gave blue Levi type jackets you could get as well. So, your uniform really looks much the same as, maybe a bit better made or whatever than the communist system. But folk never figured it out, they just wore it. You see, they'd buy it and wear it thinking you're making your own decisions, you're trendy, you're in and all that kind of stuff. But that's how it's managed. We're managed by big, big powers.

And if you remember that the whole idea, and I'm sorry to jump into this just off the bat, I was going to say to you first of all I hope you all got over your new year and didn't get too wasted or whatever you did or ate too much. Because you're liable to do that, probably now out of panic. [Alan laughing.] Because you really don't see much good coming down the pike. It's like Groundhog Day, as I say, as we wake up to repetition of the wars with the same excuses by the same people's and so on.

But yeah, when you think about decisions and what you do and all the rest of it, you have no idea of the incredible powers that work to manage you all. You think about even the computer. I mean, they used to joke at one time in the early sci-fi's, well, early, you know, early-ish sci-fi's, from the 1960s you can see them and sometimes 1970s. Britain did a few like that where they'd have this alien creature that was like mainly a big brain and maybe a few tentacles coming out. But it was just stuck in a… it was stuck in a big chair type deal. And I thought as a child, I thought, you know, the authorities would be awfully happy to have us all stuck in chairs.

Because I knew already, and I knew enough of the war, the last war, at that time it was World War II and the Korean War, the authorities on all sides had restrictions on travel, as an example, and you're supposed to live in your own community. In the Soviet system, that was really way ahead of its time with its restrictions and so on, and you must stay within your little community area. But they even had curfews on at night and things like that. And I thought, wouldn't it be, I guess the whole idea would be to have us all stuck in a chair, and in some of the Sci-Fi's they had the withering away, even articles about it, well eventually our legs would wither away because you wouldn't be using them anymore in the future.

They're not too far off the mark, really. [Alan chuckles.] I think you look at the, back in the 70s they had a big splurge of Japanese workmen's accommodation. They were like hives, just big buildings, with crawl in type places where you could sleep. There's their little bed, and their (unintelligible) is on the floor. And up in the corner they'd have a little TV, miniature TV set and so on. These were set up for workmen at the time. And China probably had the same things too. We all looked upon it with curiosity, wondering how folk can manage that. They said, well these are workers, and they can be transient type workers and working in construction here and then maybe another city in a month or two's time. So, they set these things up for them. And it was… They were all quite happy, and they all said that, they're really happy because it's their little private compartments, even though you couldn't stand up in them.

When you think about it, step by step by step you're getting trained into the smaller and smaller units. By our masters of course who… when you're in a socialist system, experts run your lives. But the intention is not to let you think that they're running your life. The whole point, you might react to it, you see. So an idea is almost, morphs, [Alan chuckles.] it almost morphs through the ether to you, through bits and bytes of information, and you're programed. You are programmed to do what they want you to do, and to behave the same way too.

That’s always been the goal, the ultimate goal of the true Soviet Man, remember. The Soviet Man, and Woman, eventually wouldn’t even have money, wouldn’t need money. That was the idea too. Credits might be the way, but you wouldn’t really need it because you’d all be so well behaved. Ultimately. There’d be no greed. Because all, eventually all your needs would be supplied to you, in massive warehouse type factory style stores. Which we have now of course, but this is way back then they talked about it. They even talked in Marxism about having one factory that could supply the shoes for the whole Soviet system, just one factory. Another factory could be built to supply all the lightbulbs of the whole Soviet Union and Europe and so on.

And you say, well we gave it all to China. Huh? You think that was all coincidence or something…? we make nothing here now? What I’m saying is, there’s nothing happens by itself. And it’s not just coincidence over and over and over. No, it’s not at all. And above all the hubble-bubble of toil and trouble of wars and everything else and economic crashes, etc., above it all there’s a global structure managing it all of this. There really is.

You’re supposed to be kept down on a lower strata of understanding, just the basic fear mode of wars, and Middle East, and bombs and things like that. You see, that’s where you’re supposed to be stuck. You’re not supposed to understand the higher stuff above it all. And you’ll never understand anything unless you do. You must understand that each time you want to go and do something, think, who would approve of me doing what I’m going to do? You see? And who would disapprove of me doing what I’m just about to do? You see?

And because you can’t see people directly, doesn’t mean you’re not getting manage by them. Of course you are. You’re getting managed every day by them. If you’re on the computer for instance, you’re being prompted what to look at. You’re being prompted of what a good person is supposed to be, and don’t look at that, oh bad people look at this, or whatever it happens to be. You know, you’re constantly being managed and monitored of course. It’s astonishing. It’s absolutely astonishing, really, how easy it is to train the public, to be what your elite want you to be.

Now, for example, in repetition, because we’re trained by repetition in a sense, where things work, and they do studies on everything we do and what we think and how we react to things, and they know what works on us, you see, behaviorists and psychologists, etc. Especially with the Internet, and in real time, they can put out a fake or whatever meme they want to do and watch everybody react to it and chat and so on. They do instant studies by algorithms, etc., and they’re pretty accurate on what works.

But I was amused to see the same kind of rhetoric being used by Donald Trump… because it’s written for him by his scriptwriters, you know. And it was the same things that Obama came out with too, written by his scriptwriters. And way back to George Bush with the first, with the Gulf War, well, with Operation Iraqi Freedom, right. [Alan chuckles.] Where, the media had cleverly altered step-by-step, and it was a psychological operation which was admitted later by the way, massive scale. Once they got the war going in Afghanistan, which was on the list of course before it all happened with the twin towers, after a while they managed to, took them a year to start to shift the sites, for the public to think that Saddam Hussein in Iraq had something to do with it. Which he didn’t, of course.

But what was interesting, during the inquiry afterwards, once they’d put Iraq back into the Stone Age, which was the agenda by the way, written. I gave talks about it at the time because I know that, read articles by Brzezinski who had confabs with his pal Kissinger about it and Kissinger said that the main intention for this kind of war against Iraq and other countries in the list, which is the PNAC group. He said, the main intention was to so destroy the nation of Iraq, as an example, that it could never ever formulate again together as a nation, they would create so many factions afterwards they could never be a stable nation again. Then they’d be no threat to any particular country around them basically. And that’s never changed, that’s what’s happened to this present day.

But what was interesting, during the inquiry afterwards, afterwards, it was like a very informal inquiry about it when they said to George Bush, why did you attack Iraq? And he said, well you know… you tried to infer, they said, that you inferred that he was behind 9/11. George Bush quite honestly said, you know, one of the few times that they’re honest, when they’re very cocky, you know. He said, oh I never said that Saddam Hussein had anything to do with America being attacked, he said that, he was just a bad man and the world is better off without him. And a big smile on his face.

You pretty well heard the same thing, the same type… You see, these are psychological responses written by experts who just look up in the book, the manual, in what do you use in this circumstance, what do you use? … this, this works with the public. And then we heard that just the other day there after the US took out an Iranian military leader, and there’s Trump saying the same thing, well he was a bad man, he was responsible for lots of death, blah blah blah and so on.

So, being a bad man, no judge, jury or trial, nothing, you know. Being a bad man according to world leaders, remember, who got complete militaries under their fingers, supposedly, and with buttons and the whole bit, can just decide who’s bad and all the rest of it without any kind of public inquiry, investigation beforehand or anything else, or judge/jury. It’s just done, that’s it. That should terrify people. But it never does really.

Folk, folk except everything very quickly, most of the people anyway. It's like déjà vu all over and over and over, or Groundhog Day, you just keep seeing the same things over and over again. The same tactics are used. The same excuses are used. Because they're all from the excuse manual. It's psychological warfare operations. That's what you tell the public in this circumstance. They'll make it as… Don't get too elaborate with your reasons because then you can shoot holes in why you did it. So, make it very simple, and as obscure as possible. Don't tell them much, you see.

That's what you get right now. Because the object is nothing to do with just killing one person. It's... You've got to look at the techniques of embargoes, right. The embargoes with Iraq before they decimated Iraq was bad enough. They had Madeleine Albright and other ones on the head of the board at NATO supposedly, security councils, etc. She was asked when they had an embargo, and folk were starving to death, and children were starving to death, and they couldn't get medicines and or anything like that. They'd already destroyed, by the way, some of the big medical pharmaceutical facilities already. All infrastructure eventually was to be just destroyed. But before they totally did it, they said that they tried to starve the folk into submission.

Now, you think about it. If you truly had a bad man, a bad man, you know, just running your country, how would you feel if some country starved you to death and all that? And stopped, and literally couldn't/didn't allow you to sell anything abroad to get money coming into the country to feed yourselves? How would you feel if it happened to you because there was a bad man, you know, running you? Think about it.

So, let's slaughter the whole bunch of the people because of a bad man and his little regime at the top, who keep everybody suppressed supposedly. That's what we're told. Even though we know Saddam Hussein at that time was a CIA asset, he'd been trained by the CIA, set up and put there by the CIA. And believe you me, that's a big warning to anybody who's used by the CIA. [Alan chuckles.] Eventually they'll use you and use you and use you until you're expendable. Then they'll use you again by having you sacrificed, you know, that's really what they'll do.

You have no friends, you see. When the CIA comes to you, believe you me, the CIA has no friends. They're... In fact it's almost to me, I like a child's mind in that children have an ability, and I used to have an ability to see people, I gave a talk about that back in the 90s too. When you hear children talking about, like a wolf, they can see in their mind's eye a person, as a child, you sense something, kind of like a dog will sense who's good and bad, that type of thing. But children can do it too, they can sense something. And they don't have the vocabulary to explain why they don't like somebody so much, but it's a sense they get. So, it's like a wolf or something, a blah blah blah.

Well, that's how you have to, you try and retain that, you should try and retain that forever through your life because it's a survival mechanism, for all of us, not to be fooled by glib talking whoever it happens to be professionals who want something from you, or they want you to do something. And you should never do it. You get a sense, this is wrong. You get a sense when, and it's more than that, it's so… it's never been so blatant for those who want to know what's going on as it is today. And it won't last long because censorship's coming down so fast, as we well know.

But Quigley, getting back to Quigley on his talk about World War II, he said that, all media in Britain, at that time in the 30s, was owned by big power moguls who literally all belong to the Royal Institute for International Affairs, this massive private club. It's the CFR in America, you see. And they decided to terrify the public, terrify them. So's that they'd get ready, you've got to… You're preparing the public to hate another country. You understand? Because they want you to eventually go and fight that country. And you don't know anything about it.

But they've been preparing us for years, it's just they want the cannon fodder, [who] are the only people who don't really know about it. So you must train the people, who were civilians and they work in grocery stores and different things like that, and train them for what's coming along the pike that they don't know themselves, the children, the youngsters, the people don't know, they're kept like children. But the ones above you are training you and training you step-by-step to hate the enemy, you see, before you even know that they are an enemy. But the ones who rule you certainly do know, and they want them eliminated.

Nothing's changed. In fact, it's even more precise today with the techniques used with mass communication right to your cell phone, or right to whatever it is, your computer or your TV, you know. You're all getting the same data at the same time, the same updates, the same programming at the same time. In order to get you ready for something, you see. So that you have the right response. Now, the right response is not turning your back and saying, I'm not going to have anything to do with this war. The right response is going into a form of shock, and fear, and so, I'll leave it to the professionals, you see, they must know what they're doing. They must know.

But see, YOU wouldn't… It's like I can remember where people in the past who are often accused of coming out with certain kinds of statements being used, but you have to, often what they're doing is using other people's statements before them, you see. So, you've got to really find out who really said it, and it's quite enlightening, it's often their enemies. But anyway, you'll find that Goebel's for instance in World War II Germany, he said that, and supposedly Adolf Hitler said it too. But they got it from previous people before them. But they said, if you're going to tell a lie, to the public, right, to get them to do something, he says, make sure it's a big lie.

Because everyone lies, you see. And right down to the innocent white lies. But everybody will lie, and people because they lie will, they can accept small lies. Oh, that's a lie by so-and-so. But if you tell them a real big, big lie that's got incredible consequences for everybody, you see, you wouldn't do that as a little liar, so you can't imagine anybody actually really going that far with a massive lie, because you wouldn't do it. And that's why they get away with it.

Nothing's changed, that's really how things really, really ARE. Tell a big lie... And that's what you've had your whole life long when it comes to war after war after war. Give big lies that are absolute nonsense. Now, you have to really stand back and say wait a minute here. People, front people, like Bush, and everyone that comes afterwards, they're all bought and paid for. Because your country, you see, is conquered. [Alan chuckles.] But the public again are not supposed to ever, ever figure that out. It's not good, you know, knowing that you're totally conquered, you might get some real resistance then. So, you have to keep the sham going that somehow you're in a democracy, even if you're really in a republic, it doesn't matter.

But when they have the front man saying, you know, oh it's a good thing, you know we're better off without this person or that person. And they've just spent millions of dollars with either attack drones or something or whatever just to kill somebody. It's quite… It should be rather frightening, really, when you think about it. Because we know we're going, we ARE IN, we're not just going into a more tyrannical controlled society, we're IN it. But it's going to progress.

Years ago, I imagined even having little drones, remember, I read the articles in fact where the Pentagon admitted they paid millions of dollars for experimental tiny drones that look like birds for instance. They even showed you little clips and videos of experimental ones they had, little robotic things that could spy on people, that's what it was about. Some of them are like the vampire ones, little bats for more desk type scenarios or uses. And other ones were birds, that could recharge just like your cell phones. Some of the cell phone ones can park and do that by sitting on electrical lines above the ground, or even telephone lines they could actually get, recharge themselves off those lines by sitting on the field, electrical field around it.

They had wonderful little things like birds that could follow you along the street and nick into the door if you're going into an apartment building, just behind you, and even crawl on the walls and things like that. This is years ago they had this kind of stuff, you see. Because the society you're going into, that we are into actually, as I say, is a monitored controlled society. That's the reason you were really given the computer by the way. It wasn't to help you out. It was to completely monitor everybody, everybody eventually on the planet except the ones who rule you. They've got exemptions from it in fact. They have a different Internet system in fact.

But for the rest of the public you see, you've got to be totally controlled and predictable. Utterly predictable. So here we go, going through the next series of wars. To me honestly, it's like a nightmare. I remember giving these talks so long ago, and it's just repetition because it's the same list of countries that have to be taken out. Years can pass if they can’t get their way. And I'm going to give lectures on it because, and I certainly could. But years have passed, and they didn't quite pull it off on all those countries that were on the list of the PNAC group. So they keep going and keep going. If it takes another 20 years to do it, they'll do it. But they're determined now with Trump. That's why they put Trump in by the way, if you didn't figure that out. They put him in to accomplish the task of the PNAC group. That's why he's surrounded by the same people basically. With the same mantras. That's why you're hearing the same mantras in fact. But it's the same bunch of countries.

I can remember back when Iraq was attacked, and it was attacked and invaded remember, by the US and Britain and a few other helpers and so on but mainly the US and Britain. It hadn't, remember, had not attacked anybody outside the US or anything like that, they hadn't done that. It was all made up. Because they were on the list of the PNAC group, that was the reason they were taken out. All the countries in that area, around that area, I'll say around, were to be demolished back to the Stone Age as I said, until they could never get together as a formidable coherent country that would pull together as a nation under times of stress and even have war making abilities, or even defense of, they could never keep unified for defense if you create too many factions.

Libya was on it too. Syria was on it as well. Yemen. And I think Saddam was on it too. It was published back in the 1990s, twice actually, and then in 1997 it was published again. Then of course the Bush group with the same PNAC members that drafted it all up were in power by then and away they went to war. It takes all this time, they're still at it.

Millions have died here. Millions of people. And you'd better say millions, when they starved, again with embargoes, which are hellish things, they stop you from importing, exporting, and eventually can't even feed yourself and you starve. And you’re supposed to just put up with it, hm? This is, supposedly, is a more humane way of having a war, starve the folk to death. And what they'll also say is, well you see, they're going to, that's when they force the people to destabilize their own country and overthrow the tyrant, you see, the tyrant being whoever it happens to be running their country.

Well, all I remember is, you never heard much about Syria before. You never heard much about Libya. Not really. A lot of rhetoric in the papers, it was good for rhetoric, you know. And you also had, Iraq was fairly quiet, for years. It was all the different tiny little factions that could explode were all kept under by strongman, and that's how you kept them working, these countries working, you had to have a strong man in charge. Once you eliminate them all, well, look what happened. That was intentional, to destabilize them all. Not to help anybody. Or help them, [Alan chuckles.] not the people. No, no, nothing to do with that at all folks. Nope, not at all. We all know what's going on here.

But I can remember Madeleine Albright, as I said, mentioned before, when she was asked on television, that at that time with the embargoes on Iraq, before they went into totally bomb them into the Stone Age. Basically the embargoes alone, they said, you know, it's killed half a million people so far with starvation and disease and they can't even get medications or even vitamins in. And they said, is it worth it? And she says, oh yes absolutely, yeah.

These are the psychopaths. You should be very afraid of these characters. They remind me more of strange insects. An insect, you see, is programmed, it can't be any other way. An insect has no affinity for anything around it or anything that's going to eat even other insects. It just does, it's programmed. And that's what these characters... You can't, I can't relate to them, I really honestly can't, as being human. I can't relate to them at all. And if these characters are in charge over very authoritarian regimes, which are getting worse and worse, you should be very, very afraid of it and therefore stop it from happening. Honestly. Because it's getting all around you now. And it never ends up nicely. It ends up as a horror show eventually.

It starts off with, don't think this, don't say that, what made you asked that question, dut, dut, dut, dut, dut, you see. That's how it all starts off. And then targeting different segments of society. And that's why the white folk are getting hammered right now. For what? For existing? [Alan chuckles.]   Most white folk honestly are descended from people who never ever had it good at all.

In reality too, embargoes are meant to provoke the country, your target, into attacking, to break out of the embargo and attacking the ones that are causing it. The idea being to have your virtue as an aggressor... All we did was stop them from eating, you know, and getting food in, that's all we did. So when a real physical attack happens against you, you can still stand up and say, well you know, we didn't want this to happen, we've tried other methods. Meaning starving them to death, you know. Think about it. What would you do?

This is what happened to Germany too before World War II. It might have been a completely different outcome and no war at all if there had been concessions and all the rest of it. Don't forget that Germany at that time was put out there, even by Time Magazine, Hitler was put as The Man of the Year in 1933 or so. So don't forget, you can goad and goad people into absolutely desperate actions as well. Desperation. And that's what's happening right now with Iraq.

I can remember as I say the first attack they had with Iraq, certain elements that would benefit from having enemies wiped out, said, told the US presidents, don't stop there, go right across through Libya and into Syria. They were telling... This was in the newspapers by the way. [Alan chuckles.] It was amazing to see the US being told what to do. And it didn't quite work out that way. So, they had to go back to using proxy armies, mercenaries, financed, made up mercenaries to attack Syria, and in fact to eventually take out Libya as well. And again, Libya definitely has gone. That's why it's got so much migration because Qaddafi did keep masses, you know, that's what he said, if you finish me off it's the only wall to stop Africa from invading the whole of Europe. That's what he said. And it's true, you have to look up see what happened, and who is getting money to try and divert mass migration from going across into Europe. So, it took a Qaddafi, guaranteeing that Europe would be completely changed forever. And that has happened, folks. You're looking at a chessboard here. But you just don't see the players, do you? But there's definitely players way above you, way, way above all this making it happen.

But anyway, the US is, here they go again. So, the same old thing. You embargo the nation. You forced them to retaliate. Even goad them into it by bombing someone who was part of the militias to try and keep the stabilization process going inside Iraq. Iraq had invited them in by the way, you know. We've got to remember this. They invited some of the Shiite commanders in with their military to work alongside the militias inside Iraq to try and keep the peace. Then you go and… So you are guaranteed retaliation. That's what they're after now, retaliation.

And don't forget too, the US, and Trump said it too, with Syria when they were supposed to have been pulled out of Syria, also have got troops with the oilfields. We've still got the oil. WHY is the US keeping a nation's oil supply from them? This is the nation's, it's part of their, it's part of the income to keep the country going. Do you understand what's happening here? It's plunder. Of course, it's plunder.

How can you have the upper hand and be on the moral high ground when you're plundering across...? I remember giving the talks when Tony Blair, the one-man band for international supposed socialism, ha-ha, wanted war in the Middle East with Iraq. I can remember it. Then I remember warning people about it, eventually you find out that there's going to be a big, big looting operation. Then a few years later I remember reading the articles on the air where it was admitted. They always tell you a few years later, you know. The newspapers in Britain said that, that Tony Blair had invited some of the top moguls for oil, the oil industry, the big ones, the big corporations in before they attacked direct, to divvy up who would get which oilfields to themselves. A big looting organization. I mean, this is plunder, folks. It's plunder.

TERROR IN BRITAIN: WHAT DID THE PRIME MINISTER KNOW? - johnpilger.com / 31 May 2017

Let's be honest. There's no moral high ground here at all. It's a big business. And really, nothing much has changed. At one time we thought with World War I and II, and in the Cold War, there was a moral idea to the forces, that's why guys would join the forces. Because they didn't want a repetition of major world wars. And now you have the big bad bear looking at you, even though the West created the big bad bear from the start and funded communism, and funded and fed them even after the Bolshevik revolutions. The best enemies that money can buy, as they say. Or buy and create. Well, nothing's changed.

Just as a sideline, the same tactic is being used with China. China didn't make itself what it is. We signed agreements. I remember giving the talks years ago on it, where we signed agreements, our politicians, the politicians… They're not ours, let's be honest here. They are little nobodies, you know, little puppets. But they signed all the agreements for free trade and the WTO and so on with China, most favored nation trading status, where we'd fund them up. Our tax money would fund them, we'd put hospitals in, we'd fund even... And the governments even put ads up for the big corporations pretty well. They said, look, if you move to China we'll fund your transfer, when you move up wholesale from this country to China, we'll pay for you to move there, and anything you have to take with you even to start your factories up. And we'll train your people and pay your people to train the Chinese to take over eventually.

I can remember. This was unbelievable what was happening. So quietly. It was published but not… Most people, you see, don't think. Brzezinski said it in his book Between Two Ages, he says, the public shortly... and this is in the 1970s. He says, the public shortly will be unable to reason or think for themselves, they'll expect the media to do their reasoning for them. And they honestly do now.

The media is private, folks. It's not there to help you. It's always been politically employed by those in power to guide you along a path of least resistance for those who own you. Basically, that's what it's for. But the public do, they say, well the media will tell us what to worry about. Don't we? you know. Yeah, they often will tell you what to worry about, and it's generally nothing to do with you, you know. But things you really should worry about, they aren't going to tell you, they're not going to tell you at all.

They all knew, all the big moguls, they're in bed with the top international financiers, they all knew that they were going to crash the economy in 2007/8 but they didn't tell the public. They got all their loot out of it. They made profits off it all. M-hm. That's what runs the world.

The same gangsters that bring in the wars and demonize whoever runs little countries, so that they can loot them, and to get them out of the way so's that the people who think that they should the rule the world should be able to rule instead, you see. This is what's going on here, folks.

But it's honestly a nightmare having the same dream over and over and over, it just never ends. The same list as well. I'm going to touch on that tonight because time is going on as they say and I should really get on with it too. Now I'll just touch on this one, right. And I said this before, Iran is always the target, has been for the last... for quite a long time. And before Christmas I mentioned it too, around that time, that Iran will be next. And I said too, the impeachment will go all quiet if Trump gets the war started, because that's what he's there for. Until suddenly like magic you'll see all the media off his back and they'll start praising him. Because that's what he's been put in for, you see. Whoever does this job, as I call, the list, is going to be the hero, you see, for those who really rule you.

Impeachment trial in limbo as Senate leaders trade blows

politico.com / 3 Jan 2020

(Alan: So there's a little clue there. And this is about...)

Mitch McConnell and Chuck Schumer have made zero headway on designing a bipartisan set of rules for President Donald Trump’s impeachment trial...

In other words, they're stalling. This is the article, it says it's stalling. Well, no wonder. If he does what he supposed to be doing, you see, which is always a mystery to the public who are not in on it, if he just does what he's supposed to be doing and what he got put in for, he'll be a wonderful guy. He will. Honestly. And so that's in the cards as they say. I'll put up this article here.

So many of the original articles are disappearing like crazy, down the memory hole. That's what the Internet is for of course, as they put all your books, you see, on disk or PDF. And don't worry about it, in fact don't even keep it at home because, put it all in the cloud. And gradually everything gets censored often down the memory hole. It was all worked out that way before you were given the computer, folks. There are an awful lot of nuisance books out there, you know.

So here's an article here…

Global Warfare: “We’re Going to Take out 7 Countries in 5 Years:

(A: I've given this talk so many times before I could probably do it in my sleep. Anyway, it says...)

Iraq, Syria, Lebanon, Libya, Somalia, Sudan and Iran”

globalresearch.ca / 2 March 2007

(A: And this is the video interview with Gen. Wesley Clark who was sent over there, remember. And even he's got a history too, you should really look into it. It came out afterwards when he ran for politics, that caused a bit of a stink. But anyway, it says that...)

This interview serves as a reminder regarding the diabolical timeline of America’s hegemonic project. Is Iran the next target “to be taken out”?

As I say, this is an old article, really, put out again. Originally published in 2007, about the list. But the list came from the PNAC group from the 1990s. I'll say it again, 'eh, seven countries in five years. That was the original plan. If they kept going like I told you, the US was told to keep going, don't stop there with Iraq, keep going right through, all the way through into Syria and take them out too. But they didn't quite make it.

But anyway, it says seven countries in five years. Iraq, right. Syria. Lebanon. Libya. Somalia. Sudan and Iran. That's the list. And this is from a talk that Gen. Wesley Clark gave with Democracy Now. And the video literally, I'll put a link up, and it will vanish very quickly if you can copy it. If you can copy it and streaming, do so because as I say, things are just vanishing like you wouldn't believe. Honestly.

But that's how things work in reality and deception. Eh? That's what intelligence is, is deception. I hope you understand that. And the first people who will be deceived are their own countries population so's that you'll get on the moral high ground, on board with your governments, folks, for what they plan to do. Yep. So here you go, you've had…

Don't forget, there's people heard this their whole life. They're not that… Well, they're old enough, you know, from the 90s to the present time. This is all they've heard, the wars with the same countries, folks. The list. The list. The list. And there was no secret at the time who drew the list up. But also in this article, it's in print, right...

On Tuesday, I interviewed Wesley Clark at the 92nd Street Y Cultural Center here in New York City before a live audience...

(A: So there's even a printout of what was said, if you can't get the actual video itself... And I know it would just vanish again because every time I put these things up they vanish, the actual videos. But anyway...)

AMY GOODMAN: What do you think of these generals who run for president?

GEN. WESLEY CLARK: I like them. It’s happened before.

AMY GOODMAN: Will it happen again?

GEN. WESLEY CLARK: It might.

AMY GOODMAN: Later in the interview, I followed up on that question.

AMY GOODMAN: Will you announce for president?

GEN. WESLEY CLARK: Well, I haven’t said I won’t.

…because he was going to run at the time. But they go through the list of countries, ‘eh. And he explains what happened to him, because he was given the list and told that they were going to take out all these… He had no idea they were going to take at all these countries, but he was given the list and he was rather shocked. He talks about this in his live interview at the time. And it’s a keeper, folks, for those who want to understand what happens. What he tells you, from a top general who was over there, right, leading armies, hm, and invasion. You understand, it’s very volatile the different countries that he was attacking, if they knew who was attacking, not just Americans, they'd be even more furious. It's astonishing what goes on, folks. The people don't know are the public, they just never know what's really, really going on. I'll put that one up, folks.

Gen. Wesley Clark VIDEO (short clip) - We're Going to Take Out 7 Countries in 5 Years - youtube.com / 17 March 2007

And then this one too, it's a good, simplistic in a way but at least it's better than nothing at all.

How Controlled Explanations Are Achieved - paulcraigroberts.org / 28 Dec 2019

I'll take this from anybody who's been involved in anything like this, I don't care who they are. As they say. But when it comes to how the mind works and how you're used, and how psychological warfare works and so on, it says… How controlled explanations are achieved. It's a good article on how intelligence agencies, who plan big, big, big events already have the explanations written up before they make the first move, you see, for the public. So this is how they, they call it controlled explanations. Like, and it gives an example, before the dust even cleared within about 15 minutes of the 2 towers supposedly being hit or whatever in New York City, 9/11, within about 15 minutes, across all the media they had a top US politician saying it was Bin Laden. That's all they heard, Bin Laden, Bin Laden. No one says, how come you know already it's Bin Laden. You see?

Even though Bin Laden, Osama bin Laden, vehemently denied he had anything to do with it on the different videos that he put out himself. It doesn't matter. You see, you've got to get a reason to invade countries and destroy them. And loot them. Right. Big, big plans in there. And all the pipelines of oil and everything and gas they had planned for that whole region, all these different countries, owned by about two companies that have nothing to do with them, were all drafted up there too. They showed you all these things, they're still going on today, all these countries that they've demolished. They loot all the oil and gas from them. So I'll put that up anyway because time is getting short here, that particular article.

I just want to mention to, [Alan chuckles.] the papers, as you've noticed...

Jeffrey Epstein's socialite 'madam' Ghislaine Maxwell 'is being hidden from the FBI in a series of safe houses because of the information she has on powerful people' - dailymail.co.uk / 1 Jan 2020

But they're saying that she's possibly even in Israel. But I'm waiting for the movie, I'm surprised, I bet you anything there's top producers working on it all. This is going to be a big, big… they might even do a book first. Most folk won't read it, you see, they want video today. They don't really want audio anymore because they can't, need to get little pictures of cartoons in front of their faces and things. But really, that's how you're trained, folks. And if you can't sit and listen and use your own mind with what you're listening to, you'll never retain it.

Anyway, yeah, I'm waiting for the movie to come out, that will be quite the movie, 'eh. It's got everything, sex, violence, extortion, blackmail, you know, and a lot worse too. Yep. What a movie, 'eh. Think about it. It'll be a blockbuster, if you get the right people to do it.

Also again…

Impeachment trial in limbo as Senate leaders trade blows - politico.com / 3 Jan 2020

And they'll keep it in limbo. If Trump doesn't get on with the slaughtering and grabbing the loot in those countries for his masters then, yeah, he's going to get, he'll be in the bad books again. So, he's gotta get on with it. They've used proxy armies. We've trained proxy armies. We funded proxy armies. It didn't work out too well. Now a lot of these proxy armies are across Europe, living as refugees supposedly or migrants. What a hellhole it creates, 'eh? And now you're going to get masses more of migrants if Iran gets hit. Obviously. Iran has been bringing people out for years now. Because I wouldn't live in that country either when you know you're on the list. You've watched what happened to the rest of them on the list, 'eh.

And then you have…

Iraq to reconsider working with US-led troops after airstrikes - news.sky.com / 31 Dec 2019

You understand, Iraq is supposed to decide itself what militia groups are going to help them. And they are employed, they employed the Iranian militia group that Trump's been blasting against international treaty and all the rest of it. Quite amazing, 'eh, what's going on here. But what do laws matter when you've got big, big powerful interests, with big propaganda specialists ready to get it going. Another one too is…

Rockets land close to US Embassy in Baghdad, no known casualties - rt.com / 4 Jan 2020

...and so on. I could go even further actually with many, there's just no time. But even in Britain I remember giving talks years ago in Britain, because stuff was filtering out into some of the media at the time. It was bona fides and they said that Britain was training guys, were born in Britain, from some of these countries, the Muslim countries and were born in Britain, to go over there to be basically agents and work for the military over there.

Then they come back home and it's oh, you've got all these problems. But the fact is, we create…

You have NO idea what goes on. You have no idea. For 30 years MI-5 had terrorist assets in Manchester and different places which they trained and sent them over to those countries to act as mercenaries. Then you see them on television supposedly being anti-Syria or Syria, freedom for Syria, all this kind of stuff. No, no, no, these were trained mercenaries. Quite amazing. Then you get blowback when they come back again and they're not happy with you and they've already tasted the blood many times and it's no big deal to kill again, is it?

Trump’s own ‘Wag the Dog’: Is Iran hit job a distraction for impeachment lynch mob back home? - rt.com / 3 Jan 2020

I'm not really up on this article here but it does go into the Wag the Dog scenario as a distraction. But really, I think, it isn’t different I think really, Trump will do what he's told, or else he's going to have trouble, you know.

Turkish parliament authorizes Libya deployment - haaretz.com / 2 Jan 2020

Well, here you are, I mean, now, once again, next door to Syria, you’re going to have more troops coming in, with agreement of the US and NATO, hm. It won’t stop there. This is going to go on and on and on, you know that. And lots of folk are going to get slaughtered again.

Turkish parliament backs govt plan to send troops to Libya in emergency session - rt.com / 2 Jan 2020

And then…

Imperial delusion: Turkey sending troops to Libya would be no solution to the chaos caused by the 2011 NATO intervention - rt.com / 2 Jan 2020

They bombed Libya into the Stone Age. And looted it naturally too. They had massive gold reserves, for the population, for pension. All disappeared, folks. All planned that way. Same thing happened though in Iraq, you know. They even had bets on the very ancient artifacts in the museum in Baghdad when the military went in. The military were told to stand around, and this other group moved in and stole all the stuff. That’s a fact. I’m not kidding you. And they ended up in private museums. Hhhhhhhhhhh. Folk have no idea of the truth of things, hm. Once again, they’d never believe it because you wouldn’t tell such a big lie or do such a terrible crime. A little crime maybe, you know, but not a big one, ‘eh.

Iran rejects US accusation of being behind Baghdad protests - aljazeera.com / 31 Dec 2019

This stuff about the green zone and so on around Baghdad, around the palace and all that, the old palace. It's utter nonsense, folks. The US had, they actually built a massive compound in there, it was like 4 square miles you know. And to house armies, that's what it was created for initially. Then when they handed it over eventually, after many failed handing overs… [Alan chuckles.] It's supposed to be back to Iraqi ownership basically. As this proxy head, or heads, run Iraq right now. They're all puppets of course.

US does not seek war with Iran, says Mike Pompeo - bbc.com / 14 May 2019

That was in May 2019. Of course, he… Look at that face, would you… Meanwhile he's been busy as a bee back and forth with certain people across there getting it all set up, 'eh. Quite something. There's a face you can believe, 'eh?

And what else have I got here? I'll put an article up too, I've mentioned before, that Craig Murray, the historian and former ambassador and human rights activists, he really did put it out about the nonsense with the fake poisonings in Syria before that they blamed Assad with.

The World: What is Really Happening - craigmurray.org.uk / 25 May 2019

I put up a couple weeks ago an article too by members of the teams that were sent in to analyze this, and this is an official world team that's sent in and of the UN to test the stuff and they didn't find evidence of stuff either. But they couldn't believe that their own leaders were told to lie. Everything's politicized. You can't believe anything you read, folks. And then…

War Again on the Front Burner

paulcraigroberts.org / 3 Jan 2020

The nonsensical statement below from the Pentagon announcing that the US government has committed an act of war against Iran should frighten everyone:

“This strike was aimed at deterring future Iranian attack plans.”

Well, let's go and kill the folks, wait to see if they hit us back, 'eh? [Alan chuckles.] Because they haven't been successful so far. We've starved them and the whole bit. And stop them from selling any oil. But now that they've got little deals going on behind the scenes that China might buy their oil and stuff like that, well, you've got to stop that, folks. You can't have them feeding themselves again, 'eh?

And...

Trump Ordered the Assassination of Soleimani, and the Middle East Prepares for Possible War - globalresearch.ca / 3 Jan 2020

Really, hm? Well, you'll pay for it all because we pay for it all, don't we? We pay for everything. And the big crooks end up getting it all for nothing. They get to looted, and they get the oil and gas and all the rest of it etc., etc. So, I’ll put all the stuff up tonight.

Sorry I'm rushing through it all, but as I say it started off with just the massive psychological warfare right down to of how you dress and why you dress the way you dress and all the rest of it without knowing really where it all comes from. Including the massive tattoos that became an incredible fad over the last, what, 15-20 years, just suddenly. But it was all from TV shows and so on. And folk, monkey see/monkey do, they say and away they went. But the same with pink hair and spiky hair and all the rest of it. It's all given to the folks and they never really fathom it, but just adopt it thinking, well it must be normal because it exists.

Pretty sad isn't it how we are so easily managed. Especially when it's done so unconsciously in a sense by the majority of the public. We learn by osmosis, we don't really think things through. It filters through into us bit by bit and byte by byte, you might say, in digital formats today.

Because folk don't have, spend the time to really look into much at all. That's the sad truth of it all. They get bits and bytes of headlines and things and that becomes official stories for them.

Even the psychologists and manipulators at the top, and the behavioral insights teams that manage us all through the Internet know that. They know that through, just through headlines alone, in a sequence of headlines, like bum-bum-bum-bum-bum, a sequence of them, you'll come to a conclusion without even reading into the articles, just seeing headlines. No kidding. That's how intense it is.

But I feel so sorry for people across the world going through the same stuff over and over again. We've watched the total elimination of countries that were, you couldn't even say, they were not Third World countries, they were up-and-coming and so on, demolished. And all the resources stolen from them. And Libya had, apart from... They had no debt by the way, Libya. Everybody was pretty wealthy in that country. Totally, all their pensions, their whole, everything stolen from them. Stolen. We even know who stole it, we know all that stuff. Sad, isn't it.

But that's the system we're living in and going to get more years of it now. I knew it years ago when they put Trump in, I knew exactly why he was being put in there. I knew it would take time to get it all going and that's how they've done it. You see, they haven't just gone off halfcocked. It's been planned for ages. The resources trained up. And don't think they have... They've got multi-thousands of troops over at different bases across the middle east to go in, so don't think oh, we're sending a few troops over. That's nonsense. [Alan chuckles.] They've been preparing for this for years.

Anyway, there we go. I hope you all can survive what's coming up. And let's hope they don't crash the economy at the same time. I don't think they will. I've often thought that's the reason why they keep the US economy afloat, whatever there is of the economy, because it's not a manufacturing economy anymore. Because a whole bunch of corporations have their bases in America, I mean there's work... it might be great for the stock market but it doesn’t mean there's work for the people. There's not at all.

I can remember when they used to call it a jobless recovery when Obama was in. Even before that the same terms were used in Britain when Blair was in, the jobless recovery they called it. Because corporations might make lots of money but that's in the hands of a few. The US literally is kept afloat by magicians who have magical accounting. But they have to get the job done with the wars before they'll eventually totally crash it. They might give you little minor crashes, but to totally crash it you've got to get the wars done. And you think about it, the loot that will come out of all these countries, and already has come, going into private corporate hands and so on. But nothing goes to the taxpayer except the bill for it all. Because you pay for it. Sad to say. It's repetition, hell is repetition.

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

(Blurb, i.e. Educational Talk)

IntelCyberWarfare:

"There is a War Not too Far Away,

Armies of Agents, Toxic to Play."

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on January 12, 20…20. Scary, isn't it, 'eh? …for the next month or so it'll be scary, until you get used to the idea and just accept the fact that time certainly does march on. But it's interesting to see the agendas, very old agendas come into play and be used again, the same types of agendas with formulas and so on. That's how the world is run.

But it's one big, big plan of course and those at the top are quite proficient at managing the world and keeping the games going. Because games are terribly profitable and it's only the publics of different countries that never quite catch on to it. We are caught up in/with the financial depressions and recessions and that kind of thing. We are caught up too with higher taxes and your currencies being devalued all the time. Until you get quite used to the idea that countries are in debt for trillions of dollars or pounds or whatever and you accept that as normal.

Of course younger folk they always think it is more normal because they'll think nothing of blowing a few hundred dollars on something that your generation, the older generation would have taken maybe a week or a month [Alan chuckles.] to think about it first because of the prices. Because we're all trained per generation, and really for every 20 years it just jumps and jumps and jumps and people adapt to it. I've had this talk with even relatives years ago because one relative of mine talked about a pay raise he would get at work. I know at that time the factories were going out of the country big time with the agreements with the free trade and China, and the agreements that had been signed in Canada and States, a lot of business was also going to what they called the Mexican corridor through free trade agreements as well.

The public had no say in any of this. You just went along with it and watched all your work go away and your businesses and your labor go away, in fact. Because they just must have died away… never… it was almost like it was forbidden to speak about it in the media, don't mention the fact. Because the last thing they wanted at the top was blowback from the public, who deservedly had the right to complain massively as they lost their jobs and the factories just disappeared.

And we paid for them, as I said before, through the agreements, through NAFTA and through the agreements with China through the World Trade Organization, it was signed, China had to pay nothing for it. The taxpayers in the West paid for the factories, the big corporations in their own countries to move over to China and set up. We paid for all that. Including what they claimed might be lost during the set up for a few years until the profits started coming in. So, we paid for it all. Quite amazing isn't it. Then you go and vote! [Alan chuckles.] For what? …the same people who have gotten awfully rich making it all happen. Awfully, awfully rich.

The world is completely different from the portrayal via the media, completely, completely different and I can't get that across enough really. I think most folk could never really accept it. They tend to get caught up in the puppets and clowns that are put in front of them. Like Boris Johnson, you know. He plays the clown, that's his job. But he'll do what he's told by his bosses above him. The same as Donald Trump and everybody else there. They're all bought and paid for by the richest folk in the world sometimes. That's a fact, folks. That is a fact.

I mentioned years ago too about a movie, it was called O Lucky Man with Malcolm McDowell as the main character in it, that was a kind of a satirical play on real life in Britain at the time. Britain, for example, Britain came out of World War II devastated. They had already been devastated with the costs of World War I, and not just in lives but in finances too. Incredible loans were given out. In fact, that's one of the main reasons America came in in 1917 was to ensure that the payments from all the different loans by the big banks in the US, that owned the US at that time too, would get their loans repaid. That was one of the reasons they came in in 1917. Britain had already been in that war from 1914, for reasons which we still haven't got clear yet.

I mean, war is a good business to be in. Very good business. You're guaranteed if you supply anything to any kind of military or Navy or whatever, you're guaranteed payment by governments. Guaranteed. The taxpayers are taxed to pay them off, so that's guaranteed as well. It's pretty well, that's surety indeed, you know. So tremendously profitable. It doesn't matter if you win or lose either, there are international agreements, all sides have to pay them off. It's very lucrative.

So, Malcolm McDowell as I say portrayed a post-World War II Britain maybe about the 1950s, 1960s and how literally he took any job he could get. This naïve young guy starts to learn and find out how corrupt everything is. Once again, nothing's really what you think it is. He meets mayors of towns and everything's… he's in bed with, well, in bed financially with that kind of a gang mentality with the local police chief and that kind of stuff. They're all connected. And they have their parties and their orgies and things like that with illicit booze and so on. That's how the world really works. Unfortunately.

Again, there's an esoteric and exoteric. The esoteric really is for the inner group to understand what it's about. Whereas the exoteric are for the general public, who really believe the world that has been presented to them. They believe it in that fashion, they don't question it really.

And you can't blame the people, they're brainwashed to be like this. They're brainwashed to be awfully naïve.

I think there's a natural tendency in humanity, especially if you are descended from tribes of some kind, to believe obviously in what's presented as a ruler, a tribal leader. That worked fine for tribes because the leader in small tribes could be overthrown if he got too big for his boots, or his fur boots or whatever it happened to be. And by the people, you see.

But once you got money coming in it changed everything. Because now you could pay mercenaries to guard the king, you see. He definitely would get too big for his boots and if anybody complained, well they were simply disappeared. That technique has never changed. Maybe they do it more sophisticated today but they still go on, all the time by the way. It's not a pleasant world out there. And it's getting very dangerous today, very dangerous, as you see the complete intolerance of anybody speaking out about what's really happening in the world, and banned to speak, by those who basically rule it.

I noticed that Google for instance, has admitted, one of the head guys in Google, is using algorithms now to find, make RT for instance, whether you like it or not RT give you some good information, it's up to you to decide how much of it's true or whatever, like every other site. But the algorithm is going to be harder to find RT if you're searching for articles and so on. But that's been done for years from the beginning of the public Internet…… or, given access for the public.

I was doing fine, too, years ago, years and years ago until I started speaking out about certain things that were happening. Including the wars I saw getting fomented and getting readied, etc. And definitely when I mentioned the fact the West was funding what were supposedly the groups that were heading against Syria as an example. We were funding the groups called ISIS, ISIL, IS and so on. We funded them. And there's no doubt about it, the West trained and funded and armed these people all through their so-called regime changes, etc. Because it was all the one group.

I saw the chaos it would cause. I knew too that there'd be tremendous blowback on the whole of Europe and mass migration because of it. As far as I could see that's part of the plan. Obviously. Planners are not stupid. You don't hire stupid people and give them big salaries, whole layers of them on these huge think tanks that study strategy and history and warfare and all kinds of warfare. Including propaganda warfare, which is tremendously effective. Because the first people that you use it on are your own public. You want to brainwash a public to obey you or the ruling class, whoever that happens to be. And they never even realized they've been brainwashed. They'll be naturally very, very supportive. Again, playing on natural instincts, tribal instincts. We're used and abused so easily by professionals, as I say. Never ever, ever so much as today.

In bygone years as I say, with the Cold War, we understood quite clearly what the problems were. When you understood that socialism, hhch, really is mass slaughter of any dissidents... They don't tolerate anything except themselves. Socialism is not a democratic process, once they really understand that. That's what communism was, Stalin said it too, that communism was simply socialism in a hurry. Through revolution, that's what you use. Socialism uses a slower type, the cultural revolutions, and you change it through the Gramsci technique of taking over the culture and leading the culture, until the public follow, never knowing that they're getting turned off in a completely different direction of behavior, etc.

Very effective as I say. Today the public have no idea. And not much of a chance, I have to tell you, to really comb,at the big big movements that are at play. Just Britain alone has tens of thousands, tens of thousands of people employed by a strata of agencies that deal just with Internet. And not just bots but actual real people too, trolls as they call them, trained professionals, and by the military. Tens of thousands of them... who literally are all over the place and if you speak out about certain things you get hammered if you're on social media. You get absolutely hammered from a thousand different sources and they'll try and do you in one way or another. It's very effective. Then you have certain people and divisions that will target people, who are lonely for instance, that's how they do it too. Women or men.

It's just a more advanced form of the old technique of spies. You would use spies and send them into countries, and you would get to know the women who were secretaries of naval departments or Army or whatever it happens to be or Air Force, to send information back. Sometimes they would send in women to do it to the guys and that was very effective too. The Profumo Affair in Britain, although it's debatable if the women that were used were actually paid to be spies, they certainly had the ability to transfer information that they were hearing to the opposite numbers in different countries.

So, it's really amazing, as I say, to see today where the same things go on through bots and through trolls, that are well-paid. They'll take people into their confidence; they'll have dialogues and so on. Then they'll suddenly attack you. And by that time, they've sussed you out. If you’re a woman for instance they'll have sussed out your weak spots and say, what would destroy this person? And they'll hit them with the very thing that can do it. And they could have a breakdown over it. And they've never met this person, they still got in their mind an imaginary picture of something or somebody.

But these literally are paid experts working for warfare departments. I'm not kidding you. I can give you stacks of evidence about it. It's a fact. The US has them, Britain has them, all big countries have them. Russia has them. Israel has them, big ones too. All plying for power and plying to try to improve their own stance, their nation's stance on certain issues and so on, and at the same time destroy enemies.

Now, today, destroying an enemy is people who have different points of view. I hope you understand where we are today. For those who literally get freaked out with incredible barrage, utter barrage of trolls and bots that hit them if they said something or whatever it happens to be, on a show for instance. You gotta wake up to what this is. These are, these aren't just average people out there who disagree with you. No. These people literally are trained like all warfare people to destroy you through different techniques.

They are taught techniques of destruction… of the human mind, the psyche, how it works, how it ticks, vulnerabilities and how do we destroy a person. And some people, they can work it out from your particular mindset and your psyche, as I say. They can work it out through your personality type, likes, dislikes, fears and all the rest of it, politics, religion, whatever it happens to be. They can literally figure out precisely, just like an attack, they hit you with this, this, this and this, in a certain order to take you down. And they're very, very effective. That's who your neuroscientists are working with the governments for. That's what you're BIT groups from universities are working with them for. Because they're all part of these intelligence services too that work to attack people who, hhch, understand too much perhaps, on the Internet and on social media.

I don't play the social media part because I'm well aware that most of what you're going to get hammered with are not real people. And if they are, they generally are working with these intelligence agencies. Each person that works in agencies will have a stack of accounts given, lots and lots and lots of them. But there's telltale marks if they're actually real people or not. If they are, if they're actually part of intelligence agencies too, because they don't have long accounts, they haven't been up long at all and they won't have much of a following either. They'll have standard things that they pretend to follow, you can actually work out if they are actually just... They're actual real people but they're working for these agencies to troll and attack people. And they do, like swarms. That's where we live today.

You've noticed in the media, and this is what gets me really. You would hope as the centuries go by we would become more humane. You'd really hope that, wouldn't you? About life in general. But we're not. We're actually getting worse. I think as we lose religion, we get more and more inhumane.

You see the things that happen in society, whereas the hospitals now are even handing, you know, they'll euthanize you because it's cheaper on the money getting taken off people. Plus, they don't want you living too long, they can grab your pension and spend it on other things. So, they try and euthanize you. As life gets cheaper and cheaper and cheaper. Ooooaaaa, he's an old person, he's gonna die anyway, might give him six months, maybe a few years, but why bother keeping him alive, it's much cheaper this way… if you're a nobody, you see. And we accept that as a society. And you're accepting your own doom when you do these things. I hope you realize that. I hope you really realize that.

But it's obviously the same thing too when your governments, and I knew this and I've said it, I knew this thing with Iran would come. Because Trump made it quite plain from before he got in, to the right people, what he would do with Iran. Every major speech he's given at the United Nations or anywhere else too, he's kind of brought that up or hinted towards it, and to other associations, he's been very vocal about it.

But the fact is, Boris Johnson, that's why he got in there too. I knew it too, because he's part of the same club. He'll do what he's told. You have the same thing with Britain, with a reenactment of the attack on Iraq, which is literally bombed into the Stone Age.

PM throws support behind Washington as US-Iran tensions soar following missile attacks, Soleimani assassination. - aljazeera.com / 8 Jan 2020

I remember doing the talks at the time when they were happening and even giving out information from Kissinger when he debated with the Zbigniew Brzezinski. Brzezinski and Kissinger debated on the best policy for long-term strategy. They always look at long-term strategy. The plan was to take the whole list of the PNAC group and destroy them and literally bomb them into the Stone Age. They even had the debate between the two of them, it was published in the papers at the time, in certain magazines, on Iran itself. Because they says, well you know Iraqi really technically is a recent nation as opposed to the old Persian nation, which is now Iran. Because at one time they were all really one big nation. So, they're trying to debate through the legalities and semantics of who they should totally destroy, and should they give any deference at all to the fact that some of them were very ancient cultures and countries. Syria is another one that's an old one too. And that really upset them. They found ways to get around it of course eventually.

But Brzezinski and Kissinger had it out, and I think Kissinger said that the best policy was to totally destroy all infrastructure, for everything that needed to exist as a workable nation would be totally destroyed. That way the people wouldn't be the people anymore. You have a country when you've got all the different institutions working for you, water supplies and food supplies, baby formulas and so on. The US went in and blew up, I think the first thing they blew up actually was the baby formula factory. That was in the news too.

So, all infrastructure had to be destroyed. Then you've got whatever's left of the public are so shellshocked and angry, about everything, and kind of neurotic. Once you get people who are pretty well neurotic when everything is destroyed, it's hard to get them to consent unanimously on anything. So, you have a dysfunctional society easily managed. Then you bring the troops. Then you bring in the mercenary troops like Blackwater after it and they can kill at will. So many murders were just taking place openly in the streets, on cars just passing by, there was videos up at the time of the troops just doing it, for fun or something like that or whatever it happened to be.

But the old rules of the game had definitely changed, you know. And when you think about it, what you are looking at for this 21st century, that was the idea of it, the 21st century was to come in where they complete a whole agenda, massive agenda, social, cultural, world agenda in every respect. And of course, the military was to be used for one part of it.

The idea was the Middle Eastern countries that were to be attacked and destroyed should never be able to reform again as nations, functional coherent unified nations. Because then certain other players in the area could rest in peace and take over a lot of the land and the resources, which has happened by the way.

As I mentioned before, Tony Blair literally had the leaders of some of the big oil companies, international oil companies meet with him before Britain helped to invade Iraq the first time. And that was an invasion, folks, that's what it was, you know, Iraq couldn't attack Britain. They thought they would divvy up some of the oilfields and of course they had the American companies in with them too. That broke out in the papers in Britain a few years after.

So, the most primitive basic reasons for things are still used today, which is greed. Nations are used by the all-powerful under many pretenses of defending you but when you're on the attack against nations that haven't attacked you, you have to really stop and question things.

Again, after World War II, Britain was devastated financially. It didn't pay off and it was in the papers, I don't know if they've done it yet, I think in the late 1990s they said that Britain may have been getting ready to pay off the last of the debts from World War I. But later articles refuted that and said that it wasn't, nevermind World War II, but they still hadn't paid off the whole… You understand, compound interest is not meant to get paid off. It puts the debtor into slavery. That's the idea of it. That's the idea, in slavery you do what you're told. You can be used by the creditors, you see, and you do what you're told. This is old, old stuff. And nothing has changed. But you have a lot of crooks involved.

Well, after World War II the one thing going for it was armaments, for Britain. And sure enough, they started to, they had the Komet, came out with the Komet and they came out with the fighter aircraft jet ones, which they started to sell across the world. So, armaments for warfare were something Britain still had left. That became a big, big financial income but really for a small amount of people, really. That's never changed. Other countries were the same. Belgium, little Belgium is very big in armaments industry. Always has been. Because it's a lucrative field to be in.

Then the Cold War came along and that was the greatest thing for all these top people in the higher classes of society who were in power and who also had massive investments or even ownership in weapons manufacturing. And missiles especially because every week you would hear about a new missile Russia had, whether it did or did not didn't matter, and how it went a certain speed, a certain distance and so on, and how we'd have to get a new anti-missile missile to strike it, etc., that could travel a bit faster and blah blah blah blah blah. So it just went on, back and forth like a tennis game forever. It was just so lucrative because no one ever had to use them. That was the good part of the weapons industry, you didn't have to prove they actually worked. Not bad, 'eh? Especially when it was costing so much for them.

But today, they're right back to square one. Because they missed the Cold War. They missed it. I said that years ago, I said if they have to resurrect the bad bear, that was Russia, they'll do so, if they start to find out they're not getting enough cash coming in. So, they did that actually. So, we’re back to square one there.

They will benefit from it. I can remember when the Cruise Missile was supposedly a million pounds, I think, a pop. Was it a million pounds, or dollars? I can't remember quite which one. But I remember Clinton popping them off all across the Middle East every other day, sometimes 11 at a time. That was great, great money at that time for guaranteed money, not bad, 11 million per day, hey, for firing off these things to places in the desert and stuff like that. And the taxpayers would pay for it. Isn’t it a good income for those that make these things?

But the cost of things today is astronomical. When you get fighter aircraft that aren't just in the millions but some of them cost a billion. [Alan laughing.]   You know, some of them do. [Alan laughing.]   And then they’re guaranteed payments for their updating their software every month or whatever, or even emergency updates in fact, and the updates can cost millions per update. It's paid decent income, isn't it? So yeah, weaponry is awfully, awfully effective.

Now, the Cold War, as I say, for the general population was a propaganda war as well. Because you have to convince your people at home, who are so war weary with war after war, from the 1800s and through the Boer War into World War I and World War II, and then the Korean War and different wars and so on. It's hard to keep the public going when they are living in a, really a decadent society. Decadent in the sense of your infrastructure is falling apart, it's not getting replaced and repaired. They tried all kinds of cheap terrible techniques for building for the ordinary people, who, were still looking for homes to live in, because they couldn't…

Most of the people in Britain were working-class, you understand, and most of them couldn't afford to buy a home. And you couldn't just get a loan in those days. That's not long ago. You had to have collateral or something physical to put up, as they say, before they give you a loan. And if you fell flat on the loan, they could grab the real estate or whatever it happened to be, and vehicles or some other property or something. But you couldn't get it if you didn't have anything, you just couldn't get money down on anything. So, you rented for most of your life for a lot of folk. It was a bit easier in some parts of England, through tradition, but not many, there's a lot of working-class cities.

It wasn't until about the 70s or 80s, actually the 80s they started to dish out, throw out credit cards like they did in the States. And Canada. Which tided the people over through bad financial times because in the 70s the economies were on the decline; wages became stagnant until pretty well up until fairly recently. The same starting wages for most jobs for 30 years pretty well.

So hhhhh, as I say, Britain is a good example, and they show you that in O Lucky Man. Because that's really what pulled, you see this would pull Britain out of the mess that was in, was the armaments industry. Some people became the spokespeople or salesman to foreign countries, especially to countries like Saudi Arabia. That's never changed. Massive purchaser of best weaponry and aircraft fighters and all kinds of weaponry they use, tanks, you name it, and missiles too.

You've got to understand that the reasons that you got ongoing wars today have got nothing to do with the reasons that are given. As I say, Iraq didn't attack the West. That came out too when George Bush was in, with his war on Iraq. [Alan chuckles.] Iraqi Freedom they called it, when they went in and destroyed them into the Stone Age. Very Orwellian and doublespeak and so on. He said during an inquiry, he says, well, I never said that Saddam Hussein had anything to do with 9/11. Which is a lie, they did, of course they inferred it. They used the media who was just completely on board with that of course naturally, they used the media to persuade the public, even though the target was supposed to be Afghanistan initially, within a year they convinced the public, just through little bits and pieces that Saddam Hussein, the bad, bad man, they always use a bad man you see, was the guy behind it. He had nothing to do with it at all.

But it just shows you the same… He was on the list; he was on the list of the PNAC group and so they targeted him. Remember, George Orwell says, who are we fighting today? That was Eurasia and so on, the different factions of the globe, because they kept changing gun sites quickly. And you have to adapt very, just rapidly, without asking questions. Never ask why are we fighting them or how long we've been fighting them or whatever, or have we always been fighting them or whatever. That's where we are today, isn't it? Isn't it?

Because as George Bush said, he said, well I never said that Saddam Hussein had anything to do with 9/11. Well, why did they invade them and blow them, again, into the Stone Age? And don't forget, Iraq at that time had been under a massive embargo from about 1991. Because as soon as the Cold War supposedly finished the PNAC group immediately were into the Middle East, now that they didn't have Russia to contend with at that time, and they were pushing their weight around there obviously, for oil, etc.

When you're in a nation and they keep using, they're after ‘our’ resources, ‘our’... Who's ‘our’? Who are ‘we’? [Alan laughing.] Just think about it here. You'd better start thinking about this ‘we’ and ‘our’. I like Spike Milligan, he was a crazy guy. He had bipolar disorder, I think. But he did say in his talks about when World War II was declared, he said, I remember the Prime Minister coming on the radio and he said, I have to regret to inform you that as from the blah blah blah, the time, etc., of the day, he says, we are now at war with, we are now at war. He said, I like the ‘we’ part. You see, because that's reality. [Alan laughing.] You're not asked your opinion on anything. We are now war, when you know that's you at war, you're going to go off and do the fighting.

You get a good laugh at things and sometimes that get you away from [Alan chuckles.] worse things. But today we are in such a serious society, you can't even quip about... or you will be attacked by massive, not just the bots but real trolls that are paid. And you wouldn't believe how many. I'm talking about there's literally hundreds, and I'm talking about tens of thousands working for Britain. But there's hundreds of thousands working for Britain and the US and a few other countries, all different departments, many names and so on, with specialties in all different areas. And just like any other war, as I say, they'll target certain people, make it hard for them to keep operating. Absolutely. They try to defame them, all kinds of ways to take them down. And if you're not careful, if you really fall for the relationship thing on the Internet, they'll target you, they'll get into your psyche and play around and then destroy you. That's an old technique.

Folk have no idea how deep this goes. They have none at all. And it isn't just, you see here's the thing, it isn't just a matter of attacking enemies, or who's not on board with whatever agenda it happens to be. It's a way of, and I really mean this, in fact, oh, you couldn't even read in 10 years all the articles and the manuals that they're given, and they're fed with, for the purpose, for the present and the future of creating a controlled society, a world society with a controlled culture, very controlled, and how to raise generations of controlled cultures, who will be guaranteed to be obedient to the overlords, whoever they happen to be or whatever they want to call themselves.

This is what's going on if you haven't figured it out. It really is. It's so far ahead. God knows how many think tanks are involved in this and I've got stacks and stacks, I've got gigabytes of the stuff, you know. Lots of it. And that's your future, you see. This isn't happenstance that you're stumbling down through time just looking at little… You're given little bits to grab on the media and go oooo, aaaa, oooo, look at the Royal family, oh they're not getting on to well, this couple's not happy with that couple. That's made-up nonsense. They're talking about fake news, 'eh?

I can remember years ago when Buckingham Palace literally employed, and to this day it's got bigger and bigger and bigger, a permanent staff of propagandists and publishers who work for the royal family, with film crews and everything, who make up the stuff and dish it out to the public. And for the last few years they thought, how do we keep the royal family relevant in a global society with cultures coming into, that have got nothing to do with the past of Britain or Europe even, you know. Well, let's make them... what works on people?

You understand they look upon us like animals. What do animals need, what does a human animal need? And you supply it. Then you get little bits that like are like-a banana for the animal, not quite the banana but like-a banana, and this is how they go on and they start substituting other things for what you really need, you see. So, you have this natural tendency, more in the women actually and this is just standard basic psychology and sociology. Women in a small village, they'll often say, oh, they just gossip when they get together in the corner of the village. And you see these three same women standing there for hour after hour and natter, natter, natter, that's what they used to say. They say that they know, they've talked about everybody in the village, and they'll be there for hours. Even when there's not much left to say, they'll still stay there because they know that when one leaves the other two is going to talk about them. You see. That was the standard old, old joke.

But the fact is, it's a natural thing for women, in even a small tribe, to know everybody's business. You know who's good, who's iffy, who's kinda bad, who's dangerous, whatever, for themselves, their family and for their offspring and so on, so they can warn them. It's a natural, natural thing to do, you see. It's a survival thing. But they use the same techniques against us all now, you see. And they can use these natural tendencies to want to know, into literally identify as a human person to another human person, so they re-present, repackage the royal family, they repackage their whole history, maybe even remake it, and then they humanize them like a, they literally say this in their manuals for it, like soap operas work.

A soap opera attracts mainly the women. And they'll go into it, oh, who's... And they remember the names and whose birthdays and… That's what they do, you see. So, you make them, you start humanizing the people, you give them more and more details about this Prince and that Prince and that Princess, and they humanize them. Then you start dishing out little stories. It doesn't matter if they're fake, you see, you make them up. Well, they've had a tiff with so-and-so, and is very soapish, you see. And they'll follow it. And get a bigger and bigger following.

I mentioned before too, that they've admitted that Harry and other ones have got their different accounts and so on and they have rival little, you know, bets on with each other who's got the most hits that they get for looking into see what their made-up lives are all about. It's just amazing how it works.

Well, it's the same thing with everything else, folks. If you haven't figured it out it's the same thing. With these wars that are going on, wars were planned at the very least in the 1990s, probably before that in fact, but published in the 1990s, as plans. [Alan chuckles.]   I can even remember when as I say, 1991 when again Russia supposedly suddenly just dropped, they couldn't compete anymore in the Cold War. It was looted of course by the West, that some people in from even the Federal Reserve and the US they went in there, even did a documentary on it, and how all the different shares as they privatize the big, big businesses, were literally stolen by the oligarchs there and other ones still in power. [Alan chuckles.]   It was all arranged in advance of course. I've often said, I would never run for politics because I don't believe in organized crime.

But the thing is, when they went into, against Saddam Hussein, is because supposedly he'd attacked initially Kuwait to the north of Iraq and the oil fields there. Now, for those who don't know it, Kuwait was set up, the oil fields, by Poppa Bush as they call him, and he had massive shares in it. That's where the Bush families got their training in there in the big massive business. They always give them some kind of sway over oil fields initially to get the idea of things, how the scams work.

That's what Rockefeller did too with Maurice Strong. He picked him up, you know, a little, supposedly a nobody but there's more to him than met the eye of course and put him in charge of oil fields to start with. To get the feel of, you know, how you really shape the world and how the little folk work, the little people, and then how the bigger people work and all that kind of stuff.

The same thing with Kuwait. Well, Saddam Hussein had asked, I remember it was actually documentaries on it. He'd asked that the consulates in Iraq from America and Britain if he could go in there and set it straight because he says, you know, he says... And it's true, they even had articles in scientific magazines, and I mean I don't know, I can't swear on it if Popular Mechanics was involved too. But I can remember reading through the ones and they showed you these horizontal drill rigs that go down a good distance and then do a right angle and go underneath the country's borders into the next neighboring country and suck their oil, you see. And that's what they had been doing from Kuwait into Iraq and Saddam had complaints into the different world courts and so on.

Nothing happened. So, he literally said, I'd like to go in and deal with this. He had supposedly been given the okay. Well, if you do that we won't interfere, said the West. Well, as soon as he went in there of course the West declared war on him and drove him out and slaughtered a massive part of his army on the way back. Then kept them in there about 10 years and embargos, aerial embargo, no-fly zone over head. Then they starved them for all those years before they finally invaded them.

So, you've got to really understand what goes on as opposed to the rah-rah politics, you know, here's-the-flag thing. There's always big business behind things, always, massively, behind all this kind of stuff. And it's not for the nations, folks. The nations supply the equipment, the military, the body bags even and you pay for it all. The corporations of course get the spoils of war.

I can even remember articles from, [Alan chuckles.] that leaked out when they were bombing Iraq, with Britain and the States. They were literally targeting oil wells, the West claimed initially, again it's propaganda put out by the disinformation specialists in intelligence. They said that, oh look at those terrible oil, and it was true, they had set so many oilfields on fire. Even did movies about it. It was thick black smoke all the time, for weeks and weeks. But it turned out that the Pentagon had got word where to target because they said, these refineries were old refineries and so on, old rigs, and they'd get the American taxpayer to build new ones for them. Because the US corporations we're going to take it over, you see. It's just wonderful, isn't it. Isn't it amazing, 'eh?

But unfortunately, it's too easy to use these kinds of reasons to get wars going. In the past when it was a Cold War it was a bit easier to understand, nobody wanted a totalitarian type of system back then to rule you. And it's amazing, now we’ve come into an even more totalitarian system. It’s developed where you're seeing total and complete intolerance to anyone who is a dissident of any kind and doesn't go along with the big boys’ plans. It's not just a matter of shunning you in society, you'd still get on with your pals or whatever. Today of course you won't be able to financially live, in an electronic age, I hope you understand this.

So, you simply, you're always lied to. And it's a sad thing that many a soldier, for instance, if they can survive, can look back on things, if, if they've got the wherewithal. A lot of people live the rest of their lives in shock, they do, or PTSD, when they realized that they were part of something that should not have happened. At least during the Cold War, as they say, there was a big play to change a good part of the world to communist. And that didn't sit well in people who just fought World War II, for instance, and believed in all the propaganda that was used back then. So, you just don't suddenly want to become communist.

Even though your universities, I could never figure this out for a long time, why universities in Britain had professors from the old Soviet bloc that came into Britain and taught at universities throughout Britain. It made no sense until you see the bigger, bigger picture. I'll put up an article tonight to do with Peter Hitchens. I should read a little bit from it for you just to give you an insight into some things here.

Peter Hitchens himself, his dad was an officer in the Navy through World War II, a career officer though. He watched the total decline of the system and the scrapping of a lot of the old British warfare system of shipping, Navies and so on, as part of the deal that was arrived at with the US in postwar Britain for lend-lease and all rest of it. Because Britain was up to its eyes and debt from World War I, never mind World War II.

But he talks about the anti-British Marxists. And don't forget, nothing happens in a system where you have a real and clever elite at the very, very top, at least the agencies that work for them on their behalf, they don't let anything bad happen. So, you think about this, here's Hitchens who was part of that generation who went to good schooling and to university, it was I think maybe Oxford he went to too, where he was converted to Marxism. They didn't want to call it communism then after Stalin, but they wanted to use ‘Marxism’ and ‘Trotskyism’, you know, all the same stuff just variations, just different colors of the same thing. Or camouflages of the same thing. He says here…

Peter Hitchens: Britain's Been Changed Forever and Is "In the Foothills of a Catastrophe"

youtube.com / 2 Sept 2019

(Alan: He talked about...)

...the infiltration of anti-British Marxists into the highest levels of British society.

(A: Right. And you can actually hear him talking about this on YouTube. If I get the link for it, I'll put it up. He says...)

This has completely transformed Britain, British life & culture.

Since Blair came to power in 1997, (A: But it was on the go before with Harold Wilson all the way through. But when Blair got in, for those who haven't figured it out too, it says...) these former Marxists have occupied positions of power in all critical areas of British life.

(A: Now, if they got into these ones, I would say, that the elite at the top had planned it this way.)

They have revolutionised Britain -- it is no longer the country it once was:

"This is the really ridiculous thing about the modern West, we live in post revolutionary societies and in most cases we don't even realise the revolution's taken place.

(A: And that's so true. Because they use the Gramsci technique of, you know, about 40, 50, 60 years, 70 years of gradually taking over the culture. All areas of the culture, including the music and everything else too. The sexual revolution and the feminist revolution, and revolution after revolution, you see. And they laugh at these little revolutions thinking, oh, well that's just children, youngsters having… No, no. This was planned, folks. And those youngsters, those children having fun with promiscuity became adults, you see, etc. etc. Anyway, it says…)

"This is the really ridiculous thing about the modern West, we live in post revolutionary societies and in most cases we don't even realise the revolution's taken place. It's been a Kierkegardian revolution in which all the buildings remain standing but everything which led to their being built and contributed to their design, and the whole society that supported them, has been wiped away.

And people walk around in it relatively prosperous thinking revolution must mean a red flag flying above the post office and the barraks and the railway station with commisars in the streets; it doesn't.

Modern left wing revolution means this, the policing of thought,

(A: Now, think about this, folks. The policing of thought, okay. As a say, I know journalists who have had calls by the cops in these countries who said, we're worried about your thinking. You see, it's all here. I'm not kidding you. It says…)

the deadening of the academy, the lack of serious debate or understanding, the suppression of disagreement,

(A: ...and that's what it is, you see, it’s suppression, it's not toleration, it's suppression of disagreement…)

and everybody accepts it and you're surrounded by it and there is no cure for it, it's all gone.

(A: You see, the old system is gone.)

Education is dead, the media is dead, (A: ...and isn't it ever!) it's almost unwatchable, most of what's put out now in particular on BBC television, it's almost impossible for an intelligent person to sit down and watch it.

(A: And that's a fact. You wouldn't believe how loaded it is with it all. It's like Marxist speech and conversations are put down as entertainment, into their different entertainment, insults and all the rest of it, in dramas.)

But luckily for them the number of intelligent, educated people is very small so they get away with it."

(A: And you see, they've made sure that you just don't have education now. You don't get education, that's what education is. You certainly don't get critical thinking. And you’re taught everything's quite normal. You’re raise to be naïve. Aren't you? Everybody is. Well, this is all normal, we’re all just happy little, having fun. Really? Hm.)

"[...] My advice to young people (A: ...in Britain, right...) is to leave the country, and people laugh at me when I say it but I've never been more serious about anything in my life. And they ask where should I go, and I say I don't care where you go. The point about this country is, in the foothills of such a catastrophe it's not a good idea to wait around and find out what it's like."

Called "Eurocommunism", this policy renounced Soviet economic models...

(A: And this is how they did it, you see, they kept the techniques, I've said this before about the Soviet experiment, they used the techniques that work. It says...)

Called "Eurocommunism", this policy renounced Soviet economic models but kept the key aims of transforming our society.

Tens of thousands of Marxists left the newly-expanded universities to enter teaching, journalism, the BBC, the law and, of course, politics.

Starting from the 1990s, they began to pop up in positions of importance. Peter Hitchens says that crucially his generation were deep inside what became New Labour Communist/Marxists in Blair’s Cabinet include:

John Lord Reid, Defence Secretary,

(A: Now, these are communist Marxists, right, in charge of defense, Defense Secretary.)

Bob Ainsworth, (A: …he was also...) Defence Secretary,

Chancellor Alistair Darling Stephen Byers, (outed by the Guardian in 1999 as a former supporter of the Trotskyists.)

Peter Mandelson. (A: ...who was a pal, he was a vice prime minister I think for Tony Blair. Peter Mandelson by the way is a guy who took over when Blair was off on holiday, running Britain supposedly, and he boasted, it was in the newspapers he boasted he ran Britain from the pool, of the French Lord Rothschild's pool in France. He boasted about it, that's how I ran Britain, you know, just bathing in the pool. Trotskyist again. And again, these names are covers in themselves, they can be covers as well, folks. It says…)

Even Tony Blair himself revealed in a BBC interview that he had been a Trotskyist at Oxford in the 1970s.

One of Blair’s closest aides, Peter Hyman, has confessed that New Labour was devised ‘to take and hold the levers of power... winning power and locking out the Tories to ensure that the 21st Century was a Labour century with Labour values'.

Now, people have no idea, though, this is one part of it, but it gets into the managing and taking over of culture. But nothing happens unless the elite at the top allow this, and perhaps even design it to happen, folks. Because you're going in, remember, the global system is to bring you gradually, gradually, after a little bit of better incomes for people, for maybe 20 years or so, maybe 30 years max, for some people, and bring you back into austerity in the global society. And again, cutting back on energy, that's food too, food, electricity, everything else. That's part of the agenda. To save the world, etc. As the elite themselves jet about and live in a lifestyle you can't imagine. That's reality, folks. So, I'll put this one up as well.

Peter Hitchens: The British Revolution WAS Televised (but few realised...) - youtube.com / 31 Aug 2019

And also, just to touch on a few of the things too before it's over for the night, I guess. You could babble forever but there's so much history involved and insight into history, as it happens. Most folk don't get the insight as it happens. They get it from books much later on after it's all happened, and then sometimes in later generations. But yeah, we're watching the same old stuff ramp-up as…

White House Considering Dramatic Expansion of Travel Ban - time.com / 11 Jan 2020

…for different countries there. He's going to starve them out again, or goad them into war, obviously, like Iran, hm? They're not in the Stone Age yet, you see. Most countries around there have been hammered into it already. They tried to do the same thing with Syria. We watched… Again, don't forget it's a chessboard, this will happen, that will cause this to happen, that will cause that to happen. The mass migration flooding in from all those countries, when they took out Libya, which used to hold back mass migration from flooding across Europe into Britain, that's destroyed and when that happened, I knew this was part of the plan, was to completely alter the face of Europe for ever. Obviously. That was part of the plan, folks.

UK authorities target Iranian community in Britain - presstv.com / 7 Jan 2020

And they haven't stopped. There's been lots of Iranians trying to get into Britain, legally and illegally, for years now. Because they… Can you imagine getting brought up for the last 20 odd years waiting for your turn to get bombed? That's a lot of stress on people. And once it happens, of course there'll be, hhhch, millions again, 'eh? And then you get a good chunk of Africa jumping on board with it, and from other parts of the world too, because they won't need passports or anything else to prove who they are.

Another article too says…

Does Trump Have An Ethnic Iranian Interrogation and Detention Program In The Works?

ronpaulinstitute.org / 6 Jan 2020

The reported detention and interrogation of Iranian Americans in Washington state over the weekend raises an obvious question: was this an isolated incident, or is the Trump administration now rolling out an interrogation and possible detention program targeting persons of Iranian heritage?

Well, we saw all of that in the last 20 years of the horrors from the torture camps, etc., and extraordinary rendition as they call it as they kidnapped folk and just took them to different countries to torture them.

Is this a civilized planet, folks? Is this how you're going to teach the world to emulate you? You're going to drum up incredible hate, which again, is part of the chessboard. There's no doubt about it, folks, you don't do this kind of thing unless you want massive backlash, forever, so you can stay in power, or you can use it for other reasons you haven't even fathomed out yet. I'm not kidding you.

Google will ‘de-rank’ RT articles to make them harder to find – Eric Schmidt

rt.com / 20 Nov 2017

Eric Schmidt, the Executive Chairman of Google’s parent company Alphabet, says the company will “engineer” specific algorithms for RT and Sputnik to make their articles less prominent on the search engine’s news delivery services.

That's your toleration. That's what you're going to give to the world in tolerance, you see, on board or not on board. That's who we are. Isn't it sad, 'eh? We don't go forward in a world of tolerance at all, regardless of all their baseless prattle. As we go into this completely intolerant society, where they can literally cut off everything from a person if they don't like you. And they starve folk to death. Anywhere in the world by the way. I'll put up an article too…

How To Spot A Twitter Troll

craigmurray.org.uk / 2 July 2019

(A: Quite a good article by Craig Murray who is a former ambassador to some the Middle Eastern countries I think it was. He's now human rights activist. You don't have to agree with everybody or their philosophy or their beliefs, but he's got some good stuff here and there with, such as how to spot a Twitter troll. It says here, the advertisement put out by the...)

…GCHQ are currently advertising to recruit more trolls to carry out precisely the activity I outline here. As their advertisement puts it:

(A: ...and the links are here, by the way.)

We are looking to recruit individuals who can contribute to a step change in the UK's ability to project cyber power against our adversaries,

(A: Now, once again, here you have, I think it's like I said before, when war is declared with Britain, and 'we' are at war with, you know, well, 'our' adversary… Who are 'we'? [Alan chuckles.]   People don't stop and think, 'eh? They really don't, 'eh? And young folk don't because you take it for granted. It's all based on trust, you see. The whole system from about one third of the way down, from then on, all the way down to the bottom is based on trust. Oh, they wouldn't lie to us, you know, we're the good guys. And that's what you believe, you know. So…)

in order to keep the UK safe. You will be at the forefront of the nation's covert online capability. We want people who can help support and run operations that disrupt and degrade our adversaries' ability to do us harm, and contest malign activity in cyber space.

I do hope this helps cut through the cognitive dissonance for those of you who found it difficult to come to terms with the truth of the below.

(A: And it's got the original post here.)

ORIGINAL POST

...the British government employs a very large number of people whose full time job is to influence the political narrative on social media. (A: And it's true, one of them is called, and it's only one of them…) the 77th Brigade of the British Army, the Integrity Initiative, MI5 and MI6 (A: That's another one.) and GCHQ all run major programmes of covert online propaganda. These (A: dis...) information warriors operate on twitter, facebook, and in comments sections across the internet.

So, he tells you how to spot a Twitter troll. And there's thousands out there. And you've come across them, I'm sure, and you've probably been horrified thinking, am I really such a bad person? Well, that's how they attack you. They're meant to shake your psyche until you start, oh, oh my God, maybe I'm bad, or, you know... Because no one likes to become bad, you see. [Alan laughing.]   They're quite something.

Pentagon launched second attack on (A: They call it…) an Iranian militant the same day it killed Soleimani - usatoday.com / 10 Jan 2020

And don't forget, Soleimani, there's different versions of him. I mean, the guy was on a diplomatic mission with diplomatic status. He wasn't sneaking around going from one country to the other.

And let's be honest, the bottom line is, why is the US in Iraq? Still? Normally that's a conquering invasive force, isn't it? But you look at the oilfields there too, 'eh, and they're not going to leave it. I think there’s 27 bases around the very borders of Iran for instance, they've got 27 or 28. And they have other, a host of 40 odd when you go out a few miles out on the other side too from it. So, 40 odd bases around Iran all the way. There's even a joke out there, someone put it out, it's a really good one too, but it's based on facts, and they pinpointed all these bases around Iran and they says, look where they put their country, right in the middle of our bases. You see? But yeah, no one says, why are they there in the first place? Really pretty sad, isn't it.

Afghanistan, where it supposedly all started in the caves there that Osama bin Laden, even though he always denied it to the end in fuzzy videos he sent out, or we we’re told he sent out. That's why the US eventually went into Afghanistan, rather quickly actually, they planned to do it before 9/11 happened. The troops are all still there yet in Afghanistan.

After 18 Years of US Occupation, Poll Finds Zero Percent of Afghans Thriving, 85 Percent 'Suffering' - ronpaulinstitute.org / 9 Jan 2020

It's just amazing. I mean... Remember too, facts are facts, folks. You understand, the lies to get you into a war, it doesn't matter how outrageous they are as long as they get you into a war. Because once you're in it doesn't matter if they're exposed being lies, once you're in, the ball is rolling, you see, that's how they do things.

Afghanistan was really Third World status pretty well, most of the country, with stacks and stacks of tribes occasionally warring with each other down through many, many centuries. It was called the Graveyard of Empires, where the invaders would come in, Britain did it. Of course, the opium was a big, big plus to get your hands on, the opium, if you want to drug other countries like China, which of course Britain and the US took part in to make them drop to their knees. Many ways, not just cyber warfare, to get countries to destabilize and drop to their knees and get you to beg to stop it. And then in come the conditions. That's the techniques that are used.

As I say, history is really a horror show, people. I hope you understand that it's a horror show. So anyway, 85% are suffering and they still got troops in there yet. Don't forget too, it came out too when 9/11 happened, supposedly, if even if there were hijackers, supposedly most of them were from Saudi Arabia, the best ally of the US. Still is the best lie, it wasn't Iraq or Iran.

And the same, they parrot these, weapons of mass destruction, when you see them all on board with the same thing, like Soleimani was a bad man, you see, he had blood of British troops on his hands, it says here. Well, don't forget that Britain trained and supplied, and so did the States, ISIS, ISIL, Al Qaeda, whatever you want to call themselves, they kept morphing into different names when the public caught onto it. They were meant to topple Libya and then Syria.

And they'll never be forgiven, those countries, or anybody who helped those countries to stop it. There's no way, if you've stopped anything at all in the big agenda, yeah, you're done for. They'll never ever let it go.

It’s sad because the mass murderers of the people of, for years now, years and years and years, who we never heard of before, most folk couldn't even point and get them on a map. But all the different communities, and Christian communities too. These weren't Western Christian communities, these were people who lived very simply, in traditional ways, with very strong families - again, that's a dangerous thing for this world system - strong families and religion hold them together. But they went back for 1000, 2000 years, these families over by Syria, outside Syria too. And getting slaughtered. And it was so tragic to watch.

Nobody in the Western world in any leadership capacity said anything at all, they just, ho-hum, they didn't give a darn. That tells you an awful lot. And they lost a lot, an awful lot of support when that started to filter through the public. It tells you so much about the ones who rule you.

And then you've got an article here by Philip Giraldi, I think it's for the Ron Paul Institute for Peace and Prosperity. [Alan chuckles.] It's amazing you hear some of the old conservatives talking about peace and prosperity. It used to be left-wing that got blamed with that. But really, it's amazing how they all change positions, and one becomes the other, 'eh, it goes back and forth.

The Caesar Syria Civilian Protection Act: Why Washington Is Both Corrupt and Ignorant - ronpaulinstitute.org / 2 Jan 2020

It's a good article actually on the corrupt power in Washington, DC. It’s been there for about 100 years, the deep state was there for about 100 years, totally corrupt. Carol Quigley said himself in the 1960s, that an organization that he belonged to, he said, had been running and supplying your presidents for 60 years. That was in 1960 odd that he wrote the book, you see, so you're really looking at this particular organization from the late 1800s. I hope you understand that. That is the real deep state that's in there, you know, and they all get paid from the same sources, way above their paycheck level, in politics. Big private organization.

Interesting too, as they went into, as they want to bomb Iran this time, Iran had two earthquakes in the North there, 'eh. But it's interesting to me because when they went to attack Iraq in the last so-called Iraqi Freedom war, [Alan chuckles.], Operation Iraqi Freedom, they had earthquakes there too. One of them had it at a place called Bam, I think it was Bam. Right on cue, it was really quite amazing.

Recent Earthquakes Near The Middle East - earthquaketrack.com

The first Gulf War altogether, the Desert Storm one, the Iraqi troops were coming out of their trenches, it wasn't shellshocked either, it was that they use the EMP technology upon them, which really completely creates a fugue-like state, a zombie-like state until it passes. It's entrained on your mind and your brain. That was in the newspapers at the time, the general newspapers, the folk couldn't believe, they were just walking up like zombies, they couldn't understand or look, or, just had this faraway look in their eyes.

It was said that they used HAARP technology, you see, and you can actually entrain it on a certain position. Old stuff, 'eh, but all gone now, but used in more sophisticated ways actually, and maybe more perfected. But earthquakes, yeah, earthquakes, they can cause earthquakes too by the way, by the HAARP type technology and by the underground CERN type technology as well. But you put a standing wave up there, and then you put a few up, and then you can bring them onto sort of a focal point in the ionosphere, and then beam them down like a reflector on a specific point, you can create incredible earthquakes. That alone will do it, and again the effect upon the human mind, massive disorientation and so on, confusion.

And...

Twitter Executive Revealed to Be 'Psyops' Soldier Linked to Spreading Disinformation Across Social Media - newsweek.com / 1 Oct 2019

'A Threat to Our Democracy', it says here. That's in Newsweek. I'll put these articles up.

These are only a few because the time, oh, the time is really flying on here. And I can't go over the limit. If I get well over the hour, trying to cram it in, to speed up the voice and cram it together and you sound like a chipmunk eventually. I don't want to be like that.

Anyway, folks, that's unfortunately it for tonight. But we are in such amazing psychological warfare, all the time, in all different areas, including all the different organizations. If you bring up even global warming, you'll be hammered and hammered by a psyops organizations with their countless little trolls. Because agendas are at work and you've got to understand, the agenda is to make everybody believe that it's your fault, you're alive and you're causing the planet to die, and you must therefore be controlled by experts and do what you're told by experts and commissars. As the ones who rule over you get richer and richer.

You see, this is the super sophisticated proper Soviet system. Not the Russian Soviet, the proper Soviet system that was meant to end up like that. You train the public to be obedient, you train them to love their servitude, as Aldous Huxley talked about.

Anyway, for myself Alan Watt from Ontario Canada, where it's heavily, heavily snowing and I demand my share of global warming because I'm paying taxes for it, it's good night and may your God or gods go with you.

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

(Blurb, i.e. Educational Talk)

IntelCyberWarriors:

"Oh, What a Wicked Web They Weave,

Trained to Lie, Subvert, Deceive."

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on January 19, 2020. And it's snowing like crazy outside, getting pretty, pretty deep. Because after all, it is winter. That's normal climate in a sense. But I don't even go into the climate stuff anymore, because what's the point of it? You've got a massive, massive worldwide well-funded agenda to push through a whole new way of living. That's the whole point too. It's nothing to do, really, with climate. It's to do with a new controlled way of living. Because there's too many people, they claim. And they also claim, we're not dying fast enough, in some countries anyway. They also believe that it's time, it's literally time, according to the big, big plan, to start bringing down the population quickly, very quickly. Rather than just advising you to come down and don't have children and so on, they want to make it mandatory. All that kind of thing.

Right down to what you eat too, and how much energy you consume. I mentioned that with Technocracy Inc., that was part of their agenda too, where everything that you as an individual from birth to death would consume or used to heat yourself, or any kind of energy, was marked as energy units. And you'd be allocated so much according to your status in society. Very socialistic basically, along the guise to some extent that you've seen with the top socialists of the past. The Fabian Society founders were famous for dictating the kind of world that they wanted to bring in, with, as I say, everyone serving the state, the world state. It's a nondemocratic system.

The whole idea we're going through now of crisis, crisis, crisis, as you're well aware, I'm sure you are, is to bring you to the state of conditioning you to coming to accept that the system isn't working. Remember, that's what the Club of Rome said, that their task was to find a way to unite the world into this new system of basically Technocracy in a sense, expert rule, or rule by experts on behalf of the Masters. Of course, there's always Masters. The scientific class would manage it all basically, and manage all of us, all the people. So they said they hit upon the idea, they hit upon it, looked at all kinds of scary scenarios to terrify the public to give up their rights and they said, well, they hit on the idea that global warming and famine and drought and so on would fit the bill. And once they are on board with something, it's like "weapons of mass destruction" when Bush and Cheney and the rest of them were all in, and Rumsfeld, every press op that they had, every little quip they gave you is literally that, "weapons of mass destruction". They've all agreed upon it, that's all they'll tell the media. Until it conditions the public… it must be true, they can't all be lying.

But it's a part of the technique that's used in propaganda. Very effective actually. Because most of the public judge, they do that, they don't question it and can't believe so many folk could be lying, especially so many people who are supposedly above you. This idea of them being above you, you see, is what makes you smaller than them, you understand you're down there, under, and you go along with it. That's the whole technique with it, they can't all be lying, because they're so respectable, there up there, you know. That's how simple propaganda can be.

But propaganda has many functions, more than just trying to persuade people to change to whatever you, or whatever party you belong to or group or whatever it happens to be, how they want you to believe and behave. Because behavior modification is really the intention of propaganda, to get you to do something, once you've been propagandized enough, to alter the way that you live and behave and react to certain things as well of course.

There's never been a time with so much psychological trauma in the planet, across the world, as today from incredible propaganda indoctrination techniques that the public are generally unaware of. But it's affected them. There's so much neurosis out there and despondency, apathy, and fury for things which are absolutely ridiculous. But it's all propaganda. And funded into being by think tanks and foundations and multibillionaire's that can't explain what their real function is. And governments can't say what their function is either, since they allow them to get away with what they do which is incredible.

Which tells you you're not living, and this is the key to everything, you're not living, honestly, you're not living in the system that you've been brainwashed into believing exists. You know, the infantile naïve system that Bertrand Russell said they would train you into. They would tell you you're living in the best country in the world, with the best healthcare, for instance, etc., that kind of thing, and everybody would believe it because the government kept telling you so. You know, this is the best country in the world, you see. Very simple. And those other countries are really bad over there. Sometimes that's very true, it depends on which totalitarian system is invoked at the moment as the enemy.

But today with psychological warfare and the mass manipulation of all nations very quickly and easily, and the big, big one too is the accepted incredibly indoctrinated generation that comes out of schools, authorized, obviously, since no one stops it, into the children. They come up to be absolute complete radicals. But they're perfect for what the big boys at the top want.

The world is owned, it really is owned. It really, really is. It's owned. And those at the top really believe that they own everybody in it as well. It's an awful nuisance for it to have all these think tanks, to brainwash children and all the plans and educational authorities and so on. That's a lot of work and money too. It's a waste of their money, they think, to keep forking out this cash to make sure that children are indoctrinated to be either passive or radical. Or both at the same time. Because they're passive in most things and they won't react to things that they really should react to. But they've been taught to be almost like revolutionaries when it comes to certain topics and they'll react with utter fury and no understanding or debatable concepts at all, just fury and rage. This has all been accepted because it's being allowed, and it's being promoted. Which means it's part of the agenda. Of course, it is because they have to come into the new system of austerity eventually.

That's what we're living through today, the plan towards pure austerity, run by a scientific group supposedly, on behalf of those at the very top. The ones who have no problems traveling across the planet in their big jets and so on, and they're never condemned about it. Astonishing too, it really is, really well done, when you see how easy it is once you've radicalized the youngsters and teenagers and so on and brought them up that way, with countless documentaries that soaked into their head by bits and pieces and bits and bytes of what they're supposed to hate and be angry about. And at the same time, they all have their leaders presented to them. And they never question these leaders.

And the leaders often, in like today's system, must be partially entertainment or have that ability to be entertainers too, you see. It's better if you can get one who is an entertainer and have them lead them, you see. That's why they used a lot of actors and so on in the Council on Foreign Relations, and they use them, the Royal Institute of International Affairs in Britain, same group, and across the world. So they have all these youngsters following them, and they say all the right things to get them agitated, with triggers really. Because they're trained to have triggers, really, see nothing but red. You see what Bertrand Russell knew they would do down the road, which is now, because he was part of the big agencies and organizations that worked together to bring this present culture into being. And he was on the go long, long ago. He said, if we want to train the children that snow is black, they will really believe it's black.

That was a tremendous breakthrough, they found out of ways of really doing Pavlovian studies through the Soviet Union at the time, big, big things. Eleanor Roosevelt went across to see Pavlov and she said in her own memoirs, that was her hero, someone who could condition not just the children but that the goal was the children would grow up to be the indoctrinated perfect obedient society. So, she really admired Pavlov. She said too, that they were so different, the children in the Soviet Union were so different from Americans. Because Americans, they'd be going off to school laughing and joking and chasing each other and just being playful and so on. But she said she was so impressed by the obedience and quietness as the children in Soviet Union quietly went to school together in a very orderly fashion.

Totalitarians love order, they love this order thing. What they hate is individualism. They abhor it. And that's what it's about as well, the system we're coming into. I used to say in talks many years ago that I was struck by fashion and how every generation was given a fashion, to accord them a difference from their parents, you see, what they wore. They also gave them during the 60s the hippie era, which was a resurgence of what they'd done with the wonder folk in Germany in the 1920s. They tried this out. Everything that happens, that worked, had been tried out in experiments before, including as I say the sexual revolution of the 60s and the miniskirts, it was all done in the 1920s and 30s, the roaring 20s. They tried all that back then. But they didn't have antibiotics to tackle the VD problem, the venereal disease problem. And they didn't have all the different abortion clinics to handle children that they didn't want from all these different casual affairs, you see, that was promoted in the 20s.

They made the Booze-can sexy. That was where you went, it was in all the movies of course at the time too, that's where you went for fun and you were kind of anti-establishment and you we're different, you're breaking all the taboos that the parents and old societies… But the fallout was just too much and so they had to drop it. World War II came along of course, and they had to drop it to some extent. But they went back to the drawing board very quickly and to find a way to prevent pregnancy. At the end of World War II, they'd already got antibiotics so, bang, in came the 60s and the hippies and so on. And drugs helped as well of course, naturally, and they started to introduce that kind of drugs. Quite fascinating when you understand that… it didn't happen from the occasional person's mind here with some imagination. This is all planned. You find many of the folks started to take some kind of credit for bringing it in, because they were part of it, and they were part of the big groups that ran it all and how to put it across to the youngsters of course.

The old slogan, at the same time as they did the communist push inside the US, was, don't trust anybody over 30. And eventually started bringing it down to younger and younger groups. But the idea, they started to fire across the teaching associations older people, or to push them out and replace them with younger people. Mainly women, young women, because the children could still identify with them on some kind of scale as a very young parent basically as opposed to a teacher. It also had the appeal that they were closer to their own age as well, so they're more likely to be able to influence the children for social change. So, the children would go back home and start criticizing their parents or being antisocial to their parents. Until now they've got antisocial behavior disorder. And my, my, my, isn't it odd that the big psychological associations that use many of their agents, I call them, for the behavioral insights teams to change behavior for these very purposes, were the ones who then have got the authority to deal with the problems. And how they deal with them is part of the agenda.

Because they'll get the parents, it's really your fault. Then the parents start saying, well we better stop trying to correct the children or guide the children ourselves, we didn't realize it was our fault that the child wants to go and wring our necks. It's beautiful, isn't it, when you just stand back like an alien and watch it all. And you have to do that, you honestly have to do it. Because the world, as I've said so many times, in reality, in reality the systems we're living under is so alien to the one that you're brainwashed with and what the media feed you every day. It's so alien that it probably would terrify a lot of people. It really honestly would. We don't live in a… even anywhere near a half Disney type world that's portrayed. It's pretty nasty out there today.

As I say, we're noticing the complete liberal, as I've said before, liberals do not believe in equality of opinions. They're always on about how they're more, you know, liberal. Liberal used to be 'lots of' in a sense really. When in Britain if you went to a café or somewhere or even a fish and chips shop, you got your fish and chips and you got some good sauce you put on it. You put it on liberally, meaning you splashed the stuff on because you weren't, you know, [Alan chuckles.] you were already paying for it I suppose. But you just splash it on, and that was called liberal, that's what you meant by liberal back then.

Of course, liberal also met liberalism, that you found out later on. But you found out too that liberalism is not for equal anything at all. It's for their way or no way. It's the closest thing that you have to the old Soviet system. Which it is. Even Khrushchev said the same thing about America. He says, we don't call them communists, meaning their members in America, he says, we refer to them as liberals, he said. And that's how it is. They're completely intolerant of opinion. Completely intolerant, it's their way or no way. And they've been quite plain about their agenda, because it's their time, for the moment, to reign over the world. On behalf of the Masters, because it suits the Masters, you understand that.

If you want to bring the people into uniformity you use liberalism. Because they say everybody must be the same eventually, have equal opportunity. Which means that you're going to fudge everything to make your idea of equality equal, right. Which means other folk are going to get discriminated against. Of course they are. Of course they are. But that's really the Soviet system on steroids in a way, when it's enforced with ruthlessness too. We're seeing the ruthlessness come out publicly in debates and politics especially actually in Britain and the US as well. The hostility between different radicalized sections of society who are given authority over the public, it's rather frightening to watch it when you realize if any of these people actually get in charge as a party, on behalf of the Masters, they'll go on a tremendous spree of, huh, nihilism believe you me against the populations. You're getting rumblings of that already, naturally.

But as I say, the big boys at the top, and girls too, want to get a move on with this new world order. They want to get a real move on with it. In the meantime, of course they want to, on behalf of the masters really who really roll the cash in too with another Cold War… As I said, the new cold wars are awfully lucrative because the weapons industry is controlled by a relatively small amount of people and shareholders, considering the size of it across the planet, and they really rake the cash in when government sign on, naturally, and wink-wink and sign on, because they're told to basically, for new weaponry contracts. It's beautiful.

We're even hearing the same nonsense, the same stuff come out immediately, we heard the same rhetoric during the Cold War. And people, believe you me, during the Cold War right through in Britain, say, into the 70s and into the about the 80s, it wasn't a paradise. Because money was short. So much tax money was going off for, again, the weapons industry and the country has never recovered from it really.

The only reason that folk have got some cash is because there's magicians right now just managing the accounts. Because really, all countries are bankrupt, probably hundreds maybe thousands of times over in reality. It's backed by nothing anyway, the money. As long as you've got people at the top who are magicians who speak on behalf of the private groups that run the money, then as long as they keep adding zeros to the numbers maybe they can stretch it on a bit longer. That's how it works really. It really is like that.

But anyway, we are on a roll now into the Cold War, the same rhetoric, you know, oh you know the Russians have got a better missile than we've got. So you'll hear shortly within a month or so there'll be some plan on the table by one of the big armaments groups to make a super blah blah blah XM bum bum bum GTX missile that will be an antimissile missile that will catch this one coming in and all this. This is how they lived all through from the 50s, 60s, and 70s, this kind of stuff. With the threat of eminent annihilation of course. [Alan chuckles.] It was to get… telling the people… to make sure you were terrified enough to back up your governments. Otherwise you'd get fed up with getting taxed like that to pay for all this stuff. Which wasn't used, most of it. I mean, the really big ones were never used. Which is beautiful. Because you didn't even have to prove they even worked. I mean it's quite something.

But in the weapons industry all arms, including small arms, are mass-produced by all little countries and they're sold all over the world to all kinds of radical factions on behalf of the Masters of the world. Who are always looking for new little nations, or overthrowing little nations presidents or leaders anyway to get the resources that they have. If they're sitting on diamonds or gold or whatever happens to be, or some rare earth mineral for your cell phones, they'll want it and they'll get a way to get in there. Even if it takes paying one group to assassinate the leader, and then what? You go in there to keep the peace. Then your mine's immediately operating and getting the stuff out. Wars are awfully lucrative and there's always money behind it for big private organizations. The public are left, as I say, with the tab, you pay for the cost of it all. It's a sad thing to say but it's true.

I've never seen the world so radicalized as it is today. Really. With what's being allowed especially. It's quite fascinating, as I say, to see even the Extinction Rebellion groups, well organized as basically, with the same communistic techniques of radicalization that have been put out there by Rules For Radicals and by the different leaders and so on of the left-wing, the authorized leaders, long ago. It's the same techniques that are used. But what's astonishing is to see governments allowing it to happen. Which tells me, again, it's meant to be this way, it's planned this way.

People who are involved in revolution seldom ever, ever get a whiff of what the real goal is. They're given something and they're trained to believe in it, they're actually trained to believe in the goals that they're given. And because of the training they can't see… It's like having tunnel vision, they can't see to the left or to the right or above and below, and movements that are going on and who's going to benefit and who is really going to take this over at the end if they get their way and so on. They never see it. It's, again, it's part of, and there's textbooks on this kind of stuff for those in intelligence agencies and how to do it, you know.

So, we're living through this and watching it and when as I say governments allow it, it means that it's the plan. It's the big, big plan. Governments don't sit, don't ever sit back in your own chair and think governments just sit there and say, my goodness we never saw this coming. Nothing is further from the truth. Nothing. You wouldn't believe the thousands and thousands and thousands of people who work to observe this kind of stuff and to keep everything, and they observe every section in society.

I remember, I've met people who've been in or attached to different agencies throughout my life, in different countries. And they always have a standing joke. Because there's no one, no one, believe you me, in the world of spies or agencies or intelligence, there's nobody in them that isn't paranoid, in any country. Because it's all based on deception. Even their entry, on their entry exams they have ways of deceiving the public. They're given little tests, they have to go out into the public and just see members of the public about certain things and so on. Of course, the psychopathic type tends to get in more easily, you know. Then the rest of them who have psychopathic tendencies become the other agencies. But they're paranoid. Because they're always getting watched themselves. And they never know themselves when they're being tested. Which is a great way to watch folk and manage them, isn't it?

I think you'd all be in shock as well if you realize how many agencies, or even agents, put it that way, are really from other countries. A lot of them don't even have citizenship in the West. And they're working for the West. And they're working for agencies from the West. Because they've been recruited and just spy on lots of countries across Europe and the Middle East of course. And they're given awfully good salaries. The governments in the West prefer them to go back as much as possible and even live more, put more time into the countries they're from so it keeps the governments, their eyes off them to an extent in a suspicious way. So, if you get suspicious, they pull them out very quickly and bring them across the world. Britain's got stacks of them.

Britain even hired a lot of the ones that came in as refugees, to even go back and fight in other countries. That was all in the papers quite a few years back there. But they also hire a lot of them to be agents, you see. But then, in this world, as I say, when there's big, big things going on, we never get much, do we, we don't get much sense given to us for the big things. And that's how we're run basically. If you ask a question, you'll be attacked. As I mentioned last week about the, it isn't just bots which are unleashed upon you if you're on any kind of social media. But you'll be attacked by real people, real names, but maybe fake names but real people who will target you. You know, they'll try and befriend you, or in a massive group, and apparently from all over the world then they'll hit you with something, just to try and bring you down, or to silence you or whatever. And these are from government agencies.

Last week again I mentioned some of them in Britain for instance, which is awfully important to understand that, I think everybody who's ever looked into any questioning of anything at all probably unknowingly has conversed with these agents never knowing who they really are. Because there's so many of them. There's thousands of them. Britain alone… Don't forget, every military department has an agency, cyber agencies. Every military, naval, you know, air, Army. It's amazing. And even then, they have many divisions and layers of them, specialize in different areas. Thousands of them. The US has them. Canada has them. It's…

People think that… I don't know why it is, I guess, I said before, the computer was meant to change society, big time, and bring in this controllable world order where you'd have no privacy at all down the road. They sold it to the public by calling it your personal computer. If they forced you to buy, or even forced you take a free one you'd be suspicious actually. Hopefully. But it was brought out, lots of porn on them, the computer. Every child knew this. I can remember a librarian in the last place I was then telling me this. I never had a computer at the time, and I wouldn't touch one. But I went to the library all the time and I devoured books and that and ordered books too and they were awfully good at getting them to you. Of course, even then you found out later, they were [Alan chuckles.] taking a note of everything you're reading. [Alan laughing.] It's amazing. And that still goes on today. In your free societies, 'eh?

But yeah, that librarian said, the children are coming in every time at their lunch breaks and so on, and they're trying to stop them watching the porn on it. I guess they didn't have all the different filters in place back then. But the newspapers made sure everybody knew about it, that, oh my goodness there's just so much porn. And talk show hosts on AM stations in Toronto and different places would tee-hee and laugh at it all. Which makes… It's the same technique they used to get the sexual revolution through and the drug revolution through in the 1960s. The same techniques they used, made sure it was all fun and ha-ha and naughty and all that kind of stuff to make sure.

But the idea, they called it a personal computer. Oh, it's personal, you know. And then you get a little firewall and things, all that kind of thing, and as I say, you can be in charge of your own computer. What a big lie that was, 'eh, you're in charge of it. To fool and lie, to fool and lie. Do you realize what's happened since then? I don't think people really realize what's happened. And what has happened is what they wanted to have happen. They said that they'd bring in a society where everybody would be utterly predictable in their habits and their behavior. And they have a virtual you everywhere, all of you have a virtual you. The Pentagon have it. I read the articles years ago where they add to it, from the social media that you're putting up there and participating in, they take bits of what you're doing and they'll incorporate it into the virtual you. They run scenarios on the virtual you to see how you'll behave in the virtual world. Which really was pretty accurate the more data they got about you, of how you would behave in a real situation, and a whole variety of situations in fact.

And you think you're free. Why do you think they want all this stuff? Part of the reason is, if there ever is a big, big purge on the public, they'll know exactly who to go for. They'll know exactly who can't be reconditioned, or normalized as they like to call it. Personal computer, 'eh? Everybody is being forced into it, whether we like it or not. I was hearing the other day there are about 97% of all the transactions daily across America for instance and a good part of the world are cashless. It's all with cards. All with cards. Do you realize, governments know everything you're buying. What you like, what you don't like. You know. If you're buying vitamins, you may be feeling run down, they'll know all about it. All about your problems and conditions, everything about you. There's no privacy at all. It was designed to go that way. It was designed to go that way, folks. Absolutely.

I think back to the 90s and so on, it was getting… In the late 90s there was a lot of, if you knew how to read intelligence and put things together, the signs were everywhere, you didn't have to dig deep to find out. You wouldn't get all the answers, but it it's the lack of answers that make you suspicious, that's how you… That's how intelligence agencies actually work. But you saw for instance in Canada about 1998 maybe it was, 97 or 98, when Allan Rock in the Liberal party I guess, maybe Liberal party, maybe, at the time. But anyway, regardless of the party, he was the Minister of Justice, you know, or the Attorney General, whatever they want to call it. He literally put it through, surprisingly, no one heard of it coming, a bill, and Omnibus crime bill.

And you read through it, you know, indefinite detention without charge. It was, the whole thing was an antiterrorist bill. This is before 9/11 happened, remember. And the public were kind of, what on earth is going on here, everything seems so quiet, and the Cold War was now over and yada, yada, yada. At the same time, and I remember walking down the street in this little town I was living in at the time, and I saw the police walking four abreast dressed in black combat gear. I thought what on earth? They were all laughing and joking and smiling at people, and I thought, what is this? The next week in the paper it says maybe some of you have noticed, and they describe these policeman, you know, dressed in this new, you know, combat gear, tucked in pants, you know, and the military boots, the whole lot. And they said, this is the new uniform. Well, wait a minute here! That's a military uniform, folks.

There's a difference in a military uniform from a local social service which is the police. M-hm. But it was happening across the whole country, and it was happening in other countries too at the same time. That's when you knew, this is a big, big agenda here. A BIG agenda. As I say, supposedly the Cold War is over, 'eh. So you had an Omnibus crime bill getting put through, you get police who are dressed up as though they're going into battle for the SAS, right. And it's all leading up to what they knew was coming, which was definitely, as far as I'm concerned, the Middle Eastern wars. And all the fallout from it too.

But you don't start something… And don't ever believe they're just stupid at the top. That's a common myth that they put out themselves. Oh, bureaucrats just didn't notice or think that, or planners didn't notice. You have thousands, and I mean it, thousands of folks involved in the planning of these things. Sometimes over a thousand agencies in different countries working together planning it all. Each agency might have one or two thousand people working for that particular department, planning, if we move the king this way, what will happen on the chessboard? Every possible thing that could come out of it, repercussion and fall out, has to be noticed and thought out. And each fallout would lead to this, lead to that and lead to, lead to, lead to, lead to. Massive ripple effect.

They don't just suddenly do things. Because believe you me, there are masters here at the very top of this system of what you think is democracy. They want it all to be taken care of properly or heads will roll, you know. So, you saw the signs in the 90s and, bingo, after they said that they would "need a Pearl Harbor event" to get all these wars in all these countries on the list going, they get their wish. They're awfully lucky that way, you know. And that's never stopped to the present day. It really hasn't stopped.

The fallout with mass migration, again, there are people out there who are glorying in this, boasting about how wonderful this is to destroy parts of Europe or different cultures, even Scandinavia for instance. There's nothing hidden here. So, they knew how many pluses they get from their actions, you see, all the ripples that were planned. Didn't happen by accident. And it hasn't stopped.

But I keep thinking back, I remember back in Britain as an example, as we think we are freer now, 'eh. [Alan chuckles.] If you don't get a knock on your door, you think you're free, you know. I remember in Britain there was a… some kind of, I don't know if it was a BBC program or maybe a Thames television one. But anyway, it was what would've happened, and they really build it up big time when they wanted everybody to watch something on the BBC, what would happen if Germany had won World War II? They showed you in the promos for this thing these big machines with Nazi symbols on them, halftracks and full tracks and so on going up the Pall Mall in London and all that. And the ominous sound behind it. And the idea was, what would happen. Because I never watched it because I couldn't watch, I hated the trash that they put out, honestly, it was so boring and so full of indoctrination and agendas basically it's astonishing. It's even worse now actually. You think about it, that was meant to terrify a public against a totalitarian system.

What they did, which is what governments do in real life, is they keep telling you how, how free you are compared to them over there, those guys, look, oh look at them. They'd list all the reasons that you should be grateful you live in the country you're in, right. But that documentary used those techniques. Oh, here's a happy family, who's all smiling and decent and all that, you know, they had, you know, everything's just wonderful. And the next thing, then they start losing. And then, in come these terrible Germans who walked about with machine guns and things. Well, look at Britain or London today. What happened?

You understand, they've used that against their own public, [Alan chuckles.] all the things that they trained you to go and fight against. And they've trained you to accept it. And it's your own governments, or are they your own governments that are doing it? If they are your governments, who are they and what do they represent because it certainly is not the general public. I mean, you got to stand back and think about this. You really do.

Getting back to that documentary, that was a good movie actually, TV movie, put out by Dennis Potter who was the author of the book on it, who wrote stuff for the BBC, a lot of good information from the BBC in fact. And he put, he certainly had… I think he had a lot of sexual problems and all that stuff. But he put a lot of good information out especially with the one Blade on the Feather it was called. And another title for it was Deep Cover but Blade on the Feather I think they call it in America. About spies but old Cambridge spies, you see, from the 40s, 50s and 60s. This is based on, it was a kind of a drama about one of the professors at University, a fictionalized event. Maybe not quite as fictionalized as that, because they did have professors in those universities picking people, training them to be communist, you see. Just like they have today.

But what was interesting was one scene where the daughter of the professor says to her dad, don't worry dad, our lot is in now. Meaning Margaret Thatcher back then, meaning right wing sort of thing. And he said, are you sure…? Our lot's in. There's a lot of little clues you get in some of these things. You gotta understand too, there's inside jokes that get written into scripts for different people and different levels in agencies and so on. And that was of course one of them too, our lot's in now… Are you sure, he says.

I mentioned Peter Hitchens last week and I put some links up too. He explains quite openly that he definitely quite honestly, he was a Trotskyist, he came out as a Trotskyist. This is a brand, a later brand of communism of course. He came out of university like that and he was ready for action as most of them were. Then he explained too, his brother absolutely was. In another interview but that his brother gave, Christopher Hitchens, he said that, one of his early ones, he said that in an interview, he said, oh no he says, I'm not a liberal, he says I don't like their… I hate the liberals, he says. He says, because they compromise. And so, he came out as a real staunch totalitarian type of character. But his brother Peter, he eventually clued in that he'd been brainwashed and talks about it and so on. But he mentions that so many of the folk who are now in the governments of Britain, and it doesn't matter what party it's in, are really Trotskyists. Even the ones who don't know it.

Because you've been brought up and had the right brainwashing, your values are completely different across the board on how you see things. It's like looking at when Cameron was the prime minister in Britain, you'd almost swear that he was, he was literally, he could've been anything, labour, liberal or whatever. He was supposed to be conservative. If you looked at Tony Blair, he was like a right-wing radical. Far left international socialist working for the big bankers, you know, that employed him once he left. It's astonishing to see this, and the folk miss it all.

So, I was getting back to Dennis Potters Blade on a Feather. Are you sure?... that our lot's in? Are you sure? That's how it really is. Because any type of technique is now used on the public for the right time, for the right era, to get the agenda through. It's a big, big agenda at the top. And it definitely, as I've said so many times, they have to bring in a more totalitarian system of authoritarianism and train the public to obey. To save you all, that will be the excuse of course, as it is today, save the world, save the earth, etc. And birth to death. Right down to, will you even have children? will you be allowed to have children? do you actually qualify to have children, etc? That's all coming. That's all been out in the open in publications in the last few years actually. It's all coming down the pike.

But getting back to the intelligence agencies, hm. You've got to understand that so many people, especially if they've been asking questions at all, even naïvely, you'll be contacted by them, or Joe from so-and-so, whatever it happens to be, you've definitely been contacted. As they suss you out. There's no doubt at all. Especially if you're going into areas that, where you might get some truth from them, so they want to know who's waking up and who isn't and so on and know all about you. Then they'll feed you often with a lot of irrelevant stuff so you chase your tail forever and ever and ever in loops and loops and loops. They used to call it, I gave talks in the 90s on this because at that time it was on the newspapers. I'd say, yeah you'll be excited to be getting a bit from here and getting a cutting from one paper and putting it with a cutting of another, and little bits come together. You're chasing the paper trail. And so many of these paper trails are put out there for you to chase. Nothing's really changed, 'eh?

I'll put up this article on the briefing note it's called

Briefing note on the Integrity Initiative

syriapropagandamedia.org / 21 Dec 2018

(A: About an agency, a massive agency in Britain actually. It is now anyway. It started small, this particular small unit. But it's integrated with all kinds of agencies and layers of agencies above them and below them and to the sides of them. Because that's how it works in real intelligence. But this is all to do with cyber warfare and propaganda and changing attitudes and attacking folk who are on the right track at times. Or misleading them. Or trying to befriend them and then taking them off on a tangent. That's quite standard technique. But it says…)

Working Group on Syria Propaganda and Media

(A: At the time I can remember there were stacks and stacks of articles of the West's funding, in the same newspapers you're reading today that don't even mention it. But at the time, they had the articles on who was funding the terrorists that were attacking Syria and all the rest of it, and the mercenaries, the mercenary armies, and trained and funded by the West of course. So, they had all these agencies to go after people who are noticing and mentioning, or could get a following in really attacking them. But what an amazing propaganda in the media is. And this is the Briefing Note one. Briefing note.)

9 Promotion of hate campaign against the Russian Orthodox Church in the Balkans

(A: There's your wonderful countries, 'eh, doing nasty things like that. They're even promoting certain forms of neo-Nazi-ism, and then promote it, look at these Nazis, you see. But they were creating it all. It's really something else.)

14.2 ISG Corporate LLP and ISG Corporate Limited

14.3 Council on Foreign Relations LLP

(A: ...and so on. That did have some members, but they also use their name as a front for themselves as a charity group, this intelligence agency. The guy who came out with it I think was a bit frightened. Because he was also part of the psychological warfare himself. I think that's him getting himself another cover I suppose. But it says...)

1 Summary

The Integrity Initiative now accounts for most of the budget of a Scottish...

(A: It was initially a Scottish Registered Charity. They use Scotland for a lot of these registrations by the way, now, you know. Good ole Scotland. And…)

-registered charity named the Institute for Statecraft founded by Daniel Lafayeedney and Chris Donnelly in 2006.

(A: It's interesting to see how it works. Pretty standard stuff really except they would do a massive manipulation of the public's fear on cyberspace, right, and cyberspace, including to...)

-...including campaigns to smear and suppress dissenters and block their appointment (A: ...This is like people going into government, so they block their appointments...) to public office.

(A: This is democracy, 'eh?)

-overt attacks on British politicians, academics and other critics of UK government policies, most notably on the Leader of the Opposition and his staff.

(A: Well, you saw what happened to Corbyn recently, 'eh?)

-in the Baltic states and Ukraine, working closely with organizations and governments that foment hatred of ethnic Russian minorities and encourage Holocaust revisionism.

(A: Isn't that something, 'eh? Isn't that something? This is what your tax money is going towards, 'eh? You wouldn't believe how dirty intelligence agencies are, how dirty they are. And the kind of psychopaths that they employ. And the folk who are decent and who catch on and their conscience starts to get to them, of course they don't last too long. So, what you're left with is really a hard-core branch of psychopaths, that laugh and actually exchange how they destroyed people or organizations, and they just laugh it off. Yep. But it's a good article.)

2 Release of documents relating to the Integrity Initiative

(A: There is three different tranches of documents released and blew it to the public. From possibly an insider, I think. It goes through some of the funding it got initially, it's much bigger now. It says…)

...unrestricted funds, described as ‘designated funds for various UK security, NHS, (A: National Health Service, that's fairly typical, you wonder where the money is really going.) Royal Navy, NATO, Ukrainian and Russian research programmes’

I can remember too as I say, with Peter Wright who was one of the last old-timers in the intelligence services when there was a real, real cold war going on. He was going after characters inside Britain. He had a blind spot himself mind you, but he definitely tried [Alan chuckles.] to rid the country and weed them out, all the Communists that were inside government itself. But really, it was so top-heavy with bureaucrats as well and civil servants that were communist, just like Canada was in fact, after World War II. And probably before it too by the way, but definitely afterwards. Peter Wright really hounded them. He gave a different show to the public before, when he left actually, with his book, Spy Catcher, to try and wake the public up to the dirty tricks that were going on. It's quite something.

It's actually worse now with countless agencies, with thousands and thousands of operatives, some part-time, some who do it on a part-time basis, other ones do it full-time. And all branches of the military, and all, lots of branches you've never heard of. Just like the US, look at the size of the complexes that they've made inside the US for capturing all data, you know. The NSA is huge, but it's only one of them. Hm.

Britain's got its own systems too. Peter Wright mentioned that they actually appropriated some of the money for the intelligence service back in his day with false fronts. One was for an organization, a pretended charity, a fake one, for lesbians, you know. They get the government to funnel money through, to this fake charity, like a front for intelligence operations. Fairly standard stuff.

But you wouldn't believe how much of the stuff now is used on people, your own populations. Remember, propaganda is meant to change your own population, initially, and to control them. And even get them to demand certain policies. What do you think that the Extinction Rebellion and all that is? You think they're all just really spontaneous things that have happened. No, no. They're all brainwashed children brought up, for most of their schoolwork, and to save the earth in all kinds of ways, and everything's nasty and capitalism is nasty. They're all really the new Bolshevik boys and girls that will do the terrible dirty deeds, as they get rid of the older folk who object to going into an authoritarian system of austerity, ran by, on behalf of the big boys at the top who want to run, who ARE running the whole planet now I'd say. Yeah.

Dirty things are happening. And dirty things are coming down the pike, folks. This is a good article; you should read it all. I'll see if I can get the link to put it up for you. But they use Twitter, naturally they use Twitter, and they use all social media. In fact, as I've said before in other talks, Twitter and Facebook are definitely completely incorporated into the world intelligence system. Of course they are. Even though 90% of what they do will not be what you think of as intelligence, well, you're using it, you're not… Well, it doesn't matter. They're gathering all your data like you wouldn't believe. Everybody is sussed out. But also, they can change behavior by getting everybody to go into adopting opinions. Persuasive techniques. A lot of persuasion doesn't go by logic, like two and two is four. It's a feeling that's created through different ways of putting things across. It's a feeling and that's what they do. Study propaganda and you'll understand how it works. It's a science, you see.

And this article too, Twitter executive, I mentioned it last week too…

Twitter Executive Revealed to Be 'Psyops' Soldier Linked to Spreading Disinformation Across Social Media: ‘A Threat to our Demoncracy.’

newsweek.com / 1 Oct 2019

Twitter executive with editorial responsibility for the Middle East and North Africa...

is also a reservist officer of the British Army's psychological warfare and propaganda unit, a new report has revealed.

(A: So this all came out into the mainstream media.)

Gordon MacMillan, who joined Twitter in 2013 and is listed as the company's Head of Editorial for EMEA, also serves with the 77th Brigade (A: ... That's one organization.) —an outfit formed in 2015 to conduct "information warfare" and develop "non-lethal" ways of conducting war.

(A: Now, when you're using it on the public, do you realize they were with you too? Huh? You think you come to your conclusions because you’re logical and you’re a decent humane person? You know? Do you really think that's true? You'd be surprised how much of your opinions and so on have been gradually fed to you by bits and bytes of information. Using emotive techniques. Very carefully devised, there's nothing happenstance about it. And these operations are working within your own countries. So…)

The report, published in Britain's Middle East Eye, revealed how MacMillan served with the unit for several years.

Twitter has downplayed MacMillian's links to the army and said it supports its staff in their external volunteer commitments.

"Twitter is an open, neutral, and independent service," a spokesperson for Twitter said to Newsweek. "We do not allow our data services to be used for surveillance purposes or in any other manner [Alan coughs.] inconsistent [Alan coughs.] with people's expectation of privacy. Employees who pursue external volunteer opportunities are encouraged to do so in line with company policy."

The spokesperson added: "We proactively publish all tweets and accounts relating to state-backed foreign information operations on the service—regardless of the source. We built this industry-leading archive to promote better public understanding of these threats."

(A: So these threats [Alan chuckles.] are your government's psychological operation units working on you, eh?)

The British Army has also distanced itself from Twitter in a statement.

(A: So they have to do this, they always back, oooohh...)

"There is no relationship or agreement between 77th Brigade and Twitter, other than using Twitter as one of many social media platforms for engagement and communication," a spokesperson said.

(A: So, these intelligence information propaganda outfits, and really, they're really there to neutralize opposition of different organizations and so on, or even individuals who are really just seeking some truth here and there, you know. And you hit on certain topics and boom, they are in there right away. Mind you a lot of them are set up by them too, the sites that you go into. It says…)

"The Army does not comment on the specific activities of reservists working within the division."

(A: I'm sure of it. Yep. But yeah, they've got military and they've got those in academia, you know, and researchers, etc., all working together. Many of them, some of them are part-time some are full time. But anyway, this came out initially in Newsweek and so on. And you'll never get much information in front of us.)

"I would say I know a good amount about army propaganda and 'psyops' operations as they're called, but what is interesting is how little information we have 77th Brigade," he said." I suppose it means that all their work is covert, but what I would like to know is what they exactly are they doing?

"Are they just tracking accounts or are they trying to influence people's views?

Of course, they've been, that's one of the biggest things in propaganda. Most propaganda remember is meant for your own population, hm, and the enemy is a secondary thing. They're more wise to the fact that it's propaganda, but your own population generally is not wise to what they're getting fed. It's quite something.

But yeah, they go through this article. It's quite good anyway. It's quite good indeed, I tell ya. Another thing too to look into is…

The newly negotiated NAFTA replacement is strikingly similar to the sovereignty-destroying TPP, according to former Obama trade officials. - jbs.org

Council on Foreign Relations President Richard Haas talks about USMCA, which is the new name for NAFTA, North American Free Trade Agreement. It says, he says, the USMCA is NAFTA plus the TPP plus a few tweaks. And yeah, if you've looked into what he says, you'll find his talks actually up on YouTube I think, but you can get transcripts here and there with him too. The agenda has not been, you know, subverted by Donald Trump. I don't know who puts all this stuff out. Because he signs everything that they pretty well want into agreements. It's quite something.

Again too, I gave talks in the 90s of how they give you, if you start up a real organization yourself with purely good intentions and you're on the ball with things, they'll put somebody out very quickly who is well-funded, who will overtake you, using all of your stuff, and then taking all the followers with them. And before you know it, they've done 180°, the followers never noticed that. That's what Orwell had in Animal Farm you know, when they're all chanting, four legs good, two legs bad, they could turn you around and you chant the opposite, in fact, without noticing. That's what they do, you see. If you're a follower, your subverted very quickly without you even knowing it. And you’re used. That's another story of course.

I'll put these articles up too. Another one too is...

China spy suspect worked for EU for 30 years - euobserver.com / 17 Jan 2020

The European Union… The European Union is full of people who literally, almost advertise [Alan chuckles.] that they’re for hire in a sense, a lot of these characters. There’s so much money in the European Union, it’s so corrupt. Because it was set up to be a super communist system, as many of the old Soviet dissidents who saw it said. They said, this is more advanced than the Soviet system, this EU system. With incredible tax money from all the countries and the money goes missing all the time. Billions, ‘eh? What a corrupt world we live in, though, really ‘eh?

What a devious, devious world. It can only work… You don’t know how perfect it is for the criminals at the top, though. The real criminals, you know, the ones in suits and ties, who’ve got titles and they are honorable this and honorable that and all that kind of thing, ‘eh. Think about it. Who could only operate and get so wealthy too with the society which they’ve made sure the educational system and the culture industry has trained you to be so naïve. You know. I tell ya. Yep. It’s quite something.

So, the wolves literally have a field day just filling their pockets like you wouldn’t believe and doing what they want. And the sheep just keep paying it. That’s it. Anyway, I’ll put this article up on my site. This guy at the EU, he’s an ambassador, right. He was suspected by German prosecutors of spying for China for 30 years.

China spy suspect worked for EU for 30 years

euobserver.com / 17 Jan 2020

The former EU ambassador suspected by German prosecutors of spying for China was Gerhard Sabathil.

The dual German-Hungarian national (A: Hm, Hungarian, you know. And he served for a whole bunch of different countries…) had served as the EU envoy to South Korea, Germany, Iceland, and Norway prior to going to work for Eutop, a mid-sized lobbying firm with offices in Brussels, Berlin, and Munich, in 2017, where he was still listed as a "managing director" on its website on Friday (17 January).

Quite something. That’s the world we live in, folks. It’s nothing like you’re trained to believe it is. And even in the cyber world, you’d have to be awfully naïve today to think, to really think… huh, with the countless agencies and tiers of thousands of employees all working to chatter away on the cyberspace, and attack different people… And they do it very efficiently too, they’re trained, trained by neuroscientists and psychologists and behaviorists, these characters, and to go after certain types, ‘eh. You’re all… Everybody’s been put into a box with your personality type, with your weak spots. They’ll befriend the people in cyberspace on one of the social platforms, and play with them for a while, and be awfully friendly with them for a while, and get their confidence for a while and be their best pals. Then they’ll attack them or subvert them or do something and blow them away. I’m telling ya. That’s how it works. This is real war in the cyber world.

Truth is the hardest commodity on this planet. It’s so rare. It’s rarer than diamonds or rare-earth minerals. It really is. In a society today that literally is a poisoned culture, because you’ve lost your culture and our ability to look at right and wrong. This is not the old Cold War when folk new in the West, a lot of the folk knew what they were against. And even then, a lot of the folk that were ruling over them were communists in the West. And it was getting taught openly in university, the top universities in Britain, huh, through the Cold War. It tells you there’s a bigger game above it all, isn’t there. A much bigger game, ruled by the real masters of the world obviously. The dialectic indeed, ‘eh. And everybody eventually gets used.

Anyway, I could go on forever but we’re out of time here. For myself Alan Watt from a very, very snowy Ontario, Canada, it’s good night and may your God or gods go with you.

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

I folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on January 26, 2020. I hope you're all doing okay and getting throughout these incredible times of confusion and… information/disinformation. Everything is a war battlefield as you well know. Especially the war to think for yourself. In fact, it's best not to know sometimes the arrays, the battlefield arrays of organizations all working to try to grab your brain, 'eh, and recondition it and saying okay and then give it a stamp of approval saying you're reconditioned, you're safe, and you can just go along through your life just watching lots of silly movies and not causing anybody any problems.

You know, control freaks are mortified with the idea that people might think for themselves. They have nightmares about it. That's always been the way down through time, and no doubt it will be all through the future too. And it's terribly sad, terribly, terribly sad to see as I've said many years ago and then continue to say it, that the things that are taught are good and well and nice and approved and all that by the state or whatever, or even the world state, are often bogus.

The causes for the wars are bogus. It's astonishing, really astonishing that we never learn, do we? Even when it's exposed by themselves, they don't mind telling you 50 years later or hundred years later, that previous wars and so on really had different origins for coming into being and different goals even to achieve. But at the time, nations, remember, because we are very obedient, nations get their people and they throw their people against other people's all for, really, fruitless exercises of the acquisition of more power to the state itself, or those within the state in reality. Because the state is nothing to do with what you're taught it is. Nothing at all to do with what you are taught it is.

I can remember Trotsky's book My Life it was called, and Trotsky was a big writer. He was such an egotist you see, a psychopathic egotist. And all psychopaths have this tremendous ego thing where they've got to tell you eventually how important and great they are. It's quite astonishing. I could go on from there [Alan chuckles.] mentioning quite a few other ones as well. However, Trotsky was a Freemason. And you find all the revolutionaries were Freemasons. That's admitted by freemasonry itself and from their own head quarters and main branches, etc. But Trotsky had joined freemasonry, he claims himself, while he was in prison of trying to overthrow and kill the established elite of Russia.

That's where it flourished. It's just like today, a lot of people join different organizations in prison and back then it was no different of course. Because you're all on the right cause and you can all slap each other on the back and ho-hum and aren't we real guys together sort of stuff. Trotsky got so enamored by the whole idea of revolution, even more so than the reasons to get in there in the first place. To get in there in the first place it was a different thing altogether. It was a cultural thing with him. But he saw freemasonry as having so much power that the general public are completely unaware of.

When he was being transported out of Russia and you had to cross different borders and so on, while being accompanied by the Russian police you might say, he said that they got through borders without having to show papers or anything because they all used Masonic signs, passwords and so on. That was more important. You understand what I'm saying here, it sounds so simple and trivial. But this is the way the world really runs. All sides respect this Masonic idea as brotherhood, you see, and they all have the rules and you must go by the rules.

But everybody else that's not part of this establishment has to show papers and ID, or be locked up until they can prove who they are, etc. But here you are with even members of the state, government officials, escorting a terrorist, really, out of their country, had the doors opened by all Masonic techniques. That so impressed him that he went deeper and deeper and into it. I think the next time in fact he went back and ended up in prison again, he wrote a book on Freemasonry. He thought it would be the best book ever written of course, naturally being an egotistical psychopath. I don't know what happened to it, I don't think it was ever published, at least not to the general population. I'm sure that it exists, and I suspect I know where.

But it's astonishing as I say how we live in a system where mouths will be totally sealed by vows, and once they're in the organizations, those who literally will close their eyes, ears and everything, see no evil, speak no evil, and hear no evil, they'll keep secrets to the grave from the general population. And they're very proud to do it. Because the whole system is based on faith. Faith that those above you, higher ranking in the organizations, know what they're doing. Faith too that because you've been trained to believe in virtue and all this kind of stuff you see, you've got virtue when you become a brother, that obviously those above you have got virtue and therefore…

But what happens when you keep getting evidence when it's a sham and they don't have virtue at all? They train you to have virtue, but they've got a different policy altogether for themselves. You understand, everybody can be used. That's what I'm saying. And there's no doubt about it, that people are used all the time through organizations such as the one I've just mentioned. An international brotherhood that takes pride in looking backwards and admitting that they were part of international revolutionary societies and overthrowing of governments.

It's quite something. And none of them will ever question it. They'll say, well, you know, we're living in a better society now and so on. But really who really was behind it? Who was to benefit from this, really? Hm? And who is still benefiting from it really? You've got to think about these things. But yeah, as I say, how can you have one set of laws and rules for themselves, the brothers, and everybody else? even in the same social strata, regardless of which strata it happens to be? Everybody else has to go through formalities, inquisitions, papers please, etc.

etc., hm, and lots of other things too. That’s not right whatsoever. You can’t pretend to have any kind of democracy when you have this kind of favoritism. It can’t exist as a democracy obviously.

But I was thinking about that today, very much like the… I don’t know if people realize it but in freemasonry too, they have free Masonic funerals, even in the military. I watched, I saw some photographs in an article a few years ago with troops, I think they were Canadian troops, having a funeral over in the Middle East I think it was with one of their members. They all had the Masonic aprons on. And the newspaper naturally casually just mentioned, you know, this… this… You understand, to people who are not involved in it, it looks weird, guys standing there with aprons on, you know. And just a casual mention of it, like it was a separate religion, hm, without saying it’s a separate religion but of course it is a separate religion, when you have formula, rituals spoken, gestures, etc., you’re using a religion. I have no doubt whatsoever the people involved, the ordinary guys burying their own, are very sincere in what they’re doing, thinking and so on. But again, it’s to do with something, that even in the battlefield will actually save a brother’s life as they say, if you give the proper signs if he’s in trouble, in the opposing force. And that has happened and recorded in Masonic manuals, that happened even in the American Civil War.

So here you have guys want to slaughter each other on either side, and literally, they face incredible punishment if they don’t slaughter each other, if they decide, oh, I’ve changed my mind. Then your own side generally kills you. That’s justice [Alan chuckles.] right, for changing your mind. But in the American Civil War there was an officer I think it was, on one side or the other, I kind of think it was a Confederate was wounded and a union officer saw him using the plea, you know, the sign for help, and stopped him from being killed or finished off and took him in. And literally, had him taken to his own home and taken care of etc. etc. until he was well and recovered and the war was over.

But that’s the kind of difference there is. It’s okay to slaughter people who haven’t got their degrees and so on. You understand this double standard is just too wonky. But when you get the same standard, international, at higher levels, who are sworn with each other to have wars, cause wars, and lists of wars, right, and to take all the… I call them peasantry…

We’re all peasants, you understand. We truly are all peasants. If you’re a citizen, right, that’s all you have is rights or obligations. That is the citizen, that’s what it means, ‘of the city’, as a peasant of the city. You’re not in the ruling class of the city, and there is a ruling class, you’re just a peasant who has these rights and a few privileges to exist inside that organization called the city, you’re a citizen. One of the first ones of course is to pay taxes, that’s the first obligation that you have. But we’re really peasants, because we’re trained in a very, as I say, I keep telling people we’re trained to be completely and utterly naïve. Really. We’re trained that the world is really a nice place, and there’s special folks who come out of special wombs, who rule us, all have the right to do what they do because they are special people. They are born differently from you, you see. Their genes might be better or must be better. And they wear suits and ties, generally, don’t wear so many, not so much military uniforms, these days, but they wear suits and ties, very expensive ones.

They're trained, actually, by actors, by acting classes in fact. I remember reading the articles on the air years ago where they are given classes, and the examples they gave in the papers at that time were in Britain, but they mentioned other nations use them too, so that they could find ways of looking genuine. Politicians I'm talking about, when they're on interview, a sudden spot interview and they're given these fakes spot interviews and given questions to see if it's working, are they acting properly or deflecting the questions, or ignoring them properly altogether which is what they do. The first rule that they tell, and it still done today, you'll often… When they're asked a direct question, they'll answer something that's maybe, maybe even not, slightly related to the question asked. They'll reply, but generally it's… they're told, reply to the question as though it's the question that you would have liked them to have asked you. That's a fact, this is what they're taught. And that's why you get no truth at all.

Now, think about it. Here you're voting for a whole system of people who are not just liars naturally, because politicians are, but trained to lie. Hm. Trained to. And by the way, they use your, the grants from your money, the taxpayers, to train them to lie to you better, it makes them more plausible. We live in this farse, don't we, as citizens, 'eh.

So, you pay for everything. You pay for the incredible wars that go on with these brotherhoods, 'eh, that at the top are all, they all have wink-wink nudge-nudge kind of signals to each other. And make little statements to each other like, special relationships. It always got me… I know what it means in Britain of course with the US at one time, they had a special relationship. It was almost incestual. That's how it was. That's really what it was. Because it was so secretive and they kept giving the public the special relationships, but it sounded awfully dirty and kind of under the cover sort of thing, 'eh. That's… I guess it's a Freudian way of thinking of things, but it is isn't it? …our special relationship.

Maggie Thatcher used to talk about it, our special relationship. Well, but they would never come out and just tell it straightforwardly what they're talking about, a special relationship. Hm? But why not just say it? Why not just say it, like during the Cold War era as an example, they've got ongoing special relationships to do with other places which are awfully important. But back then, the Cold War, the public would've said, okay, you know, we've got this, really this relationship, or an agreement, without having to go into special relationship, you see?

When you get a special relationship like that it literally means that your nation is going to get led to the wall if need be on behalf of another nation, even sacrificed, if it's needed. That's what it really means. Apart from financing the other nations and so on and its wars, that's what it means. The public mustn't be told full facts, because you might object. That's how government gets away with things. They just don't tell you the full facts of anything at all. Because you definitely would object, I would imagine, if you've got any indignancy at all in you.

But today of course we've got a special relationship, it's still going on. You get whiffs of it, this little secret thing, 'eh, wink-wink, nudge-nudge. You get it even in the recent articles about Boris Johnson in London just before, you know, Christmas and so on, along with Donald Trump, and special relationship, wink-wink, nudge-nudge. Because you knew darn well, they've signed agreements too, with other countries to go to war against Iran if need be, etc. Because they really want that. They'd prefer it if Iran just got starved to death and give up because it's less messy. But again, even factions amongst them want it. Because for every missile that they fire there's sometimes multimillions of dollars worth of profit, you've got to get them replaced immediately, you see. Guaranteed. Good business, that, if you're a good psychopath you don't mind that kind of thing.

But, yeah, special relationships. Again, during the Thatcher era and Ronald Reagan era, it came to a head with the Cold War when they thought, well we'll will force Russia to spend so much, invest so much of their particular infrastructure and GDP and all the rest of it into fighting us, because we're going to put up all these incredible military complexes across the planet. Which they did and they are still there today. And there's more of them, in the US. Again, when I speak I always get sidelined with things which I remember. But getting back to what I'm trying to say here.

Britain really was, and Scotland especially it was so evident there, was to be fortified all around Loch Lomond and different places, and the Holy Loch, etc, there's different lochs, where the nuclear submarines were and so on. They were heavily fortified in these incredible concrete, oh, monstrosities that were buildup across the Highlands and different places too. The idea was that if Russia was to make a big push, you see, westward, then they'd battle it right through. It'd be fairly quick they thought, you know, through the countries including France even very quickly. Then they'd be across to Britain, right, as a last stand, and if Britain couldn't handle them, this was the idea, if they couldn't at least withstand the onslaught, along with lots of massive reinforcements from the US from bases and so on in Britain, if they started to fail the US would try and pullout with troops it could of its own, and they'd sacrifice Britain by attracting, this is the idea, they'd attract… You see, people would think, well why would they put all these different monstrosities mainly in Scotland and different places, and even in England, in Wales. It was to detract supposedly so much of the arsenal of Russia, missiles, detract them off into these other places and leave parts of England, especially London, alone, you see. This is no kidding. Hm. This was…

I remember talking about years and years ago on the air too, which is to do with Threads. Threads was a movie that came out about a kind of aftermath, building up to this all monstrous vision of a potential Holocaust of nuclear missiles whacking Britain, it went through the aftermath too, what would happen. To terrify the general public, I love how we're always getting terrified, 'eh, but generally by the people who cause it all. They get terrified if you don't stand up against it, you see and pay up, pay up through the nose for taxes for incredible arsenals of weaponry, which you're hoping will never get used, right, and then the horrible aftereffects of just starvation and radiation sickness and even plants dying and so on, starvation and maybe even cannibalism afterwards.

So, you get terrified from it, from everything. That's how you're controlled. Terror, fear, terror, fear. I've said before, you never get a peaceful generation. You're not allowed a peaceful generation. I always liken it, because it's explained this way, by the way, in intelligence circles to intelligence employees when they start off. In intelligence agencies you bring them in gradually into the understanding that you're superior. They actually foster this belief that you're superior until you believe it yourself, you see. You all slap each other on the backs, oh we are so superior to these little peons down there, the citizens just don't know what's really going on. And they never will, you see. And that's how it happens.

But anyway, getting back to Threads, there was a documentary about it of what was happening and the incredible reinforcement of arsenals and so on and the movie version of the terrible aftermath of what would happen if all hell broke loose. But that's your idea of the special relationship. And in reality, years later of course, years and years later, supposedly too that's why Russia collapsed eventually, it couldn't keep up with the arms race for arms superiority. They had different movies out too talking about the fact that these parades of the Russian tanks and all that were of obsolete tanks and they're all rusty and they're all getting fresh paint and that kind of stuff and they just couldn't afford it.

Then of course Margaret Thatcher eventually brought Gorbachev over to Britain and introduced him in the media. It was all preplanned with propaganda, which is what the purpose of the media really is, you know. And it really is, I'm not exaggerating, that's the purpose of media. It's all owned by the corporations that are all part of their club. They all know what to do and what to say and all the rest of it. But they said, they arranged in advance that Gorbachev was to be portrayed, with which eventually they did, as a kind of swinging, a new swinging Soviet, you see, a modern Soviet. They gave him expensive suits, tailor-made suits that were not all gray like the old politburo. His wife was a really trendy character. Any little interviews the media were to give to them, um, they'd go, here's the topics, you could ask about this, and that was it, nothing beyond that. That was agreed upon if you wanted any interview at all. The ones on television did the same thing. They had all this stuff about, yeah, he was a new swinging Soviet, very trendy, modern, and we shouldn't worry about them, here's the change in the Soviet structure.

Now, he was the… Again, they're all KGB guys, you know, that's what they are. But he's being portrayed as a swinging Soviet. It was a propaganda blitz in all the media. And yeah, Maggie Thatcher too came around and she introduced him to other world leaders as the trendy Soviet, you see. They all, again, nudge-nudge, wink-wink to each other, and everybody's getting the message, you see, that it's part of the big agenda and this is a show for the peasants, the citizens. That's how it was put across.

I remember too the articles that, oh did you know that Mr. Gorbachev's wife, and they mention her name and all that, was talking about how relaxed and free they are there in the Soviet Union, and that most folk don't realize that as a citizen of the Soviet you could walk into a store, on the streets, a storefront, that could advertise, you know, things like facelifts and stuff. That was freedom, you see. And you're saying, well wait a minute here, what have we been having this incredible Cold War about for all these years when they're so incredibly free there? Huh?

You see how they can turn everything upside down with just pure propaganda. A flick of a switch and the propaganda machine can portray the opposite of what they've been giving you for the last 40 to 50 years. That's how they really do it. We've even had that recently with different articles about other countries as well. It's astonishing isn't it.

Napoleon used to talk about Britain's policy. He's very truthful about it because he himself was a good psychopath, so he could see through the other psychopaths of the enemy teams. He called Britain perfidious Britain, because they always make alliances with folk, use them, and then just wash their hands like they'd never met them and let them die or get sacrificed or whatever. That's the way things really go generally.

So, we're living in a system of incredible propaganda, that we're trained to be naïve. And when you get clues down through time, getting back to whenever I talk about things, little things just come out of the little neurons in your brain, the synapses, boomf, boom boom boom. But remember, one of the left-wing opponents at that time was Reagan. And before Reagan too. But leading up to Reagan was Jeanne Kirkpatrick. She even trained basically in a school, in a college in New York which is basically a communist college this particular one. It was to turn out revolutionaries for the cause for the world and all that. She again played her part really well. They get well-paid for playing their parts too, all sides do. Because there are no sides at the very, very top. Carol Quigley said that.

Here you have a communist supposedly who's constantly attacking American policy, and foreign policy as well, who was taken onto the Reagan team, the supposed right-winger. It's great how they portray their parts, and they play their parts, you know. He was an actor, said no problem with that, I suppose. It was all B movies mind you, but he was a likable character. He took her on; he said that he was so impressed with her recommendation and the plan she'd drawn up for the future.

Now, they didn't mention ever Empire. But of course, that's what they were referring to. America of course took over from Britain, especially at the end of World War II. Ike made sure of that, Eisenhower, that was part of the policy and the lend-lease programs and so on. But of course, they were to take over the reins on the Empire and there were other forces inside the US to make sure of that, that really had a different plan altogether.

But Kirkpatrick, being a good communist, I don't know, she'd probably call herself socialist, everybody knows what that means. Because Stalin told us the definition, communism is socialism in a hurry. If you read the Fabian papers in London about the relationships between themselves and Trotsky and other members of the Soviet Union, because they were constantly, they boasted about having a direct link to Stalin's table in his office. But their beef with Trotsky, Trotsky wanted immediate physical revolution. The Fabians thought they could do it better by taking over through their Gramsci technique of altering the culture, taking it over, leading it, guiding it until the country became socialist without even knowing it, not even using the word socialist, you see.

But anyway, here you have Kirkpatrick, she says, well Empire, you gotta have Empire. They all knew it. But that would be against the U.S. Constitution, which nobody really at the top really wanted to follow, it was a nuisance, you see, to power. So, she drew up a plan of hundreds of bases across the world, a stack of them across the Middle East, where they are today. She says, we have to, you know, fix things out and sort things out across the world, so rather than just send troops over and bring them back home again, it would be far better and more efficient to put permanent bases across the planet. At the time, that's what was striking at the time, was when you saw that where the bases were. You'd say wait a minute, this is not against the Soviet Union, what's this about? Here we are in the Middle East, 'eh? This is how far ahead they've got things worked out. For the greater good, you understand. And you'd better understand who the greater good is on behalf of.

But it's astonishing. You watch it happening, right down to again, here's the trendy Soviet, Gorbachev. Who never said he was, he left the Soviet system, the social system. He still said, oh I'm a socialist and still socialist and so on, and it would be better working in the West as a good socialist. Don't forget, Soviet Socialist Republic was the name of the Soviet Union. When you get too many coincidences by the way, in symbology, don't ignore them. It's awfully important to understand symbology. I don't talk about it so much to the general public today, but everything is awfully important.

Remember the letters used by the Soviet system, and remember it was the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. But in their lettering, they'd have CCCP to represent in letters for instance on their Sputniks and stuff like that, so the triple C. But during that time, folk don't realize, when you have the collapse building up… And from the 1920s onwards, you have to remember that the president FDR in the US during the depression, he was brought in because of the depression, from Wall Street actually. A good part of his cabinet that he brought in with him were communists, known communists. It was kind of comical when you look back at it and you see that you had the Soviet leaders there congratulating FDR's plans to give work to all the unemployed during the Great Depression in America. So you had the CCCP congratulating the American group, the Civilian Conservation Corps for getting people back to doing some gainful employment inside America, giving them work with work projects. And if you work for the CCC in America you were called, being a worker, they added the W at the end, so you are a CCCW.

So you just don't dismiss these coincidences, especially when you had a world that was getting pushed towards this big experiment of the communist technique, the Soviet type system. And again, with austerity, conservation, all that kind of thing tied together, and we have to go back into it again, I wonder what they call it this time, perhaps, you know? But don't dismiss these little things that happened in the past, they're very important. And they're very symbolic. Never dismiss the symbols that are all around you.

You had all these different work programs in the West. You had the correspondence between Britain and America to the Soviet Union, praising them. As we financed them by the way. Even when we were collapsing financially, supposedly, and the people were suffering in the Great Depression, which didn't stop until World War II got things into full production to kill each other. They had all these make-work projects, big, huge, anybody's unemployed or whatever was drafted in, in work armies in the West, and America was a proud example of it. We're all working together for it… This is this together thing again, we, you know, we, us. Forget I, it's all we, us, we're working for a better tomorrow. They were basically given food and board and so on for the work gangs, these massive working gangs. They even made movies about them, how this is the way of the future.

There was tremendous correspondence. Folk don't realize that America, the US, was going communist. [Alan chuckles.] Really. So, the big bankers create a massive collapse supposedly, although at the top they never lost a penny, they acquired a lot. Because bankruptcies are awfully profitable for those who've got the dollars to pick them up for peanuts, all the businesses and corporations. But out of it they have this hands-across-the-sea to the Soviet system. You should read the articles from that period and the letters from the higher chutzpah's at the top all colluding together. This is what, we're all going the same direction here, America's got all these work gangs across the country doing infrastructure and building everything, and the same as us, brothers, brothers, h-hm, brothers, nudge-nudge, wink-wink. This is how it was going on.

In Britain they had similar things, although Britain didn't want to encourage it too far. Because the working folk in Britain were so sickened with their lot and after World War I especially and all the wars before it, for this so-called strange enterprise called the British Empire. That with the big rallies for miners and so on, all the way down to London, with huge marches down, to get petitions in. We can't go on like this, they kept saying.

Britain was almost a tipping point for the revolution. And the Communists were definitely stirring it up, big time, you know, make things as bad as possible, stop relief getting through, food, aide, that kind of thing, or even money, to those suffering, to make misery worse and worse, until they're definitely forced to revolt.

I hope the people realized that that's [what] actually happened. The Communists attacked the churches that were handing food out and giving charity and so on. That was part of the manuals, you know, make the misery as intense as possible until they have to have revolution. Then you pop in and guide the revolution. Then you end up being the controllers and the new monarchy they might call themselves, you know.

You have to realize that all these big parties work together at the very top. Quigley gave out a lot of that too. He was an elitist himself and he didn't like the general public. He kind of despised them as a true elitist should, you see, or certainly does. He didn't believe of course that the general population should, or could, even have the proper will to guide themselves properly and that they needed to be guided by all the ones above them. That's a true socialist, you see.

For everything you see in life there are different meanings. There's at least always two meanings, opposite meanings, and then others, subdivided categories too of those particular meanings for those in-the-know. As they say, yeah, whatever they want you to do today is never for the purposes that they tell you it's for. Never, ever. No.

Winston Churchill was a globalist, don't forget, who at the announcement of a war, he says, this is fantastic he said. This is archived in his letters and so on. He says, we shall get, we can get out of this the world that we want, a united, especially Europe, a united Europe. He's talking about the present form of it with the commissars at the top, you see, all being part of it too. Then as soon as the war starts, he's telling the public, he's telling the people privately, and you can find this in a book called Fringes of Power, I think it was called, by his personal secretary at the time, who gives a little bit away, you know. Not a lot but little bits.

Being sworn to the brotherhood, which they all are, they're all sworn to it. Peter Wright by the way mentions that too, the guy who was in charge eventually of MI-5. Who is disliked by a lot of them who worked for him because he wasn't a brother, you see. His dad had been. His dad had been, he's one of these families very much like George Orwell, who really his family were like intergenerational bureaucrats and civil servants. You find the same thing there. So, Peter Wright, his dad being in the Admiralty I think it was, and he got him a job, really as an electronic specialist for spying, eavesdropping and so on. Then he worked his way up and he worked his way up into the head of MI-5.

But he said that, Peter Wright in his book, that they do have this kind of formality, this kind of Moneypenny thing, there's always official, a highly regarded secretary from all long line of secretaries, and generally the same families, that work for the establishment at the top. They hold onto secrets. They know everything there is to know, and whatever you need to know, you just go and ask the secretary and everything's sorted out. He said that she says, you're a Freemason. And he says, no I'm not. You see. And she looked at him, well that's unusual, she says. She says, they're ALL Freemasons here at MI5.

You understand, when you have different agendas that the general public are not supposed to know about, you need people who really, really will swear to keep secrets, to the point of death, you know. That's why there's an amazing selection process as you go up the ladder. If you have religious convictions, you're suspicious immediately because your conscience may get involved, this is wrong, you see. You can't have that if you're going to help deceive the public. You can't have that kind of thing.

You gotta believe that you're superior and we are more superior. You see, the general public are peasants, again, getting back to the peasantry. They're trained in the same schooling system, with the indoctrination techniques that are really scientific techniques that Bertrand Russell talked about because he was part of the experiments they did in Britain on the children. As far back as the 1920s he was given an experimental school to try these techniques to improve the efficacy, to improve the efficacy of scientific indoctrination that he was so, so interested in.

That's very, very important. If you want an obedient society, that you can say, we're at war with so-and-so, come and fight for your country, and millions will just join up, you see. Well, you've got to train them that way, to be very naïve, to believe that we're altogether, and we all love each other, and the ones above you bringing in the war really love you more than anybody. You're trained to believe that, and that they are somehow more intelligent and therefore they've got to be right. It's a faith-based system, you understand.

It's more intense today than ever before because they've got batteries of psychologists and behaviorists and behavioral specialists, batteries of them, working in every country, on improving the indoctrination process of multitudes of people, right down to the instant recognition of individuality. Individuality is a very scary thing to them. In fact, the United Nations said that. They said that the most dangerous thing to their global agenda, for, they always call it, peace, you know… Remember what the Communists called peace, right? Was the absence of all opposition. Well, the United Nations said that individuality, the individual is a dangerous character to our plan. There ya go.

You see, for the crowd that goes along with what they're told to go along with it's no problem. An individual could upset it by, and Bertrand Russell mentioned it too, he said, if the individual, if there's an individual here that's… Because they suss you out at school, even back then in his day, through all the paperwork and so on. They were taking records of everybody, every child who came into the schooling system. They'd have you all classified as you went through all the different exams. But they also were making personality profiles. That stuff was all passed onto London, you know, whole warehouses of files on everybody, much bigger than any Soviet Union system.

But Russell said, he says, our filtering system is to catch them, the thinker, you see, from… He's talking about the general classes that are not the aristocracy. He said, our system of catching them is pretty good and we generally give them scholarships, grab them, and give them a quick indoctrination into the better ways of life and things of life, meaning the upper class. And you're so overwhelmed, you see, with the granite buildings, as they call it, and ivy on the outside, oh, my goodness, and all the famous people that's lectured here and studied here and so on, now you're one of them. They have to win you over so that you'll always stand for the brotherhood, hm, the big brotherhood at the top.

But he said, if the intelligent, the really intelligent ones slip through, in the future, he's talking about when they really come into their power, their full, when things are getting really on the edge, you see, of success or failure, he said, we can't allow them to continue if they know everything that's going on and can express it and can communicate it with other people, they're a danger and a threat. That's their biggest fear is the individual, the occasional individual that can express it and know it. He says, if we can't win them over, we'll have to annihilate them. And that's where he goes on about diet, injections and injunctions will be used.

But that's the whole thing, you understand, the individual. That's what Mao Tse Tung said, of China. He wasn't scared of armies from the West or whatever. He said, his greatest fear was a big idea. You see, an idea comes from an individual. The crowd doesn't have a big idea. All the ones by themselves, it's always an individual. Therefore, that's what he was afraid of.

George Bush by the way, in fact I think the two of them did, the senior and junior, talked about the big idea in a speech. The big idea, one of the new world order speeches, which actually happened, you know, 10 years apart, and you know, the New World order coming into view. I could prattle on and on and on because there's so much involved in it, each phrase is so important. But anyway, a big idea. A big idea didn't come from, he was following again… They worship their own you understand, the ones who are put down to… their own intelligentsia to be the planners and so on, they worship each other. He was talking about someone who came out with the big idea. A very old idea. But it was published, long before Bush mentioned it. And they're on the road to this big idea.

Believe you me, no matter how it's sold, they can't tell the public the truth of it. Because the truth really is a mass reduction in the population size and so on. Because you're no longer needed in the utopia of the future. But they'll use you on the meantime to make it all happen. I mentioned it before, it's like a rocket, you're sending a payload into space in the tip of the rocket basically, in the capsule. All the stages of the rocket contain mainly the fuel and the rocketry itself to project the stuff in the space to escape the orbit and so on of the earth, the gravitational pull I should say of the earth. The old ones would often have three stage rockets, so you just go, you know, the first stage is ejected and you see it falling away with the cameras and all that. Then the second stage is ejected as you go further on. You see, that's what we are, we are the stages of the rockets, all of us, the peasantry, you see. We push it up higher, that's our job.

This was explained by some of them a long time ago by the way, with the idea of using Darwinism and everything else, and superior types and inferior types, that the earth itself, if it was sterile, would produce nothing. If there's no bacteria and nothing to feed on, and you have no insects or anything else, it would be totally sterile. Therefore, you need literally bacteria to work in the soil. And you need, out of the bacteria you get different enzymes that will get produced and so on in the waste, etc. But the waste itself is nourishment for other things. Then plants grow and insects are working there, they're thriving, etc. This is explained in, really, a textbook, treatise on the New World order, a long, long time ago. But the whole point of it at the end of it, it says, well that's what people are, and that's what generations of the peasantry are really for. They're really there to get to the finished product. We are all disposable bacteria and insects to get to the finished product of fertility for the planet. And this is really what it's about. Quite amazing, 'eh?

So yeah, you're definitely living in a different reality from the one that you've been trained so naïvely to believe. You understand, nobody except eugenicists themselves, mainly in the West, would ever have thought about what they did in the West, what they did think and believe in and put money towards, the Rockefeller Foundation and other foundations, which again are working for the greater utopia and their big idea of eugenics and depopulation of the inferior types and so on. Out of the Cold Springs Harbor group in New York where they really were a big eugenics organization, they brought in experts from the farming, the American steer and farming, cattle ranchers associations it was, the specialists in breeding cattle, eugenics for cattle. They brought their ideas in and applied them to humans.

It was quite fascinating really because you'd think, again as an outsider you would think initially it was to make better humans for society. And of course they did come out with the better American, you know, the Better American Families Association, the Rockefellers and so on, with their magazines with the proper families and good breeding, where the males and females picked each other properly from their proper families and had the children, to raise better children and so on for leadership.

But you see the other side of it was that they didn't want ordinary folk surviving too much, you see, and breeding. And I mean ordinary people. They did come out with the sterilization processes for people who they deemed were unfit and so on. All they had to do was have the justice of the peace declare you unfit, for any reason at all. Poverty was one of them by the way, it was classified as a mental illness to be poor. Then they could have you sterilized. And they sterilized a lot of people in the States.

But don't forget at that time, even at the time when it was happening people in America would never think of mass extermination. They didn't think that. It's amazing how you can see it happening, live through it, but your brain won't twig, because it's a horrific thing to contemplate. And your country could never do that because it's a nice country, right. And the folk that you know personally are nice people. But that's how it always is when you see horrific things under the guise of…

Don't forget who owns socialism. Socialism is a creation of the ultrarich. For control. Birth to death, everybody obeys. It's a rigorous type of system of control. So it's perfect for this kind of, for those of the top who crave power. It's a problem allowing you so much freedom, positive freedom and negative freedom and so on, that's what they call it. And they train their own people to work in these fields.

Tony Blair was an example of this. He's a good psychopath, again, attracted to power and the manipulation of people. He did bring the whole nation into a war against countries where the British people were scratching their heads saying, well what's this for, who's going to benefit? Certainly wasn't Britain when the taxpayers were handed the tab. Today of course that war has devastated, devastated Europe with massive floods of refugees. That's another story again. That was planned. That was planned, they talked about this before it even started it. But he wanted this to happen by the way and even had members of his team, it was in the papers, where they talked about mass migrations from diverse peoples coming into Britain as part of their agenda, and his right-hand man came out and published this.

Why are you voting for people? Why are you voting for people who are always part of an establishment you know nothing really about? Nothing. Nothing. And they're sworn onto an agenda or they wouldn't be accepted as running in the campaigns. But we're trained to be naïve and it's all just potluck, isn't it, hit and miss in politics. And, oh, sometimes you get a good one and sometimes you get… That's what you trained to believe. That somehow, it's a kind of a lottery or scratch and win, hm? It might be a winner, it might be a loser, and, oh well, we'll try next time, get another one. That's so far from the truth.

Anyway, I'm way off the track. In fact, I've said nothing I was even thinking of talking about. So far. But yeah, you're kept in a constant state of fear and terror. If it's not bankruptcies, hm, I think national, it was relayed to every individual. And so, you run and run and run and do what you're told and work hard and all the rest of it. Then you watch, you don't save money because you can't save money now, you've got zero interest in your banks. By law now, 'eh, they can take your money and loan it out across the planet, incredible rates of interest, but you get nothing back in return. That's now called fair, right. And your country really is a central banker itself lending money out to other countries, with conditions applied naturally, and its social conditions, social engineering and so on, social policies, cultural changes.

If it's not that, then it's war or threat of war, right. Meanwhile, and like Winston Churchill again, go off, you know, you lot go off and fight for your country and preserve your way of life. And everybody loves their country. They love their people. Their fellow man and woman, they love them. If you're ever down near the bottom and you have a real culture, you'll love each other, naturally. So it's horrific, oh yeah, you're going to fight and die. But it's got nothing to do with what you're being told. You don't know that. They'll tell your grandchildren down the road 70 years or whatever, or more, because they won't really care so much. To them 20 years is obsolete, it's old-fashioned stuff when you're 18 or whatever, you know.

But they will tell you the revelation of the method, absolutely. It's astonishing how we're really trained to believe in things. I knew 20 years ago, I came out and said this, I says, you might get 20 years, or even less, of talking on the Internet and putting a lot of the truth out, then they'll reign it in. Because they put out all the fake leaders, thousands of them by the way, well-financed, all modeled after people who are already out there doing it for nothing pretty well, and they'll use all their material in fact. Right down to copying their bios. Mine was copied [Alan chuckles.] by someone awfully well known. [Alan chuckles.] Then they lead you like Pied Pipers in a complete circle until you're back into politics again and getting played. And that's exactly what's happened.

You have no idea the amount of agencies and intelligence agencies working, involved to do it all to give you your reality. I said at that time, I only came out to get the stuff out to tell people what's really happening in the world, and they've got to look at the whole world agenda, the whole world agenda and not be stuck navel-gazing at what's been happening to your country, just you. I said at the time too, that this is, it's so totalitarian, you have no idea, and I knew I had a lot of insight into what was all planned and where it would go. I also read over 20 years ago too, the articles that said that they would have massive teams eventually of warriors on the Internet, from the government agencies, which they have.

So now they're reigning it all in and they're being rather open about it in some ways. Because sites are getting pulled off just for mentioning things which you're not allowed to say anymore. Whether it's medical or whatever it happens to be you're getting boof, boof, boof, you see. And most folk will stay on the Internet, and I said that years ago, people will stay on the Internet, most of them, because they'll be so addicted to it by then anyway, even if all their other rights are taken away. And that's exactly what's happening. And they've made it almost impossible to survive without it.

Now, I’m going to touch on a few articles, hopefully, before I get off tonight. Because the time is flying in as usual. If I try and compress over an hour of the audio, I’ll talk like a chipmunk, you know, the Chipmunks audio, the old songs and so on. But a few things just to ponder on for anybody who wants to ponder at all these days, I have few things to ponder on. I’ll put links up @cuttingthroughthematrix.com and all the other sites I have too. Remember, make a list of all the sites I have in case I go down or something happens, a flitter, whatever, and you’ll get the shows hopefully if nothing else happens in the meantime.

Here’s an article, it’s controversial, naturally, which it doesn’t matter though, but it’s controversial, about climate change. This is a big mantra, it’s so imperative, they can’t change this. It’s like weapons of mass destruction, that’s all you’ll hear, mantra-mantra, everything that happens is going to be caused by climate change. And it’s your fault because you’re causing the climate change, you see. Everything hinges upon this acceptance of the causes. Because it’s an agenda for total… yeah, eugenics down the road too, and even now in fact, and for a totally socialist control, which is just expert control of your lives, they’ll call themselves experts, with the big agenda. That’s coming out of it too, you can’t just live anywhere and so on.

Look at Australia with its smart cities. Huge. I’ll put the links up for that too. But this article here, it says…

Fires not due to climate change: expert

sbs.com.au / 14 Nov 2019

(Alan: …says an expert.)

"The most important (factor) is the dryness of the fuel, which comes from the hot dry weather," he said.

"It's not behind the lot of it, (A: ...all the problems...) it's behind all of it. The theory is as solid as the universal theory of gravitation."

SBS has attempted to contact Mr Packham on whether he holds the same views he expressed in the original 2013 article refuting links between climate change and bushfires at that time.

Now what they're talking about too, and for 20 years or more, this happened in Canada too by the way and the States as well. Rather than keeping the undergrowth down in forestry in different places and so on, keeping it down to prevent these huge fires, about 20 years ago it became policy suddenly to allow all the underbrush to grow, etc. So naturally you get these huge fires that will start every few years and burn itself out by the underbrush.

They used to have always controlled fires all over the place too. If you look into the history of Australia as an example, you'll see that Australians, the bushmen, you know, the aboriginals they call them that are bushmen, Australians, used to always for thousands of years have controlled burns themselves. They'd move, they'd work out where they were going to move to and then they'd get these fires going and it cut down the undergrowth, etc. Because it gets awfully hot in their sun, awfully hot. Just like California in their summer.

This is one article and of course all the real diehards, because propaganda works awfully well. Most folk, since they're only maybe 20 years old, 25 at the most, who join the organizations that are against, you know, the humans living on the planet, by the propaganda, and it's all your fault, they're not 25 years old yet. So, their lives are pretty short, and they don't have a long history in their own lifetime of climate changes going up and down, you see. So, it's quite easy to impress them. So, I'll put this article up for those who want to just look at it, it's up to you, to make your own mind up of course.

Tony Abbott : "The West is facing a climate cult" - omny.fm / 2 Jan 2020

But when you work in the smart cities here, now, there's a good article put out by the Department of Infrastructure, Regional Development and Cities and this is for Australia.

Smart Cities Plan - infrastructure.gov.au

This goes into the smart cities plan. Now, obviously when you read through you start to say wait a minute, I guess we're all living in the cities very shortly. And yeah, that's… Yeah, you will. They don't want you outside in the countryside. That's Agenda 21 for the whole 21st century, that must be accomplished in this 100 years for the 21st century, a whole bunch of things of course. Naturally, you won't need cars in the cities, you'll have public transportation. That's Agenda 21 too, it said that there are no private vehicles allowed, essential vehicles only. They'll have private ones, but it will be under corporations and so on for civil servants and things like that naturally. Just like the Soviet Union used to have.

So anyway, I'll put this article up there too, just for those who want to peruse it. But here's one here too. NASA, right, NASA admits that…

NASA: Climate Change Occurs because of Changes in Earth’s Solar Orbit

halturnerradioshow.com / 8 Aug 2019

(A: Not because of SUVs and fossil fuels. This is 2019.)

Sep 9, 2019 - (Natural News) For more than 60 years, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) has known that the changes occurring to planetary weather patterns are completely natural and normal.

(A: And the links are here to them of course.)

But the space agency, for whatever reason, has chosen to let the man-made global warming hoax persist.

(A: They go back to 1958...)

It was the year 1958, to be precise, when NASA first observed that changes in the solar orbit of the earth, (A: Right, and I said that years ago, a long time ago. Many years ago. Amazing.) along with alterations to the earth’s axial tilt, are both responsible for what climate scientists today have dubbed as “warming” (or “cooling,” depending on their agenda).

(A: Because they've used both extremes to get us to give up all rights and freedoms, you know. The coming Ice Age was one, and now it's going to be, then it was the frying pan, we’re in the frying pan right now.)

In no way, shape, or form are humans warming or cooling the planet...

But anyway, I’ll put this article up.

Also, interesting too, this vaping thing they go on about. It's amazing how… Do you realize, the media tries to keep off what's causing the problems, 'eh. Which have become so so obvious and in a very short span of time.

Breakthrough in CDC vaping illness investigation: (A: Right. And it says…)

Vitamin E acetate and THC (A: …which is the active ingredient in marijuana, right…) may be to blame

q13fox.com / 8 Nov 2019

(A: They've always known that. You see. So, what they know is…)

There were 2,051 cases of lung injury linked to vaping

…that's what they recognized, these are the ones that have come in the hospitals. There are stacks more that of course haven't come in so far. But they know what these children are doing. Of course they are, for a quick high, a quick buzz and all the rest of it, that's what they're doing. And combined of course with vitamin E acetate too, which breaks down into other compounds and causes other things to happen you might say.

But now they've legalized cannabis and it's a good thing, and so many of the ones at the top have got massive investments in it. They don't want to mention it, you see. So, for long enough and long enough, oh they're just having terrible vaping, oh, brought into hospitals of lung damage, and they said, oh my goodness, 'eh. Hm. But they've known all along what caused it. Of course they have.

We are the species that are studied more than any ant or mouse or rat or anything at all in a cage. There's nothing that they don't know about the public. Even more so with the real-time data from the Internet and from the ethernet.

Interesting too, just to finish off here because the time again it's just running out. Do you think it's coincidence, it's certainly food for thought, right, that the coronavirus that they're hyping from China coincides with a mobile game about wiping out humanity with a deadly disease?

Mobile Game About Wiping Out Humanity With A Deadly Disease Tops Chinese App Chart As Coronavirus Spreads

newsweek.com / 23 Jan 2020

(A: It's the top app in China, right. As coronavirus spreads, you get lots of little clues or messages you might think, the way things are presented to you, you know. It's called…)

Plague Inc., has topped the country's iOS download chart.

It's quite interesting. But yeah, you think anybody wants to bring down the population? Well, that's what all the climate stuff is about. They've already said it, that people are the problem. This is published in all the big newspapers, people are the problem. I read the articles not too long ago. But that's the world we live in, folks.

Chinese citizens fear the government is keeping information about the coronavirus secret - dailymail.co.uk / 23 Jan 2020

Anyway, don't be terrified. Don't be petrified. And try not to be on edge all the time. Don't forget too, they're trying to get you addicted to all the terror. That's… You're being controlled, you're following, they actually call it the paper chase as they put stuff in the newspapers and you follow it, my God, oh my God, oh no, no, ooo, ooooooooooo. You see? Today it's much better for them, it's more efficient having it delivered to your iPhone or whatever else you're using, Internet systems and so on, every day, hey. And you're all following the same stories. With the likes and dislikes they know how many folk are reading it and getting terrified. Oooooooooh nnoooooooo. You've got to reclaim yourself and that sometimes means turning everything off and getting some peace in your lives. Remember that. You're the target of all this information. Not just the recipient, you're the target. So you've got to take some charge of your own life too.

And you've got to occasionally get some happiness back in your life, or you will, you'll crash. Information warfare can be used and is used as a weapon most of the time. Unfortunately, you might, well maybe fortunately you've started to notice Who's Who in the big game as it's called of intelligence. The big game. Hopefully you're learning. Hopefully. But regardless, think for yourselves. Verify information. Verify it. Don't choose to verify from this or that, look at all sides of everything and come to your own conclusions. And then again, turn it off every so often.

Because remember, fear is the greatest tool and weapon that’s used to control people. And there’s many kinds of fear out there right now.

For myself Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada, it’s good night and may your God or gods go with you.

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

Hi folks I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on February 2, 2020. I'd like to say that I hope everyone's getting through this amazing time we're living through. It's almost like a science fiction movie, and it has all the aspects of these horror movies of course with pandemics and… And the conspiracies behind, there's always conspiracy in the movies or you wouldn't watch them. Because you've gotta get bad guys, you see, and often the bad guys in the movies have real-life counterparts, stories generally in fact, fictional stories to do with terror, that kind of thing, and plagues always. They're based on some facts of course, naturally.

And we do live in dangerous times. We've lived in dangerous times for an awful long time. With the rise of academia and incredible funding into research and development in all countries to do mainly with warfare purposes, including the biowarfare area, most of the inventions we have, and even across the board in electronics and everything, all really came out of, including your microwave oven, came out of the weapons development industry. We don't realize that. It's the same thing to with a lot of the benefits that come out of medicine and so on.

So yeah, in the movies you definitely do have a lot of facts of course with biowarfare and the threats of biowarfare. Years ago, I remember mentioning some of the, or giving talks on some of the histories of biowarfare, stuff that was really from declassified government archives. So, you can't just jump on and say, oh, it's conspiracy theory. Unless the government's giving… [Alan chuckles.] they're actually giving us the conspiracy theories. But one good book was put out by a journalist in Toronto who, I think he worked with the Toronto Star, I think at the time. But he put a book out, a good one. One book out of many books across the world being put out on this very subject. But his one was Canada's contribution to biowarfare. Because Canada, during World War II, and afterwards for a long time, had led the field in biowarfare research.

So, he wrote a book called Deadly Allies, Canada's Secret War. In it of course he talks about World War II and how money was thrown out like crazy, like it always is in panic situations. Governments are always broke until it comes to warfare purposes, have you noticed that, and suddenly they've got all this money to throw around. Deadly Allies goes into the stories, declassified, again, factual, of recorded stories, no conspiracy theory, of big companies in Canada, where money was thrown at them to develop bioweapons for long-term protracted warfare. Meaning, the war against Germany or whoever it happened to be could last for a generation, or even two. This is how they look at things, way down the road.

And don't think it sounds corny because leading up to World War II and during it, the Army cadet forces, even in Canada and across Britain and Australia and New Zealand, they had army cadet forces, with the idea of recruiting them straight from the cadet forces, once they turn 17, into the Army and off to war. So that you'd have a seamless supply basically of recruits, you see.

But in the biowarfare industry they had big laboratories, some of them were awfully well known even years later to do with blood scandals and tainted blood and so on. That some of the guys who worked in these laboratories talked about how callous they were, when they were holding, you know vials, or picking up stuff at railway stations and so on. And I know people who did the same in Britain by the way. [Alan chuckles.] Not too long ago. They were calloused, they would toss these packages up in the air, and there could be enough plague in it to wipe out a good-sized city. This is how callous that they were.

It's a good book to read, Deadly Allies. It's well worth it. Because you find that many of the things that were developed during World War II and afterwards, including all the rust diseases for crops, to destroy enemy's crops and things, and their animal food supply, you know, where they had a form of disease which really, you could pretty well put it down to the same thing as mad cow disease the effects that it had. Then they developed stuff transmissible by tics, they could infect the tics, drop them on deer from the air and watch the disease that tics were contaminated with affect the deer that they were dropped on. And I think we're still suffering from some of that today.

So it's not… You can't blame the public for being afraid about what governments are up to. Especially, and here's the thing too, I was thinking about this, going over all this documentation recently coming out from China and elsewhere about this pandemic. Which is now a global pandemic they're saying. With a lot of mystery behind it too, with the usual kind of occurrences leading up to it, that lead to conspiracy theories, naturally, and then the governments clamp down anybody who mentions them.

Because you see, you don't realize you're now living in a system, it's a technocratic system really, where scientists and those from academia will decide what's right wrong and all the peasantry has to be quiet and obey and listen and do what you're told. But this whole idea of public servants is out the window, there's no servants for the public. There's really commissars in this day and age. And they treat you like little, aged schoolteachers would teach in Britain way back years ago, as their little peon, their little nobody coming into the classroom. It's much the same attitude. It's very, very… it's an aloof type of real class distinction. You see, they are the upper-class now, they are the scientific elites. And you're the bottom, you're the nobody's, who could never understand anything, you see. So they don't tell you anything. [Alan laughing.] That's it, you wouldn't understand, it's just too complex for you to understand, you know.

I'm not really exaggerating. That unfortunately is the attitude. But all the different programs to contain the public's chitchat on social media, and there's big programs out there, they have it all sprung into action across the board. For folk who don't know about it, massive departments were set up in advance years ago to take care of this kind of thing, and any kind of crisis situation, including plague outbreaks and things like that, and how to contain the public and how to ridicule and even sensor lots of people too who go off the beaten track. Because you're not really allowed to think for yourself here.

You're allowed to watch as many, many terrifying movies as you want. Like fictional movies. But don't ever voice an opinion unless you're qualified to do it, with a whole string of letters after your name. It's rather repugnant, really. That's not the way to treat the public. And the public, believe it or not, can understand an awful lot more than these characters in the ivory towers would ever believe. Here's something that ties into it.

Because you understand, we really are living in a system of so-called specialists who dictate to us all on different levels. And we're supposed to obey. This is the new system. This really is it, folks. Like the Club of Rome said, democracy wouldn't work, they couldn't get the big jobs done with experts in charge unless you, really, abolish this idea of democracy. Well, how do you abolish it? the public wouldn't like that. Well, you just introduce it under different terms, you know, of control over this, control over that, specialists for this, experts, experts. Like Bertrand Russell said, we'll train the public that they can't make a move without the expert opinion.

That's what they've done, you see, in a lot of areas. But the Club of Rome said, yeah, democracy is too slow and cumbersome, you can't get big things done.… that they wanted to at the top, you know, the people who know how everything should be run and where the future should go, and they'll direct it, they just know how to do it all. Um, they're in charge really, that's what it is, through countless associations and amalgamations of different sciences, disciplines as they call it. We're supposed to just obey.

Unfortunately, here's the thing too, getting back to Deadly Allies and so on. There are laboratories, every country's got them, regardless of all their international treaties on biowarfare and what they can do, and what they can test, and what they can't test and so on. And of course, I said years ago that the big, big laboratories that deal with even vaccines also deal with creating new types of viruses and bacterium, and rust, as they call it, for crops and all the rest of it. They deal with all these things. So really, technically, they're all part of the same system, it depends what it's used for at a particular time according to the designation of the title you give them.

But that's what it's all about, folks. You can't have people being kept in the dark about things which can affect their lives. Of course you can't. And it's wrong for any governments to try and pretend that they've got control over everybody. That's what happened in totalitarian countries before. If your government squashes information on the public and treats them like real, not just children, but stupid children, hm, then you end up with big problems. Because no one's going to be honest, even to each other, at the top either, by the way. That's what you get in totalitarian systems. And that's what happened when we…

The whole world suffered when the Chernobyl reactors went up. The whole world suffered, still suffering by the way. Because you had a totalitarian system, a chain of command of government employees, all government employees, the state in charge, and no one will think outside the box. You don't complain in totalitarian regimes. You don't become a whistleblower. That was found out with the big world investigations into it afterwards. In such regimes a whistleblower doesn't exist. They're not allowed to exist. Because you have to have individuality in a system, and a culture, it must be present to get a whistleblower. In totalitarian regimes you just don't get them. And they're not tolerated, at all.

So, when things are starting to go wrong, like Chernobyl, anybody who says we shouldn't, you've got to do this or do that or whatever or shut this down… No, no, the test must go ahead, you see. And that's how it goes. Or you suffer. And as it happened, because everything was denied as it was happening, the whole world suffered. That's what you get in totalitarian regimes. Now, that's a lesson for the West as well. All the West. Because if they start treating their people, their public, the same way as a totalitarian regime will treat them, you're going to have trouble. Awful trouble. And you'll create more mistrust than ever before.

Now, it's one thing to calm a child that's petrified of getting it's jabs from a doctor, you know. That's one thing. But you can't, you can't calm the general public down by giving them fairy stories, or even threatening them, especially threatening them, when they ask pertinent questions, and they want honest answers. Not this, oh, you wouldn't understand, little peasants, you. Well, if it's all your lives at stake, I think… I think that you've got a right to hear and then you'll decide whether you understand it or not. You know?

We do live in a world, as I say, where people are terrified of scientists now with biowarfare, etc. Of course they're terrified. All the reports in the past, all the money that went into digging up corpses in the permafrost in Canada and elsewhere, from the Spanish flu? so they could bring the viruses back in permafrost, just in case they ever came back…?! Well, the same one would never come back unless it was introduced again. People are not as stupid as you think.

And punishing folk, the general population, is not a democratic system. Personally, and I know it's not democratic anyway, but personally I'd rather they declared it's a totalitarian regime in a scientifically organized system of control, rather than treat us all like little children. Personally, that's me. And yet, yeah, I agree too there's a lot of people out there that will make hay as the sun shines, as they say, when there's terror going on to sell all kinds of stuff. I understand that too. Because that's also the system in which we live. It's just an awful system of money. Money can generally buy silence or buy people off basically.

That's part of the problem for all of societies across the planet right now. It's corrupt. The whole system is corrupt. We know it's corrupt. Each time somebody comes out about the corruption in politics… and politicians and how politicians in a few years regardless of their salary can be multimillionaires at times... Something's wrong, isn't it? We're not that stupid either. So who do they really serve, the one who's are putting all those millions into their pockets, or the public? It's a very corrupt system we're living in today.

This whole idea of a deep state is very evident. Because democracy is a show for the public basically. Really. And there's definitely a deep state, as they call it, behind it all to make sure it keeps all ongoing regardless of whoever they put into politics as their little front person at the bottom. In other words, no one is really sitting back expecting [Alan chuckles.] some character to get into politics that they don't want there, at the top. It doesn't happen that way.

I've noticed too over many, many years that the politicians, many of them, that come and go, are not too famous some of them, some well-known and some not, end up in these quiet, very quiet and high-level international jobs with the new Technocracy. Running big important things across the world. Deciding things for us outside of the realm of politics. They draft up big agendas, on different levels in different areas and have the government rubberstamp them. It's quite interesting to watch it. And it's outside of the newspapers generally. Or if it's mentioned at all you're given some kind of vague organization you've never heard of before. Very important organizations. Very important.

You find the same people that staff the World Health Organization at the top, often their CEOs, like CEOs of it in fact, are far left socialists, who don't know anything about medicine at all in fact. They're just appointed there, and all the other ones, underlings that are beneath them that are attached to it. There's nothing in this world, in our system, that isn't politicized. And when I say politicized, I mean really managed by a deep state. There's nothing, nothing is left to chance. Really. So, when you see all this hype going on about this coronavirus that they haven't quite given a name, they're starting to give a name from its origin on it. But coronaviruses are quite common. It just depends on the virility of a particular strain, that's all. They're watching it now to see if it has a sudden leap forward, as you'd say, a mutation, that's what they're watching it for.

I don't deny that anything is impossible when it comes to it. I do not deny, either, because no one is going to tell you, no one is going to tell you the truth here and where it really came from, this particular virus. You never get to know if it was in a lab before it escaped or whatever. You won't be getting, no one's going to take the blame for this. And the findings down the road maybe in a few years time, will still be pretty well classified, if they find, and they can find quite easily the different markers on these things. Because they are all, if you go into laboratories, they're often altered... They can tell, for instance, vaccines for instance, what kind of virus and attenuated viruses and so on are in them. They've got markers. They can tell which lab created them in fact, any batch of vaccines.

It's very similar when they've been working on particular strains of viruses for whatever purposes. They'll know where it came from. But will never tell the public the truth. I don't know, you know, I don't know. And there's already, as you all know, I'm sure everybody's who's been following this has jumped into the same routes that you'll fall down, of, where it originated from. We are in a system really akin too, not as bad I might say right now anyway to Chernobyl with the political structure, with the scientist in charge all working for the same system, all given amazing authority by governments, right down to what they're going to tell the public or not tell the public. And whistleblowers will not be tolerated.

Now, silence on things, like this, and there's books out about this too by the way, put out again by those who want to stay in control, mentioning the fact that conspiracy always comes because of the necessity of government secrecy. So conspiracy theories abound because of government secrecy. Well, perhaps there shouldn't be so much government secrecy when it affects the people. Governments better start to remember who they're supposedly serving. Or, come out and tell us quite openly or honestly that they're not serving us at all, they're dominating us. They should. Wouldn't you like clarification and some honesty, 'eh, wouldn't you like that?

But right now, I've noticed that even doing searches for information on what's been happening across the world with this pandemic, it's hard to get good information. A lot of the information that is out there is two weeks old. You'll see your searches being slowed like crazy because of, again, the emergency organizations that have kicked in to guard the Internet. It's interesting to watch it. And at the bottom you see all the different institutions it's running through, on the bottom of your search, you know. Yeah, of course you're being watched. Yes, you're being noted.

Anyone who is looking into this, they're trying to find out immediately your location, who you are and your location. Of course, they'll try to find out why you're looking at this too. You're being studied. We're all being studied amazingly well. We have been before this all happened too but now it's very evident, ha, as the new organizations that you haven't heard about kick into gear actually, you know. Quite fascinating to watch.

But they're not going to allow any laypeople to give any advice out there too. And sure, you're going to have all kinds of misinformation, disinformation and so on. And not all put out by the ones at the bottom by the way. Because you're not going to get much of the truth out to the public at all right now, that's the first thing. The movies always tell you the same thing, 'eh, and disaster movies as well. The first thing is that governments get together and they decide not to tell the public. Oh, they'll panic, they'll panic. You know. [Alan laughing.] Right to the end they don't tell them. It's quite funny to think about in some ways how predictable the systems are when it comes to those in power, you know. Always the same. Always the same.

I remember years ago back in the 90s I gave talks on NATO, and NATO's pact that they had. Which used to be, supposedly, I could never find one except somebody got one for me, it was an old one. But it was supposed to be by law in Britain available at every post office for anybody who found out about it and then asked for it, but they wouldn't just give it to you unless you asked for it. It was about the response for warfare purposes, or for radiation, meaning the bombs or whatever, at that time that's what they thought about, or else plague, and really, the lockdown procedures by NATO, all NATO countries that signed on to it, and they still stand today, were to really lockdown whole towns and cities that were infected, and anyone who tried to move out of those cities, just like the movies. I mean, the movies had a lot of basis in fact. They looked into what the plans were and so on and they put them into their fictional movies. But yeah, they would shoot anybody on site if they moved out.

Now, I’m not terrifying anybody here. As far as we know right now, we’re dealing with a form of a flulike symptom virus. But don’t forget who is putting out the hype here. The people in China were panicking because after the SARS outbreak in about 2003, it came out in their newspapers at the time, and you don’t know who to believe, naturally, but they thought it was a kind of an ethno specific type virus designed to hit them. They had that in their newspapers and that would surface once in a while. That could’ve been propaganda on their side, who knows? Since then they’ve been terrified of such a thing happening and that’s why they’re really terrified now.

They know that in Wuhan where the thing broke out initially, supposedly, so we’re told, we don’t even know that for sure, that they have a biowarfare level four lab there. The West calls it biowarfare, but all these level four labs are basically dealing with that kind of stuff. So, I guess they’re all used for both purposes, or, certainly can be used for both purposes. Of course they are. But it’s interesting too, they say that 5 million of their people got out of there before they locked it down. They knew it was coming, you see.

But yeah, they’re petrified, naturally. Absolutely petrified. And I don’t blame them. And in countries that won’t give you many facts, as I say, just like Chernobyl with the old Soviet Union, panic increases too and you’re left really, I mean people in Chernobyl and around that area obeyed their governments. Even when the towns that had been built around there were full of people, they didn’t evacuate them right away. Always contain the problem by not telling the public, even though it’s detrimental to them. So, it’s not really fair at all.

Anyway, as I say, I’ve gotta be very careful because we’re living in a time where everything is an emergency. They’re training the public too that everything is an emergency. They are, aren’t they? And that’s the scary part of it, really, is the training aspect of it all. Put yourself in our hands and let us… do what we want to do, etc. etc. etc. etc. etc.

Now, let’s get into some of these articles that pertain to what I’m talking about here. There’s this article here and it’s on UGC Newsgathering systems they call it now. Now, Reuters is part of it too naturally. All the news agencies are all part of this particular monitoring system now.

Hazel Baker, Global Head of UGC Newsgathering at Reuters on user-generated content and the challenge of deep fakes innovators-summit.com / 29 Nov 2019

(Alan: Everything is being monitored massively in real time now, all your chitchat and so on. Then of course too whatever's taking off and how they're going to go for it, if they claim that you're being a disinformation nuisance, you're going to get rattled one way or another.)

…and the challenge of deep fakes

(A: Now you have the experts running, working with government and all the rest of it too, in collusion with government at least, deciding who's a deep fake. You see. So, experts are going to tell you who is a deep fake. And a lot of them too will be intelligence agencies as well, of course they are, for managing the public. So, it goes into this woman who, what her past is, what she worked in before and what she's now part of.)

Over the past decade social media has provided a rich source of news for media companies. Yet the phenomenon of fake news, and in particular the emergence of deep fakes, has meant that organisations have had to tweak their approach.

It isn't just about photographs and things like that and voices which they can fake, of course they can. But it's really about managing things in real time. You'd be surprised how many of these organizations are attached to this particular organization at the moment. It's a global system on the go watching social media.

And sure, there's going to be a lot of iffy things. But I really believe that no matter how crazy some of the stuff out there is, it shouldn't be censored. Really don't believe anything should be censored at all. I really don't. Give the people some credit for thinking for themselves and deciding for themselves.

You've got to, if you want to have a free society... We don't have a free society, what am I kidding... I'm not kidding about that at all. We don't have a free society at all. Of course we don't. But this is how they have all these organizations all sitting in the wings, just ready to jump in when something like a possible pandemic takes off, you see. Contain the public, keep them in Lala land, to the very end if need be. But whatever you do don't tell them the real truth about things. Np. That's how it's done. Just like the movies. Hm?

Also, this article here, from the Washington Times is one about…

Virus-hit Wuhan has two laboratories linked to Chinese bio-warfare program - washingtontimes.com / 26 Jan 2020

Well that's a concern, isn't it? Is anybody hitting the Washington Times for putting that out?

But you see, someone who might repeat this stuff can get hammered. There's a psychological operation on the go right now, where certain people [Alan chuckles.] are allowed to put things out and if you repeat it you're in trouble. This is psychology, it's a technique that's used to knock people out, or even have them begin to doubt their own sanity at times. Yep. You have no idea the experts in behavioral insights teams all working across the board overtime, big money too for them, to manage our minds, you know, [Alan chuckles.]   for us. Quite good, 'eh?

Also, there was Bill Gates on...

Davos 2017: Bill Gates introduces CEPI, initiative to prevent global epidemics

cbsnews.com / 18 Jan 2017

(A: We've all seen that one too, I'm sure. From the meetings that he's had recently and the organization that he belongs to, that he helped set up in fact, to do with how they're going to manage epidemics and pandemics and so on. And that's from the CBS News. It says…)

Bill Gates, (A: …and they always tell you right off the bat that he is…) the world's richest man, (A: ...so they say. I don't believe that he is though.) is preparing to "outsmart epidemics" by launching an effort that develops adaptable vaccines (A: ...this is important…) before another global health crisis like Zika or Ebola, which killed more than 11,000 people in West Africa, threatens the world again.

(A: And here is his organization…)

The Coalition for Epidemic Preparedness Innovations (CEPI) – founded by the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, the governments of India and Norway, the medical research charity Wellcome and the World Economic Forum – addresses how "the world is tragically unprepared" to quickly detect and respond to outbreaks, Gates said.

Years ago I thought about the same thing, rather than just treat one thing at a time, even in bacteria too nevermind viruses, if you understand the basic things of how things develop and spread and multiply, if you get into some of the mechanisms there and disrupt them and stop it, well, this is what they're trying to do of course with their vaccines and all the rest of it. And to just simply modify something, China claims they've already got one, interestingly enough, 'eh.

Hong Kong researchers have already developed vaccine but need time to test it - scmp.com / 28 Jan 2020

With Wuhan virus genetic code in hand, scientists begin work on a vaccine - reuters.com / 24 Jan 2020

And interestingly enough too, if you really dig in, you'll find a lot of the big companies putting out articles on this very, they're kind of peeved at it because whoever gets vaccines is going to rake in maybe billions of dollars. You understand? This is big business! This is beyond just industrial espionage, which it is too, perhaps, 'eh, we never know. Well, you could never prove it, can you? You might suspect all you want. But industrial espionage happens all the time. Even between soup companies for goodness’ sake. I'm not kidding you either. Hhhh. Spies go in, try to get their formulas and things like that. Which they're always changing, 'eh?

So here you have not just a technocrat type, Bill Gates, he's also trans-humanist. Because I don't know if… The trans-humanist movement are the technocrats who are supposed to run the world, I don't know if you know that. This was the system that Julian Huxley talked about when he came up with the trans-humanist. They would create really ultrarich people, at least the appearance of them, they could be front people, it wouldn't matter. They would make them into, and by the public standards, whatever the public's mindset is, they'd make them into geniuses by massive propaganda and so on.

But they would be given the job of deciding for the public, how to - again, the technocratic approach - get things done without going through the public debates and so on, just get them done. It would be above politics. Trans-humanist is the ones who are supposedly so rich and so on that they are above human petty worries and human petty desires and so on, supposedly, they suddenly become awfully altruistic.

Now, [Alan chuckles.] years ago I gave talks on the old Platonic organizations and the Neoplatonism too, where the old, old ancient esoteric groups across even into India that had Neoplatonism with the philosophers and philosophies, etc., they talk about Fisher Kings, the people who would pick protégés to take over rule of the ancient world. They would make them into benevolent dictators, you see, that was the whole, that's what it was really about. That's what technocracy is about. And trans-humanists, you see them in the papers donating millions, sometimes billions to this and that, as long as they are in charge of it and push the world and direct the world on where it's supposed to go, you see. That's what this is.

Do you get to vote for these guys? No. Are you, does anyone even suggest you get to vote for them? No. Do you even think yourself you should vote for them if they're going to decide your futures? No. Because you've already been trained that somehow, that somehow they’re special… and almost godlike, you see. Well, who trained you this way? Look at the incredible propaganda machinery you've been soaked with for years to make you accept it all think it's quite natural.

Well, Bertrand Russell said it too, there's nothing you cannot train the public into given time and money, and get them young enough. Hm. They'll believe anything. Yep. It's quite something. But it works. It's all here. So yeah, you have the trans-humanists in charge of, like Bill Gates and his big, big vaccine campaigns and so on across the world. And what scares people too, and it's not, it is not conspiracy when Bill Gates wants to reduce the population to an extent. I noticed there, they've even got Prince William out now doing Prince Philip's job, now that Prince Philip's getting a bit old for it.

Prince Philip was in charge of all the massive organizations across the planet, World Wildlife and all the rest of it and all the other ones there too. They have the best farmlands across parts of the world and Africa too, all restricted, you can't grow anything on them. It's for conservation they say. But Prince Philip has been open, very open about the population. There's just too many people, he keeps telling us. He's been saying this for years and years and years. And now of course they've given that over to William to push and he’s going on about, oh my God, in another few years there could be another 3 billion people on the planet, we’re heading towards catastrophe, etc., etc.

I hope you understand this is all happening at the same time, 'eh? And is not coincidence by the way. You've had this massive, incredible almost riotous behavior with well-funded armies of protesters demanding we all stop eating so much, demand we stop heating ourselves and so on, demanding we don't drive cars anywhere, to supposedly save the planet...? All the plans that the technocrats drew up years ago. Everything is based on energy, you see, that's what technocracy is, that's their special areas.

I'm not kidding about this. If you really have an ability to see into it all, you would become a threat to the system, and they won't tolerate you. That is what we are living under right now, a technocratic system. And yet the trans-humanists up there, that supposedly decide what you're going to drive, if you're going to drive it all in fact, or how you going to heat your homes. They'll bring in a future where everything will be restricted, energy use, that is, even blackouts. Years ago they gave us articles from the EU parliament on this. I used to read them out, how we'd have rolling blackouts and brownouts for conservation of electricity and stuff like that.

You understand it's the same system. You understand, these people that brought you the Soviet system, communism, the first thing they said, we're all in it together, right. We're all, there's the big sign, we're all in it together. We're all equal. Right. That's the first lie, we are all equal. Then they bring in restrictions until there are scarcities on everything. Always the same system.

They have convulsions if they see you eating more than they say that you should eat. My God, oh my God, ughhh. That really upsets them. These people are psychotic. If they took over the Sahara, and of course sand is used for cement and all that, they'd instantly say there's a shortage of sand. That's how bad they are. Because everything's money and profit, big profit for themselves, creating scarcities.

I’ve given talks too from the leaders of the Green Party in Britain from a few years ago. The woman said that she does look back with nostalgia at the told newsreels that they’d show you of World War II and the London blitz. And everybody got together in the underground, and they were all suffering and rationed and thin and all that because of the incredible rationing. But they stuck it out together, they were cheerful, and they’d sing songs. And she says, that’s what we need, she says, shortages, etc. would make that happen and we’d all be in it, we’d all pull together. In other words, we’d all do what we’re told, you see. For survival.

Which is of course what all this climatology is about, right, too. That's what they picked, remember, we'd all be in it together to save the world and drastically change the way we’re living. We've got to stop having children, at least all of you, 'eh. There's different categories of who should stop having children. It's never-ending. It's pretty ceaseless, isn't it. Long-term, all the way from Malthus to the present, same stuff. And they want to tell you, it's not them that are not going to, it's you that's not to have children.

HG Wells was quite blunt about it. And he was an awful snob, even though he came from a lower background, really. He went through good schooling because his mother was really a housekeeper for very rich family. His dad was a drunk, awful drunk, who couldn't keep a job. He used to get part-time work as a cricketer for a cricket team, you know. But I can remember reading that HG Wells would look at all these people going past the windows of the big houses every morning on the way to their factories at the time. They used to have actual work in those days, and they had factories and so on, they didn't give it all away.

It petrified him to think that they could, they were only a little stone throw from joining them. Petrified. So, he began to despise the working people. He did. And that's why he became almost a control freak in his writings, portrayed that too, especially his nonfiction writings. And he was a cofounder of the Fabian Society, founded by the Astor family. It's amazing how the rich, again, technocrats and trans-humanists of the day fund of these organizations. It's not a recent thing. It's interesting isn't it. And it shapes directions of the future. It even shapes the directions of wars and things they're going to have, and what they'll get out of it, etc., social and economic wars.

So anyway, HG Wells said, well, what happens? If this, look at the people who are poor, he says. He says, what happens? You help, you give them better sanitation, and teach them hygiene and give them hygienic products and so on, give them a bit more money to feed themselves, 'eh. And he says, and then you help prevent them from getting diseases, then what did they do? they breed. He was disgusted, they breed. Yeah, oh, them, they breed. Yeah.

You know, at one time that would have shocked people. I don't think folk, I think we’re so dumbed down today that most folk can’t be shocked anymore. And that's a dangerous time to live, when folk can’t be shocked anymore.

So to all those control freaks who are still controlling everything including the Internet, [Alan chuckles.] you know. And they're there. They are there. What kind of Gestapo are these characters, or Stasi, super Stasi, huh? Like the movie and other books too that came out, you know, The Lives of Others, the Stasi system. By God, these are the super dreams of the Stasi's that we’re living in today. They had to go and bug everybody's homes. Millions of folks, MILLIONS of their homes bugged. They had almost half the population at one time or another spying on everybody around them. And they coerce you into it.

They'd say, we want to watch your neighbor. Well I don't like that. Well if you don't do that for the state, you know, then you're under suspicion. And that's how it works. Quite easily. But they bugged everybody's homes. And had whole buildings full of records and files on everybody. Today it's just done with the Internet primarily. And almost cities built to store even hard drive systems of the information on all of us for the NSA, etc., FBI, and Canada's got its own systems too. Every country does. Super Stasi, 'eh?

We're in their system and they're locking it up pretty well. It's been locked up, bit by bit it's locked up. Beyond the policing stage. Until, and they told us that this would happen, I said this years ago, 20 years ago I said you're not going to get 20 years out of the internet and then they'll just lock it up pretty well. And it wasn't just speculation, it was the fact that they put out there, I was reading all the stuff from the United Nations and how they would create a civic society and the civil society and so on across the planet. Including how they would use psychologists, what they use now with the BITs, etc., they would train the public through fear and coercion, and example, as they pick different people for examples to punish and publicize it, and everybody all starts to conform.

You start with self policing, you see, until you're completely policing your own thoughts. That's been, that's resurfaced again from them, those very things which I've just mentioned. Perpetual childhood. With your overseers, all for the… it's always for the greater good, they tell you. Well, that statement's been used for the worst horrors the world has ever seen ...for the greater good.

And unfortunately, these kind of things do repeat themselves. As folk get so cocky and arrogant in positions of power that they literally see the general population as them, like a different species. That's really, really bad when that happens. And it's inevitable, it always does happen. There's lots of psychopaths rise to the top and they love control freak jobs.

Now, what we have to imagine too is the state of the world, the economy right now. And the effect on it. I mean, you couldn't get a more perfect storm than we've got right now. The economy is tanked out, you know that. Everybody knows it. Not just with this particular president in the US or any Prime Minister in Britain, but it's been on the go for years as you well know, since all your factories were given over to China through agreements and free trade by your own political establishments. Well now what happens when the country that it all comes from is going into quarantine in such a way? Hm?

You think they didn't foresee this? What kind of idiots are running the system? OR, are they the idiots? Or is this a bigger plan than you can imagine? So, the economy is sunk.   In previous years they kept giving us “the jobless recovery”. Because the Dow Jones and the NASDAQ and all that, it means nothing to the general public. It's all rigged anyway and governments pump in money every night to raise up the figures for their own big corporations. It's completely fake. But it's a “jobless recovery”. There's no recovery as stores have been closing for years. There's no recovery for that.

So, they toy around, again, how will we manage the peasantry? Well, we'll give them all a wage for staying home. You see? This was all planned a long time ago, this is step-by-step-by-step. So, we're at the stage now where again the economy is tanked as far as the working people are concerned, the raises are stagnant, the prices are going up because they keep devaluing your currency, so you need more of it to get the same things, basics and so on. Perfect storm.

And it happened. Do you imagine this would be a good book too, 'eh? It's right out of the sci-fi horror. How many movies have they churned out over the last 20 to 30 years with virus outbreaks and all this kind of thing, and plagues? Huh? And you've gobbled them all up getting programmed, when you think about it, countless ones. And books too, to terrify you if you want to stay awake all night, but on plagues and so on, right. Quite amazing.

You're getting trained with the formulas as well, what you do and how you obey and all that, do what you're told, you know. Then you bring that into the Chinese new year where millions of people literally are traveling across the whole planet, and you put that into a novel, 'eh, an outbreak, right at the time of year? Why not at some other time of year? But no, it happens at that time of the year. Bingo, right.

And then you watch the farce, and it is a farce, honestly, to me it is anyway, my opinion, when they went all that time before they do anything about it. That doesn't make sense. That's what stinks actually. And when it doesn't make sense... They're not stupid at the top.

They know now that this virus was on the go even probably in October, and through November picking up speed. Which means it obviously was across the world, I would think, before then. Wouldn't it? We'll never get to the bottom of it or get the facts out. As I say, with secrecy you end up with speculation. And speculation ends up with governments clamping down on people, because the folk have nothing to do except speculate if you won't give them the true facts, right, true facts. But again, the real system we live in treat you like a child, we've got to understand that.

Coronavirus: Doctors fight back against misinformation online - bbc.com / 31 Jan 2020

Back in the 90s I gave a talk on the system that you think, where you think you're free, you're taught you're free. And I said, well you see it's like, you can go here and go there and do this and do that and you think you're free. It isn't until you might say something or do something that the bars that generally are invisible go up around you. And you start bumping into things. You can't go here, you can't get that job, you can't bup-bup-bup. You see.

Something's kicked in that you knew nothing about. You may have been blacklisted for something. Maybe because you're a bit too bright even. But they won't tell you. But you've obviously looked into an area that you're not just supposed to look at perhaps, something like that. That's when you find out the system is completely different than the one that you've been trained to believe exists, where everyone's nice and pleasant, 'eh. And officialdom are all, they give you, they used to give you terminology, like, they'd call you ‘sir’ just to appease you I think, you know, or throw you off balance before they stiffed you with a hefty fee. But that's the system you were trained to believed in, that they're really decent people, you see, and you live in a decent system where you don't have a Gestapo types, Stasi type, NKVD type, you know, and KGB type, you know. Only bad countries have that.

You have a nice system. Until they turn it loose. And unfortunately over the many, many years now, what was really predicted long ago, and again, it's because they put out all these articles and preparedness PDFs and books and all the rest of it from their own meetings over years, telling you what they would do here, there and everywhere. Never mind the fact you're getting all your future appointed by the glory boys and gals at the WEF, the World Economic Forum. Although if you say it backwards it's for the few, the F-E-W. Because it is, isn't it? And you don't vote for them either do you?

Statement about nCoV and our pandemic exercise - centerforhealthsecurity.org

Trans-humanists, 'eh, they just have your benefit at heart, they just know what the right thing to do is. They're benevolent dictators, you understand, and they know what's best for you, what you should be, where you should be living, how you live, what you eat, or don't eat, if you should breed or get married or not, etc. etc. Even if you should drive or have a car for the Agenda 21, no private vehicles allowed eventually they said. It's in their own statements. This is not conspiracy stuff, folks. This is published stuff from themselves.

So here we are with this thing. As I say, I'm not going to terrify people about it. Because if we get any truth at all, the death rate isn't as high as the people thought. It doesn't mean it can't jump, etc. As I say, there's a lot that will come out of this, a lot will come out of this, including the way you're going to live. That's really what the big gain for those at the top is.

It's like any war, remember, as Professor Carol Quigley said that it, it affects all sides. Culturally you can get more done on cultural change, he's talking about planned change where you want to take a society, on all sides, he says, you can get more done in five years of war, as government takes over everything, food supply, everything, education, you name it, then you can do with 50 years of propaganda and peace.

Well, this scenario, and it is a type of war scenario, you see, it's a survival scenario, that's how it's put across, oh, you know, experts, it's all to save you all. And out of this they might, because everything I've watched in the last few years especially has been almost that of the totalitarian order, where it doesn't matter whether it's a massive climate change, armies of paid people to protest and everything. It's astonishing to watch them and watch all this happening.

It's astonishing to watch children getting terrified in school about it until they become radical. And when radical children grow up radicalized, they are easily manipulated into incredible nasty mobs, all nasty armies as we've seen when the old Soviet system, when they were unleashed on the public. Germany did the same thing too, remember. But we watch this happening. And everyone is so, so neutered when it comes to reacting to this kind of thing. Things that would never have been tolerated years ago, NEVER been tolerated, to allow this to be brainwashed into the children to be radicalized like this until they're terrified, terrified. And they're taught to hate adults. Oh, you let this all happen.

Do you understand what's going on here? And the monied people who are behind pushing all this stuff, I hope you realize that the horrors of the past can happen very quickly today or tomorrow by the same radicalization processes. It's a science to radicalized people and we're living through it right now. I hope you understand this. And keeping quiet doesn't help. At all. There are no balanced approaches been going on for the last few years at all. Ha. It's all a one-sided agenda it seems.

As I say, think for yourselves. Think for yourselves and remember, we're going through nasty times. Very nasty times. Last week I was going to mention too about...

Amazon reportedly has thousands of workers listening to Alexa chats - digitaltrends.com / 11 April 2019

You think you're free. How can you possibly think you're free when it's purposely being put out there and allowed by governments, and actually with collusion of governments. The spying equipment that's in your home now is disgusting. This doesn't bode well, the system at all. And the Pentagon…

Pentagon privately voiced concerns about Afghan war - euronews.com / 12 Oct 2019

It bogged down, the whole thing in Afghanistan, bogged down by deliberate… Remember, Kissinger talked about it, and Brzezinski, if, you know, they tried to coerce the Soviet Union into going into Afghanistan by causing upsets, by paid provocateurs inside Afghanistan, forcing the Soviet Union to fall for it... They went in, that was their Vietnam, THEIR Vietnam. That was the Soviets, they got bogged down for years in Afghanistan. Pretty well helped destroy them. But then the US takes and does the same thing? Come on here.

The US already had the experience… The guys who planned it for the Soviets, the Kissinger's and the Brzezinski, talked about their collusion together, helping to get the Soviets into it to bring them down into a Vietnam scenario. [Alan chuckles.] But then they okayed for the US to do the same thing, after the Vietnam experience? No one is this stupid, folks. There's things going on here that literally are above anything you can imagine of common sense. There something beyond that, the big agendas for sure, and plan, no doubt about it. So people want wars, they want this kind of thing to go on too. So anyway, the Pentagon privately voiced concerned about the cost, not just the cost but how they'd get bogged down, and that's what's happened.

London police to deploy facial recognition cameras across the city - theverge.com / 24 Jan 2020

In the UK, they've got all this police facial recognition really all over London now. Again, train you a step at a time, only just cameras, you know. And they even had propaganda shows in Britain, years ago, where they showed you these big circular rooms with folk just looking at screens, that were civilians employed to watch everybody else. Just like the Stasi system in a sense, you know. Then they introduce step-by-step armed guards and police with machine guns and things. Then they bring in facial recognition, now they know who everybody is etc. etc., you know. Step by step by step.

At the same time, you've got all these idiots waving little, you know, plastic flags in Britain thinking that they're getting free. The Britain you have today is nothing like the one from 1970s or 80s. Completely different. But they try to keep… I remember talking about brass bands and flags, as Bertrand Russell talked about them. He says, you can do more with a brass band and flags and tunes, patriotic tunes, then you can do with logic and truth and rhetoric. It's the emotions that gets folk going. Yeah, yeahhhhhhhh.

I mentioned before that in the techniques of communism, a kind of creeping communism that was to take over the world through gradualism and changing and controlling and shaping, directing the culture, until eventually all the old normals and oppositions become a new system all one together. This is the Gramscian technique of course that they adopted for the world. It was awfully successful. This article actually sums it all up and it's by Peter Hitchens, who wrote about Blair and Boris Johnson, how they have so much in common. An awfully good article, it's called…

Boris: The New Blair, by Peter Hitchens - firstthings.com / 14 Dec 2019

Good article to show you that, is he really conservative? You know? What is this sham of politics today? Because it is a sham, isn't it? Because at one time conservatism used to stand for particular values. There's Boris Johnson, who supposedly is head of the conservative party, whose living with, it's not even his wife. You see how everything, perception has changed completely of what was or what is. At one time no one would have dared even having someone in who had even been married twice, you know, or divorced or anything like that. That's not… You have to have someone who has some kind of tradition. That's the whole point, conservative really was about tradition. It's all gone out the window.

Now you've got a guy who jumps up and down like a clown. And he's no clown, though, he plays his parts. And he'll play it well. He's already signed on to future wars alongside the US. He's really another version of Tony Blair only he's a bit funnier, that's all. Tony Blair was, he did a lot of hand flapping as well in front of the people. But Boris has got that humorous face, you know.

But the whole thing is just for the people to consume a completely different system than the one you're really living in. We’re all in it today though. And it was with the rise of efficiency and technocracy that you're heading towards terrible times. We’re actually going into it now. Because all rights and freedoms are taken away and your choice, and lots of things are taken from you under the guise of, we've got to be efficient now. Especially in crisis, you've got to be efficient.

That was the fear of a lot of people who warned us all in previous generation, efficiency, this drive from academia churning out armies of robots in different fields and so on, they would all work together for efficiency. And we are the only product they're working on, is us. We are the product. So, it's not pleasant at all.

But as I say, don't get all carried away by the people who are going to terrify you, with coronavirus or flulike symptoms and so on. Use your common sense. If you can basically even just get a few extra tins of things, food and so on, get them. And packages of stuff, get them. You should have them anyway in case anything else happen in the world at any particular time to tide you over for a few weeks. If you can. If you can, a lot of folk can't afford it these days.

But don't jump into these incredibly expensive crisis floggers that will sell you the kitchen sink, used as well, to save you, you know. Use your common sense. And don't panic about things. As I say, we don't even have enough information given to us, and there's definitely a dearth of information right now for the general public to consume. And there's no doubt of course on any scenario just like the Cobra group in Britain for actual terrorist attacks, they all decide together what they're going to have the media tell you. There's no doubt about that. It's all part of it. They will tell you the least facts of all, if they're bad. Use your common sense.

The best way not to get it is don't go out in public very much, if you can go out at all. If you have to go out, take your precautions. But don't go caring on as usual if this thing is going through the society at the moment. We don't know. We really don't know. But don't forget too, every country has tremendous systems in place right now to try and contain the spread of these things in this day and age. I've no doubt too, I've already read the articles too, the elites, lots of the elite already have lots of their antiviral drugs that they can get for themselves. That's why you're seeing the politicians, they're not worried. They're not worried, they're never worried about things like that.

We won't see them for the general population. That happened again with the SARS outbreak at that time, I think they had the Tamiflu they called it. Antivirals. Now they've got ones that are more advanced, way more advanced than that, and more effective, for those that are deemed worthy to get them I suppose.

But don't panic as I say. If it's all true, what they're telling you, most folk are getting over it okay. It will depend on the individual, you might just think it's the cold and get over it hopefully. And once again of course it will hit… They're claiming people with the general/this year flu, whatever variety is out right now, will kill more folk than this thing will. But again, you can't, without the real facts you're left guessing. And guessing leads people into terrible panic situations. Don't panic about things. Keep your head. And use your own common sense. About everything. Because after all it's your life, isn't it? It's your life, I think.

Anyway, folks, for me, that's all I have time for as usual. And I had so much here as always but I don't want to repeat it all. And I don't want to repeat all the stuff I'm sure everybody's looked up on the Internet. As I say, everyone's being watched like crazy right now in case they terrify the public, you see. So, you've got to be so cautious in this day and age. You're getting taught very quickly that you have no freedom of speech at all. And since they've made the Internet pretty well indispensable, being banned from anything at all or even some temporary use can have devastating consequences.

Like Bertrand Russell said, eventually the government will give you tokens, he said, you'd have to pay your rent and buy your food from these tokens, you couldn't save them up. And if you disobeyed anything or the government disapproves of something you said or done, said or done, think about it, said or done, right, then they would withhold your credits for the month and you would suffer. And you would have to repent.

Well, it's the same system. Anything which you jump into, then eventually is mandated, is a form of power. And power is always about control. And yes, they have their spinoffs of profits and money and all that at the top, etc., but it's always about power and control. Never forget that.

It's a dangerous system, the Internet, very dangerous system. The way it's being, as I say, forced on people and eventually made almost indispensable for most folks' business transactions and everything. It's dangerous indeed, when folk with power can arbitrarily censor whatever, to anybody. Dangerous times indeed.

So, for myself Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada, keep your head, don't be silly, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

firstthings.com / 14 Dec 2019

Feb. 9, 2020 (#1760)

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

Hi folks I’m Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on February 9, 2020. I hope you’re all doing okay and getting through these incredible times that we’re living through. Because I’ve said, so many generations, as far as I can remember, parents, grandparents and so on, going back, have never had any peace for any length of time in this system in which we live.

You’re always worried about finances or financial crashes. As I’ve said before, they generally rob you, traditionally, the big, big, big banks, or those who control them… Because you’ve got… It’s even wrong to call them banks. The top lenders at the top are really different, they lend to nations. They traditionally have always plundered us at least twice, at least twice a century. That’s generally traditional. But it’s sometimes three times in a century.

Now they have more sophisticated ways of getting money off the general public, through taxes and various things. And then the cons of inflation and deflation, and what they like to call quantitative easing, where they simply ease the cash out of your wallet, you know, by big quantities. But they do it incrementally, so you’re not supposed to notice it so much.

So we’re controlled all the time through fear. I’ve always said, this is an abusive system. And it truly is an abusive system. The technique is simple, keep the people terrified. It's like cattle in the field, if they're happily grazing you see, they'll ignore any guy that comes along and tells them to move to the next field. You have to get fear into them to get them all moving. And stampede them. If you want big changes to happen you stampede them quickly, get the whole herd moving, and during that period don't let them rest at all. Keep them frantically racing ahead with the eyes wide and the whole thing, their tongues hanging out, terrified and you can really get a lot done to control them by changing the entire system. And they'll obey you see, because they're terrified.

Well, that's how they talk about the people, how to keep them, how to manage the public. It's awful for them to have a long period of not too much happening, you see. So you get financial crashes. You're always living in fear. You can't win in this system if you’re ordinary people. You really can't, it's not meant that you win anything actually. Maybe a scratch-n-win, but you lose it again the next time you buy the tickets. It's all set up and a big con.

Because, you know, if you won, you'd all be happy. Happiness is the last thing they want the public to have. You're supposed to always listen to experts, you see. And the experts always terrify you of all the awful things that could happen in your life. And most folk now can't even think without experts. Like Bertrand Russell says, we're training the public to be basically inadequate without the advice of experts, on the basic things, basic things. And he meant like changing diapers on babies. Now you need lessons on how to do it, 'eh? People can't think for themselves.

When they started The Weather Channel, they even got a book out on it ages ago from some of the guys who worked on it. They were set up there to terrify the public. So a little bit of drizzle could be possible flooding coming your way. Everything became a crisis. Utter nonsense, you know. But that's how you do it, you terrify the public.

Through the data, it's information but it's data. Information doesn't mean true or untrue, it's just data, you see. And very often it is untrue. This whole thing about fake news is as old as the hills. We've been getting it our whole lives. And your parents before you, you know, were getting it their whole lives too. Fake news.

Everything's fake, really, 'eh. People actually vote for who's been selected by the top to be the front person that you're going to believe in. And they all belong to the same Council on Foreign Relations group. They're all selected regardless of the party they're in, at the top they're all by them. Carol Quigley talked about that and should certainly have known about it since he was the official recorder of their histories. They have their own history archives for the Council on Foreign Relation and professor Carol Quigley himself was given access to them in the 1960s. Actually he worked with Zimmerman, another guy who at one time was head of the British Communist Party. He wrote their newspapers for them, he owned them.

And we don't care, Quigley said, we don't care if they're communist or fascist dictators or whatever, it doesn't matter, as long as they're all working together. That's what he said. We don't mind, he says, what they are. And sure enough, if you read their books, their very old books, when they had the world meetings and they published some of them for their members mainly. You find they had communists in there, they had all the labor leaders in their too for different unions, and they had Prime Minister's, presidents, bankers for the world, all attending these world meetings as they planned out the future.

It's in their books. It's not conspiracy stuff. This is… I keep telling people, you're living through an agenda. It's not hard to believe as far as I'm concerned when you read it every so often. Like the World Economic Forum literally talk about the whole century, what they want to implement. It's Agenda 21, the agenda for the whole 21st century, all the changes that must be made, and the super cities and everyone getting crowded into them, getting out of the rural areas. And eventually the abolition of private cars, essential vehicles only. Right down to what you work at, what you eat, etc. It's almost…

You see, it's a system, a system is awfully important to understand, what a system is. From birth to death, 'eh, you're numbered, you're a unit, and your function is to produce and only consume what they want you to consume. But produce, that's the definition at the United Nations of a good global citizen, a producer – consumer. If you're sick or you retire, you're no longer a producer, you're a burden on their system. And I'm not making this up at all.

Remember as well as I've said before, look back to the big, big foundations that higher, and people live and work there their whole lives long for these foundations in different capacities of employment and they retire. And when they retire, the foundation doesn't close down. No, they've already trained people who continue. They go on for centuries. And sure, they all have their functions, and they have their tenants and they can tell you what their goals are. They tell you what they want to accomplish. And they've all the time in the world to do it.

And all the money of course. They hire and train and employ hundreds, maybe even thousands of nongovernmental organizations to get the job done across the whole planet. The richest folk on the planet, you don't vote for them. I know Bloomberg's getting into politics but even he is not the richest on the planet. But the ones who are the richest on the planet decide what the future is to be. They have their different proxies beneath them, their little worker bees that get more of the jobs done. The ones at the top do very little work at all, they just make suggestions. The rest of them who owe to them basically, everything at they have, jump into action, get the job done. That's how it is.

They even have councils of elders. I've mentioned it before. It's a global system and these are the elders of the top global system, Royal Institute of International Affairs and CFR, the inner groups of course, inner party and outer party, and the ones who do the most work, and can live long enough, get to be the elders. They're passed over through the United Nations to the World Health Organization heads and so on.

They have this global socialistic system which they work for, which they really believe in. They're really... They're dedicated to it in a strange fanatical sort of way. I was talking to someone today in fact about that, because it really is difficult to get into the mindset of people who are fixed for life from a very early age into this strange duty that they feel that they have. And it fills their pockets too, mind you, by serving their masters who are above them, the ones who are the dominant minority who have all the cash and the systems of creating cash in the world. But they serve them slavishly. And fanatically. And truly believe they have the right to rule the world.

It can only work when they train everybody else, as I say, to be naïve. You're brought up to be naïve. You're brought up to believe that you've got a system, and you're just stumbling down through time, and your vote counts, and what you do, your votes really matter and so on and so on. That's the big joke of it all really because when you have the huge mass of organizations of foundations that fund the countless armies of NGOs and countless think tanks that work, actually government is almost a subsidiary of the think tanks today. In government they constantly go to the different think tanks for expert advice as they call it for whatever topic it happens to be.

And of course, the think tanks are only too happy to oblige them.

The CFR in America boasts about the fact that they are advisors to governments. Well, you don't vote for these think tanks, do you? Most folk don't even know they exist. Or if they know they exist they don't delve in find out what they exist for, or what their history is or anything else. And like the World Economic Forum, where they boast about running the world for the next hundred years, and this and this and this and this and this is going to get implemented, etc., and you're all going to have, be, again, more surveilled by high-tech and all the rest of it. Did you vote for that? No. You don't get to vote for the WEF. They don't ask your advice on anything, it's just done. So, what are you talking about you're living in some kind of democracy? Hm? What are you talking about?

And you get all hyped up when it comes to voting time, you know. Because the same agenda is going to continue regardless. And it is. People who thought in the past they could buck the system by getting it off the course it was on, and who were in-the-know to an extent of some of what was going on higher above them, I'm talking about presidents and prime ministers. When they started to believe that they really were in charge of Nations, or a nation, they were reminded like Kennedy was, and the world was reminded, and every other politician was reminded, hey, hey, you know, you're not running the show here. Ronald Reagan did the same thing. He started to make decisions and started to… He got off his script basically. And he was shot, not killed, but shot to remind him… that you're not the boss. That's how it really works.

The same with Julian Assange. What happened to Julian Assange getting locked up and when he was basically a prisoner in an embassy for years, yeeears. But every newspaper company in the world pretty well was advised to attend when they went in to arrest him. So that the world would see that this guy getting pulled out, with these big strong burly guys, you see, and bundled off in a van, as a warning to everybody else who might start, think they had the right of free speech and to tell the public things that they thought the public should know. From then on the journalists are just, the lips, their mouths are zipped, you know. They'll give you the little safe topics to talk about, etc. but that's about it. Everything today is so in-your-face and managed it's just that the people need an explanation of what they're actually seeing. And it really is that way, isn't it?

Yeah, Julian Assange, regardless of what damage he did or didn't do, the fact is, that was a message to the world, to every journalist, just do what you're told. After the Levinson Inquiry in Britain, and its counterpart in Australia, did the same thing there, the British Commonwealth all went into action at the same time to basically restrict news and data to the public. As we are going into the next phase of basically lockdown on free speech.

Which really started way back in 9/11. We're suddenly in this strange war mode against, they told us immediately who the enemy was to be. It was no surprise to me. We've been at war ever since basically. For what? Big corporations have been raking in the cash. The countries are getting poorer and poorer paying for it all. Because we pay for it all. Incredible wars. And the devastation of the wars, and the fallout in the countries that you know you have to support, that you flattened and destroyed. And also, the mass migration from them. I wouldn't stay in those countries knowing it was going to happen, would you?

It's planned that way. It's a chessboard. One move from this chess piece will cause this, this, this and this. This is all thought out way waay ahead of the first shot being fired in any war. It takes years to prepare this stuff. Every movement and strategy is debated by many think tanks on many levels, and they go over it and over it and over it, like drafts and redrafts and all the rest of it, could this happen, what will it cause? So, whatever happens is planned that way. I hope you understand that.

As Quigley said, you can get more done in five years of war for planned social change, then you can in 50 years of peace using propaganda. In other words, when the public are terrified and scared, you can ram through laws after laws after laws. You can take free speech away. You could even chip everybody but if they want to. That's where they're wanting to go actually with it all.

But remember, you're in a strange system of evolution. And I'm not terrifying people. You should never be terrified by news of the truth. You can't deal with anything unless you understand it. Denial doesn't stop it. I hope you understand that. Most folk can't handle the truth. It's true, and I don't blame them. Most folk, again, accept the indoctrination they've been given. They themselves in their own lives in their own little circle will find decent people, and they'll be decent people and they've got the little problems and all that but they're decent people. They can't imagine there's people at the top that are not so decent and who treat, and who see you as an inferior species, all the eugenicists, etc. at the top, and who helped plan the future and they say, well, do we really, really need these people down the road? Yeah, we're going to use you for a while yet as human beings. Maybe not all of you, we don't need all of you anymore. But as an efficient machine, a human body, is pretty, it's pretty durable, you might get 60-70 years out of that body, maybe less if you push it too hard in the fields or whatever you're going to use them for in hard labor.

But the fact is, it's a pretty cheap body to maintain compared to robots. Eventually down the road if they can get cheaper energy for robots and so on, yeah, they'll add more cyborg technologies to it. Then maybe eventually pure robots, if they can get dependable long-lasting robots. But in the meantime, they've got humans. The only problem with humans is you've got this thing called a brain. So, you must cater to the fact this brain's going to ask questions. And you've got to make sure that you always, you know, get them off, off, off the road to seeking real truth. Because they might become objectionable to things if they understand the truth. And keep them going in circles. Keep them happy. In their little, little circles, keep them happy.

Give them lots of entertainment because we have an insatiable desire for entertainment, don't we? We've been so studied they know exactly what to do. Today with entertainment, and for my whole life entertainment is going down the hill as far as indoctrination goes, or I should say up the hill perhaps with it. Really down the hill. It's easier to indoctrinate the public today with so much for them to see. There's not a minute of the day that they couldn't pass delving into entertainment, if they want to. And everything that you see now is so politically correct as indoctrination. Because that's how you get updated, is through fiction, you see. It's quite simple.

But even at that though, there's a lot, a lot of resources and money and so on is diverted to keeping the people technically, it's like animals. You see, it's animal husbandry, you manage them. You manage the public like a herd. Just like medicine, they call it herd immunity and they give you inoculations and vaccinations and so on. But they use the same term for managing us all. Not themselves of course, but you. [Alan chuckles.] All of you. And we accept that too.

So as long as you have, like the Freudian aspect of it as they call it, you know, where he put everything down to sex. Well, sex is a weapon, this is a primitive technique, a primitive part of the brain is used for survival techniques, you see. And if you don't procreate, there's no next generation. So, you hypersexualize everybody. You break the bond of marriage. Or even long-term mating. In fact, they stated in their many articles from communism and socialism, and their books for manuals for training, the idea was to stop the bonding process happening between man and woman and just having them come together for sex. You see, break the bond.

Because the family unit is a small tribe. A small tribe might stand up together against government. When you're on your own individually, you're in fear of government, because they can speak right down to you or come to your door and there's no one there to stand up for you. HG Wells said this himself in his own writings, with the Fabian Society. Which of course was funded by the Astor family, one of the richest families of the era.

So, it's quite easy to keep the people happy they say. Lots of sex, you see. Keep them in perpetual childhood until people won't realize that they're getting old until they hit about 60. And even then, they're still lapping up the stuff that's churned out for teenagers. Because there's lots of it, you see. So, it's perpetual childhood. You're immature. You never grow up. And you don't think of deeper things. Which, it's fantastic for those who rule you. It was trouble, less trouble. And there's really less communication between people outside this electronic box that we're all in. There's really less communication because people are technically… that's not communication. Texting is not communication, folks. Meeting people, looking in their eyes and speaking to them is communication. We don't do that so much anymore.

These are all wanted changes by those at the top, desired changes, when we stop communicating in reality with people. All the studies have shown is teenagers today can't even look at each other in the face, or anybody else in the face. They look away. They're so used to looking at their cell phones and so on or tablets or whatever. And they're, they'll text away all day long, but they have no communication abilities in real life. It's really sad that. All planned that way.

I always think of Orwell's 1984 with a scene in the canteen, the cafeteria, or the canteen where he worked. A few of them at the table are sitting and one of them was working in the Department of Communication on the dictionary, you see. And he says, do you realize the dictionary used to be this thick, and he puts his fingers up to about 3 inches. And he says, then we got it down year by year until it was this thick last year. It was pretty thin. And he says, this year it's going to be even half as thick again. And one of them chips in and says, I see brother, he said.

When we don't have the words to communicate with, to describe basically anything that's right wrong or anything else, then you're no threat, you couldn't be a counterrevolutionary basically. I'm kind of paraphrasing but that's what he was getting at. You won't have the vocabulary to express anything, what you really mean. And we're getting there even with all the different changes of vocabularies being forced upon the public. This is... This is no kidding, this is an old plan and Orwell understood this. Because he belonged to the International Socialist party at one time, and he went off and fought for it. Actually, did physical fighting for it in Spain. Until he caught on that that there's something much bigger and above all this managing it all and where it was supposed to go.

He also came back, and he was kind of shunned in the social circuit, even though he was a great writer and all that at the time, he was well known amongst the class of socialists and so on, because he wouldn't speak out and stand up for the Communists. He said they're not the same at all. And he realized that the whole idea of socialism was heading off into the wrong direction and there was a much bigger game plan above it all managing it. So that's what he realized.

He said that one of the, and I put up the link years ago on my website cuttingthroughthematrix.com where he talked about a meeting of the authors, the socialist authors association, or some kind of association he was in. He had arguments with them because they wanted to, again, bring nothing but sex in and destroy any beauty in the world through the disgusting techniques, and basically that you're seeing all today. Like S&M and all that, and cussing and swearing, he didn't see the reason for it or the need for it at all. So, the books they put out about Orwell, some of these socialists said that he was inhibited as they called it, inhibited. A term that was used by Freud again, used this term, oh inhibited, etc.

Now, you can't have decent manners anymore. If you have decent manners you're inhibited. I can remember years ago, and I do it once in a blue moon myself, where you'll swear, you know. But it all came from television years ago, when I used to watch TV, or movies. Now of course, some movies today, it's every second word. It's unbelievable. And you wonder why the children pick it up. Well it's the same way that you picked it up, you know. Because honestly, it's all planned that way. You don't need that.

Not too long ago I watched, someone sent me, it's a cheap kind of sci-fi horror type thing. And I'm not kidding you, male-female, teenagers, or early 20s maybe, it didn't, every second word was just a swear word. I mean what's the point. If you took that out of the very limited vocabulary, there's nothing left. It was that bad. But that's what they fill our heads full of.

Back in the 90s on a show I remember mentioning the same thing. I says, you know, you pass little children in the streets in Toronto and you hear them cussing and swearing and copying the things that they heard from television. Until they grow up and it's quite normal now for folk to cuss. I catch myself when I can. I only use it now when you hurt yourself [Alan chuckles.] in some way or another and that's about it. But it's so profuse today, that it's destructive. You understand it's destructive. We all sense, when we hear other people using it, we know it's wrong. We know it's bad for us. And if you hear women saying it too, it's somehow it seems even worse, I don't know why but it seems worse.

But anyway, that's the system in which we live. It's a very fake system. It's artificially created. Again, I mentioned recently to someone about the fake news again to do with how we're given so much fake news. That Carol Quigley talked about fake news for World War II. That's why it's called propaganda, that's fake news. Millions of dollars were spent giving the public's in the West fake news and propaganda. He mentioned that the Royal Institute of International Affairs which is the senior group for the CFR basically, they had all the news moguls together, they had their meetings, they were all part of the club, you see, and they decided to terrify the public.

Because the public weren't taking it seriously enough. They had no interest in going to war with Germany again, you see. But those that ruled them had a different idea. So, they decided to threaten, they put in all their papers at the same time a big blitz about gas masks, you're all going to get gassed from the air. It's so beautiful too because the taxpayers had to terrify themselves by you the taxpayer paying for the gas masks. You the taxpayer paid for it all. Of course, their private companies all belong to the same group, are the manufacturers. It's quite astonishing, you know. Anyway, everybody had to all, before the war started and then during it, carry this gas mask in this little haversack around with them. Or you got a fine if you didn't. And children had them too. This is all before the war started.

Called the phony war initially because nothing was happening. In Britain anyway. Then they had them all tearing out trenches, trenches in London to again get it through their thick heads as they say, that there's going to be a war coming, war coming, you gotta be on board with this war, you've got to hate the enemy, hate the enemy. Because you can't, it's hard to kill folk that you don't hate, you know? So, you drum up hate and you debase them into inferior beings, nasty beings. Dehumanize them. But you get everybody working out frantically, you put in all the papers photographs of these gangs of guys digging up trenches in the middle of the city. What good would they be if you're going to get bombed from overhead? They're of no use at all. It was an exercise in terror.

Quigley went through that, he admitted that. Nothing's really changed. Nothing has really changed. We're always given, as I say, we're kept in fear of financial crashes. We're kept in fear as your dollar or pound or whatever currency you're on, you need more and more numbers to buy the same things, and basics. But I read the articles years ago to do with austerity, part of the Agenda 21 plan for the world, and the United Nations plan.

It's to bring the Western world into austerity. Meaning a form of poverty. Gradually, gradually, gradually. Until all your money is going to go energy costs. The Technocracy Inc. deal, you see.

You have some of the descendants of the Technocracy Inc. group running the world today. In energy, 'eh? Because everything's an energy unit, and everything you earn is basically energy units. Which are spent on buying energy units, which is electricity, gas, or food or anything else. Everything is energy. Old plan, we're living through it.

But yeah, austerity is what they're going to bring us into eventually. It's quite fascinating, at this very time, isn't it, to understand all this. I gave the talks back in the 90s on the whole plan of bringing China in full-time as the most favored nation trading status partner for the West. That was what they called it. And signed it. All your leaders of politics signed for your factories to move to China under this wonderful free trade deal, knowing there'd be no employment for all the folk that worked in factories, when there's no factories there. It was an incredibly horrific time for people. Especially those that were getting older and looking forward to the retirement, and factory after factory closed down.

We paid, our tax money paid to uproot them and transfer them to China. And we paid for up to 15 years they said if those corporations said that they hadn't got full production up and full profit levels up, we paid the difference. Isn't that a beautiful deal, with our wonderful, wonderful democracies as they call it? Hm? And the States is a Democratic Republic they call that. [Alan chuckles.] I can remember when James Goldsmith came over and talked to the Senate, what a great speech he gave telling them about free trade and the NAFTA deal, which is all part of it. The NAFTA deal, which is now the USMCA deal. It's the same thing only it's the next stage towards it, for integration of the Americas. The same deal that the European Union had, you see. That's what it is.

Aaargh. I'm so sick going over the same stuff. To me it's just old, old hat, I can run right through it. I knew what was happening at the time. But I knew... Do you really think that all these think tanks that ran it all, and the CFR that drafted up the treaties for all these deals and handed it to governments to rubberstamp into your law, and you don't vote for the CFR, folks. But these are super think tanks – they're called think tanks, 'eh, it's a joke – that draft up, they even drafted up the EU union, they admitted that, and the NAFTA treaty, and handed it to government to sign into law. And they draft up the deals for China for free trade as well because they run the Asian-Pacific group as well, of the CFR department as well.

Long-term planning by a private group going way back at least to Lord Alfred Milner, Cecil Rhodes, etc., and all the ones who came after it, you know. It's fantastic to see it all happening. Yet most of the public didn't even seem to notice that all the items that you use to buy, even the guys for tools and that, suddenly everything's made in China, and they didn't think to question it.

But what a transition time that was, 'eh? For lots, how many people were laid off and lost everything? And couldn't get work again? People… How could guys, and it's men and women too, how could they get work in their 40s and 50s when that's all they knew was working in factories? And there were lots of factories.

But getting back to what I'm saying here,, you really really think that these big think tanks didn't take it far enough that say, wait a minute here, supposing things change and the model state for the world... Which is China, that's what we're all supposed to copy according to the United Nations, and I'm not kidding you, I got all the old articles here and documentaries that they churned out like you wouldn't believe on keeping repeating that, China was the model state for the world. [Alan chuckles.] This communist country, when it's obedience to the leaders and that's it.

That was to be what we are supposed to emulate. Well, supposing you fell out with them. Or supposing there was a change in plan. Or supposing the con men at the very top who planned it all says well maybe, maybe we'll give them 25 years in China, 30 years and then we'll become their enemies again. Well, since they are about the only producers left, who's going to make up the shortfall if you ever fell out with them? Who is going to make the shortfall if they have this tremendous disease rampaging through their nation?

You think they didn't think of these things? Of course, they think of these things, folks. So, what's happening today has many purposes, many agendas to get fulfilled. Including if they keep it going for as long as they hope they can keep it going, in the West that is, a whole new change and way of living, maybe even down to rationing, so they can get their agenda on to the next level. The first level, the first big change was 9/11 and Homeland Security and the war on terror. Which I call the war of terror really on the public. When literally you can't, you can't speak or even text anything or whatever without them wanting, demanding to what know what you're saying or doing.

And everybody happily complies. Because if they bring down the economy, which again, economic warfare is a form of warfare. A very effective form of warfare. As I say, you have to understand, it's how you view things that really make the difference. China has already declared to their own citizens, it's a wartime scenario. And they warned them to obey, or they'll be nailed to the tree or wall or whatever it is, they'll be nailed to the tree as basically letting down the nation if they don't obey and pull their weight and so on. You can get more done, again, in five years of war then you can do in 50 years of propaganda.

In 50 years of propaganda, that's a lot of attempted persuasion and incremental indoctrination. As you work through the schools, waiting for that indoctrinated group to grow up and then start doing what they're told and changing what you want them to change. Stalin did the same thing. They had 50-year plans, 100-year plans. We're doing the same thing today; the United Nations has them too. So, you gotta stop having this short-term projection into the future. The big boys themselves are waaay ahead, sometimes centuries, not just one century.

So here we are going through a crisis with disease and so on. Now, if you truly followed the laws of plague, or you know, viral disease, pandemics, epidemics and so on, the first law is complete quarantine. Hhhch. Farmers do it. I mean, you've all seen probably All Creatures Great and Small, the old TV series in Britain, or something similar to that where they had, they called it hoof and mouth, in Britain I think they called it foot and mouth disease for cattle and cloven-hoofed animals. They would burn, they would literally be like aaaaaa, they would be out with law and enforce, and no one could even walk in a field into another field that was uncontaminated, it was imprisonment if you did that. Total quarantine for humans. Animals were immediately, whole mountains of cattle and all kinds of animals were heaped up and burned. There was no exception. A suspicion alone was enough, before even the tests were in and that was it. And farmers lost everything, that's the saying, you lost the farm. They lost everything.

But the first thing is quarantine. Signs go up around the infected area, no one can go in or out without going through literally troughs of disinfectant, with their boots and everything. Well, with humans it's the same thing. But one thing you wouldn't do with the hoof and mouth or foot-and-mouth disease is bring an infected cow, and knowing infected cow or possibly even infected, into a field of healthy cows. That's breaking quarantine. That's insane.

So, you can't have a bit of quarantine, you understand. It's all or nothing. That's how you do it. That's the same with any major quarantine for humans. So, when you’re bringing in lots and lots of people from areas, the area, the very areas they say that it's rampaging through in China, it makes no sense. Especially again when it's a supposedly a new type coronavirus, novel. And you've got all these conflicting theories, so far, theories about it, about many people don't even show the symptoms until maybe two weeks have passed, some of them have no symptoms at all, others will be carriers that are asymptomatic.

Canada reports fourth case, a patient who tested negative at first - scmp.com / 1 Feb 2020

We had them coming to Canada already who tested negative, and then the next day or day after that they were found to be contaminated, positive. It's insane unless you want problems to spread. Or, or we are not being told much of the truth. I do suspect that's one of the things about it too. It seems to be very much like the SARS. There are studies comparing it all the time to the SARS that affected pretty well mainly Asians, Chinese.

You see, it's a lack of information that makes people... So why would you not tell the public that most of you may not, if they know this, this is speculation, if they know this, who it really is going to effect, why aren't they telling the public that? The same thing did happen was SARS. It wasn't until about a year or two later they admitted that to the general public, in Canada when it happened. So why would you hide the vital information that might make people ease up a bit on their fear. Unless you want to promote fear. And if you want fear, what do you really want to get out of this whole fearful episode here? That's the dangerous thing of course, is what they want out of it. More authority over what? For future what? Etc.

I can remember previous times too, and I used to do it on the air, when there's with outbreaks of the H1N1 and so on, it even came out that the German politicians would not take the vaccines that were given to the general public. That was in the newspapers, the general newspapers at the time. Not conspiracy sites or anything, the general newspapers. I remember doing the talks on it too and reading from them. They demanded a special type right away, and they did bring in a special type in for them.

Also in pandemic/epidemic situations too, they already have the gene sequences, they've sequenced the gene, the genetic makeup of this particular coronavirus, and we also know what type it is. And yes, there is actually, there is, they keep hammering anybody who says this, but there's a patent there for this particular type of virus. Maybe not the exact match of it, I don't even know, but there's a patent in there. We know this, it's been across in the big newspapers now, after blacklisting anybody who mentioned it before but now it's okay for, hhmph, the media to mention.

With any patent they've got to have a vaccine for it, you know. That's just it. And whoever has a vaccine is going to make billions on this. Billions. I always remember the book about the Rothschilds and how they made money and so on. One of the first Rothschilds in London was asked what was the best time, because the speculators are always into following them like greyhounds trying to jump in the markets and so on. But they said, when is the best time to make money? He says, when blood is running in the streets. Because people are terrified, you see. That's the key to that. When folk are terrified, you can make a fortune.

During the great plagues in London in England there were people selling rose scented handkerchiefs to the people saying that the fragrance of the rose literally killed this strange mist or whatever, they didn't have a name for this bacteria. They knew it was something in the air, they knew that, or something, they just knew that, they knew that much. They didn't have the microscope to see exactly what it was back then. But they call it like a foul, a foulness in the air, a miasma type of thing, or even the fog rolling in from the Thames. The people were making a fortune selling these handkerchiefs with rose scents in them saying it would cure them, you see, it would repel this disease, this terrible disease that was this plague upon the people. So yeah, you'll always have the con man making a fortune.

One story I've got to mention too is one preacher, he's dead now but he used to be on television yeears ago. He had a big, big church down California I think it was. He used to come on the air every day and he'd smoke a cigar and chat away. Some good talks he gave too, mind you. But his thing was money, money, money, he had lots of money. As many of the strange followers of God do in America, strange that, isn't it? But these are the authorized ones. The ones who are not authorized and just preach basic Christianity don't seem to get a leg up. The ones who get money are pushing a different agenda, it's political agendas for different people and areas outside of the religion.

However, he used to go on and he mentioned that the guy that came in to do a lot of the work for public relations for his organization used to work in Israel, on tours of Israel, you know, the old places and so on. That he made a fortune, this guy, by selling, he used to take bits of the stones from walls along some of the paths and so on near Bethlehem and say that these were actually part of the paving stones that the donkey carrying Jesus walked over. He made a fortune off it Because folk lap, they lap up that kind of stuff, you know.

It's not good enough to know that someone lived in the planet, they have to have something tangible, like a talisman you can see, you can touch. It’s a human thing obviously, very human thing. There's the guys who are very sharp who make a fortune on it. It's the same thing when it comes to terror and fear. You get all kinds of people out there making fortunes. I can remember the Y2K when folk even in the patriot movement were selling everything but the kitchen sink, including generators. Because the world was going to stop, you Know. Oh yeah, what hype. And folk, you know today who have done awfully well out of it are still on, talking about the same thing again. [Alan chuckles.] Yeah. Fortunes off fear and terror, 'eh.

Then of course it was, they had the Mayan thing down pat. And that never happened either. The same thing, oh my God, you know. Fortunes, fortunes, fortunes. Rothschild, when do you make the money, your biggest killing is when the blood is running in the streets. Meaning, when folk are petrified and terrified, that's when you make money. Whatever you need or it's claimed that you need is going to be, it's going to cost thousands of percent more than it ever did before. That's how it is. Anyway, I'm off the topic here.

Be careful out there what you're looking at because as I say, if this is basically going to affect the same groupings that the SARS affected, it's not going to be horrific to most people across the world, obviously.

But what they want to get at the top by not explaining all this… it's the secrecy of those in charge that creates conspiracy, you understand that? There's no reason why they can't tell the public what I'm just saying. So, if they're keeping it back, they want you to be terrified and they have other objectives. The World Health Organization is in its element. It's never had so much power since the last SARS outbreak in Canada, you see. It's the West they want to be petrified and terrified about it. Suddenly they're swaggering around again, we're an authority here, you see, we're an authority. All your organizations truly loved to swagger with authority. Even if they've got nothing to tell you that's helpful. [Alan laughing.]

So if they could really use this to get into the next phase of, again, ID cards, if they want to bring out rationing down the road, get you all used to this new austerity program, they might just use this. I don't know, I really don't know. I really just don't know. But I'll put plenty of links up tonight of your general news organizations saying the very things that were condemned the week before by THE authorities calling it fake news. But it's okay when the big authorized ones say the same things, 'eh?

And talking about fake news, again, a little off topic as well. Not really, it comes in I suppose. Today I was talking to someone again on fake news and I just mention the fact, because I'd read it on the air a few years ago that MIT came out, it was in the newspapers, the general newspapers that an MIT professor, because you see, MIT, certain departments are given basically NSA clearance into a lot of the real-time data transfers of folks chit chat and social media and so on so and they can do real-time studies. And they're constantly putting out stuff there and watching you all chat and copy and complain or give you views in real time. It's all monitored through algorithms and so on. But an MIT department had a professor who told his class to start putting out fake history, and in real-time, with it being spread across the world as folk grabbed it, parroted it off, without checking themselves, or simply adopted it thinking, well these people must know what they're talking about, I'm just little ole me, and they start parroting the lies, you see.

Well, when you've got authorizations from professors at MIT to put out fake news, how dare anybody complain about anybody else putting out their opinions on stuff that they've research themselves. How dare they. They’re training us all to be children. No, we're not children. We're adults and we are allowed opinions. In a supposedly free society. But a free society is the last thing the authoritarian personalities want. I hope you understand that.

But don't panic about things is what I'm saying. Don't panic about things. Understand them but don't panic. The control factor is a very old, they've been used through centuries and centuries with the same techniques by those in authority. It's always the same techniques that are used. But fear is at the top of it. And there's many ways to bring fear about, from basic needs to survival, food, shelter, clothing, heat, etc.

Now, one thing I want to mention here too, is yes, there were people from China who worked in a lab in Canada, Winnipeg, a big Biolab, who certainly were kicked out of their positions in Canada and escorted out of the labs by the RCMP in 2019. This stuff is mainstream media now so I guess you can mention it. But what's interesting too, is the Harvard researcher too that was charged for dealing with the same Biolab that the woman who was working in the Canadian Biolab from China, apparently she was also involved in a Biolab where this thing broke out in China. So, you definitely have, there's plenty of evidence of what's going on for those at the top. Which they won't share with the public.

You're supposed to just be dumb and silly and leave everything to the ones who manage us. That's not, that is not being an adult when you allow that to happen, folks. It really isn't. And how dare they take on the responsibility of thinking for us, hm. How can you possibly believe in democracies, 'eh?

Anyway, this article it says…

U.S. charges three, including Harvard researcher, with lying about China ties

reuters.com / 28 Jan 2020

(Alan: I mentioned it before but I didn't go into any depth with it.)

(Reuters) - A Harvard University department chair and two Chinese nationals who were researchers at Boston University and a Boston hospital were charged on Tuesday with lying about their alleged links to the Chinese government.

(A: Now, this is an odd article, it's an odd story. But it says…)

The charges are part of an aggressive effort by U.S. authorities to block what they say are Chinese attempts to steal American scientific and technological advances.

(A: And China does this, it's true, they're famous for it, all kinds of technology, but including biochemical industry and all the rest of it too.)

“Prosecutors charged Charles Lieber,

(A: Now, Charles Lieber is a big shot in the science world, in the bio science world. Because he's into biology and nanotechnology, it's quite fascinating really. Charles Lieber…)

chair of Harvard University’s Department of Chemistry and Chemical Biology, (A: He was charged with…) with lying about participating in China’s Thousand Talents Plan, which aims to attract research specialists working overseas.

When you really dig into it too, this professor also was working with the Pentagon. You're looking at… You can start to sniff where it's all going, you know what I'm saying? But when I read it, I thought, this guy, his big field is nanotechnology, including incredibly fine threads. Now, you tie that in with the articles just come out a couple of days ago on Elon Musk's brain chips basically, his nanotechnology for the brain, using this incredibly fine nano wires basically. Well, this is what this guy works with, obviously. This was this guy's area.

He also has lots of awards for things, including the kind of, almost the tubular type particles when you delve into it. Which I would think would be connected to that Morgellons’s disease [Alan chuckles.] that broke out quite a few years back. And the folk were called paranoid, nuts and all the rest of it. But the fact is, these things under the microscope show up. Definitely nanoparticles, long tubes, little tubes, literally like threads but nanoparticle sized. Well this is this guy's area of expertise.

Charles M. Lieber - en.wikipedia.org

And then when I saw the one with Elon Musk that talked about…

The terrifying 'Neuralink' machine that Elon Musk will use to turn humans into cyborgs by putting a chip in their BRAIN gets an 'awesome' upgrade, the tech billionaire claims

dailymail.co.uk / 7 Feb 2020

(A: And that's from the Daily Mail online. So, it's not a conspiracy paper, if they say it then, you see. It's only if it's little ole you says it, then it's conspiracy. But there you go, he talks about the…)

...tiny and flexible 'threads' which are ten times thinner than a human hair and can be inserted directly into the brain.

Back to what I was just talking about again, there's this one with a fella who's a scientist and that's his specialty, who also was working with the Chinese. And maybe even passing all the data he was getting from Harvard and all the different research that's going on there and elsewhere, over to the Chinese. Quite amazing. Anyway, he got arrested.

And let's be honest, this went on for yeears with this fella. How can you possibly allow all that for years, without knowing? Who's kidding...? They knew all about it. He's had awards galore from China, and awards from America, all the different... [Alan chuckles.] So this is no... Why now? Why would you bring it up now, 'eh? Interesting. Awfully interesting. At least I find it interesting.

It's only when you see how things tie together and where the future is supposed to go. And d'you realize how many movies they churned out about the zombies. Remember the police, the military exercises a few years ago, they called it the zombie exercise or zombie? Which is really the con name for, oh, folk who get contaminated with a big breakout. You see it in movie after movie. I don't know why but suddenly you turn into a zombie supposedly. You're subhuman. And then your governments and your troops start killing them all. What kind of message is that?

What kind of message is that too young guys who are in the military, who are brought up playing the games that are churned out with these movies, alongside the movies, to see how many zombies you can kill? No one seems to connect these things, but everyone's influenced by them. You're no longer a person now, you see, you're burden on society, you're infected. You're dangerous, you're infected.

The natural human condition in the Western world was always to help people. Right to the end. You do all you could. So why are the movie producers, why have they been painting this other thing, that suddenly when folk get infected they're out to kill you or eat you or whatever it happens to be? Incredible dehumanization. Incredible. That doesn't bode well for where things are meant to go.

I'll put these articles up as I say. I wasn't sure exactly what to talk about tonight again either. But I don't want to go on and on about plague or whatever or disease or what's happening on the planet. But I do like to see what the governments want out of it since they break the rules. You don't bring in people from infected areas to uninfected areas, unless you want it to spread. If it's true that there's no symptoms with many of them until at least two weeks, sometimes longer... Not everyone is the same in clockwork fashion when it comes to biology, folks.

The other thing is too, there's no doubt about it, there's already a massive slow down in trade from China, the manufacturer of the world. The West gave communist China the financing and the business, for years and years the governments of the West have wooed all the students in with special deals, train them to be engineers. I can remember living through it. I thought, why are they bringing thousands of people in from China, train them to be engineers, when they don't have jobs to go back to? And then bingo, they signed the trade deals, off went your factories to China. It's all planned in advance. All planned, folks.

So now they're surprised that, what are they going to do when you can't get this that or the other? when no one's making the same articles anymore, all the factories are over there? That's all planned, folks. What we're taught when we are taught to be naïve, naturally to believe everything is real and your government's really there to look after you, your government should never ever give its main and stable supplies of necessary goods, businesses to make these things, over to another country outside of the country. You have to be able to support yourselves in any kind of crisis time.

Another thing too, even with free trade, with all the food coming in from another country, Britain almost collapsed with World War I, then World War II definitely, because of the submarines sinking shipping and so on. But there wasn't enough farmers left. In fact, there was lots of farms left from World War I where there might have been an old, a grandfather still trying to run it himself. The government took it off them. Because all the young guys had been killed in the first world war. So, the second world war comes along, the government commandeers them all to make sure, to try to get food growing. Because you couldn't get food. Britain imported way too much food. Still does. The US is doing the same thing. Canada does too. Free trade. You must accept the stuff from other countries. Which means your own folk can’t compete. This is all managed this way. Think about it.

Anyway, don't panic as I say. Because unless this has been truly, truly hyped up beyond recognition, a coronavirus, and remember, all colds and flus are types in the same category, and they have different characteristics of course naturally too. That's how they give them, depending on the protein coatings and so on they'll give them a different names, H1 whatever it happens to be. You have to remember that generally viruses are called the great, well, they're robbers. They go in, they take DNA from victims, that you get infected, it leaves some of that DNA behind in you, as it clears itself up it will steal some of yours as well, your DNA. So, it's constantly mutating. And generally, they mutate into a harmless type of virus. So, we'll have to wait and see what happens with this one.

Even though I say that, it's also true that I read the articles years ago from Porton Down in England where they've got a tremendous arsenal of bio weaponry. A reporter from one of the newspapers, maybe the Telegraph, I can't remember off the bat, but I do have the article still. He was allowed in for a day in the biowarfare department, where he said he couldn't believe it, in the morning they were sipping having coffee before work began and they're quick casually talking about ethnic specific viruses and so on, which they already had, and how they could release them and that these would sweep across the nation within two or three weeks, kill X amount of people. They were programmed literally to then stop reproducing themselves, just like clockwork. I mean, that's how advanced the biowarfare departments are.

And these guys rake in the cash because they're psychopaths. Recruited by those who rule you who are also psychopaths. If you met them, you'd probably like them. They'd be smiling and very likable. But they have no conscience as you or I would have conscience. Or fear, they have a complete lack of fear too. Awfully well-paid to find ways to destroy. That's their job.

So anyway, as I say, we'll have to wait and see what happens with this one. And to see what the governments and the world system of government wants out of it. Because they will definitely make hay while the sun shines you might say. But don't panic about things. Don't get hyped up about the fear and terror.

But you should really have a few folk that you know, hopefully, well enough to help each other out if times get tough with embargoes on food or whatever it happens to be. You just don't know, you see. You should have enough to last you over a bad, really bad, even a few weeks would help you out of tough times. It depends, as I say, what the big governmental global system wants out of this over the general public with how they want to rule us all for the next step. 9/11 was one step, and the antiterrorism bill, which is a terrorism bill, terror upon the public where you've got no freedom at all. The next step is into austerity, etc. We’ll wait and see what happens.

But no doubt about it, we're living in a time when the economy is stagnant, it's been stagnant for years. We know that it's a job, you talk about recoveries, it's a jobless recovery, as they fudge numbers and figures, it's all a joke, that's a joke. We know that. There's more and more automation going on too so there's less and less work anyway. But the financial system is awful because the currency literally is so inflated that you need more and more and more to get the same basic foodstuffs, etc. It's out of sight here in Canada.

So yeah, they've also got a plan in mind to make something happen. Because they've got something planned for the next step, sure. We'll have to just wait and see. But don't worry. We're kept in fear, every generation is kept in fear of wars, rumors of wars, financial crisis, etc., plagues, pestilences, all the usual stuff. And you shouldn't live in terror about it either.

The abusers, those who rule you are abusers. Those who use fear to rule are abusers. They know that those who are abused and brought up with the abuse, and encourage this, they encourage the abused to turn to the abuser for help. We're here to help you, hm, but here's the conditions. That's the simple technique of managing the public on behalf of the authoritarian society in which we live.

Last night it was down to about 15 below on the Fahrenheit scale here in Canada. Because of global warming, you see. But at least the nights are getting, the evenings are getting a bit lighter, or light is staying longer before it gets dark. So hopefully there is a new day coming where eventually we'll have longer days with some sunshine, etc., and things won't be so unpleasant, and the gloom and doom of winter time. It's… you have to remember that folk really have to look upon, again it's a positive side, of just getting by day-to-day. That's what it's about, isn't it?

Because we certainly live in a very, very, really, it's a tremendously arrogant and arrogantly abusive system of authoritarians with lots of letters behind their names and fancy titles, etc. etc. etc. So, take care everybody out there of yourselves. Have a little group hopefully that will help each other out in tough times. And you should have a few friends. Hopefully. Hopefully you have a few friends anyway.

Most folk, like Plato said, are lucky to have four or five friends in their lifetime. That's the reality. All this fake friend stuff on chat rooms and that, it's all nonsense. Real friends are hard to even find. So, if you do find them, even regardless of your squabbles or differences and all the rest of it, try to keep in with each other. Because yeah, you do need folk now and then. You certainly do.

Now remember too, you can also help me tick along here by buying the books and discs @cuttingthroughthematrix.com or donating, for using my shows and so on. Or my talks. I hate to call them shows, they're talks. Everybody wants entertainment and show business today, but I give talks, with information that can be verified at least, or you can check it out and find out for yourselves what you want to really think, believe, or even contemplate in life. So, buy the books and discs or donate to me @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Go into the site, you'll find out how to do it. Also make a list of all the sites you see listed on the .com site, all the other official sites in case any of them go down you can always get the talks I do from the other sites as well.

Remember, you can send cash or check. In some countries you can send international postal money orders. You can't send them from the States anymore apparently, or Canada. But you can use PayPal and you can, as I say, send cash or check and you're fine. Or Money Gram too I think that works as well. That will help me tick along because I don't sell anything to make money off, with lots of claims of efficacy and saving your lives or anything else. I just give you information. I think hopefully if you can keep a strong mind you'd be surprised at what you can endure in this world especially under the system I've been talking about tonight.

So for myself, Alan Watt from Ontario Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on February 16, 2020. I sometimes get these reality checks, they just hit me like a slap in the face sometimes. Because I don't live within the general society as such. I live in the country. Not an expensive house, believe you me. Most folk might even say it's a dump even. But the fact is, I'm pretty quiet. I don't have television and I don't watch TV. I have the Internet.

But because I don't have TV, I don't get… And folk don't realize this because most folk do watch television. Most of your programming, almost 100% of your programming and your updates on what to think, what to believe, how we treat people and so on, and even how to dress and how to behave and what to say and the terminology you use now, because they're constantly changing it, all comes from television. Both in fiction and nonfiction. Most of it comes through fiction actually. And most TV is fiction. Even all your reality shows, they're not real. People don't behave normally in real life as they do in reality, or you'd run away from them if they did.

But I can remember back in the 90s I think when they started doing the first kind of reality shows, which were like contests. Back in the 90s for a little while I did have TV, rabbit ears of course. I saw the shows where they'd get people in to do all crazy kind of things and make spectacles of themselves. They'd eat worms and all that nonsense or lie in coffins or whatever, all that ridiculous stuff. I knew it was really a program designed to take off and to expand into a preordained direction basically. That's how everything's done, you see, it's step-by-step and incremental. But big plans are laid down long in advance, years in advance of where they take you. I had no idea just how far the present-day reality shows have gone.

So, in this surrealistic world, and it really is a surrealistic world if you're living in electronic reality, if you think you're in reality. Because most folk are, they've either got the phones to their skull all the time or they're watching something from television or so on. They can chat with each other about all the things that they're watching on television. Because these things are designed to get as many viewers as possible by using psychologists and behaviorists to get the people to watch and get addicted to it. And of course, sex is the big pull, naturally.

So, in the middle of all this happening and the crisis across the world, as folk get this coronavirus and how it's played up to the hilt… Initially it was played down unless you are one of the general newspapers that are part of the big club. And of course, anyone who wasn't part of the big club was getting hammered for just mentioning facts, and even their observations in fact. But now the big papers of course themselves are saying all the scary stuff, and it's okay for them to say it. I noticed too they even had a little okay through different sites and so on or articles or even YouTube's, things like, okayed by the WHO, or a line through it, meaning it's taboo. This is how far things have gone.

You see, with general terrorism in Britain, and all countries are part of this big system of terrorist control, and terrorism control also [Alan chuckles.] comes into crisis control for those who don't get it. Like the COBRA system in Britain for instance, and what they'll… They have a whole panel of so-called experts to decide what the public will be told or won't be told, because they want you to behave in a certain way. Well, it's the same thing when it comes to pandemics, etc.

Just like the movies of course, they've given you so many pandemic type movies, getting used to this idea, for the last 25 to 30 years. A whole stack in the last 10 years in fact. Right down to the welding of the doors on high-rises, at the bottoms of the big main doors so that they can't get out. Which they're actually doing in China now apparently. So, you're living in this amazing, again, electronic reality, as I say, that most folk are into.

So, I looked up the newspapers today just to get an update on the coronavirus and see what's happening, and some of the papers said nothing at all. Other ones had little one-liners that were old, a few days old. I looked at the Daily Mail, and as I say, I'm so far out of it I'm like a person looking from the outside to the in, I'm looking into this goldfish bowl of the world. The first, at the very top of the Daily Mail, and a lot of other papers too I found out, was the death of a woman who hosted a TV show, reality TV show and how she'd apparently been charged, or was going to be charged, who cares about the gossip… The fact is she'd hit her boyfriend with a lamp supposedly and she lost her job or something or was laid off temporarily. But anyway, I guess the inference was that maybe she died, anyway, for some reason or another she died.

But this is someone on TV, a TV show that's a kind of a dating thing. Which was all about sex, naturally. They had the pictures there of her and the different even contestants and so on who all look like, to me, to me, who doesn't watch TV, like cartoon characters. Really. Even the guys look like they had their faces, I don't know, can you manicure faces? I wonder, I just don't know anymore. But the hair was up in these big tufts on the top, just like you used to see in the cartoons from the 1950s and 60s. I'm not kidding, that's how they used to look. And that's how the people look today. Who's designing all the stuff for them to copy? Because it is copied. Nothing comes from the grassroots in style and fashion or anything else.

Anyway, that was the top story. And I thought, wait a minute here. There's folk on cruise ships who are dying, and they can get off, all that kind of stuff going on. There's massive crisis in China going on. There's so many amazing things to talk about, but the main story is this woman who was the host, who died on a reality TV show? This is the reality. And it said that millions of folks tuned in every time the show was on.

Now, I'm sure most folk out there, maybe, will probably know what I'm talking about because they all have TVs. But d'you realize how fake our reality is? If you believe in all that stuff, how fake it is? It's incredibly fake as opposed to our everyday lives. Reality today is made up of fiction for most people. More so than at any time in history. And not just fiction but programmable, as a programmable fiction that you're given, predictive programming as I've said so many times where you're getting ready for the next stage of whatever it happens to be. Right down to even the pandemics to come and how you behave, etc.

But the COBRA system deals supposedly with terrorism and what you'll be told and how to manage society, including panic in society, you know, or how to prevent panic. The idea as I say with pandemics, that the big teams that manage pandemics is, keep the public ignorant, just like the movies by the way, and tell them as little as possible. Just say, there-there, and treat them like children, and don't even tell them any hard, truthful facts. That's really how it is.

Government, they see themselves as being the kind of a placebo, or the tranquilizer you might even say, for the general public. That's what they are in this kind of situation. And folk don't realize it, how really thin this veneer of civilization is. It does take a form of coordination of different segments of society and different aspects of society, and emotions and so on, and the various dynamics, and psychodynamics too, all going on within societies to keep it kind of functioning without it breaking down or folk going crazy and destroying each other, you know.

And it's fine, you can get along, I said this years ago, everyone can get along, including all the different massive segments of societies within cities. They're all broken up; I don't care what anybody says. I've been to cities; I know there's different quadrants and so on. Everyone can get along as long as money is flowing, and they can get basic foodstuffs and money left over to spend for entertainment and so on. Everyone can get along in society as long as that exists. But when it starts to break down, which eventually it might, I'm not saying it will, we don't know how bad this whole pandemic is going to be.

We hear all the scary stories from the top now, as I say, from the top, and from all the supposed country or national experts now in Britain and elsewhere. But you'll see society changing if what they say, if what they say comes to pass. We don't know yet. There's still this almost deniability amongst the public. Mainly those who are still in-the-know who watch this kind of stuff going on, I've heard them cry wolf so many times from the WHO. And we know they want big world exercises. And this is also an exercise in so many departments of governance as they call it, to take care of everything and trying to keep it all together as we go through it. So, time will tell what's true and what's fictional and so on and how bad things really are going to be.

But as I say, the top, supposedly the top specialists in Britain, or one of them, has come out and said that this could, this could really, they're not going to stop it. In fact, what I've seen even in the last couple of days is all the signs that they're not even going to try to stop it. That they've made decisions at the top obviously. Where, they're even letting a lot of planes come back in from not so much China perhaps, or parts of China yeah, but also countries around China where many Chinese live and they go back and forth to China all the time, and I mean by the week. [Alan chuckles.]

So it looks to me as though they’ve come to a conclusion at the top that they can’t really even slow it down much, or they’re not going to slow it down much, it’s too big for them. We’ll have to wait and see. There’s a whole bunch of planes grounded at Heathrow airport supposedly because some people got sick. We’ve had the confusing, all these amazing confusing disclosures to the public, all conflicting stories, about even the type of disease it is, this coronavirus. In other words, what's it really like.

Initially of course you're being told to be calm, don't worry and all that, it's just like a cold or flu, you know, and you get over it. Mind you, some people might only get a runny nose, they said. Meanwhile when you look into China, what they're doing there, and they're going up and down the streets with these massive trucks spraying goodness knows into the air, and at a good height too, and through offices and all the rest of it. This isn't just a little runny nose thing.

So, don't you get fed up getting treated like a child? Hm? And you’re told just to wash your hands. Well, if you go out in public to do whatever you have to do even to get food or whatever, where do you see places to wash your hands? Look, everything you do, you have to open doors and all the rest of it and close them. Everybody else does the same stuff. Shopping carts, same thing hey. Do you see any bowls of water out there or disinfectant? No. Nope. And if you cough, cough up your sleeve they say. This is the best they tell us to do in the 21st century? Hm?

Think about it. We are being treated like children, and not very bright children either. So, it's not a good scenario when… What makes it more scary I think for most people, who have seen all these movies, they've been churning these movies out about pandemics and virus and plagues and so on for years showing you what they do, including the quarantine methods. Including the welding of the doors in the high-rises, which they're now doing in China. You've all been trained what to expect in a sense, you see.

Of course, what you've been told and trained to do to is to obey authorities in such situations. Because in the movies is not good for those who disobey the authorities in such situations. So, government really... And plus too, I think on top of all of this you've had so many people over the years from big institutions, even in real open dialogues on television and so on with the so-called experts, there's too many people on the planet, there's just too many people.

I remember the one from Australia a few years ago, and again they make them stars, these professors. The star making machinery tells you, this is a special professor, he is more important than other professors, and they are going to be the voice box basically for pushing the agenda for depopulation. He even said, you know, it'd really be a decent thing if the people around retirement age would just, you know, die and leave the jobs for younger people. You see. And we hear this stuff and we say, oh come on, what on earth is this?

But these are the people who belong to big think tanks and institutions that have world meetings on… These are the characters too that end up going to different dialoguing conferences within the World Economic Forum, this big, again, massive institution that you don't vote for, where all the richest folk go to decide how you're going to live in the future, according to the way they want you to live, or exist. So that doesn't help it either, does it, when so many have been chomping at the bit for a long time, or the Georgia Guidestones and you know, if the world was just reduced to so many million people, from the billions to the millions, then, it would be a better place they say. It doesn't help, does it. It really doesn't help.

I'm sure many folk are so puzzled, many, many are puzzled, especially professionals who are not in the higher echelon of understanding what's going on, because you're not allowed into it. There's different tiers of knowledge and tiers of confidence you might say. But there's many professionals as I say who just can't fathom, if something so awful has been unleashed on the public inadvertently or whatever, it doesn't make any difference how it got there, they say, at this time concentrate on the problem, not the cause or who's to blame. But the fact is, even the basic national quarantine laws are being tossed out the window.

If you want to save the nation you don't bring people who are possibly infected, and you don't know yet, you see, you don't know yet, into countries straight from the most infected area, and give them little notes to sign, you promise to go home and quarantine yourself. Oh sure, yeah, and away they go. Or not even being quarantined at all. Into a population that is completely clean from it or free from it. You don't let them in. You don't do that kind of thing. That's not quarantine. That's not even common sense.

Especially when they keep telling you, and they kept telling you at the time, we don't understand this virus, it's new, a new type. They didn't even know what the period inside you, the prodromal period would be from getting infected to showing the symptoms. Because it's very… You understand, it's not mathematics here. There are so many different human variations within human type that some folk might show symptoms in a few days, other folk might take weeks. That's standard, you see. So, trying to put it down to mathematical, like, you're all robots, exactly the same, cloned, it doesn't work.

They came out with statements initially as you all know, oh it could take up to two weeks, you see. They even had I think quarantine initially for eight days or something like that. And now they found out it might take much longer, even 20 days or longer before you show signs. So, to add to it all we have this incredible, I don't know, again, it's really panaceas for the public, we're testing them with kits. The other day of course it was announced there that after all this time, the kits are only correct half the time. Well, so is the law of averages if you toss a coin.

When you dig into the reasons for it being only accurate half of the time, it's because, what they're claiming now, because rather than take the responsibility that they're no use, these particular kits, is, well you see the staff today, today, the modern staff in medicine, can't really follow the instructions for it. Because it's not just a matter of a simple thing, you've got two or three things to add to it and stir together, just like a normal laboratory, you see. They're trying to say that the staff today don't have the brains to work it out. Well that inspires confidence, doesn't it?

So, as I say, I'm not telling people to panic. I'm just saying, use your common sense. Because you're going to have to use your common sense here. You really are. AS I say, it looks to me that with what's happening today with today's news and so on, they are really just allowing it to happen. It would seem to be. Really.

There's one place in Britain where they brought possible infected people, they didn't know yet, you see, they had to wait and see. But they brought them in and they put them up in a hotel I believe, it was a hotel, kind of quarantine type hotel that's self quarantine. They signed forms or little, the government says, we'll make them sign a form promising not to leave there for 14 days. Well, they went back a few days later and they're all gone. The staff in the hotel said, well, there was no one left to guard them. Does that really look like something that's terrified the government when they don't even put guards there and so on? Do you really think so? Something stinks somewhere. A lot of things stink actually.

So, I'm not surprised at the rumor mill. The rumor mill must be buzzing like crazy with such apparent, apparent incompetence, or negligence. And you can take your pick as to what you want to believe. It doesn't make any sense at all. Then again, other people as I say have been passed as cleared and all that and they develop the symptoms later. So we've got so many variables here that really are not, when you don't understand something, and if something might even take a month before it shows in some people, then you'd have to hold all the people for at least a month. You understand that? That would be common sense.

If you keep bringing people in, every day, from flights all over around the far eastern area, and quarantining people, you'd have to have so many… For each plane lode you have to have a separate quarantine quarters for them. Because they can't mix with the ones who came in two or three days before. Because they are in a different timeline for release than you are then, you see. In other words, the recent people, if one person was infected, then all the rest of them who are ready to leave will get infected too, if they go to the same place. So, I don't really think they're going to try to go the whole way with this and quarantine anything properly.

They seem pretty resigned with their statement as I say today and yesterday that this is going to go around the world, y'know, and right into maybe next year, and the year after in fact. So, we'll wait and see what happens. We don't even know what the bulk of the populace who's infected the worst with it happens to be. Because years ago, I gave talks on the release documentation from Porton Downs in Britain where they had literally admitted to it, and a few other countries admitted to having the same stuff. Every country's probably involved in it. They have ethnic specific viruses, which they work on. [Alan chuckles.] Which makes us feel much safer, doesn't it?

The whole point with quiet wars, like that old Silent Weapons for Quiet Wars, is to try and confuse anybody from pointing the finger to who you might suspect who might have let it out. But then, you might get led to believe by the perpetrators to where their fingers are pointing, and it could be a set up too. That's the whole point of quiet weaponry, Silent Weapons for Quiet Wars.

This is the world we live in. As I say, the world we live in is not a happy place. It's happy through all the masses of fiction we're dosed with in the Disneyesque stuff and so on and the fantasy. But in reality, the world really is, it can be a horror show at times like this. If you haven't seen world wars then you won't know what a horror show is. The history of the world when it comes to dominance, run by dominant psychopaths for different nations, is truly a horror show.

There's big agendas at work right now, folks. We've all heard about and read about, it's not hearing about it's actually reading about, the sterilization processes that certain big organizations, which I won't mention right now - because they got, [Alan chuckles.] they do have the ability to ban you now off social media - sterilization, put it that way, through different means, or even throughout their different phthalates, etc. that are out there in plastics and xenoestrogens and phytoestrogens, etc. etc. And people are top-heavy with the stuff now from so many different sources that it's definitely affecting the sperm count in males. We know that. Women too are being heavily affected by it as well. So, there's many things in the make right now to do with bringing down populations across the world. The ones at the top in the big groups at the top are incredibly vocal about the necessity for doing so. So, do you really blame the people when this kind of thing breaks out and they're questioning whether this is deliberate or not. Can you really blame them? Come on here. Come on.

I can remember years ago giving a talk on a radio station on someone I knew in Canada who worked with educational authorities, who managed to get away many times to go over and work for the United Nations and other countries. But mainly to do with bringing down the population in places in the Far East. And I casually, she was casually telling me about it. I says, well listen, I says, who gave you the authority to get involved in bringing down the populations of other people? or anybody for that matter? And she literally looked at me as though, and this is what happens if you're not in the club, it's like they suddenly realize that you're not one of them [Alan chuckles.] and she says, well somebody has to do it, she says. Well, these are the same people, there's lots of them out there working for the big authorities, and that's how they talk about what they believe they have to do. We won't do it ourselves, you know, so somebody has to do it.

This is the real world, you know. Outside the reality shows this is the real things that actually go on. And most folk are oblivious to it, to the day they no longer walk the planet. But that's the world in which we are living. And we're managed like children. All the time.

Now, I'm going to touch on some of the topics here. One of the talks I gave maybe last year and many times before probably in different years, is the agenda, where they mention at the top that if you feed the people well and you give them lots of good proteins and so on, and this is all standard stuff at the top in university level that they teach them. That's what made people more resistant to bacteria and various diseases that were commonplace in the 1700s and 1800s, was basically bad hygiene, poor diet. Most, well, a lot of folk, the big working-class population didn't have access to good protein, good meat and so on. And of course they didn't have good sewage systems and hygiene, etc., and hot running water and that kind of thing. Which all lead to disease just proliferating big time.

People who caught diseases, many of the diseases as I say that are almost eradicated today because of the difference now in hygiene, etc., back then the slightest disease could bring you down and kill you. In children especially, high death rate amongst children. So, this has all been well understood. So, what makes a people healthy, and even basically healthy enough to have children and so on? Well, they have it all listed out, what you need. You need heat for your home, you know. So, what do you do? You reduce the heat consumption. If you want to bring it down, that is, right. Because if you have good heat in the wintertime in cold climates, then your health will be much, much better. Obviously. If you have meat and protein and a varied diet, a good varied diet and all the things that you need you'll be physically healthier and you're able to withstand even simple colds or even the common flu or whatever.

But if you start taking down the heat and start taking away all the good food and so on, this is stuff that was published by authorities, including under the ecosystem and all these different systems out there, that are from the top down, don't think they're just grassroots at all. The ones who even protest, they think they belong to the grassroots. They're all being used for agendas. Because here's an article here, you know, and I mentioned this would happen eventually…

Health-motivated taxes on red and processed meat: A modelling study on optimal tax levels and associated health impacts journals.plos.org / 6 Nov 2018

The consumption of red and processed meat has been associated with increased mortality from chronic diseases,

(Alan: So, you see, it's the opposite of what actually happens, right.)

and as a result, it has been classified by the World Health Organization as carcinogenic (processed meat) and probably…

(A: Now, that's not scientific, there's no ‘probabilities’ in science, folks. It either is or isn't, you see, in science. So ‘probably’ is used for other reasons. It says...)

…probably carcinogenic (red meat) to humans. One policy response is to regulate red and processed meat consumption similar to other carcinogens and foods of public health concerns. Here we describe a market-based approach of taxing red and processed meat according to its health impacts.

So, this is the agenda, folks. This is the agenda. And it's been pushed, again, everything comes from the top, for those who can't figure it out. Forget what you see in the streets, students and so on, with their high paid leaders of course who are well in, and they're all paid through big… They even have pension plans for them, for the leaders of these NGOs, you know, who are in on the big plan. The followers are never, you know.

As I say, if you want to bring down the population, what do you do? Well, make them prone to disease by taking away the things they need to survive. Decrease their heat, that's energy, you see. So, you've got to constantly and mandate a frequent increase in expense, the expense of energy, just to keep yourself warm or cook or whatever it happens to be.

And this is not conspiracy stuff. This is fact. I read the articles as I say, it's on my website, of the talks I've given in the past from the organizations at the very top that are pushing all these agendas. Well, good for you if you want to go along with it to save the world, you starve yourself, you make yourself frail and prone to disease, etc. The big boys at the top, and gals, will get what they want, which is a vastly reduced population. Obviously. Because we know why folk today are healthier than they were in the past. We know that.

When I was growing up in fact a lot of guys, men at the time who did the hard laboring jobs when you actually had industry and mining, died around, just before or right after pension age, you see. That was very common. We've even had as I say the professors, the one from Australia, stand up and really ask people to start committing suicide, you know, you should really do the right thing and allow the jobs to be left for younger people, you know, you're consuming resources on the planet.

Well, if you start to go along with these people, these persuasive psychopaths that are put out there as some kind of specialists that you should follow, you'd better understand, that's what they are, they are literally very highly paid psychopaths who are very good at persuading people to do what they want. That's how they… Most psychopaths don't do any work, real work at all. Even if they’re CEOs, they get everyone else to do the work for them, even on the way up the ladder. That's what they do. They're highly manipulative.

And people will do it with glee and almost feel an honor to serve them. That's how they are, that's how they affect people. Awfully well in fact in that department. And people will do everything for them, oh no problem, I'll do that for you, you know. And there you go. They're such likable characters. They really are. A lot of the horror movies used to give these kind of characters as forms of Satan, the great evil incarnate. And they're not far wrong in reality.

But anyway, as I say, I'll put this article up here about, as they're pushing the same agenda for sustainability. They don't want cattle, remember and then they don't want pigs. They don't want anything at all that gives you protein. They might give you chickens for a while until they wipe them out with some new bird flu, and then down it goes, 'eh. Step by step by step.

If you start to wonder if something doesn't smell right here, well good, you've got a good sense of smell! Don't let anybody call you a conspiracy theorist for just saying I wonder if… When you stop wondering ifs, then you done for I'm afraid. You're into Disneyland.

So, another one here too is...

Sustainability – Drivers And Implications For Agribusiness

fitchsolutions.com / 23 May 2019

While policy-makers have not targeted the agribusiness sector as much as other sectors due to less public pressure, we believe sustainability regulations will become tighter for agribusiness in the coming years.

It goes on and on and on with the agenda. These are articles that are mainstream articles on sustainability and so on. There's lots of them out there. Big, big foundations are all paid by even bigger foundations to push the global agenda, for those who don't quite catch on.

So, they're going to cut down on the greenhouse gases. Now, most greenhouse gases out there is actually comprised of water vapor, for those who don't know it. CO2 is a trace, a TRACE gas, trace gas. Which is invisible, completely invisible. Carbon dioxide, you breathe out. You are carbon-based life forms, if you want to cut it back, you understand you’re cutting back YOURselves ultimately. I hope you understand that. Anything that lives in this planet is carbon based.

So, we're living in an amazing, amazing science fiction movie combined with madness. Because if you believe it all and can put it all together and still believe it, and go along with what they're pushing, you'd have to be mad. You understand that? I hope you understand that, you'd have to be mad.

HG Wells, I've mentioned him so many times because he was a big promoter for the global elite of his day. In the late 1800s HG Wells first went into, was picked actually, to be a good propagandist for the agenda and eventually for the Fabian Society which he helped cofound. He was a big proponent of free love they called it in the late 1800s. No responsibilities, free love, yeah, yeah. The same agendas as Karl Marx. It's that astonishing, eh? But he worked for the global elite. And I think so did Marx, personally. But that's the agenda, you see.

Then he became a propagandist, and he says, well you know, we give help to the poor unfortunates... And London was full of poor unfortunates, and across England too at that time and Scotland in the working-class areas. Because in the early days there was no welfare system if you got sick or ill or anything. In fact, the wives had to go down the mines with the children to take the place of the miners. I'm talking about up into the start of the 20th century for those who don't know this. While the man was sick, they'd have to go down and do it. Because if they didn't and no one stood in his place, he lost his job, if he was lucky enough to recover. That's reality.

HG Wells really said, well what happens with these poor unfortunates? He says, we feed them and we give them healthy food and warmth and so on and clothe them properly and give them good hygienic conditions. What do they do? He says, they breed. They… They... You understand, he saw them as a separate species. Well, that's how the elite see you today, folks. They are in-the-know in the understanding of the poor unfortunates of the general population who will never figure this out. But the poor unfortunates of today would actually be called middle-class by last century, even the previous centuries' levels of understanding.

But you see, if you're not in-the-know with the ones at the top, you see, then you're a nobody. Power is an incredibly addictive thing to the psychopaths. They crave it. They crave it and if they can't get a start of it, they'll make the start by creating an organization, climbing up it until they're dominating you. And that's what's happened of course. But you're supposed to just be the general public, watch your TV, dress the way they tell you to dress, wear drainpipe pants, you see, have hair that's just a little tuft on top of your head if you're a guy, like a round circle, and watch television and watch reality stuff and be content. There ya go. Don't think too much. Because then you might be a problem. You might start demanding things like answers. [Alan laughing.] And that's taboo.

So anyway, I'll put that last article up. It's just astonishing how it's all out there for you if you want to look at it. I want to mention too that New South Wales in Australia, there's a big battle going on between right now of the ones who want to squash different facts that have emerged. Because there's big agendas behind all of this too. You've got government stepping in and taking the land back for big corporations, and big corporations are getting it for peanuts or even free in fact from the burned-out areas where the homes stood in some places.

Bushfire Aftermath: The Australian Land Grab him- tottnews.com

There's big mining, big, big mining projects for corporations scheduled there for the elements they need for the new battery systems for the cars and so on. It's just astonishing how it all comes together, isn't it?

Eco-terrorists may have lit fires: Senator

9news.com.au / 12 Feb 2020

(A: This is a senator, right.)

"If not, why not?"

"Given the loss of life, the extensive loss of property and the economic impact, was ecoterrorism an agenda item at any of the recent meetings of the national security committee of cabinet?" She told parliament. (A: And this is a senator.)

NSW (A: New South Wales.) Rural Fire Service chief Shane Fitzsimmons last month said the bushfire season had been dominated by natural causes, mainly lightning.

(A: Right.)

Queensland police say only about 10 per cent of fires were deliberately or recklessly lit through human involvement between September and January 8.

(A: However...)

But Senator Fierravanti-Wells pointed to the National Centre for Research in Bushfire and Arson satellite analysis of 113,000 fires from 1997 to 2009, saying 40 per cent were deliberately lit.

(A: They got the facts for this, you see.)

She said there was no recorded lightning strikes on most of the days bushfires started across NSW and Queensland in September, suggesting a level of coordination.

"Those alleged arsonists already arrested need to be thoroughly investigated by law enforcement.

Who are they? What was their motive and intent?" She said.

"Are they lone actors or part of a sinister collective conducting ecoterrorism?

"Was there a level of coordination? Were any organisations with a history of law-breaking involved in order to further their respective narratives?"

The former international development minister said the media build-up of an impending hot, dry summer set the scene for people with criminal intent to act.

(A: Well, they also have got, she's talking about the big ego organizations out there too that are, you've got them everywhere, about saving the world. I wouldn't put it past them to destroy parts of it to try make it all real, you see. This is what's happening as well.)

It's a good article. Anyway, I'll put the whole thing up for you if you want to read it. And you must always look at all sides of everything. And realize that there are sides to things. That it's not just lightnings or whatever. They have the statistics about the lightning strikes as versus the fact that there weren't lightning strikes in these places. But they’re definitely deliberately started, so many of them. It's not hard to get people at the top too to go along with it, and all the police or whatever it happens to be because they belong to certain organizations. And believe you me again, big money changes hands. We live in an awfully corrupt system, folks. It's incredibly corrupt, really. And the ones at the top live so high on the hog it's just astonishing.

I'm living in the past. I tell you, the older you get, you find you live in the past where maybe $100 actually meant 100 hundred dollars. Even though by today's value maybe the hundred dollars from the 1980s, you would need maybe $300, maybe more, to buy the same amount of things you'd get back then. But you still live in the past. So when you see people like Justin Trudeau spending like 50 bucks for his special doughnuts, you know, things like that, you can't, the average person can't imagine it for 12 doughnuts, for the special doughnuts, you know. Or spending close to, what was it, almost, well, almost $400,000 on just the food and drinks for five flights that he was on, not for the flights themselves, just for the food and drink, things like that.

We can't imagine that, folks. If you're living in the past, and I am generally, because I don't spend much at all, I don't make much to spend. Well, when you see what they do at the top, hundreds and hundreds of dollars means nothing to them. They probably spend about $1000 at a time the way that I would think about $100 in a sense, you know. At the top. I'm talking about the spoiled generation that he comes from. But that's the way it is. That's another story.

Then you get this one too. Again, it's very much like, as I said years and years ago, it's like they've copied the book of Revelation, because all the plan is in there, isn't it, for terrifying. Wars, threats of war and rumors of wars. There's always that going on, for sure. Earthquakes. We've had that, even under the sea and so on. And nevermind the social disruption with children don't obey parents, if they even have parents. And once you are parents, you've got woman against man, man against woman and so on. Everybody's fighting everybody else, you see. And you get plagues and pestilences. Now you have…

Chinese scientists successfully mix human and pig genes to create a new lab-grown skin that could be used to give burn victims transplants - dailymail.co.uk / 29 Jan 2020

You really have to get… This is a science fiction, only it's the truth, it's a reality. This is, you're living the reality show, the real reality show. I said many years ago when 9/11 happened, because that was the first big, that was the first chapter. You'd open the next chapter of the book, I knew that too, a whole bunch of agendas had to be fulfilled, not just the wars across the Middle East, across the world. But also, the social wars which have, they've really, it's been a roller coaster as they change it all, all what used to be norms into various other things too at the same time. Big time. And mandated it in such a way that is, no one would have believed you 50 years ago, or even 40 years ago, would not have believed it. And here we are. We’re living through it all today. Just astonishing, 'eh?

And also, again, with the fires and that, the big push for the whole agenda for the 21st century, agenda 21, with its 2030 and all the rest of it as they go along. They must get us all living inside these big big cities, within the next few years, really. Well, how do you do it? Will you burn them off, obviously, is a good way to do it. This article here…

Australia - Smart Cities Plan infrastructure.gov.au

(A: Get them into the cities. Say it's safe in the cities. And then again you see, with this coronavirus, they'll come out eventually and say we just can go to all these rural areas and check people, it's just not safe. Therefore if they all lived in the cities it'd be much, much better, wouldn't it, etc. etc. Monotonously, hey. [Alan chuckles.]   But yeah...)

The smart city involvement in Australia is entering a more actionable phase with increasing number of local government and private bodies now actively engaged in pilot projects.

Well, were you asked about any of this? Were you given any votes on it? No. No. Nope. Anything that matters, you are never asked about, folks. Never. Look at the massive entertainment to keep you from being involved and knowing what's going on, that might prompt you to be involved. Well, that's part of the reasons you get so much entertainment. And then…

5G an opportunity to turbocharge Australia's smart cities - news.com.au

Really? I've never met a city yet that's very smart. Not really. Not for me personally, you know. A lot of folk like living in the cities, not me. I don't. I don't like it at all. It's too neurotic. Too fake. It's not a natural way for folk to live actually.

The whole system in the city is unnatural. They said that back in Plato's days, the easiest systems to collapse were the artificial systems. Well, in cities they don't make anything, they don't grow anything, they import everything to keep them alive. It's all based on money and investments and so on, and around circles as the money goes around. Most of the money for those in the cities goes in trying to pay your rent or if they're even higher up the scale, a mortgage on something. It becomes a trap for people. Nothing smart about that. But for those who want to control, they love you to be living where they can have you all controlled very easily. Look what's happening in Wuhan and other, many, many other cities in China today where they're literally quarantinig entire cities now. There's power over them, 'eh?

A good article on euthanasia… Again, getting back to Agenda 21, and again, in the year 2001 with 9/11, with the unfolding of the agenda. I said, you have to hang on to your sanity, it would be the hardest thing to hold onto is your sanity. I knew you'd go through this incredible roller coaster of change, and it was all mandated and published years and years beforehand, going way back to maybe the 1920s, where they were going to take the whole world.

They use a war to make it happen. You've got no privacy. People have now accepted the fact they have no privacy. People fought for centuries to get privacy and rights away from the government and the crown. And they gave it all away so quickly and easily, for peace and safety. That was the agenda at the time. The second part of the agenda, with all the things that have happened already, is of course for survivability and sustainability, is the next part too.

Well, you know, people don't have to live that long. And they cost money, you know. So, euthanasia was introduced. In Canada they offer it in the hospitals. I won't even go into all the talks I've given before about it where they even have people who are not dying, and young too, who had illnesses, but they were not dying. And they were certainly sentient enough and cognizant enough as to what was going on. But that's all they were offered. It's tragic what's happening. It all started in Holland of course, the big test bed of it. There's an article here…

Justice denied to protect euthanasia law - noeuthanasia.org.au / 5 Feb 2020

It tells you how some doctors were actually charged initially but the judge overturned the charges, even though there was negligence in it, what they actually did. In order to protect the euthanasia laws, they wouldn't let it go through. They let the doctors go. The euthanasia agenda was more important than having laws being broken. That's the world you live in. Big agendas from the top.

Again, Australia after all the fires, suddenly gets all this massive rain, 'eh, in certain areas. New South Wales for instance. It says…

Bill Gates warns of 10 million deaths as virus spreads to Africa - telegraph.co.uk / 15 Feb 2020

He just doesn't stop, this guy, does he? And you think he’s got something to do with computers and so on. These are front people with big agendas, who are made into superstars as though somehow they have more... They call themselves the trans-humanist by the way. That's what they are in that they are the big, big front people with millions and billions of dollars behind them, by big organizations, that are not necessarily the ones that you think they are, to promote them as some sort of leaders, they are the beneficent dictators in a sense. Or beneficent rulers, really, that's what it is. Rulers. The old, old Fisher King idea, you see.

And so, you think they're somehow geniuses and you should allow them to rule your lives. Well, you don't vote for them. You either have democracy or you don't, folks. How come everybody who suddenly hits X amount of billions of dollars, is supposedly in their bank account or their organization, suddenly is on board with the same world agenda, sustainability depopulation, eradication of farmlands and livestock, etc? How come they all suddenly just happen to, bingo, I guess it must be a natural law of nature, right, bingo and you suddenly become one of them. Then you're on all the TV stations across the world. All the media will give you great writeups and how you’re there to guide the world into a better way of being, I have seen the light. And no one questions it. That's how slickly it's all done, 'eh.

And then you get...

(A: These were dried birds they had, dried birds, little birds. Supposedly for cat food. Well, there's no shortage of cat food in the Western world, folks, you know.)

A bag of dead birds was discovered by US Customs and Border Patrol in the luggage of a passenger who traveled from China to a Washington, DC-area airport, authorities said.

You can see why conspiracy theorists will jump into it and say this is part of a… Because at the same time this is happening, and you've got the coronavirus outbreak, this particular one, this

Covid 19 one, you've also got two new flu viruses, another two separate flu strains broken out in China at the same time. And they’re related to the bird flu. So here you have a guy bringing in birds, dead birds, ‘eh, supposedly to feed the cats. You can see why conspiracy would jump into that one quite easily. It's not… I wouldn't blame anybody for jumping on that one. It makes you wonder why authorities aren't jumping on that possible side of it, or maybe they are. Hm. Because there's a lot of angst amongst nations right now as to who caused the problems in the first place. Maybe they're all to blame, and that's probably true.

Seventy-eight Britons face being LEFT BEHIND on coronavirus quarantine cruise ship as the US prepares to air-lift ALL its 428 citizens back to America - as global death toll soars past 1,600 - dailymail.co.uk / 15 Feb 2020

Well, either they're all clear… How can you be sure they're all clear, if they've all been living together? They'd have to put up amazing… You can't… You understand the levels of quarantine, if you've got daily flights and from the Far East, all different countries, you couldn't cope with that. So, I don't think that they intend to cope with it. I really don't. I really, really don't.

Coronavirus: Fears 400,000 Brits (A: British people.) could die from bug as pregnant GP says 'I'm scared'

mirror.co.uk / 14 Feb 2020

(A: Right, this is the headline. Right. In a big paper in Britain. If YOU said that, like I'd just said it exactly, I could be in that case, a conspiracy theorists. But THEY can say it and it's okay. It says…)

NHS workers have laid bare their fears about coronavirus as they warn the country is not prepared to handle a major outbreak, according to a shock new survey.

One pregnant GP has admitted she is "scared" as scientists warn 400,000 people could die in the UK alone.

A study carried out by Channel 4 News (A: I think that's the BBC, but it's Channel 4 anyway. It may be BBC or not, I don't know.) shows as a staggering 96% of NHS workers don't think the health service is ready to deal with a major outbreak.

Of course they're not ready. If you're going to keep bringing people in, without proper, the ability to quarantine them, with supposedly faulty test kits, to say the least, and this ridiculous thing of pointing a little thermal detector near your head, you've got better chances of reading tea leaves in a cup if a person's got it or not. I'm not kidding you. Or toss a coin. Many of the people don't show any symptoms until it suddenly hits them, suddenly, bomff. And as I say, the period is so varied too. So, I'll put this article up as well. And then we've got…

The World Health Organization has not changed its 14-day quarantine recommendation while it aims to fast-track drug treatments.

This is a big paper too. It's not little conspiracy theory. It's Fox News service. It could be as long as 24 days. Well, no one's hammering them. And of course, they are now calling it Covid 19.

Eight planes put on lockdown at Heathrow over coronavirus fears

metro.co.uk / 14 Feb 2020

(A: And this one here, they actually had people with temperatures, some of them.)

Eight planes at Heathrow Airport were grounded this morning after passengers complained of coronavirus symptoms. Passengers on a United Airlines flight from San Francisco were told to stay put after landing because someone on board may have caught the deadly flu-like disease.

Etc. etc., there's so many of them. For those that want to know. Most folk will ignore this because it is scary stuff. You can go back to your Dancing with the Stars or whatever it is you're, or whatever it is they're doing with these dating things for reality shows. I think it's a bit further than just dancing. But anyway, that's what we get fed during this kind of thing. And most folk can't handle this of course. I mean, really who can handle this?

If this agenda is meant to bring more folk in and accept this is going to spread, they've already written off a whole stack of the population over 55. That will have been heavily discussed with the big panels at the top. They are discussing these things all the time, who’s valuable, who isn't, etc. etc., you know. Plus…

London Underground (A: ...and think about it too...) could be a hotbed for coronavirus, doctors say - news.sky.com / 13 Feb 2020

Any underground in any city with the tube system today. You know how far…? They've done all the testing, remember they used to test the... [Alan chuckles.]   what was for the bacterial warfare for terrorists because they did that. They'd drop different substances, and they find out if it travels, while in a subway, you know that woosh of air, that can travel hundreds of miles very quickly underground. Woooosh. Does that make you feel better?

And the police in Britain now have got hazmat suits dispensed to them, and the military obviously too. They are able to handcuff suspected patients to force them into quarantine, and back into quarantine if they try and get out.

Also, from the US Military Times that they've got here…

US military prepping for coronavirus pandemic - North America (U.S. Northern Command) - militarytimes.com / 12 Feb 2020

U.S. Northern Command (A: That's the big one for Canada and the States.) is executing plans to prepare for a potential pandemic of the novel coronavirus, now called COVID19, according to Navy and Marine Corps service-wide messages issued this week.

An executive order issued by the Joint Staff and approved by Defense Secretary Mark Esper this month directed Northern Command and geographic combatant commanders to initiate pandemic plans, which include ordering commanders to prepare for widespread outbreaks and confining service members with a history of travel to China.

So, that's the command that's responsible for North America. Does that make you feel better?
[Alan chuckles.]

So, as I say, I don't want to scare everybody. Who knows, we'll have to wait and see what goes on. I did read the one article that a young guy from China, a teenager, said that this wasn't some little sniffle in the nose. He said that he's never felt so sick in his life, every joint in his body was in agony he said. And he had the typical symptoms of non-expectorant cough, and a very sore chest. Because your muscles get all strained and so on with cough, cough, coughing, etc.

So, if you see you're getting any symptoms, be careful folks, take care of yourselves. But don't panic at the moment because as I say, it's here. It is here. And if you have at least enough foodstuffs supplied, just basic stuff to get you over a month even from general stores and so on, in case you do get it and can't get out for little while it will help tide you over as you get through this.

And you've got to keep positive and as I say, you get through it. They have had people recovering from it. As I say, it's unfortunate that older folk definitely, especially men, it says, it's targeting more. So, take better care of the people that you can take care of and those that you know. That's what you have to do in these situations of crisis. Again, you've gotta stop thinking, well who caused it. As I say, every country’s caused it in a sense, because we all have these organizations that are busy working to create awful, awful terrible things to be used for awful nefarious reasons, which are pretty disgusting. And they are diabolical, let's put it that way, they’re diabolical. Of course they are.

But as I say, keep positive and don't let anybody say, cough up your sleeve. Use a mask if you have to. Who cares what they have to say at the top? Look after yourself. No one else is going to look after you in these situations. You've got to look after yourself as best as you can, and for those around you too, just a few friends that will all help each other out, that's what you really, really need, folks. Really.

So really take care. And for myself Alan Watt from Ontario Canada, sorry for the talk, it's not very pleasant, it's good night and may your God or gods go with you. And by the way, the other night there too, with all this global warming we're getting, I was down to -35 Fahrenheit. So, there you are. Good night.

Feb. 23, 2020 (#1762)

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

Hi folks, I’m Alan Watt this is Cutting Through The Matrix on February 23, 2020. I hope everyone out there is surviving the onslaught of, ohhhh, what would you call it, authorized news I guess, [Alan chuckles.] that's supposedly not fake, and try to make sense of it all, everything you're given to read and decide upon. Because you've noticed I'm sure even with simple things, like simple topics really, relatively simple topics like this outbreak of coronavirus Covid 19 as they want to call it now. But even with that you have soo many, from all the expert sources supposedly, different experts giving you completely different versions of how this thing is either progressing or regressing, until you’re literally left in confusion.

I did shows years ago on forms of behavior control put out by the big boys themselves on how to manage people in times of crisis or war or whatever it happens to be. They say too, when the public are getting too close to something, you put them in almost a gaslighting state with giving them opposing views on the same very important topics. That way eventually most folk just lose track of it and can't decide for themselves. Then along comes the third, eventual, the third expert, simplified thing to do or accept or how to believe in it or whatever, and you go with that. It's a technique that's used and well understood by those who control your brains.

So anyway, we're living now with tremendous, tremendous contradictions from everywhere you look. All these different experts. It's obviously deliberate because from the beginning of this outbreak in China we've had panic, panic, panic flogged to us. Then you had, well it's a simple sniffle, to you know, just a bit of a cold, or maybe even flu, played down and played down until then you had this massive reaction in China to it all with massive trucks going up and down streets, and cities quarantined. The trucks are spewing out this white mist everywhere, and they still haven't told us what it is in fact. You don't know if it's some kind of thing to kill off mosquitoes that might be carriers too, or bacterium, or viruses, I should say. Or even, other kinds of insects too that might even carry them. So anyway, you're left to speculate. And this is all intentional. Because really, it's quite simple to tell the public what on earth it is that they're spraying, isn't it? Quite simple. And why they're doing it.

But in everything else you've had so many contradictions too... On the numbers of infected people per week, or even by the day, and the numbers of deaths as well. Then of course we also had the quarantine regulations had to be followed to save the domestic populations. Well, none of them were followed as we well know. Because you don't bring in people who are possibly infected with the virus which you don't understand yet, a new one, it's a nouveau type of virus, or novel, and they've got to study it before they can decide well, it's fairly, you know, not too severe or whatever. But on the other hand, it could be terribly severe. And you can't tell right away because it takes months to study it. And only by really intensive study and cross examination of the darn thing, cross studies, intensive studies and experts all scratching their heads and getting together with their findings can you actually come up with any real data on the thing.

But up until then the whole idea is that real solid quarantine has to be followed. It hasn't been followed at all as we well know. I had to think at the start like everybody else I'm sure, maybe, again with all these conflicting stories about things, come to the conclusion that, from little snippets too from the CDC and WHO, little snippets they're putting out there by some of their head people that this eventually will spread across the whole world. So, in other words, it's inevitable. Which means they're going to allow it to happen. Others came out and said, well we're going to try to slow it down until we can study it. And so even, slowing it down and trying to contain it as much is possible.

But then you had the other ones too bringing in flight after flight after flight and giving us different times of infection symptoms, the pre-symptoms basically, the prodromal period as it's hibernating inside you and multiplying inside your body before the symptoms show. It could be anything from a few days. So, you can't go by an average when folks' lives are at stake. And yet, they we're letting people out, in about eight days only to find out many of them we're having infections afterwards. And now it's up to about 24 days that it can happen. [Alan chuckles.] And there was something in the paper the other day from Korea that said they even had a case where they thought it could be 90 days. [Alan chuckles.] I don't know how they figured that one out. But there ya go.

Then you have all the stuff too, again too because it's novel, right, it's new, it hasn't been studied so well. Then they say, well you could even get reinfected by it. Then they tell you the reinfection could be worse than the first infection and so on and so on and so on. Well, when it comes to all these could be's and maybe's and possibly's and so on, because it is new, why on earth have they been bringing so many thousands back into their countries? Which really is against the laws of proper quarantine for safeguarding the populace, you see. We know that they've been landing at Hawaii, Honolulu, in the States and then getting other flights out across the US after that. Of course, it's going to spread, no doubt about it. Plus, you'll have people who show no symptoms at all. Yep.

So, it's quite something, isn't it, to watch all this happen. And supposedly we're to believe that this is the best, these are the best brains on the planet working on this. And the best brains tell us what we have to do. But none of them are doing, or the countries aren't doing it, or nations aren't doing it. So, there's something else afoot here obviously. Obviously.

Number one, they get what they wanted, which is fear in the general public. They'll also get the people who are terrified and afraid turning to government for advice and help. Then government comes out with the heavy hand of, we'll save you but it's going to be tough, so you have to give up more and more rights and freedoms and do what you're told, etc. etc. It's a big massive exercise, obviously, in control.

9/11 was the first stage, I said before, for massive change, changes that most folk couldn't even think about would come down the pike. The changes, as you know today, are [Alan chuckles.]

in-your-face and almost illegal to even speak about. And no one would say, well, how did all that come from 9/11? Well, it was planned before that, you see. 9/11 was the kickoff phase. Under 9/11 the first thing they did on television, national TV in every country was, would you give up your freedoms for security? All the papers carried these same questionnaires. TV did the same thing.

It was all planned that way of course. Until you end up in a world without privacy. Now you've got people growing up and people who really were around about 19 years ago, that are 19 now, just got born then, they've grown up in a world where it's normal not to have all the rights that you had before. They grow up in a world where they think it's quite normal to have all your data up on sources such as Facebook and different social media, day by day of what, everything they do, you know. They also think there's nothing wrong with having no privacy. Any of them. Quite something.

So, the next step, and again as you well know, you've got all kinds of agendas being pushed forth. There's many of them you can't even talk about today in a safe manner. You also have the rise, the authorized, obviously authorized and well-funded rise of all the groups that are like massive gangs that are authorized, like internal armies of youths ready to go to war with anybody who's older than them. This is all... This is like the Russian revolution all over again, the Bolshevik revolution, how they get a lot of young people trained to do the dirty work, who did it with gusto once they were put in charge of things. It doesn't bode well what's happening.

And as you well know the big funding sources that are interfering and putting these armies across the planet of very angry youth, no one's touching them at all. No country is saying stop this, or even sending them out to charge the people who run it all and fund it all. And it's not youngsters who are funding that by any means. It's very old people generally, very wealthy ones, with a history of revolution you might say.

So, we're living through amazing times and yet there's very little you can actually talk about. Because even in the last few months you're getting less and less rights to even speak about things, which are fairly innocent, if you come at them from an innocent point of view, or an innocent approach, of even asking why this and why that. This doesn't look good for what's coming down the pike. It really doesn't.

I've talked about it before coming down the pike, and most folk don't quite get it. Because they're caught up with... it's part of the change, as they're being changed, they don't realize it, everyone gets changed when change occurs. Most folk are ready for the change because they've been programmed in advance through fiction mainly, and stacks and stacks of documentaries, with all the little politically correct updates in it you're supposed to adopt and then you adapt to them. You first adopt them and then you adapt into them. That's how it's done. Very easy. Perfect in fact.

Because they're given new opinions, new viewpoints mainly through fiction. They become as angry as the youth about certain things if you were to mention something, even innocently. It's like an angry retort. Because they've been conditioned to be that way. Most folk really are not their own people. They're not in charge of themselves. They think they are, and they'll fight you. But the fact is, they're really not in charge of what goes on in their head.

Remember, never forget, one of the masters, many of the masters actually, but even the one, Brzezinski, who came out with Between Two Ages, and the Technotronic Era was one chapter in it, very good one too. But he put that out in the 1970s. This guy who was up there in the Trilateral Commission and the CFR and so on, and the Defense Department and national security and so on, he talked about the technotronic...Of course, in other words 5G, I won't get into, and even 6G has been tested out in some places, including Wuhan in China.

But he talked about the technotronic pulses they can put across entire continents. They already knew, and they tried it obviously and took the data on what happened, disturbances and that kind of thing, domestic disturbances. Even domestic animal disturbances. We know that they tried it on, I think it was Maine. They did surveys on the HAARP alone, just the HAARP technology, which again is low-frequency pulses and so on with secondary carriers on top of them, or secondary waves on top of the carrier wave. Certain frequencies would cause even cattle to get angry. Domestic animals would start biting the owners. Tremendous documentation was done on it for the authorities. Social work departments report to their headquarters and police do the same thing, so do health departments. So, you can collect all this data on a public that doesn't even know that it's being done. But yeah, they knew exactly what frequencies cause you to be sad, they had suicides at some of them. Other ones were, everybody just got angry and irritable and things like that, you see.

So, stroking your brain with low-frequency radiation basically, impulses, specific planned pulses, for frequencies, yeah definitely it has an effect on you. Like the Corbin helmet, it's the same kind of thing that Persinger used as well but without the wires. Again, Brzezinski said, we can put these kind of pulses across entire continents to manipulate the thoughts and the moods and behavior of people, of an entire population. So, there you are. And it's being done. Of course it's being done.

This can only happen, remember, all these things could only happen when they bring you up to be incredibly naïve, and to believe in authority, what it says that it stands for. When often the opposite is true, what it really stands for. You're in a definite system, a very tightly controlled system. I said before, you won't know you're in a kind of system, almost a totalitarian type system if you go along in a dream state, your programmed dream state. But if you buck the system in some way or you have your kind of Neo moment and you start talking about it, you'll see the bars suddenly appear that were never there before. Because you're so heavily monitored in this day and age.

Brzezinski said that. But he also said again too, that people will come to expect the media, which he already said in the 1970s, he said, they are already giving them their topics for conversation, they get it from the newspapers and from the television and then they parrot about that the next day at work and so on, whatever they've been given the parrot about, all the topics. Little human-interest stories and little ooo/aaa stories of sex or whatever it happens to be. It's all worked out. It works very well. The grabbers, you see.

Today it's even more perfect with the Internet. Remember, the Internet has made it more, it made it easier for them to control the people. They started off of course with a dribble, really, years ago. But once everyone's on it, plus I've gone through the topics too of massive agency, security agency organizations with thousands of operatives scouring the Internet and pretending, with each person given about 100 names, they take on people on all the different blogs and so on and the chat rooms. They get everybody arguing. All professionally trained to disable you, that's the point of it. So if you get involved and you're thinking you know someone, that you've never heard of before, and they build up a persona for you to trust, they've already worked out the kind of person you'll fall for to trust. And how to do it. Then they try and destroy you later. They suddenly hit you. Bomff! That's meant to disable you. This is warfare. It's true psych warfare in a very real sense.

Brzezinski said of course that eventually the people will also expect the media to do their reasoning for them. That happened long ago. People think the media is there to warn them of things they should know. Really? What a change that was. People when I grew up didn't trust the media. They knew all the big moguls that owned them and how they worked in concert for big, big money. They knew, they knew. People today haven't a clue, never mind who politicians are and so on, what they belong to before they came into politics, private clubs and all that. They know nothing.

They're given literally stardom instead of politicians. These characters are built up into stars by the big star making machinery. Little nobodies are suddenly all over the media for you to vote for. Of course, they even take lessons from actors by the way, acting lessons from people who teach it. That's been in the newspapers where Britain and other countries, they can even write it off their income as an expense, these acting lessons, to try and convince the public that they're genuine.

There's nothing real out there. There's nothing real out there and so they present you with stars. The more hits they get for saying outrageous things on the Internet and chat rooms, the more famous they become, you see. [Alan chuckles.]   All worked out by professionals. And every politician, remember, reads the scripts, it's all written by other people. And they really should get the awards for writing the scripts for them. Everything is show business out there. More so today than ever before. And the public are completely oblivious to it. They fall into the traps all the time that are set out there to make them think it's all genuine, again, that there's real battles going on in the media and points of view and so on. Quite something.

I've said before, many times, that if voting worked for the public it would be made illegal. That's the truth of it. Run by very professional organizations, most of the people don't even know the names of them, that are way up there with the big agendas. Very old agendas. That follow these agendas so rigorously. They don't change, or drop, when something doesn't seem to work right or whatever, they don't just drop it. It's just like the wars across the Middle East around to Syria, they keep at it and come back quietly again until they build up and then it gets into… They can’ keep it quiet anymore. They never give up; they keep doing it.

But all the agendas are the same, all of them.I can remember reading books from the 1920s by some of the avant-garde communists in the West, in Europe. They wanted to completely, and eventually it morphed into other organizations like the Frankfurt School and so on, who were very vocal about the complete destruction of the culture of the West was necessary, complete and utter eradication of its history and they would make people loathe themselves. And that's what's happened in the West. Total war, you see.

But long before they were heard of, they were organizations that were loosely called communist at the time. But professions, the early professions were getting in on the act with psychiatry and psychology and behaviorism too where they said that they'd change everything, everything would be put up, anything which you accepted as normal had to be destroyed. Anything and everything. Including what men and women were. In the 1920s. Even later communists didn't want to even go along with that kind of thing back then.

But yeah, that was the idea. Girls only played with girl things because they are taught that by parents, you see. And boys only behave like boys because they are taught to be like that by parents. That was the mantra even then. All the way down to the present. Look how far it's got now, and in a sudden rush too. Again, since 9/11, the big rush.

And you say, why would all that come from 9/11? Well, it's because that was the signal for the unleashing of it all for the 21st century. The century of change they called it, or transition. Same thing. Academia called it that, the coming century would be that century. We're in it and all that has to be fulfilled, you see.

It's astonishing to stand back and watch it. It really will isolate you from most of the public. Because most of the public can't handle these kind of things, it's bad news to them. They'd rather go along to get along, rather than get upset.

Many years ago I talked about even the New Age movement had been completely taken over and even called the New Age, it was called a different thing long before that when it was a bit more genuine. The New Age movement was really taken over and put to use by those who bring in the present system. And there's a reason for it. To destroy all that was, remember, to bring in the new. That was the idea too.

But you're in the 21st century, the century of change and it's getting rammed really through with no vote from the public on anything. In fact, you've got an authoritarian system now which will admonish anybody, like a child by a schoolteacher if you just utter something that's forbidden, that wasn't forbidden long ago. If you can't ask, if a child can't ask things out of curiosity, you’re under tyranny. You're definitely under tyranny. And you don't hammer the child to terrify them so that they never asked the questions again. Learning is a learning experience. You have to have the experience of learning. And speaking. And asking. And calmly being instructed. That's what education was supposed to be. Not now. Everything is so politicized, and agenda driven. You're looking at a really dangerous time which is meant to get much more dangerous very quickly if need be, too. Because as I say, there's radicalized elements trained from even Junior school, radicalized to be angry and furious. And they're told what to hate. And it's been drummed into them. If they ever get the power, or are given the power, they will go to work.

Just like you saw in the cultural Revolution in China where Mao Tse Tung had them all turn on the parents and the teachers to eradicate them. Because they were contaminated with old world ideas, old thoughts, old ways of doing things, old viewpoints and moralities. Horror is what happens. And we have awfully good details of it from the old Soviet Union who went through it. The Soviet Union was to be used as an example for the rest of the world which they hoped at that time to promote across the planet.

But so much leaked out from these radicalized, and many of them foreign youngsters that were brought in for the revolution. They we're handed the pistols and who gunned down thousands, into eventually the millions of people because they were perhaps middle-class or perhaps didn't agree with them, or they couldn't be reeducated as they called it. You're seeing the same thing happened again, the same rhetoric being drummed into the potential terrorists. And that's what they'll be, if they're not already, under the guise, different guises, and you know who all them out there, the different guises they go under. Well it's just to save the planet or whatever it happens to be. You can see it all. So, what you’re looking at doesn't bode well at all. Never forget that.

As I say most people will just, it gets too tough for them they have to escape into fiction and tune out. Because truth is not easy to handle in this day and age, it really isn't. You won't find people around you generally who are eager to know it. Even if they're pretty ignorant of what's going on, that are wise enough to know what is going on when it comes to being politically correct, they know how to get along and to be left alone by allowing their updates to work. And you are, you're updated like a computer with new things all the time.

Now they call it self-policing by the way from the United Nations. I used to give the talks years ago on that, they would teach the public to self-police themselves. And I thought, why are they gonna do that? Well, guess what? [Alan chuckles.]   It's like the old talks I used to give on, say, Revelations which could be used like a blueprint down the road, and it's all here today. You've got plagues, pestilences. We have massive laboratories now and I gave the talks, where they create all kinds of insects which they let loose, aphids and other things on the crops, supposedly, around harvesting time. There's umpteen companies in Canada alone, and you can find them, they could breed all these different insects. There's nothing in Revelations today from the earthquakes to whatever that we can't do scientifically.

And when it comes to the other things too, where everyone in the family, remnants of destroyed families where they're all fighting each other, the children fighting the parents and the parents fighting the children, and the genders fighting each other and all that kind of stuff going on and on and on. All described. It's all been done through intense indoctrination. And mandated from the top.

In all ages, I think Plato mentioned it too, that morality, the morality that you live through is simply that which is dictated from the powerful elite at the top. Nothing really comes from the grassroots without permission from the top. Anything which would upset a different agenda that the elite had written into stone, anything which threaten that would be immediately nipped in the bud. So, when you see it promoted and allowed to go, it's being promoted from the top down, not the bottom up. Especially when it's a massive scale.

Remember, the system we're meant to go into is a system put out, again, and at least discussed by the Communists, who also adopted Technocracy, every side adopted Technocracy at one time in the 1920s and 30s, where experts should rule the world. The Club of Rome still promote the same thing today, with their books that are quite open about it, democracy would never work, it's too slow and cumbersome. And when you have a big agenda to get things done you can’t have folk arguing and debating about it, when they know better than you how to do things, you see. That's the whole key, they know better than you, experts should just dictate to you and you obey and that's it. That's what it is. It's that simple. And that you are an energy unit in Technocracy Inc. and you will basically consume so much energy per month according to your status, meaning your class. And they're very class conscious, doesn't matter what terminology they want to use about it. So was communism by the way. [Alan chuckles.]   Everybody according to their needs, you know, [Alan chuckles.] you know, in their own little class. The hypocrisy of humanity is overwhelming, 'eh, with the saviors of society.

You'll be allocated so many energy units per month. A token is good enough for energy units, you see, money is just the same kind of, money is a token. And now you know the Internet given to you by DARPA, you know, a big military organization, was meant to get you hooked on it until you start using it and become cashless and everything else. Then they did what Bertrand Russell said they would do, they start to punish you and withhold your, well, really now it's electronic tokens, isn't it? They can punish you and bring you to your knees until you really comply and serve your time for being bad. But being antisocial... Social, you see, is whatever, again, the elite have dictated is social, and asking questions can be awfully antisocial to those who have power. That's what we're going through now.

Names are awfully confusing and most folk really fall for the names of things. I used to always try to think by images because when something looks the same, smells the same, it generally is the same. Don't be fooled by changes of names. Don't be fooled by it. How could the Club of Rome, 'eh, for instance, and they had the same people at the top in the Club of Rome working for them and churning out their books on too many people, and too many of the wrong people is what they really meant, using up the earth's resources. No, their resources are for themselves.

Oh, The Population Bomb, Paul Ehrlich and all that, you know, too many people. The same Malthusian concept. Because this is a very old organization really with changes of names. But when they call themselves the Club of Rome, a massive think tank to help guide it all into being for all nations, and you don't vote for them of course, anything that matters you don't get a vote for. The Club of Rome said that, that yeah, you'd have to be authoritarian and get you to do things. Well, it's astonishing that the same people in the Club of Rome, including Ehrlich's wife who was a board member of it, it's amazing that you hear about Nazi, Nazi, Nazi, as though they were the worst folk that ever lived on the planet. And yet everything that's being pushed today, authoritarian regimes where you'll obey experts and scientists, and even the elite businessman, that's your new governors, you see, isn't that the same thing? Don't get fooled by names. If it walks like a duck and quacks like a duck, hm, it's that simple. It really is that simple.

And people do tend to, authoritarians do tend to go the same way and show the same signs and symptoms, just like a disease. And even the youth. Well, the Communists had the red youth brigade. Same thing. Hitler came along with his Hitler Youth. The West had the same thing. We even, you take even, and I'm not kidding about this, even the Boy Scouts at one time under Baden-Powell, really were given all the new moral codes of obedience and obedience to your superiors. It's got the makings of the same thing, which can be snapped into a different direction at any time at all. Quite easily.

Youngsters who look up to the elders who give them direction, here's something that most folk don't think about but the big boys around the world certainly do. Because they're always studying us, generation to generation, century to century. But when they would destroy the family unit - that Pike talked about, and also the communist talked about, Marx talked about, isn't it amazing, it's always the same agenda - then the youngsters would have a craving, and excessive craving for guidance.

And this is proven to be true over and over and over again. When you don't have, like a boy doesn't have a father figure, a good father figure who's strong and decent and... But strong, to be looked up to by a child, a boy especially, then he'll crave it, he’ll find it somewhere else. Either in a street gang as we know with all the studies by the FBI in the States, or they'll literally, along comes again the super Boy Scout, here's your uniform, let's go camping and we'll all rug it out together and we'll be all boys together, you see. And you can use that into a campaign for politics if you want to. Or you get the communist system. Or you get with the communist youth brigade. Or else, let’s use the Hitler youth, you know.

You're seeing names today with their black outfits on, youngsters, holding up traffic in different countries across the world. Where are they getting their money? Some of them are getting brought in across Europe from country to country. Mobilized. Big cash. And we know of course where they're getting their money, but you can't, you're not, you can't even say it. You're watching the buildup to a terror. That's what you're seeing. And when they unleash, as they always said, the nihilists and the atheists, a revolution, you'll see repetition all right. Unfortunately.

I don't know if folk realize, this is serious stuff. Serious stuff. When governments aren't even attempting to stop it, it tells you it's mandated from the top. Even with the oil pipelines that have been on the go for years, all their debating about it from Canada to the States and so on, these big protests with the same groups across Canada. Literally, the trains aren't even going south of me, they've all been stopped for about a week now by the same groups in protest of things. Just like they stopped stuff across England for their sustainability thing with their Extinction Rebellion. M-hm.

You're seeing all the symbols everywhere too and folk don't even recognize them. Anyway, I wasn't even thinking of talking about any of this tonight but I just, I got so fed up with the media, with the obvious mind…, what you called mind…, it's like being punch-drunk. Oh, believe this by experts. No, believe these experts over here. Hm. With the same qualifications and all that. Until you're supposed to just, oh, for goodness sake.

When your own common sense says there are things going on that don't make any sense at all, as I say, you either have proper quarantine or you don't. You can't have a bit of quarantine when it comes to lethal disease. You do it properly. And it's not new. It's been written in stone for national quarantine for pandemics and epidemics for years. Many years. But it's not being followed.

It's interesting too in the British papers they even had, I think it was, the bus drivers that are bringing some of the people who've been in some semi-quarantine and ships and so on back into Britain and elsewhere, and they're being driven in the buses. And you see the health guys with their hazmat suits on, and the bus drivers don't even have masks on... bringing people who are potential carriers. Well, where's that driver going after he drops off the people on the bus?

This is incredible. You either have quarantine proper or you have none at all. There's no if or buts here. Which can tell you, if you’re running on your own mind, you're going to say, well, I guess they want it to spread after all then. Or, you're left with the other possibility, they know at the time that it's not as serious as they say. Because you're left to speculate. Because of their silence. Of why they're being so sloppy. It's not because they're stupid.

And that secrecy too, you see, there's books of out about people who are paid by big think tanks and even the CFR on conspiracy people and conspiracy theories and so on. And yet they all have to admit that the reason these things started in the first place is because of governments and government agencies, and they're so profuse these agencies today and so many of them, and multilayered, and so secretive they don't tell the public anything, which naturally feeds in a conspiracy. Of course it does. When you're not going to get told the reasons for anything at all, your mind can run riot. Of course it does. We're played like children, really. And programed the same way.

Where am I going with all this stuff? [Alan chuckles.] The fact, as I say, you get fed up with the news. It's kind of pointless as you know. Politics doesn't appeal to me, never did. Because it's so obviously fake. So obviously fake. As I say, you don't have politicians now. You have personalities that are made personalities by massive star making machines. That's what does it.

That's exactly what does it. Everyone at the top who was picked for it plays their role. You're given a role, just like a movie, and they play their hand in it. They're told what to say, right down to emotions and gestures and how to try and look sincere at times, or arrogant at times, or dominant at times. It's acting, it's basic acting. And the script writers write their scripts or their speeches. But the real government is way above it.

That's why big organizations like the Council on Foreign Relations/Royal Institute of International Affairs and Trilateral and so on, they talk all the time about governance. The don't say government, it's governance. Because really most of the governing that goes on is not from what you think of as government institutions. Remember, the CFR came out years ago, maybe 10 years ago, I hardly remember, how time flies. In the articles they said that it was time for the big philanthropists and the rich businessmen, the movers and shakers, took their place in governing the world.

Well, I didn't see anything getting changed in the rules for voting and so on, I don't see their names appearing to vote for. So, who's deciding these people should simply be overseers over us all without any input on our say at all, on even having them in the first place as governing us? We don't vote for them. Most of the things that work over us and manage us, we don't get any kind of vote on. Really. But we're managed of course, we're definitely managed.

Getting back to Bertrand Russell and others talking about tokens for the public issued to everybody, like a universal wage. It would be used to control you. Like as I say, DARPA gave you the Internet. Get you addicted to it, make sure there's, eventually phase out other ways to even pay with things, checks and so on, until all you've got is electronics. Then of course you lose your income. Exactly as Bertrand Russell said in fact, really. Because they decide what's antisocial, it's a list of things you mustn't say or talk about or inquire about. That's what that really is. And then you're punished. You can't pay your rent, you can't buy your food, you won't have the money, everything's frozen. It's all happening, folks.

First get the folk on the net. I mean, then that is the net, right, you're caught in a net. Fish inside a big net can just swim around its edges and so on, but it can't get out of it, you're stuck in it. It's also called the web. You're stuck on it like a fly on a spider's web. And all you can go on, even if you're strong enough to pull yourself along this sticky thing, it's along other strands of the same web, you can't get off it, of the web. It's quite something isn't it. The old 666, www, in another tongue of course.

Everything that was written about and published in books by the big culture creators, they created the culture for the future they would bring in right to the present time. People in the 1920s and 30s and 40s and 50s designed every part of the cultural changes right up to the present, and there's more to come they decided back then too. Nothing happens by itself like that. But we're at a very dangerous period today.

I'll just mention again too, George Orwell, who understood a lot of this because, remember, he was a died in the wool socialist. He'd been brought up in, his indoctrination at Eaton even into this, almost this communistic system. Until he realized when he was fighting in Spain alongside the communists, and he was in a socialist organization, that he was on the list for extermination himself and he had to flee because the Communists would kill him. Up until then they were all taught that they were your friends, they were just the same as you, the Communists, you see.

And what were the Communists about? Authoritarian rule, expert rule, birth to death. Management of families, the kind of families. They even wanted to eradicate, initially, the family unit. Eventually it got so bad that Stalin had to eradicate and get rid of the woman. He picked women to be the ones who would advocate not just abortion but marriage altogether, hopefully, they thought. But then they realized they weren't going to churn out any children, that they would have to have caretakers looking after them, such as, i.e. parents. So, they had to reintroduce and start forcing it. So, they used it as a cultural weapon against the West. That's what we've had ever since.

But the real communists were in the West already, you see. The real communists. Communism is a tool, it's a term for a technique more than anything. Don't fall into the trap of thinking, well that's all gone now. You'll see the same things today if you just look around you, with different names, and different reasons for implementing them. They always have reasons for implementing all these planned changes. But it's for the ones from the top. You see, you're conquered, you've been through the revolution and most folk didn't notice. I've mentioned that many times before.

Now, I'll read this. This is by Peter Hitchens. I read it a few weeks ago but it's worthwhile. I'll fit it in again to what I'm talking about. Because he also said the same thing I've been talking about for years, the same thing. He knows the same things too. Mind you, he was a Marxist. He came out of Oxford, I think it was like most of his generation, as literally indoctrinated Marxists. Again, the University, Ivy League type University, obviously authorized from the top. He's talking about the system here.

Peter Hitchens: Britain's Been Changed Forever & Is "In the Foothills of a Catastrophe"

youtube.com / 2 Sept 2019

Peter Hitchens delivers an important and rarely heard monologue on the systematic infiltration of anti-British Marxists

(Alan: This goes for Canada the States and everywhere else.)

into the highest levels of British society.

This has completely transformed Britain, British life & culture.

Since Blair came to power in 1997, these former Marxists have occupied positions of power in all critical areas of British life. They have revolutionised Britain -- it is no longer the country it once was:

"This is the really ridiculous thing about the modern West,

(A: And it's so true, this, most folk miss it, they can't quite grasp it.)

"This is the really ridiculous thing about the modern West, we live in post revolutionary societies

(A: You had a cultural revolution ala Gramsci. It's interesting too, even that fella who won in the States there, Indiana, his father was the guy who translated Gramsci into English supposedly for the West and for the universities to teach [Alan chuckles.] indoctrination. I'm talking about Buttigieg. It was his father or grandfather actually did the translation for the Communists. But anyway, that's another, this is off the topic here. Getting back to this article here, it says...)

"This is the really ridiculous thing about the modern West, we live in post revolutionary societies and in most cases we don't even realise the revolution's taken place. It's been a Kierkegardian revolution in which all the buildings remain standing but everything which led to their being built and contributed to their design, and the whole society that supported them, has been wiped away.

And people walk around in it relatively prosperous thinking revolution must mean a red flag flying above the post office and the barraks and the railway station with commisars in the streets; it doesn't.

Modern left wing revolution means this, the policing of thought, the deadening of the academy,

(A: ... that's education, which is just indoctrination now for social engineering and big policies.)

the lack of serious debate or understanding,

(A: I'd add, the forbidding of serious debate.)

the suppression of disagreement,

(A: Absolutely. I've always said you'll find the so-called liberal, the left, call it what you want, the Communists call the left, I think it was Khrushchev of the Soviet Union when he visited the US he was asked about the liberals and he says, oh we don't call the Communists of the West communists, we call them liberals. So even the terminology that they used for their agencies in the West were liberals. Left-wing, you know, liberals.)

…the lack of serious debate or understanding, the suppression of disagreement, and everybody accepts it and you're surrounded by it and there is no cure for it, it's all gone. Education is dead, the media is dead, it's almost unwatchable, most of what's put out now in particular on BBC television, it's almost impossible for an intelligent person to sit down and watch it. But luckily for them the number of intelligent, educated people is very small so they get away with it."

"[...] My advice to young people is to leave the country, and people laugh at me when I say it but I've never been more serious about anything in my life. And they ask where should I go, and I say I don't care where you go. The point about this country is, in the foothills of such a catastrophe it's not a good idea to wait around and find out what it's like."

Called "Eurocommunism", this policy renounced Soviet economic models but kept the key aims of transforming our society.

Tens of thousands of Marxists left the newly-expanded universities to enter teaching, journalism, the BBC, the law and, of course, politics.

Starting from the 1990s, they began to pop up in positions of importance. Peter Hitchens says that crucially his generation were deep inside what became New Labour

Communist/Marxists in Blair’s Cabinet include:

John, Lord Reid, Defence Secretary,

Bob Ainsworth, Defence Secretary,

Chancellor Alistair Darling

Stephen Byers, (outed by the Guardian in 1999 as a former supporter of the Trotskyists).

Peter Mandelson

Even Tony Blair himself revealed in a BBC interview that he had been a Trotskyist at Oxford in the 1970s

One of Blair’s closest aides , Peter Hyman, has confessed that New Labour was devised ‘to take and hold the levers of power... winning power and locking out the Tories to ensure that the 21st Century was a Labour century with Labour values’.

Don't forget, remember folks, that their definition of labor changes all the time, and their values. Well, you're living through a whirlwind of change as they give you new values with new normals, of course you know that. So that's one I read. But also, I just want to read this one too that I've read many times. It's from 1984…

Every record has been destroyed.

(A: This is the system you're in and going into big time. The memory hole, right, of information. It's happening all the time on the Internet. This, all sites being pulled off.)

“Every record has been destroyed or falsified, every book rewritten, every picture has been repainted, every statue and street building has been renamed,

(A: They've even pulled statues across the States down as you know.)

every date has been altered. And the process is continuing day by day and minute by minute. History has stopped. Nothing exists except an endless present in which the Party is always right.”

George Orwell - 1984.

That's what you really are going in with this technocracy idea of management by experts from birth to death. And the gradual, and it's more than just gradual elimination of the farce of politics. You're seeing the true system emerge of, again, authoritarianism. With new types of commissars. Not called commissars, they are called government agents. The government really farmed off many of its real functions and obligations to private corporations, and even NGOs. Which again, turns into the Soviet system, rule by councils.

Most folk don't care. I'm well aware of that too. I'm not despondent by the way, I'm not really despondent about things. You might think it's depressing but if I was to be a cheerleader for the people most of the people don't really care. Just like Aldous Huxley talked about, most folk float through this, they're so soaked with entertainment, all kinds of free sex, without consequences, they think anyway. Even a universal basic income for many folks in this. You know, they're quite happy a lot of them. So as Huxley said, the people will come to love their servitude. They won't object to it. I can remember Bill Cooper talking about this back in the 90s when he says, a lot of folk will come to love socialism, this true authoritarian type of socialism. It's another way of saying the same thing. But Orwell said, it's a servitude. Quite something though, isn't it.

Most folk don't know what they're even living through, all this stuff. They adapt to it. They even adapt opinions into their conversations. They adopt and adapt, adopt and adapt their opinions. All given to them. And because everyone else is using the same opinions, it could be contrary or even 180° from opinions from 10 or 20 years ago, even less in fact, and they adapt into it right away, you know. What they do is parrot, it's almost like the party lines, or Mao Tse Tung's Little Red Book. I can remember the children and they'd show you on TV years and years and years ago, they didn't do prayers, their prayer was to Mao Tse Tung, their leader. You'd see all these little children with the red books and all waving and quoting from it in unison. That was their Bible. But that's what we’re living through today folks for those who don't quite know.

The media is so terrible now as I say with its political correctness of nonsense. An awful lot. What folk who act or sing do is not news to me. That's not news. That's replaced what news used to be. It’s what the so-called, they call them, celebrities are up to. I don't care what they're up to. They’re paid actors. They're really prostitutes of morality and prostitutes of culture and everything, in some of the roles that they portray to the public. They’ll do anything they're told for money and acclaim as they help destroy everything that was to bring in the new. That's the mantra, 'eh.

All that was must be destroyed to bring in the new. Everything must be made new. Quite something. I could go on and on and on, but I’ll just bore the folk. But no, I don't get despondent about it. Because I understand it. People years ago used to say, you know, can't you say something positive for the people? I said, I won't be, I can't be a cheerleader for the public. I've always pushed individuality. Everybody has to decide for themselves. A little light goes on here, or over there, and a light, and a light, and that's how a light starts lighting up. But as soon as you get into a group someone's going to take it over and use it. Against the very things that you don't want to see happening. It happens all the time.

And yet you can't stop people or even complain about people that go off and join what you would call an enemy of mankind. Because you have no hold over them. If you… You have to let the people decide what they want to do themselves. But the danger comes when you see these organized mobs being radicalized, and they're furious and angry. They've had this indoctrination from as I say junior school intensified, intensified and intensified. And you don't see anybody pulling all their social media off and taking away from them, do you? It's authorized from the top. This doesn't bode well for things yet to come.

But people do make their own decisions. And that's the best you can do. In every generation there's always a few come through with some knowledge. Who, don't have an axe to grind or some benefit to get personally off things. Who, pass it on. And it's always the few that pass it on to the next bunch and the next bunch. That's how it's always been. The rest of it is manipulation through the mob action, used by the ones that you think you're fighting, or the ones you're against. There are no dummies running the world here. The ones above you have, ha, countless think tanks at work against every thought that you might come up with for yourself.

And you know it's going on. A lot of folk know, they know what's going on. But they feel helpless against it, you see. That's another big thing too. And sometimes you have to go through, as I say, the valley of death, don't you? That's the old saying, that's what it means. You know that you're going to go into it, you know it's going to be horrible, and all you can do is, hopefully you're strong enough to go through it. It's the best you can do.

Because the real, the real movements in this world, are your hands. The whole so-called alternative movement for news and so on at one time was good, it had a brief burst. I said you'd get maybe 20 years max, even less actually, back in the 90s I said you'll get maybe 20 years as they conditioned folk to use it and get rid of all other means of communication and even books and paper and all the rest of it. And once they take it over, then they'll start taking all your rights away from you, when you're addicted to it, you see. But most folk would be so addicted to it by then, even when the rights are taken away, they'll just adapt into the new system of that too. I gave these talks in the late 90s and it's happening exactly that way.

Nothing's given to the public that might give you power. [Alan chuckles.] Believe you me. [Alan chuckles.] The ones who think they're getting power are the radicalized ones that's authorized to be the new rebels and revolutionary army. That's what you're seeing. Unfortunately. With many faces and many supposed front causes but it's all the same thing run by the same people at the top.

As I say, down through the ages that's what you get. Somebody comes along, there's always a few who pass it on. And the big, big ones that you follow by the way, are like multinational corporations the size of them, that pretend they're just grassroots and so on, to lead everybody.

In other words, you've got authorized movements, the authorized speakers, and anti-globalist speakers there. But you'd be surprised really that it's nothing like it used to be.

There used to be dozens of alternate radio stations that were even, you know, medium wave, FM, and shortwave, all been put under by the ones that are left. I mean, did you hear me, by the ones that are left. So, you don't have all this variation of people who were the experts, the real experts that opposed things in a genuine fashion. They've all been knocked off, put under deliberately and you're left with a kind of fake system of pretense in its place.

You also find that lots of things that are happening with the fears of financial crashes, the rumors of wars, the plagues and pestilences and all the rest of the things we're getting hit with today. You've got the repetition, so much repetition always happens. Remember what the elites say, what their favorite saying is, how can we use this crisis to our advantage? And, never let a good crisis go to waste. There were members of the Council on Foreign Relations came out before the dust had fallen on the towers on 9/11, I'm not kidding you, saying that very thing. I've got all this old stuff here, I've always kept it, the actual newspaper news articles. Because that doesn't go down the memory hole.

But this article hit me too, everything is repetition. What you do when you get a plague? Well let's kill the chickens in China. Then US companies get the contracts to restock them. That's big business. So…

After Mass Chicken Cull, China Approves Live Poultry From US

zerohedge.com / 17 Feb 2020

The Ministry of Agriculture (MOA) of China has approved the import of live chickens from the US after farmers across the country were ordered to cull tens of millions (A: ...tens of millions, right…) of chickens because of the Covid-19 outbreak.

I remember they did the same thing when Bill Clinton was in and one of his main supporters at the time was Tyson. They came out with, oh, there was a bird flu going through, oh it must be coming from the chickens in China and Hong Kong. And Tyson got the contract then too. It's great, it's astonishing how they keep repeating the same things, 'eh, isn't it? Just coincidence though, it's just coincidence. There you go. So, I'll put that up too. I'll also put up...

Again, it took 20 months longer than planned to do this sort, this particular survey by this group. But they've got all this data coming out with 30 million URLs from Facebook or something, that Facebook was selling or sharing with big corporations. It took at least a couple years to accumulate all this information on it.

But it doesn't make any difference. These articles don't mean anything now. Because how many repetitions do you need from Facebook or Google or anybody else for that matter? Most folk are now immune to these stories because they're used to it. It means nothing to most folk. They continue to use it all. They really do.

And you can help them. I mean, and you can't force them. If I had the ability to force them, I wouldn't do it. You can't do that. You must make the people make their own decisions, or their own destiny, even if it's ill-fated. You have to allow that. That's individuality. Also, one of the maps on the coronavirus, the map data and timeline that's been put out.

Tracking coronavirus: Map, data and timeline - bnonews.com / 1 Mar 2020

These are meaningless too with the present state of affairs when you're supposed to be terrified of it, and they'll tell you it could be a dripping nose, or maybe no symptoms at all. Which one do you want to believe, when they claim folk are dying in China and elsewhere? All from the top, from the same sources, folks, or people working in the same big organizations giving you totally opposing viewpoints. Which, it puts you in a numb state and you just give up trying to follow it. That's the whole point, they don't want you to follow it. And eventually you'll take, when they'll give you the third idea that you must accept, you'll just accept it. It will be very simplistic and what makes sense, but you will adopt it, because it will be the official opinion eventually.

They'll say this is the stamped official final opinion and that's what you go with. I've watched this for so many years.

Dramatic surge in UNTRACEABLE clusters of coronavirus cases around the world - dailymail.co.uk / 22 Feb 2020

A couple of other articles on and it again. I don't really, I'm not going to get worried about it at the moment because as I say, we don't have enough data to go by. Except, nothing makes sense. As I say, if every nation and its professionals know how to stop plagues happening, you do not bring contamination into a healthy population. That's the first law of national quarantine. They know that.

If it was that deadly and it's new and they don't know how it's going to end up, if it's going to jump and become more virile and deadly or what, because it's new... What they're doing doesn't make sense, unless they completely understand this and they knew about it long beforehand, and had it well studied. Which leads to other areas of thought of course, which are all taboo. But anyway, that's all I'm going to talk about tonight because otherwise I'll be going on for ages.

But don't worry about things. You really don't get panicked about things. There's so much in the world that you can't, you really can't prepare for, you can't manage. You truly are living as a kind of dependent, as semi-dependent in a system that's got you by the you know what's. And you can only do what you can control around your own little immediate area for yourself and as best as you can.

But don't worry and fret about things because your whole life whether you like it or not, past, present and future is going to be controlled in similar ways, through fear. You see, you don't get peace to be happy for too long in this system. If you did, you'd then start objecting when the authoritarians start to demand more and more from you. You'd say, oh no, I'm not going to, no way. So, they keep you stampeded like cattle so you can’t graze in the field and start to enjoy the sunshine and the grass. That's how it's done. Very simple. That's how you're managed.

But with plagues and pandemics and everything else, the abuser, remember, abuses you with his, oh, threats of everything. And the abused, you are the abused, authoritarians are the abusers, your governments, you turn, the abused, you, turns towards governments and says save us, save use. Simple technique, isn't it? Very simple. Save us. Okay, but you know you've got to give up more and more freedoms and rights… and you've got to do what you're told. And so on. That's how simple it is, isn't it? How simple. It doesn't have to be very often totally brutal and physical. Although they can use that if they lose control. Naturally, they always do. But the rest of it is just always the threat of it. And that generally is good enough for most folk.

So don't worry as I say you can only control and do what you can, to control the little bits around you for yourself. That which you can manage, you manage as best you can.

For myself Alan Watt from Ontario Canada, I wish you all the best, and it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Mar 1, 2020 "Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt " THE AGENDA Bounds Forward, Elites 'Sigh with Relief' As Frightened Public Retreat into Shocked

Hi folks, I’m Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through the Matrix on March 1, 2020. I hope everyone’s hanging in there throughout these crazy times because we truly are going through amazing times really. And the chaos that's being promulgated across the whole planet is quite something to live through. When you realize you're living through history and you've been living through the preludes to this particular history for many years, through different articles that have popped out here and there and all the rest of it, oncoming plagues and pandemics and all that kind of thing.

At the same time, you watched God knows how many movies on pandemics and plagues and viruses. I think one of the first ones that became a big hit, they had plenty before it mind you, was one that Dustin Hoffman was in years ago. And then a whole bunch of them jumped on the bandwagon and help to terrify everybody into being very very very afraid of things.

Then of course on top of that you have other kind of releases amongst the news articles. You get releases on the occasionally, it's getting less now because it was so tightened up for quite a few years now, the whole new system. But you used to get releases of interesting stories in fact, on government agencies in wartime modes and post-wartime modes, working in biowarfare fields. Big business and a big area too. I don't think there's a country out there, a nation out there that's not testing out different kinds [Alan chuckles.] of diabolical things to destroy mainly the human population. Only they also had ways to destroy the domestic animal population for farming that is, and long-term warfare agendas. All published stuff and declassified stuff a lot of it. And a lot of it more recent in fact, hm, by again, it would sneak out into the newspapers about different countries even going further with ethnically designed biowarfare kind of viruses, etc.

And it really does stop me. You stop and say wait a minute, you know, something's really wrong with this all here where we will allow this kind of thing to go on. I think we all grew up, at least my generation grew up with the idea that there was a kind of right and wrong even in warfare. Naïve to an extent too because warfare is vicious. The whole point of warfare, physical warfare is to kill [the] enemy. And the enemy is whoever those who control your regime, otherwise your government, same thing, want it to be. And governments don't serve the people. Personally, I don't think they really ever have served the people for an awful long time.

I learned the hard way again growing up and looking at things and wanting something to believe in naturally, only to realize that most of what they were giving us for history was bogus, really. Back then in fact in nations like Britain, the UK, you had this idea, we are all really the same, we're the same people and all that, which is a great thing if you want them all to rally together for war.

And Britain depended upon war for centuries in fact that this strange entity, let's call it an entity, called Britain, they depended on war for conquering nations. To civilize them, you understand. I mean, they didn't want a profit or anything. But really a clique in London, this oddball London system in the City of London with its big square-mile of banks and all that, really dominated a good part of the world for one long time, one period, a long time.

They had their big obelisk there too, you know, brought from Egypt. Their version of Cleopatra's type needle. The one in France as well. One in Rome too. Those who rule the world set them up as a very old, old form of power. Most folk don't even figure out what they are. They really, they have a hard time figuring out what it is. But that's where the power is. It's a type of phallic symbol. Which comes out of the earth, and you’re born of the earth. A very old, h-hm, oh how will I put it? system that governs the world.

You get different stories and different nations in history about the same story, really, of a kind of an adamic figure who really, his job is to plow the earth, to work for a dominant group above him. Adam of course was from the earth. But yet the phallic symbol is also those who control the earth. The idea, [Alan chuckles.] when you see it on the earth, you don't realize it's meant to come from the earth, going up, pointing upwards, in defiance of the godhood. That's what it is. Well, that's a whole long story and it's easy to talk through it.

But what you're seeing is a very old system as I say, that controls all nations. All nations are controlled. And all nations have people in it, in every generation, who are susceptible to being bought over and to work for it. And get handsomely paid and rewarded for it. That's the truth of it. And we know some of the organizations, there are quite a few of them.

The most commonly known ones as I've said before from their own records is the Council on Foreign Relations for America and Canada, and they have branches across the world too including the Pacific rim group. But they all belong to the big parent company the Royal Institute of International Affairs. That used to be [Alan chuckles.] really, a secretive society. So much so that Winston Churchill came out in a speech in parliament, he was so fed up with an organization that was running what he called the British Empire of his day, them bringing the war by setting up the process for having a war.

Like the one that they'd had in South Africa for instance, where they goaded the people, they attacked the Boers in South Africa, this group that went in. The Rhodes group as well, Cecil Rhodes was part of it too. And the Rhodes group, the ones that he employed, they were really, they attacked the Boers to get the war going. Then they had a reporter with them who immediately, it was a woman who immediately wrote the story up that it was preplanned, and I think she probably prewrote it, about the British settlers were being attacked and so on. And that justified getting troops in. It was all prearranged. You must always appear to have the semblance of right on your side, we did nothing wrong, etc.

Because the first casualty of any war is truth, as you know. And it's generally the truth to their own people. At one time growing up you had a semblance, although you didn't know at the time, but a semblance of a kind of fakery of a system that kind of bound you together. The real culture of the people was the people themselves, that was the real culture. Not the one they gave you from the top down. It was the real culture from the general population that helped each other in times of crisis before there was a welfare system or unemployment system, you know, unemployment money compensation and so on, you didn't have that kind of thing.

And people really did have to after World War II, and they had that all through World War II, but they helped each other out, the ordinary people. They'd still had their petty differences and they had a bit of criticizing of each other, yeah, that's human nature, you know. But when it comes to the sharp, people would bang together and help each other in basic ways. To pay even the rent. Most folk in Britain really didn't own their homes. In this Great Britain. They live hand to mouth, that was really the way it was. But the thing is, there was still a sense of right and wrong which came from the culture itself.

But today, it's all been thrown overboard in fact and the culture and the people have been condemned I think to go the way the dodo bird. That's my personal opinion by watching it and watching across Europe too. It's verified too by speeches given by very important and wealthy people giving the same thing out, that that's the way that they want it to be.

We're always run by a dominant minority, which makes a sad sad statement on the past again because there's always been a dominant minority, as Aldous Huxley mentioned. And he should know because he was on the fringes of the higher group. He was definitely a scientist, or he belonged to the scientific group that serve the Masters, the dominant minority above him. But he also knew that you could always kind of give a kind of fake, a fake past and history to the general public so they'll grow up thinking that they're good people and everything they've ever done across the world was always for the better, the greater good as they say. That's it.

And I don't think Britain is an exception in this kind of thing. It's the same, it's always been the same, there's always been empires. There's always been the same people who ran the empires, for those who don't know that. Empires are started off with money. It takes a lot of money to get even a fleet of wooden ships together to have a Navy. To go off and doing some piracy, etc. But it took money to do all that. So, you need money people, and the folk who know how to create money, the magicians if you like. Then they have to be rewarded, those who give out money, by more more money coming back into their coffers. Then the whole thing just takes off and you create an empire across the world.

Where Britain at one time too, I think it was even shown, you don't see it in many movies, but it was even shown in a good movie called The Thuggee. There's a brotherhood in India of crooks and criminals, thieves, but they were a real brotherhood with their own passwords and all the rest of it and they work together to plunder the wealthy. But in the movie version they do show you that the commissioners that were sent out from Britain to different parts of India would work with the Indian counterparts who were really part of the nobility, and who'd always lived off the taxes of the people, and Britain had done the same of course really or those who rule Britain. So, they had a pact with India that they'd all, they'd both together rather than fight each other they would both just keep taxing the general population with goods, trading and all the rest of it. That's how it was done. And they called India the jewel in the crown.

But as I say, don't look at Britain is being any worse than anybody else. Because when you see today what's happening... I mean, [Alan chuckles.] India's expanding, for those who don't know it. India has ordered submarines, nuclear submarines. Wants six of them I think, apparently. I don't know if they're all nuclear but some of them are. And Trump of course is out there selling more and more jets and other equipment to them as well. But India also has its BioLabs like every other country.

There are no good people in the world when it comes to a system of money and power. Psychopaths always always always rise to the top in such a system. Psychopaths can rationalize any kind of cruelty and any kind of misery they cause. It's always because it was justified, it's for the greater good, etc. etc. As they plunder nations and leave them burned out and dry in famine or whatever it happens to be, they can always somehow try and rationalize it to themselves.

As they say, unfortunately so many people are willing to help them. And people from the general culture, the bottom classes too are willing to help them. The British Army had no problem recruiting people in, say, from World War I onwards basically. They had so many unemployed, always, they always keep a good amount of unemployed for the military. And young guys go off, never dreaming what I've been talking about tonight, that perhaps your governments and the system that really runs the system, behind the system, is nefarious and nasty. They would never join up otherwise. They really think they're somehow on the right side of whatever and they're doing the right kind of thing. I think that's really how it works.

Sometimes of course in the military you do have, the Cold War is a good example, everybody had seen how totalitarian the Soviet system was and the mass slaughter it had, to wipe out a whole class of people and intelligentsia too, that Trotsky boasted about, and other ones in the government boasted about, and they replaced with their own intelligentsia you might say.

Well, everybody saw that and the horrors that were inflicted upon people, incredible managed famines. They caused famines and they managed the famines. The Soviet Union was even selling a lot of the wheat and the corn and so on from the Ukraine, the breadbasket at the time, as the people in Ukraine were starving to death. A horrible thing, millions of them, over 6 million, I think 6-7 million of them died. And there's lots of even footage of the horrors that were caused there by the Soviet system. And the Soviet system always, or communism always is to destroy the farming community. It's interesting, I could go much deeper into why the farming community is hated by the groups at the top of such a system, that's another story again.

But anyway, in the Cold War in the military in the West the ordinary guys in the military really felt they were all doing the right things and so on. Because it was so obvious, to them. They didn't have an awful lot at home either. And by the way, the Soviet system [Alan chuckles.] because it was so obvious it was totalitarian, and it's all run by set of bureaucracies and very… there was no humor in it at all, that's how it was always portrayed to the West.

It was rather evident that Britain was letting up a bit and giving a little bit more rights and freedoms, and cash, a little bit, even to the lower classes and so on and the middle classes for the first time. So that was one good thing that came out of it. Because you have to keep the punters at home, as they say, happy as well, you see. You can't point to an enemy and say look how bad they are, when you're doing the same thing yourself and you keep them in poverty. So that's why for the first time, eventually, and not a lot of money either but just enough to be a bit better fed perhaps, live in a better rental accommodation rather than the dumps you had before. As I say, people served happily into the military because of the guise that you're doing the right thing and you’re protecting your nations and so on.

But once the Cold War ended a whole different scenario took place where literally, and I knew it too, I saw all the documentation for future wars to do with special forces. And they would deploy these, not the old special forces either because the old special forces still had a lot more morality involved. The new special forces would be more, um, a very atheistic type who literally would serve the paymaster, more psychopathic if you like, and they were giving the tests for it too. They would be the rapid deployment forces that would be sent across the world in wars that were never declared, you see. They've been doing it that way ever since.

Lots of the other ones too, from these particular types of forces become mercenaries. We saw that with Iraq and Blackwater and other companies too that were involved in supplying troops and mercenaries. Some that were dressed up like characters from movies, with the guns strapped on both legs and all the rest of it, and basically a menagerie you might say, of different types of exotic almost semi-mythical Hollywood characters. Even cartoon characters in some of them. All dressed to kill basically. And they were given a free hand to do that to an extent. There were really horrible things that happened, that will never be forgotten by certain segments in the West, put it that way.

So, what I'm saying is, the past is something else. We are kept naïve. And it's not so bad, not so bad to be kept naïve if they got enough to back it up to you, like you live in a good country, you have rights and we are looking after the country. That's another thing too. I think the people who went through the Cold Wars were absolutely, if you had the foulest concoction ever to dump on the public after it, I think that was done, and it's still being done, to be honest with you.

And the ordinary folks certainly were not empire builders by any means. They had been devastated with two world wars, and then the Korean War and other wars as well on the go. And the Boer war before the first world war. Continuous wars really as they were setting up this thing called the Empire. And the public were left with the bills for it all. We paid for it all. The money went to the people who owned the City of London. And they owned the banks. That's where the money went.

They got all the money from the resources and everything else that came out of it.

The people are always… So, governments are awfully handy for passing on the tabs for the private enterprise sector and handing it on to the general public, the bill, for maintaining it and building it all and policing it all and using the military and so on. That's the reality of life.

But there are no exceptions here. I can remember some of the horrors, and there were some horrors done, no doubt about it, by the Empire system. Lord Kitchener was the main troubleshooter, when any trouble started up in any country they were ruling they sent for him. And he was ruthless with the old martial law plan, you know. I think it was one out of, I can't remember if it's one out of every five people in line that was to be suddenly pulled out in a village or town and shot immediately, no trial and that was it. That's how it was done. If the troops themselves rebelled that would be the same thing for them. One out of every I think maybe five, I don't know, I can't remember. But there was a book on that, what you would do under martial law. That's how they kept order, by terrifying the public with death, you see. And if you can't win the hearts over of people that you want to be subservient to you, then you simply terrify them. Very simple methods. And these are still used today, even by our own governments terrifying us, you see.

After 9/11, the whole 9/11 deal I will never go along with what they talk about, the causes of it. Never ever. You can accept one or two screw ups in anything. You might get away with that with the plausibility factor of a small margin. But when you have supposedly one, two, three, four, five screw ups all at once, of well-rehearsed scenarios to deal with the events but they happen anyway... No, you can't let that go. You can't, you can't, you can't, folks. Sorry.

But the first thing they did, and I've said this before, with 9/11 was come out with the man on the street interview, you know, the typical ones they pick, and they only show you on the little newsreels on TV and so on, the ones that said the things they wanted you to say. Like, would you give up your freedoms and your rights for security and safety? That was the question asked, you see. Television and the newspapers, all the same. Like, why is this suddenly… What is so suddenly… Why do they all have to go on about… This wasn't just in one country; this was across the board. Planned, orchestrated of course. Of course, it was.

Then they come back with, well the majority of people... Well, you know, we might give up some personal freedom and rights for security and safety. You see. And that's how they get people to just go along with it initially. Under a war mode and you think, well maybe it's going to be temporary. It's as temporary as your wartime temporary tax, the war tax which is still with us today.

The world is ruled, you have to understand, it's ruled. The rulership and the way the rulership views the present time, and the future which they are going to continue to rule, is vastly different than how you're taught if you're a peasant in your own country to behave and what to think. It's vastly vastly different. You must be kept naïve. You must believe in the myth, you know, the foundation myths that they give some countries. And if you do that, you're a good citizen. If you ask questions, you're a nuisance.

Well, 9/11 as I say, was the kickoff for that, until, yes wherever you go now you're going to get IDed, you're going to have your irises scanned. I can remember the basic stuff. And again, homeland security came into being, you know. Homeland security. With incredible powers. And folk still sing songs about being the land of the free and the home of the brave and so on. Isn't it amazing how you can adapt and adapt? As I say, if you have the same songs sung and the same flags waving, you still think you're in the same system. You don't realize it's not. [Alan chuckles.] The system uses the symbols to keep you under hypnosis.

But it's a completely different system. Completely different than the people who lived in the times before that happened. And with the next part of crisis, you see, again, fear, if you can’t keep the people, the peasants, if you can win the love of the peasantry, even if you're in an empire building stage, then you must terrify them. Like Kitchener did.

Kitchener's record, with all of his medals and everything else that probably weighed down a whole one side of his chest, were enormous, massive awards and so on for what he did. And yet they had to keep his record under lock and key for 100 years for the official secrets act. Because of how he really was, what he did to earn those models. Think about it. And that's the reality. Just terrify the people. Nothing really has changed.

I said before, if you want planned change, and this is what we are living through is planned change, with the timetables to implement different parts of the big agenda, even the agenda for the 21st century is 100 years. With many things to be implemented during that hundred years. The climate thing is part of it too. And the 2030 and all that, it's all part of the same thing. And the things that must be accomplished.

And the people who go along with it, really, and have most say in it all are all paid to do so. If you really think that, everybody suddenly is going crazy to save the world and the climate...? Yeah definitely a lot of youngsters have been brainwashed through schooling to be almost an army, a kind of an Orwellian and I mean Animal Farm Army where they've got all the slogans, that's all they do is they spout slogans, they don't know how to speak. With rage and fury. And hate. And it's all being, you know, really pushed and festered into them. Very carefully. And they'll be a ruthless army. But they're not the bosses of it. They're just almost nihilists, as I say, they're nihilistic types. And that's the danger in all of this because nihilism ends up creating slaughters in history as we well know from past experiences.

Now, with the plague and all the rest of it happening with the coronavirus, or Covid 19 as they want to call it, you have this part of it, the terror part, you see, more terror. Obviously, it will have a better effect than 9/11 had. Don't forget, 9/11 was a Pearl Harbor event supposedly according to the guys who published articles before it who ended up in the government when it happened. That's what they needed; they needed a Pearl Harbor event to get the public on board with it.

But it was pretty small when you think about it. One place in a whole massive nation was attacked. A few thousand of the folks were killed, absolutely. Immediately. And others as well I'm sure even up to the present day with asbestosis, the massive clouds of asbestos going across the city in New York. But you think about it, the whole world pretty well was changed because of that, that one thing, that one place being attacked. And every country in the Five Eyes as they called it jumped right into it, like they were all waiting, bomf, to jump right into it.

They had the same agendas... Oh, your passengers must be screened too, everybody going through the airport. And airports had to buy these, it's great business, the weapons industry, because they also own the scanners and things too and x-ray machines that you get x-rayed with at the airports. Until folk, again, adapt and adapt and adapt. Well you know, they can see me naked basically through the scanners, but it's all for the greater good, you know. And on and on and on. And then they still come up with the same stuff, you live in the best country in the world. And they sing songs about being free and all that.

And this one, with a virus, something so tiny that people… And this is the beauty of it too in a macabre way, it's designed to be a quiet killer. You can't fend it off with a cricket bat or something or a tennis racket, it's such a tiny thing. That's why it's so successful really. A lot of people are completely unable, completely unable to imagine how lethal it is and how efficiently lethal this thing is. This is very efficient, this thing. There's a whole bunch of exposés that’ve come out of course from all countries including China on the makeup of this thing with the different parts of different viruses that seem to be, kind of managed to come together with a little help, hm, and to be awfully lethal. And even tricking certain cells in your body to turn on and off different enzymes to make it more susceptible to take over in its loading dose basically and be successful.

So here you have something so tiny, we don't even have the towers coming down with psychic driving repetition, boomf, boomf, over and over for days and days and days the same things over and over and over until everybody got the message and had nightmares about it. With the virus idea, you're just given, you're given all the stuff from China, silent streets, you're seeing the horrific beatings of some people who've gone onto the street without face masks on, things like that. But it's almost like a movie, it's like a disaster movie. The streets are empty in some places, just empty sometimes. A martial law scenario basically, everything comes to a stop.

That's again a form of driving it home. So, the West had pictures of that, repetition again, from really the last couple of months now. And now they'll start implementing the strategies to deal with it here and elsewhere too. Now that they've had enough psychic driving, you see, and terror to get through to even the simplest of us, an idea that there's something lethal stocking around, and you can't fight it yourself, so the authorities go into action. Just like 9/11. But these are the specialists that will deal with it etc., etc.

The message of course is be very, very afraid. Because I've noticed that in China, when it came out in China initially, and it really was out there early on. I'm sure even when Bloomberg, I'm sure even when Bill Gates was putting out his desktop model scenario of a coronavirus killing millions of people, back last year, about the same time maybe at the end of that month, I'm sure that this coronavirus was already making its way in reality.

But we see the same scenarios where you had denial in China, put a good face on it. Oh, it could be just like a common flu, most folk get it and it will be a little snuffle and so on. Now we're getting the same nonsense of herd management, pacify the simpletons, that's the people, and keep them happy. We're getting the same stuff unleashed here, from the rulebook, this is what you do, tell them these lies first, you see, and keep them happy and working and all the rest of it and keep the economy going. Then if it gets worse, you'll deal with that as it happens. You'll have areas around big intakes, or big numbers appearing of the flu in certain areas, in the maps they call it spotted areas or spotty areas. You'll have the military doing quarantines and maybe even checkpoints and things like that too.

China did the same rulebook as we are doing today. It's the same kind of thing. And they're unrolling it in Canada and the States and elsewhere. The US military at least has their military magazines and they publish the fact that they're mobilizing for it all. And in Canada you're still going through ministries, ministries, that's where Orwell loved his Ministries of Truth and Ministry of Information. Everything in our free society goes through a Ministry of Information. So, you’re dependent on that for any news at all.

But I'm sure myself and many other folks have noticed it too, the rulebooks for especially viral pandemics and epidemics are very clear that you protect the healthy, you protect the healthy by not introducing into your population the possible infected subjects. To keep the healthy ones clear. If you don't do that, you're negligent. Beyond negligent, you know, it's actually should be treasonous I think, to be honest with you.

We watched every rule in the book, we've watched every rule in the book being thrown out the window, with flights still coming and going, back and forth, back and forth and the whole thing. Even though they kept telling us it's a new coronavirus and we don't know how it will behave because of that. Therefore, it's potentially very lethal. That's the first rule, you see, you go by until you find otherwise. But we haven't found otherwise so far, you see.

And rather than little sniffy noses and so on, it's hitting, we know it's hitting certain populations worse than others. It's hitting males worse than females. And it's hitting the elderly pretty nastily, really rotten. And the young people too, who had it, from China, as I said last week, said that they thought they were dying. Not just with the lung filling up with fluid and crushing the alveolar tissue so you can’t get the exchange of oxygen. But the joint pains and everything, terrible joint pains amongst the fever too that they experience. It was not like a little sniffle at all.

Now here's another thing too, I think people don't really realize this. I was going through, like many people I'm sure, all the different records you can find on public health for the West. And a lot of the Western countries including Canada and the States, I think don't put you down as dying from the flu if you die from pneumonia caused by the flu. You see what I'm saying? Everything's almost legalistic the way they put it down on their records.

I can remember too with the H1N1 virus, because of the cost of testing people, eventually they said in the paper, and I was on the air doing talks every day about this kind of stuff at the time. I remember it quite well. Eventually the CDC for the States and the Department of Health for Canada just told doctors to put everybody who came in as a probable, probable flu case, even if it was a cold you had, and that's how they got the statistics from. Really.

In the States and Canada, they've got these probables, you see, probable ones. The probables could also be a different kind. The only confirmed ones, that are getting confirmed, are by using the tests. And very few get the test, you see. So, it tells you there's an awful lot more of this flu probably out there too, way more than they're telling you. And I'm not saying this to terrify people, it's just common sense. And in some places, they haven't tested at all yet amongst their populations. So yeah, you can't go by what they're telling you at all. When they say now that they're finding cases that they can't trace to people coming into the country, carrying it with them and passing it on. But people who are inside your own countries are spontaneously getting it. Well, that would tell you that it's all through your society already. Obviously.

So the ones at the top are making hay out of this and they will continue to make hay because it's, I think it's the second stage as I've said before, into the new ordered society where you can't go on like before. They are already bringing in the climate into this. Oh, climate control and climate catastrophe, and again, overpopulation is the big one with the ones at the top too. Remember, I think it was Prince Philip and all his different wildlife programs and so on, organizations that he was head of, as I say the Sierra Club, the whole thing was about too many people, folks, if you haven't figured that out. Hiding behind the sustainability thing for animals and so on. And they grab the best land across Africa, the best farming land. For those who don't quite, have never caught on to that.

Prince Philip was quite open about the needed culling of big parts of the population. He spoke about it openly, and he got his knuckles rapped when he talked in front of a camera about it sometimes. But he's not the only one. And if he were an animal, he'd come back as a virus and kill the people and so on, that was in one of his books, that was ghostwritten for him I'm sure.

But you've got to understand, these are the people at the top that the guys like Julian Huxley served. And Julian was the trans-humanist, you know. Trans-humanist, meaning the proper specialist, the super people would be godlike, and they would be presented to you like the hidden masters of the theosophy almost that would come forward at the right time. They would be made into superstars by the big machinery, the star making machinery, and be businessmen and so on. But you'd see them as somehow intelligent stars and you should obey them. And the Council on Foreign Relations said it in their own magazines a few years ago, it's time for the philanthropists to come forward and help take their place in governance, meaning rulership of the world. What amazing times we're living through.

Most folk don't know. But it will be interesting to see how far this thing goes. I spent a few days actually going through old articles and declassified biowarfare books and so on. But nothing's really changed in it. You never tell the public the truth. Biowarfare is meant to be used on the public without the public being aware that it's happening to them. It also meant to, how you could even release chemicals into foods and waters and God knows what else on target populations, it isn't just a matter of releasing bacteria and viruses. And this kind of thing goes on all the time and people are oblivious to it.

People can't believe it because it's difficult to believe there are people so horrible and evil in this world. But unfortunately, that's the truth of it. Yet, there are no champions here for the people, they're really, I really don't believe there are. There's no organizations out there, left versus right and take your pick and so on, they're all the same at the top, they're all serving the same masters, folks, the same agendas. They sign the same agreements regardless of who's in the house of governance. And they update the same and sign on to it again for the next phase and the next phase, whether it's climate or whatever it happens to be, or global sustainability, etc. etc.

All the way to rationing. And isn't it interesting too, in China they've got rationing going on in different parts. You can actually see these creatures that rule over us too, some of them in the big foundations, rubbing their hands and salivating almost at the thought of having this kind of power that they've lusted for so so long, 'eh.

But as I say, just like 9/11, you can keep tripping over stupid mistakes one after the other after the other after the other, and you keep believing it. To reading the laws on protecting domestic populations, and one mistake after another, we just didn't realize… Don't forget in a week how many people can traverse across the planet all over the place, and back and forth on holidays and all the rest of it too, never mind months. And it's not finished yet. So of course, it's meant to, it has to be meant to happen. Of course, it is. I just don't fall for this [Alan chuckles.] screwing up idea anymore. There's no way, no way at all.

You know, the sciences are so advanced for making these lethal things, they really are. And this is not a conspiracy theory. This is stuff they've published themselves in articles in newspapers, old ones in Britain too. Like the Porton Down ones where they talked about what they did for the… A journalist was allowed in for a British newspaper and set there having breakfast with them. And oh, how casually they talked about their work. They literally, if they wanted, they could wipe out the planet more efficiently than atomic bombs would do. And this was their everyday conversation there, the stuff that they made. And they are only one of them. As I say, in the emerging nations as soon as they start getting money coming in they've got the scientists involved in the same stuff as well. Across the world it's the same thing.

And there's your dilemma, there's your paradox, about having freedoms and rights and all the rest of it. Where literally those who rule the world wanted, now they have it, they didn't have to do it with physical people meeting you or anything but they wanted to have everyone diagnosed and under total observation 24 hours per day seven days a week, at the end of World War II. I gave talks on it, the Psychiatrists Association in Britain and elsewhere wanted the right to vet everybody in the country and vet anybody who would have any power over the people, and so they would become the ones who decided who would get into government. In fact, they wanted to govern, themselves, believing they were the only sane people to do so. That's what they believed. And there's tyranny for you from the tyranny of guys who drilled holes in folks' heads if they wouldn't comply eventually.

Nothing's changed, except now they're using the scientific groups through the Internet and the ethernet and your smart phones and everything else and everyone's got their daily data put in their own profiles, in their folders. They have their eyes-in-the-sky and all the rest of it. Even though the percentage of people who can't be fooled all the time, but most folk can be apparently because you have to acquiesce to be fooled. It's like voting, you all know it's a con job, so you have to participate in your own delusion by voting. Ah well, I know but I'll vote anyway, you know. And that gives them legal authority, this world is run on legalisms for those who don’t really quite get it. It's incredibly legalistic. Not moralistic but legalistic.

But as I say, there are no good countries when it comes to this kind of thing, they are all involved. It was interesting that India was the first country, they had a group in India who must probably be involved [Alan chuckles.] in some BioLab somewhere, who came out with the study of this thing and just mentioned the makeup of it. It had certain little traits taken from AIDS, for instance and so on. It's quite interesting.

Which tells you that India is coming up and up and up, and there's a lot of money going its way now with the free-trade deals and so on. You already have a well-educated class, which they had before, but now they have a scientifically educated class with the money to back up their projects. And as they go and, don't forget, they're sitting across the mountains from Pakistan and constantly shooting each other's planes down and using artillery with each other. Well, there are no good players. You've got psychopaths in every nation, in every culture, getting to the top.

So we have a problem, we have the paradox as I say where what the psychiatrists want to do with us all, with they being so superior to us all of course naturally would decide who would rule and all the rest of it, and how to rule. And yet, you're left with the other side of it too, where you're in a world of psychopaths. You see, there are no good guys here. Including the guys that want to take control and manage the psychopaths. There's no good guys in it at all.

I don't think folk can really figure that out enough too. They see faces all the time, on the low level managers, you know, there's different degrees of management in government, and there's financial rewards for them all and all kinds of freebies and privileges they get on top of it. And every country's got the same, same, same system exactly on the go.

What is interesting too and it's causing a lot of tongues to wag naturally, this sudden antipathy towards China, being a superpower pretty well, going into superpower status. After the West, the rulers, don't forget it's the rulers, not the people you're voting for, the rulers who decided to have free trade with China and built them up to be the powerhouse that they are today. They didn't do it themselves. They didn't even have the money or the know-how. We trained their students for 40 years across the West to be engineers and designers and so on, to go back to China where they didn't even have the factories at the time. And we gave them the factories with the free-trade agreement, with the GATT treaty and so on. We even paid private corporations thousands of them to move to China. Our tax money paid for them to move. And now you're supposed to believe that suddenly the West is, oh my God, we’re frightened of China. Who's kidding who?

Now remember what I've just been talking about here. You build up the countries. And for a while now the US and other Western countries, because they're all owned by the same masters you might say, have been hammering at China. Because China is expanding the rim around their nation in the ocean by basically adding to natural islands, even creating some false ones or fake ones altogether and putting little bases on them and so on. But again, they're surrounded by US bases primarily in the China Sea. However, it's not enough, you see. They've been hammering on about a coming war with China. I think John Pilger even did a documentary on that. It's quite a good documentary. And others too have talked about it. And lots of articles in the newspapers.

However, here's another thing too. You've got to go back to old Kissinger as well talking about depopulation. He put out a kind of a memorandum, or a kind of a bill in the US for depopulation years and years and years ago. Think about all these things. You build up the enemies. You've already depopulated back home quite a bit across Europe there. Because the people were awfully good, they didn't have that many children. They were doing what they were told. Now they're told there's just not enough of them to pay off their debt so we gotta bring in mass migration. In other words, there's a lot of excuses for mass migration and so on. And that's what they really are.

Then you get the wars in the Middle East again, and Syria is still getting hammered. It's a proxy warriors and mercenaries put out by the West for years. When they go out, they've brought in Turkey. That's a member of NATO, pretending they've got nothing to do with it in the West, it's their affair. No, it's NATO and they're doing that instead of the proxy warriors that have been thrown out by the Russians and Syria. And here's Turkey talking about invading cities. Well, an invasion is an invasion. The first invasion with proxy warriors was still an invasion into another country without declaring a war upon them. We've been living through this kind of scenario since Desert Storm. For 30 years war has gone on in the Middle East, taking out countries for different reasons. And folk pretty well know why, some of them. Never mind the plunder that's involved in it too.

However, here's China, right, the coronavirus comes along and fingers all point to each other. That's what it's meant to do in silent weapons for quiet wars. Because there's always possible deniability on all sides, you see. It hits China first. It's more prone to hit East Asian people and Chinese people because of a kind of a protein that they have in the lungs, it's more profuse, what it binds to in fact. So, they get hit really hard. And it also hits, where else? When they're traveling back and forth, Korea. North Korea as well. [Alan chuckles.] Which, is an enemy as well being taken out. All mentioned by the same PNAC group years ago.

And then you have Iran. They've never stopped going to war against Iran. And bingo, it's either the same one or a slightly different strain hits Iran as well. Awfully coincidental. As I say, these guys that can predict a Pearl Harbor event, 9/11, before it happened, they needed something like that to happen, just get what they want. And here you have it, bingo again, the scratch-and-win, they hit it right again. This thing is hitting primarily the ones on the list to be taken down a peg or two, and to have regime changes, etc. It's all coincidental as they say. And you'll be called a paranoid/skits, or a conspiracy theorist if you mention the fact that I'm talking about right now, about this could be caused, this part.

And don't forget, the PNAC group by the way back in the 90s, and you can look it up for yourself on the list of things they wanted to do, and which they did. They put forward a bill to enable themselves to put down biowarfare as a viable weapon that could be used by them in the future if need be. Think about that. You can check it out for yourself.

And then you have this one here...

Harvard Professor Sounds Alarm on ‘Likely’ Coronavirus Pandemic:

40% to 70% of World Could Be Infected This Year - mediaite.com / 14 Feb 2020

And this guy is not an idiot. He's up there with biochemistry and biology and so on and this is his profession. So, he's a professor. Mark Lipsitch he’s called. An article in the Wall Street Journal. But he talks about this, about 40 to 70% of the world could be infected this year, right. And then I did little bit of searching. Here he is giving a lecture to students at Harvard. You remember too that Dr. Boyle, I think he was a law doctor who came out with the Treaty for pandemics and the biowarfare treaties to stop them making these new diseases, which they do at these labs. And of course, everyone has looked upon him has heard his talks. But it verifies him where he said, because here is Lipsitch doing the same, same thing, he said, in a lecture to students who are going into this profession, right...

Should we be Making Potential Pandemic Pathogens in the Lab - youtube.com

Potential pandemic pathogens in the lab. And he goes through it in the talk, what is a natural, natural outbreak of some disease compared to the lab created ones. And the lab ones too have no known varieties before them, it's pretty unique and so on. He goes through the different, it doesn't occur in nature as such, or hasn't yet sort of thing.

But that's what they do, they take something in nature generally, they add to it and splice things together and create a new type. That's what they do, under the guise, under the guise that, well something in the past we've had before, the Spanish flu, might just come back again, we're ready to fight it this time. And then they'll get it and tweak it in case it would then jump, you see, and do all these varieties that would come out of it. Well, we'll have all these varieties by making it happen, even making them more lethal in case it ever happens.

And this is biowarfare. This is biowarfare, this is what you do in biowarfare. Always under the guise of what if it jumps, let's be ready for it, so we'll make it jump to show that it can be done, and we'll wait and see if it does itself. What a lot of nonsense, 'eh? That's what they do all the time. So, I'll put a link for that up to that talk that he gave.

And getting back to the same thing, it's all connected you understand. All connected. That you have this article…

Taiwanese professor says Wuhan coronavirus likely man-made - taiwannews.com.tw / 24 Feb 2020

National Taiwan University professor, he goes into it in some detail as to why, what occurs in nature, what doesn't occur in nature and he talks about these little inserts that are put onto them, these four inserts of course that literally make this thing, ha, like purpose made for what it's doing today. Never mind all the massive preparations to deal with the fallout, which is really martial law type systems across the world if, if it continues, etc., if it continues. The authorities are just chomping at the bit to go into action I think, you know.

And then again, it falls in line again with the big, there's too many of all of you type idea, right. They said that at the last climate change, there's just too many people, and have fewer children, if we can get authority to eventually forbid the people to have children, etc. etc. etc., and manage who could and who couldn't have children, then it would be less carbon and less, more sustainable for the planet and so on. So, you are the problem, right.

Wuhan coronavirus could cause male infertility: Chinese study taiwannews.com.tw / 19 Feb 2020

Fan Caibin, a urologist at Nanjing Medical University Affiliated Suzhou Hospital, on Feb. 12 posted the results of a scientific research project which found that the disease not only damages the lungs, but also the kidneys and testes, potentially leading to male infertility. The team summarized the clinical data of three previous studies, which included six patients, 41 patients, and 99 patients, respectively.

The study found that kidney dysfunction occurs in 3 to 10 percent of novel coronavirus (COVID-19) infection. In addition, acute damage to the kidneys occurs in seven percent of patients.

As for the disease's effect on the male urinary tract and reproductive system, the research team used an online dataset to analyze the expression of Angiotensin-converting enzyme-2 (ACE2), the receptor the virus uses as its host.

(Alan: It tricks it to allow itself to come into your body. Actually, tricks it. What an amazing system, 'eh, how this has been, just developed itself in nature, right. But it says…)

SARS is known to use ACE2 to enter and infect human cells, and COVID-19 appears to be using the same method.

(A: They go into it in quite some detail. But they do mention that...)

The study found that ACE2 "highly expresses in renal tubular cells, Leydig cells, and cells in seminiferous ducts in testes." Their findings indicate that the virus may directly bind to ACE2 positive cells and inflict damage to patients' kidney and testicular tissue.

And they warn that that could lead to infertility in males. Isn't that, if you wanted to make a lucky bag of all your wishes, if you were a power that had all these plans for depopulation, altering what you put down recently as your enemies, which you built up in the first place, and then of course the one in North Korea that they've always kept on standby to wave their swords at. And it's just a bulldog for China, North Korea, that's what it is, its guard dog. It's a pawn. It's a pawn as a front for China itself in case they were invaded from that direction. So, they get hit big time. And then Iran gets it. You couldn't… What's next, who else is on the wish list? [Alan chuckles.]   When you think about it, 'eh? And then you get all the different changes at home as well.

But I'll put all these links up including the professor from Harvard who is a specialist in his field talking to students about, should they be making these potential pandemic diseases, making new ones in the laboratory. Which is commonplace with them, that's what they do, folks.

There's a management system in this world way above what you perceive to be government. Those who are placed in government above you have inklings of it and enough savvy to know to obey it. And they'll never tell you that. They must play their parts. Because they're all like little petty actors, really. Anthony Sutton used to talk about Wall Street helping to create the Bolshevik Revolution, that was one of the titles of one of his books. And Who Financed Hitler up to the top too. And The Greatest Enemies Money Can Buy. We pay for them, and then they're going to be your enemy? Are you really falling for this, folks?

There's a power on this earth that really people don't want to talk about. Because they want to believe, oh... It's frightening for a lot of people, who are trained to be naïve, and decent people, decent, you see, decent people who don't want to think bad things about people. They're perfect for rulership, over them, you know, being ruled. Because they've been brought up to be that way.

But there really is an organization that runs the world. Every enemy you've had for the last hundred-odd years, it's more, and probably before then too, but in the last hundred years it's been more obvious for those who want to really look at it. It was created by the ones you're going to end up fighting, you create them, you build them up, you arm them even, and then you say oh my God look. Even give all your trade to them and factories to them until you can't make anything for yourself, and then you just suddenly notice when there's a crisis, how are we going to survive without them? That you just suddenly…?

There's not a move made on the chessboard before it's all thought through, every facet of change, with think tanks working on every possible scenario of what if, what would happen if, if, if. There's no spontaneous anything in this at all. That's how you keep control of the world.

And the same ones who control the world have made it quite plain, like Prince Philip, there's too many of you. Too many of you. And then the world meeting on depopulation, or overpopulation, and during World War II that they had in London. King George, who supposedly presided over it, they weren't killing enough people off in the war, what were they going to do to bring down the population after the war was finished? This wasn't talking about Africa here, their favorite topic, Africa or somewhere else. This is about Britain. [Alan chuckles.] And Australia eventually. And all the other colonies as they like to call them, or dominions.

A completely different system than the one you're taught to believe in. Completely different, folks. Where Prince Philip has been so obvious about it. So, when you hear people prattling on about deliberately setting free biowarfare, no, don't call them paranoid and stupid and all the rest of it. Because I've done shows on the stuff which was done on Britain and all the different releases of agents on the British populace by their governments, I did it years ago, step-by-step.

As I say, cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Remember too, folks, help me out by sending some cash my way once in a while. Cuttingthroughthematrix.com. You can go into all the other sites that have on that main site there and find out how to send cash my way. Because as I say I never, I always forget to ask for it. I'm not selling you stuff. I'm not selling you T-shirts or elixirs of life that will make you youthful or keep you alive forever. I just try to give you advice and some education as well to life as it really is. And to fill in some of the gaps sometimes.

Now, I'll just touch on a few things before I get off here. Because again, I never really talk about what I was even thinking of talking about. Because I prefer to have a free mind in its way of thinking and conveying things to people because it's so important that you have the time to listen. Everything's bits and bytes and people come on and all do their half-hour here or one hour there and so on. I try to stay off the emotional side. I don't go into the political side, it's a waste of time. As I say, if voting worked for the people it would've been made illegal long ago.

This world they're bringing in and rationing and austerity that I've talked about so many times before that they've signed on to at the United Nations, as I say, this is the second part of 9/11 that we're going through now. That's what it is. And it will never be the same again afterwards. They'll never give up powers of even more intrusive and intrusiveness into the system. And mandatory medications will come down the pike too. No doubt about that whatsoever.

This article, it's a video…

VIDEO: The "Lock Step" Simulation Scenario: "A Coronavirus-like Pandemic that Becomes Trigger for Police State Controls"

globalresearch.ca / 5 Feb 2020

(A: That's put up by Global Research. They themselves I think are quite openly Marxist. So, I look at everything and I, you know, but not all stuff is slanted, there's always bits and pieces of evidence in anybody's articles if you really, if they're worth anything at all. But it says here…)

By now, those following the novel coronavirus epidemic are familiar with Event 201, the pandemic simulation staged by Johns Hopkins University in conjunction with the World Economic Forum, the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, Johnson & Johnson, and other ruling-class heavy hitters in October. The media establishment has already picked the story clean, set up and eviscerated a straw man (“No, Bill Gates didn’t cause the coronavirus epidemic, silly conspiracy theorists!”), and convinced the group itself to issue a statement denying their exercise (A: ... on this planned exercise, a computer exercise…) was meant to predict the behavior of the actual virus to follow.

But few are aware that the epidemic playing out in China and two dozen other countries, including the US, is unfolding in line with a decade-old simulation titled “Lock Step” (A: ...Lock Step…) devised by the Rockefeller Foundation in conjunction with the Global Business Network. The scenario, one of four included in a publication called “Scenarios for the Future of Technology and International Development” in 2010, describes a coronavirus-like pandemic that becomes the trigger for the imposition of police-state controls on movement, economy, and other areas of society.

Lock Step scenario describes “a world of tighter top-down government control and more authoritarian leadership ...

(A: Remember what the Club of Rome said, democracy doesn't work, they can't get things done, they need the professionals to be in charge who could just order and the people obey. That's really what it's about. And here's their chance 'eh. You know, these guys at the top like the Project for a New American Century group, who in the 90s published their agenda of countries to be, that they'd like to be eliminated, and altered and changed. And then you got 9/11. These guys, if they ran, if they were to buy a lotto ticket, they'd win, obviously. Every time, they'd win. And the same with the ones that did this one here with Lockstep, 'eh. They just seem to know. Maybe they've got better… Maybe they don't use teabags. Maybe they use the loose tea and then read the tea leaves once they finished in the bottom of the cup. And predict the future. Because they are incredibly lucky. This particular article isn't too bad, you know.)

Countries of Africa, southeast Asia, and central America suffer the worst “in the absence of official containment protocols” –

(A: It's quite good. Police state is good, and freedom is bad. That's the message of course for it all too.)

Another one too is quite interesting. It's…

Novel Antibody May Suppress HIV for Up to Four Months

Regular infusions of an antibody that blocks the HIV binding site on human immune cells may have suppressed levels of HIV for up to four months in people undergoing a short-term pause in their antiretroviral therapy (ART) regimens, according to a report published online today in The New England Journal of Medicine.

Well, it's interesting that they're trying to use different anti-AIDS medications as well to slow down or limits the bad effects of this coronavirus. Also, I’ll put up this one too…

Canada prepares pandemic response plan as coronavirus cases continue to climb

(A: I wonder why they're climbing?)

Chief Public Health Officer Theresa Tam says trajectory of COVID-19 still unknown

But they don't tell you much. Really, it's very... I think they censor things into such simplistic thinking that you lose any message at all. I think that's part of the way [Alan chuckles.] the bureaucrats speak to the public, you know, in socialist type countries. And socialism, I could use with a very loose kind of cover because it's very authoritarian. Actually, they call it progressive. The ones who rule the world like that term. Also…

Chinese authorities cover streets in clouds of disinfectant to halt spread of deadly coronavirus - news.com.au

It’s interesting because there’s a movie that was made in Canada, I think called… Containment 2015. I looked up to see if it's on YouTube and I think it's on YouTube for free maybe. At the moment. I don't know how long it will be after I speak about it here.

2015 Movie – Containment - youtube.com

Residents of an apartment block wake up to discover they are sealed inside the building.

(A: They weld the door shut, just like they did in China by the way.)

They must work together to find out why before they start to turn on one another.

And in the movie, they show you these foggers of disinfectant in the streets and in the buildings and all that and hazmat suits, etc. Including shooting people who leave quarantined areas. Which is NATO by the way or the NATO countries that signed their agenda. If whole groups try to leave quarantined areas, it's the law there, whether it's radiation or infection, then they have to use nerve gas on those from above if they're trying to escape. And individuals doing it, they're just simply shoot. That's even in the movie. So, they were following the NATO plan actually, which is the law. All NATO countries have signed on to that long ago. And how you're told, just stay in your buildings and obey. And always telling you it's all going to be all right, even if they're going to, they might even, bump you off, [Alan chuckles.] they'll say, don't worry. What else do you expect from politicians, 'eh?

This is interesting…

Coronavirus 'could be 1,000 times more infectious than SARS, scientists warn as they discover it plagues the body the same way as HIV and Ebola

dailymail.co.uk / 28 Feb 2020

(A: This is what's so interesting about this particular type, you see. If it was a matter of luck, putting something together in nature, to make it really really efficient, an efficient spreader of, you know, a disease, a very fast, and able to trick the body and fool the body to allow the body to be invaded. This is something I don't really think happens that easily in nature myself. That's my opinion.)

(A: So, they claim antibiotics already on the market could treat coronavirus. I don't know what they're talking about, what antibiotics there? It won't be penicillin types because they're no use against viruses. They really should have said of antiviral drugs, I suppose.)

The coronavirus could be up to 1,000 times more infectious than SARS because it plagues the body in the same way as HIV and Ebola, scientists warn.

Experts initially presumed the spread of COVID-19 would follow the same trajectory as the SARS outbreak in 2002/3, because the viruses are almost identical genetically.

But they have discovered the way it binds to cells in the human body is akin to far more aggressive diseases like HIV and Ebola.

But the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and the World Health Organization (WHO) have warned that antibiotics do not work against viruses (A: ...that's true...) and that over-prescribing and overusing them helps to fuel superbugs.

(A: Well, I'm not quite up with that one would because they've been telling people to use less, and doctors have been prescribing fewer and fewer antibiotics, and for bacterium infections, bacterial infections as you well know. But it says…)

ACE2 (A: This is the receptors that you have.) does not exist in large quantities in healthy people, which helped limit the spread of the 2002 outbreak.

(A: And this is awfully good, I got it from a China site actually.)

Nankai University researchers looked at the genome sequence of COVID-19 and found a section of mutated genes that did not exist in SARS.

Instead the coronavirus has 'cleavage sites' similar to those in HIV and Ebola, (A: This is awfully important because even in biowarfare I was reading a long time ago, that this is something that was getting worked on in some laboratories a long time ago.) which carry viral proteins that are dormant (A: ...okay... So, these cleavage sites similar to those in HIV and Ebola, on the virus, which carry viral proteins that are dormant…) and have to be 'cut' (A: ...they call it...) to be activated.

HIV and Ebola target an enzyme called furin, which is responsible for cutting and activating these proteins when they enter the body.

The viruses trick furin so it activates them and causes a 'direct fusion' between the virus and the human cells. COVID-19 binds to cells in a similar way, the scientists found.

(A: So, it tricks your own cells with an enzyme called furine. And the furine itself that you have will then help cut and activate the proteins on the virus which allows them to enter the body. Isn't that amazing? Great minds at work, 'eh?)

'This finding suggests [the new coronavirus] may be significantly different from the SARS coronavirus in the infection pathway,' the scientists said in the paper.

'Compared to the SARS' way of entry, this binding method is '100 to 1,000 times' as efficient,' they wrote.

(A: This is designed to spread rapidly and infect an awful lot of people. And don't forget...)

The study was published on Chinaxiv.org, a platform used by the Chinese Academy of Sciences to release scientific papers before they have been peer-reviewed.

(A: So, it's pretty well worked out now pretty, pretty well.)

The mutation could not be found in Sars, Mers (A: Middle East respiratory syndrome.) or Bat-CoVRaTG13, a bat coronavirus that was considered the original source of COVID-19, the paper said.

(A: They can't find that mutation in anything from the bats by the way. I wonder how it got there, 'eh? Hmmm.)

So anyway, that's what we're living through. And a lot of people that are in authority and have been harping on from their institutions about the terrible overpopulation of the world, and useless eaters, like Bertrand Russell and so on. All the descendants of Russell and his kin are all rubbing their hands in glee at such a chance to get things done. Don't forget again, in the last climate meeting that they had they talked about they might eventually need, maybe quite soon, the authority to limit population or who breeds. That was an old old thing going all the way back to the days of Malthus of course Thomas Malthus. They never change.

Coronavirus likely now ‘gathering steam’ - news.harvard.edu / 11 Feb 2020

Now of course with this coming along the pike, there may be rationing coming in, and who knows how long they're going to drag it on. You're going to see a lot of things changing for the agenda’s sake, put it that way, that's been on the papers for an awful long time. We are essentially programmed; predictive programming is used all the time bit by bit to get us used to everything that's eventually going to be done to us. By authorities and by those who guide and predict and plan and guide the direction of the world.

Anyway, for myself Alan Watt from Ontario Canada, where it's still awfully cold by the way. It's nice at night, mind you, walked out in the middle of the night there, you don't see all the stars anymore since 2005 or 6 because of the heavy heavy spraying, the global dimming as NASA likes to call it. You see the brighter stars. But when you walk out at night in the country and look over the snow, it's a timeless feeling. You truly are, it’s a timeless feeling, you're in a timeless moment many have shared maybe for thousands of years before you. It's quite… It's really something to hold onto. Because it makes life worth living.

The occasional fox, like last year, would come up and get fed. It was so cold, he had had enough, you know.

I hope you're all safe and stay safe. Use basic precautions regardless. But don't just give up and collapse over by terror. Because governments thrive on terror. That's what authority thrives on. As I say, from the days of Kitchener remember, when you can't make the people love and obey you and serve you, then you terrify them. Nothing ever changes.

Have a few friends hopefully and you can all depend on each other. And just like the movie, that Containment movie, I'll put the link up tonight, but don't turn on each other through stress and any kind of hardship that could, who knows, come along. It might fizzle out, who knows what really is going to happen or might be planned, put it that way.

Many people too are just hoping that a second type doesn't suddenly just magically appear, and they'll say that it's evolved, you know, to become even more virulent and dangerous. Let's hope not. Let's just hope for the best.

Take care of each other. A few friends can help you along the way. For myself Alan Watt from Ontario Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Mar 8, 2020 "Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt (Blurb, i.e. Educational Talk): " To Treat or Not to Treat "

Hi folks I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through the Matrix on March 8, 2020. And what a roller coaster ride we're being taken on by our wonderful masters. There's so many topics [Alan chuckles.] related to the main topic of complete fear and terror we're getting today because there are many disciplines coming into action that most folk are really unaware of. And you're kept unaware of them generally. But I've lived through quite a few previous heavy outbreaks of flu for instance, and through the SARS in 2003 in Toronto. We've had the H1N1 and different ones since then too. And it's awfully interesting to tie so many things together.

Because you gotta remember, you're trained what to think. And you're literally given, you're led to the answers and conclusions that they want you to have on pretty well every topic. And they are your masters, the ones who give you your thoughts. That's why media has always been heavily controlled in all countries. And it's not my opinion or conspiracy theory, the fact is, even their own authors within their own foundations and through their big conglomerates of the newspaper press have written books about it themselves.

Including Carroll Quigley who was a professor as you well know, who taught many members who became high up in the State Department and the foreign departments or offices for the US. He was literally, became also the historian, he took over from Zimmerman as a kind of a historian for a while for the Council on Foreign Relations, where they have their own history of how things really happen as opposed to the histories that you're told, the authorized histories. They have their own version of it because they boast about the fact that they lead the world in directions that it's supposed to go into, according to their own plans and so on. And he says this in his own books for goodness sake, so it's hardly conspiracy theory.

But you're given your thoughts. In fact, Quigley himself was pulled in he said to different, there are audios out there of him talking about this particular part of his life where he worked. He was pulled in as a professor along with a couple of other ones, who are on the list, when anybody came up with conspiracy theories that were too close to a truth, and this is what he said himself, and they would bring them on to debate whoever put the books out or whatever. He said that eventually he hit someone he couldn't, couldn't ridicule. Because that's what they do they bring you on to ridicule you, you see. Not the truth of what you're saying, if you just ridicule the person and smear them then the audience will just switch off and never listen to them again, they'll think they're crazy. And that's what you're supposed to think.

But I think it was Gary Allen [and Larry Abraham] he said that he was told to debate. And he was stumped because Gary Allen [Quigley meant Larry Abraham, who coauthored None Dare Call it Conspiracy with Gary Allen] had done his homework on the big big world agenda, with all the different agencies working behind it on behalf of you might say the cap of the pyramid, and he said he couldn't beat him. And I think that was a book called None Dare Call It Conspiracy, that started to tie things together. One of the many books actually. But that's what's Quigley's job was at one point was to get pulled in, paid big bucks, just ridicule people with his supposed superior knowledge. And literally whoever they were meant to ridicule, would be a laughingstock, turn them into a laughingstock so the public would switch off.

Because there are too many truths out there that you just can't keep stifled forever. An awfully good example has just been the recent one. And I understand how it's done and why it's done. But you literally had the mainstream media, all the authorized ones, to me they're obviously getting subsidized by governments in a big way because they're not bringing money in so much in advertising in this day and age. Because media, authorized media is a very important right hand of government to keep the people in line by telling them what to think, giving them the conclusions on things and so on. Even how they tell them who to vote for. I have watched that my whole life long.

But just recently as I say with this outbreak that came of the Covid-19, the media went into action immediately, immediately, across the board, to ridicule anybody mentioning it, and it was a dangerous thing and it was on its way and all the rest of it. And really, they lambasted anybody. Then on a particular day about two weeks, three weeks afterwards on queue the whole media started to repeat the exact same things that the so-called supposed conspiracy people had been, the ones they had labeled as conspiracy theorists had been saying for a few weeks. That's how quick, you know, the buttons go on and off.

Because you're not dealing with truth. You're not dealing with rationality as such. You're dealing with plans. Rationality can only really come into play if you had a really honest system. Then you could figure things out, what's going on here, somebody made a mistake or whatever. No, no. When it's planned this way it's a different plan altogether. There's always a bigger plan on the go altogether and the folk don't quite catch on to it.

You're trained your entire life long, your entire life you're trained and there many parts of your life where there's different parts of an agenda underway. In 2007/8 I and many others talked about the coming crash. It was obvious it was coming. And it was obvious if you watched it all, kept your ears open and read a lot of stuff from the business communities and so on. Boring stuff for most folk. And it's boring stuff, I don't like it myself. But the fact is, you get a lot of information as to what's really happening.

This was expected to happen in 2007/8 not just to do with the banks, which they did go on steroids at the time and started flipping mortgages, like thousands of them per day, into the millions of them just getting literally flipped and flipped and flipped and sold off, even to other banks until after the big crash happened. It wasn't for a few years before they could start figuring out who actually owned the titles at all for these mortgages which they were flipping. What a feast frenzy of vampires. Honestly, that's what it was.

Many became homeless. They had homeless towns and tent cities set up. Lots of people lost their homes. But that was coming because it was discussed to come. Long long before that, it was discussed when free trade was pushed and before the factories were all paid to move over to China. Your tax money paid for them through the free trade agreements. Incredible that they kept this fairly quite from the public. Some people including myself talked about it. But the big boys in the mainstream authorized media just kept it quiet. They wouldn't go into anything, any details into anything.

But we paid for entire factories, thousands and thousands of them to move over to China. And set up, we paid for their setting up. And under the agreements we paid for them to get reimbursed for any losses which they think they may have incurred in the move and the set up period and they wouldn't have to pay any taxes for 15 years. That was... What a deal, 'eh? And really cheap, cheap, cheap labor. What a deal.

And the countries that sent them over there, you know, the West, all your politicians in the West, all these characters that you vote for thinking that they stand for you, I don't know where you get that from, I really don't, but they literally, they sent them off there to set up and all the rest of it, leave you with no work back home for a long time, except for maybe 10 part-time jobs on the go. That's what they said, oh you have to start juggling jobs like it was all quite natural to do so.

But yeah, the big corporations didn't have to pay any taxes for 15 years setting up. And China didn't have to do anything either, they could still charge in China, a so-called emerging country, as India is now too, under the agreements, which was set up, drafted up by the Council on Foreign Relations the West and the Royal Institute of International Affairs, and you don't vote for them but that's who drafted up all these treaties and told your governments what to sign. Because your government leaders are all members [Alan chuckles.] of the same organization. A private group.

If they didn't make what they said, enough profit in the first 15 years, they could claim another 15. So, for 30 years they didn't have to pay any taxes. And then the emerging nation could, they were allowed to put taxes on imported goods so that you'd buy domestic products. But the countries that were paying them and setting them up literally couldn't do the same thing, you'd have to bring in their stuff, guaranteed to come in without import duties and things like that. Just an incredible deal for the big big corporations. And most folk are unaware of this.

Unaware. Totally unaware. Right down to the fact we're still paying parts of China, as an emerging nation, to help them subsidize hospitals and things like that. Canada was highly responsible for building big electric power plants and so on over there for them too. We are awfully kind to the world, aren't we? We don't even know we're being kind because we're kept in the dark about it all.

It's just astonishing that you're trained constantly. And they knew then before, before they made all the moves, to move all this manufacturing… D'you realize how many people work in factories in Canada and the States, as an example, who literally were getting written off, completely written off by your loving governments? And nothing to replace it really. Disgusting.

But they knew before they made all the moves, any move, that eventually without the taxes, the multiple levels of taxes coming in from manufacturing, from raw materials all the way up to finished products, the government would need more and more money. So, they started taxing the people all the more, you see. So, your standard of living had to go down. But it would get to a stage in a service economy – because that's all you do, you import stuff and middlemen sell it to each other until eventually it gets sold to the stores and so on and then you buy it – that eventually you'd have a crash.

So, the 2007/8 crash was literally foreseen back in the 90s. It was understood to happen. You're living through an incredible agenda and folk don't know it. They really don't know it. They still don't know it, most of them. Because once, and this is, I've read some amazing books that ridicule with utter contempt what the elite think of the ordinary people, the average people, even the middle classes, utter contempt. And nothing's changed.

So, as I said last week, you're kept in a state of fear and potential panic by impending doom and gloom. And what's true is that, no wonder, even for those who do study it, you're maybe a bit more wary and a bit more afraid than other folks. Because there are so many of them at the top who constantly harp on at University levels working with big think tanks and governments and bioethicists that they like they call themselves now, there's just too many people. And you hear these things over and over again.

And we kind of chew the cud, as they call it, you're chewing the cud. You're in the field, we're chewing the cud there, you know, and you're getting well entertained with a lot of cheap entertainment. And in your entertainment comes your programming as well. In between the entertainment you get little wildlife things and then you get little scientific blurbs on how we should live and the problems of humans living on the planet. And you're chewing the cud and it's all sinking in, bite by bite by bite by bite, you see.

But in times when you're quite happy and you don't take much notice, it just gets embedded somewhere in the back your brain, that's how it seems to be, in the shadowland. But you're getting programmed with all of it. And eventually it will come to the stage where it will be like an episode in an old Star Trek series where eventually your time, your number comes up on this particular little planet in the series. Your number comes up as expendable, to keep the population down, in a war situation between two planets. It was all done by computer; it wasn't real weapons getting fired. You would have to just, your number came up, you went into this evaporation chamber and that was you, you're gone, you see. That's your fate and you're trained to accept it.

Well, if you realized what your fate is today, how it's changed, with all the values being turned upside down in this big long war that you've been in, that you don't even know you've been in, and your parents too. Your parents might have suspected more than you do, and grandparents too.

Grandparents definitely at one time had more insight and mistrust of government and authorities in all systems. I don't care if you call it communist or fascist, they're all fascists. They're all fascist. Human nature it seems, with the power psychopaths that get into positions, and seek out these positions, and love to be rich and love to rule other people, they have a craving for it, I don't care what uniform or what title that you use, it's all the same, it's part of their human nature.

And there's no doubt about it, they're in bed with top corporations, you know, corporations in bed with government. Private think tanks that also get massive funding from the big corporations themselves, some of the big think tanks literally are part of these big corporations that advise governments, as they like to call it, we advise governments. Well, do you vote for the people that advise governments? Again, under this Disneyland myth of democracy, you think that somehow the politicians are listening to you? Do you really believe that?

The Council on Foreign Relations, they used to always bring on their members on television for certain topics. They have specialists in different areas, you see, they call themselves specialists and they would mention what they told the president or prime minister whatever happened to be and they would just say, CFR member or RIIA member, you see. Now they've got European members too for the European Parliament too. It's all the same one organization. And the Far Eastern one too, they have that too.

Their goal was always world government by the way. Always a world government, which they would shape. They would through this chess game of different cultures and that, on the way to world government, this is the idea, they would eventually shape in a new system with a new culture, universal culture, and all that. And of course, their masters would own all the land and properties. And agenda 21 for the 21st century, no private property. Yeah. It's all the same thing only it never stops. It never stops.

Anybody who's anybody in the last 200 years has been a member of these organizations. Before you even heard the names used of Council on Foreign Relations/Royal Institute of International Affairs they always had the groups, and even before Lord Alfred Milner, they had other ones before them too. And the underground stream, as they liked to call themselves, all little things they could mention in public, the public would be ignorant of and would never understand.

But you're living through this agenda. And you have all the experts on board today with psychologists and behaviorists and neuroscientists, and bioethics committees all working together. Across the Internet too. I've done the talks on the different ones working on the Internet to steer you along the right way. If you stand back and you can keep your nerve, you get a great view of everything, how the whole world is controlled, pretty seamlessly. Where no one has any privacy accept the ruling elite themselves. And they DO have complete privacy. And they have a different system of communication for themselves too that you can't get into.

But for the rest of you, you see, we're all managed and analyzed and constantly counter- and sub-analyzed, until we're literally molecules. They break us into molecules and try to figure out what you'll do in a whole bunch of scenarios, according to all the data that daily is added to the profile of you, the virtual reality you. You talk about control freaks. Nothing to do with terrorism. Nothing to do with terrorism at all.

The saddest thing, when you look at all the wars we've been in and told they were just wars, they were the good wars and all that kind of thing. Unfortunately, when you really get into them, and it does take 100 years generally for official secrets acts to be taken off. Sometimes earlier but in real, like World War II and so on, some were taken off after 50 years, 75, the rest were 100 years. Because they don't want the public turning on them. If you just released the truth when you were fighting and what you were fighting for and who profited from it and what they really intended from it all, as opposed to what they trained you to believe it was all for, you might turn on them as soon as you get back home from fighting abroad or whatever.

Massive agendas. And the public are never unfortunately told the truth. Well, the same thing goes with this present thing, with the coronavirus. It's going to accomplish a whole bunch of things, obviously. I can remember when 9/11 happened, and you had little soundbites, the soundbites that would come through the haze of the psychic driving of towers going down, towers going down, towers going down and down and down over and over. And the little clips you'd see, this is all worked out by top behaviors and psychologists and so on working for government agencies.

As I say, in between the psychic driving you're also getting these bits and pieces. I remember there were leaders from the CFR at the time who actually said, it's the first time I heard them using this openly, I had read it in books and so on, their own books for instance, but to hear them actually saying this, and as members of the CFR in the States, saying, how can we use this disaster or catastrophe to our advantage, for our long long cherished goals?

And it's like a mystic, you're listening to mysticism here because it doesn't explain what their long-cherished goals are. And why would they be using something like this to help achieve it? And it's these little quips and little things you get, little soundbites that add up to the big picture. You've got to understand this. This is how you will learn. This is how you really learn. It's not learning by rote and just parrot parrot parrot dates, times and generals and battles. You have to learn for yourself by experiencing it. And that's how you really learn.

I looked into it too and I've even looked up the CFR guy, I know his name and everything else. In between the other soundbites he had, immediately of course before the dust settled, that, oh it was bin Laden that was behind it. You know, they just knew that. It's just astonishing what you can see through the fog of war, or the dust you might say, and they could see that immediately.

Interestingly too, isn't it interesting that the man that Trump pardoned, one of the guys he pardoned was part of the Police Department of that, of New York City at the time. He's the guy who came out with the passport that fluttered down from the sky, the Arabian passport, you know, that... Well, here you are, and there you go, see. The only thing that wasn't burned that day was that. That's the guy who's now been put in charge of other things since then too. And of course, there's much more to him as to where his allegiance happens to lie. Literally, lie, perhaps.

But it's astonishing to live through this life and watch it all. And then you have this coronavirus, hm. You've already got the loose…, the same stuff, I mean… I can remember on 9/11 2001 you had Rumsfeld and you had all the rest of the crew, that crew [Alan chuckles.] that infamous crew that were dealing with and running the government, and Cheney and all the rest of them. They were having an exercise that day, ‘eh? An exercise on a report of an attack on New York, exercise, it was all basically supposedly made believe, 'eh? And the jet planes would intercept anyone flying below a certain height off the beaten track, would always be intercepted, but not that day. They even called in, they knew the planes were coming in and they were told to stand down there was an exercise.

So we're supposed to believe, hm, you're supposed to believe that after all those years in the Cold War of missiles, and we're going to get fried with buttons pushed and all that, you're supposed to believe they just, the same massive massive superstructure just failed that day because someone mixed it up with the exercise and called off the interceptor aircraft. Yeah. Okay. Fine.

Then you had the same thing with the 7/7 in London a few years later, right. The same day an exercise was to take place, with thousands of folks employed to take part in it. Where eventually the bus was redirected down to a particular street, right, with a bomb on it, where it blew up. Just happened to be the same thing in that exercise that day. And it all went awry, supposedly. And as usual all the security cameras failed and everything. Astonishing, 'eh? And it was an exercise that day.

Then you come up to this event last November and you had Event 201. That was a tabletop exercise, they like to call it tabletop exercise, in November 2019. Event 201, held at Johns Hopkins University with the participation of the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation members, and WHO members to do with pandemics and so on, and professionals for the US agencies that would be involved if such a thing where ever to break out, and then the different doctors and all the rest of it. And different sections of society especially including the military, who would deal with problems as they would emerge and unfold.

They came out, I read that before, they came out with their amazing statements, how many folks, on their tabletop exercise, that it could kill. And how all the different agencies all working together would keep it quiet in the beginning. And don't tell the public, just sooth them and keep them, oh it's just another flu or whatever, keep them calm. That's the first… Just like the movies, 'eh, the actual movies themselves, when anything big happens in the movies, oh don't tell the public the truth, don't tell them the truth. And that's how they really are, you see. But then it's quite easy to them because they never tell you the truth anyway about anything. And folk in authority, the real folk in authority who are behind the scenes, that you don't vote for generally, are the ones that you have to watch, you have to really watch them. Because they really know that they've got all this authority and they want to use it. They're itching to use it.

It's kinda like the guys who practiced bombing Russia all through the Cold War and vice versa, you see, all the different pilots from Russia and the States, who spent a good career, their whole lives a lot of them, just practicing dummy runs to bomb the enemy. And they're all quite happy at the end, I'm sure, I'd hope so anyway, that they didn't have to do it in reality.

But a lot of these control freaks that you get in authority, with fancy little titles, they love little titles and stuff, and they get paid awfully awfully good money, they're itching to get into action, you see. Just like robots, they go along the exact same way as they have been trained to do it. And they've trained themselves, these are the guys who make up the procedures often. So, the first thing they do is, like the first casualty of war, or the first casualty of dealing with the general public from government is always to lie, you see. So, the truth is the first casualty of war.

They sooth you, there-there, don't worry about it. They get professional who get paid awfully well anyway but they get extra cash for coming out and looking into the camera with as much sincerity as Bill Clinton did when he says, I did not have sex with that woman. And you're supposed to believe him, you see, and you say, oh, well, I won't worry about this disease that's breaking out.

They've already got it in the works, you see, it takes 2 to 3 months to get everything set up to deal with the caseload when it really comes down, including all the things that they've got to unfold step-by-step. But every step they try, they'll lie to you. And every step, it's like that Cobra in London, it's the same kind of system as this Johns Hopkins tabletop exercise as they call it. Right down to, mind you, and this is what I noticed years ago with bioethicists. Bioethics was a much more recent, really, term they used for a new field of managing the great heard, the human herd, you see, to make it more cost-efficient. Everything was cost efficiency.

Even years ago, when the H1N1 was on the go and so on, I can remember doing the talks on the radio at the time. They even had things on The Daily Mail in Britain, articles with big transport trailer trucks, refrigerated units all plugged in one after another, maybe six in a row, at a big hospital in England and they said this is to deal with all the corpses from the H1N1. It was really a very soothing article. So, we've been through that in the past you see. But they didn't over blow it like this one here.

But now you've got all these different committees set up as they say, like the Event 201. And it makes you wonder, because in China they're beginning to wonder too if this thing had broken out around November, definitely around December. Again, one of these coincidences where it just happens to basically be like a dress rehearsal for the great real thing here, Event 201, dress rehearsal. Right down to how they'll manage the public step-by-step.

One of the first things of course was managing again the media. Not the general media. They mentioned it themselves, they had all the big social networking organizations on board with them. And you know which ones they are naturally; you're all using them probably. So, they made already agreements with them in advance and all that kind of stuff, to censor people, etc.

Now, we already had the censoring stuff long before it happened. I think I've been censored for many, many years, before you even heard of the shadow banning stuff. Because they really faked and fudged, still do, the numbers of folks who come in to see my stuff, believe you me. And leave me with what would appear to be a minuscule amount. All because I wouldn't get on board with the big agenda. If I did get on board with the big agenda and those who rule it, they'd be throwing money at me like you wouldn't believe. Honestly. I really mean that. But I wouldn't take the bait and be a prostitute. So that's what happens.

I keep telling folk out there, the big ones out there are all bought and paid for, folks. And they're not what you think they are. And they took over what used to be the real alternate media, step-by-step, until the followers didn't even notice it was getting taken over and now they've gone 180° and don't even realize it. They don't know that. Or who even owns these big ones, 'eh.

So anyway, in this Event 201 they go through it, step-by-step by step. And how they would even punish folk, even little guys that would just mention things that weren't authorized to talk about. Or it didn't matter how well-trained they were in any profession by the way, if they weren't authorized, they'd get ridiculed. Again, just like the Carroll Quigley thing. But they'd also get slapped big time with electronic harassment, things like that. And by that, I mean they can cut off your phone calls. They can cut off your services. They'll stop any inflow of cash coming your way. This is what they were discussing, folks.

All you who believe you're going to vote again for the, huh… maintain the, huh, huh, free society... They're doing it all now. As soon as this coronavirus whacked in China and all that, anybody that mentioned it, anybody with an inquiring mind that when into why, where did this come from...? Because it's got strange similarities to stuff that could be developed in laboratories, etc. etc. Immediately hammered. And then again as I say on a certain date all the media, weeks later, after ridiculing all these conspiracy..., they repeated the same stuff.

That's how you're managed. It's so blatant. The sad thing is most folk will never remember it happening. Or as time goes on, they'll forget, then go back to square one again. It's very sad that. But you've never had such a great example of total control by the media and by those who control the media and who owned them for that matter.

And by the way I'm not saying this is fake at all. Far from it. This is going to, this particular coronavirus is going to accomplish a lot of things, judging from the reaction that was all set to be unfolded step-by-step-by-step. Eventually you're going to find that it's just too inefficient with all our countries being individual sovereign nations, and one country doing one thing and another country doing another thing, and it's just… look at the disasters, we need to go into the world and create a new system of global control.

Because that's what 9/11 did. Well, we have to give parts of our sovereignty up. Not just personally, that too, but also the nation-state would have to give up part of its sovereignty up, we have to come together and fight terrorism and share intelligence and share military stuff and share share share, you see. And out of this would come the same kind of thing. Financial problems, a new system perhaps altogether.

But you'll definitely get, we can't go on like this, because look at the terrible consequences and let it be a warning to us, etc., for the next one that happens along, if we could be better prepared for it in a global system. And the whole world goes into action immediately, together, you see. You're going to hear this all unfold step-by-step as we go along through all this.

Because nothing that's happened today, to me anyway, has made any sense at all. You don't bring in, especially as they say, you know, it's a novel, new, novel, right, noveau coronavirus. New. Meaning, you don't understand it. And when you get into this area, this field, one of the first commandments is that you don't take chances with it. It's new. It's got definitely new characteristics. And they know what some of them are for sure, but you don't know how it's going to behave, that's the first thing you take. And you got to protect the people.

What you don't allow cruise ships to still take off to travel all over the place and come back with people who are infected. You don't do that. You don't let flights come in and out for weeks and weeks actually from countries that are infected with it. It doesn't matter, even if it's in that area or not in that area, but if the country itself has infections in it, you just don't take that chance if you had something that's a killer. That's how it used to be, you see.

But you see now you're in the new system where, we had shades of what's happening in the West now before breaking out in China and in South Korea where they said, well you know, we can't, we won't be able to stop it anyway so we'll have to accept it. Well, that was always it seems to be the new system, was don't panic the people and don't tell them you're all going to get it. Until it sunk into them, that maybe they're all going to get it and it's inevitable. Inevitable because they've allowed it all to happen [Alan chuckles.] by not really doing real quarantine.

Right down to the farce of, well you know, a week will do fine or eight days. Then they tell you it could take, some folk don't develop symptoms for 24 days. Never believe that those at the top are just utterly incompetent. Don't believe that. That's how they love to write their little agendas down in the history books, that folk just made mistakes and dut-dut-dut. Really? It doesn't happen like that.

Out of all of this will come a world, above even the World Health Organization, and even they were clapping away at the beginning too because they thought this would get more control over world government in a sense. Now, when things don't make sense there's always an agenda. The people are not stupid. And you have people who are trained in different professions who can use their own logic. There's also a lot of folk in professions, honestly, that are not equipped for using [Alan chuckles.] the gray matter in their brains. Honestly, it's true. That's true as well. Especially those who get up the ladder in areas of governing over, governing the people in some capacity, it's more so in that, you know.

When you look at the Spanish flu and the BBC did a documentary on the Spanish flu, again, not too long ago, just to get us in the mood I suppose. At the time the Spanish flu was on the go, and it broke out amongst the troops mainly who were still in Europe at the time in 1918. You wouldn't believe the political decisions of those in authority back in Britain, as an example.

The Flu that Killed 50 Million - bitchute.com / 4 July 2019

They knew they were sending troops over, still over to do more fighting because they're always running out of troops. The war was still going on. At the top they decided it was more important to get, keep the war going, even though it would kill millions of people, and maybe even millions at home in fact for that matter. So, they did, they played it down and played it down and played it down. I mean, the folk took care of the havoc themselves including the burying of the dead and everything else. They just, that's what folk do, you know.

And you had a weakened population with rationing even then in World War I. They were not, you didn't see obese people back in those days, folks. Because the ordinary folks didn't have great diets at all. So here they're also on rationing during the war, world war, and terrible living conditions, a lot of them couldn't even afford heat in the winter. Still, some of them still can't today by the way, and that was acceptable by the bioethicists, that, well that's acceptable, a certain amount die every year, so many thousands of pensioners in their own homes. Anyway, getting back to World War I.

It was decided at the top to even when they knew a ship that they were sending over to Europe was infected by people who had come back from Europe, so here's another troopship going over to Europe from Britain, and with new people, recently, who were infected in the British side, from returning troops, they could've canceled that ship and have it return. But nope. So, you had this ping-pong effect of folk re-infecting other peoples, back and forth, back and forth. And they said at the top, it was a tough decision to make but the war had to be won regardless. ...regardless of the consequences of folk at home dying off! Yeah.

You really think anything has really changed? Doesn't that give you an insight into people who see you literally not just as cannon fodder but little tiny molecules, little peons that they have on their big big chessboard. Because that's what we are, we are little characters on the chessboard's that they play with. Just like the old depictions of Zeus and Hera in the old old mythologies. Even the old movies too. You'd see them playing there with the big chessboard and that's what they do. But even in those movies with gods like Hera and Zeus, they still had a bit of an affection for certain characters that were human. The ones who rule us, I begin to wonder if they have any affection for us at all. Really, you know.

Because even looking at Event 201, and they listen to these characters all wanting to be noticed for the resumes, by what they're telling them what we should do and so on with their ideas and putting it forward. Nothing, if it came to a World War I situation again, the same things would happen and the same decisions would get made. Oh, the economy has got to keep going regardless, you know. So, keep the people working. And you do have folk going into work now that are spreading the darn stuff. I've always thought that nuts in the Western societies, where you’re kept so poor, so many of the folk, they're terrified of losing their jobs and turning up anyway and spread it around. Isn't it mad? The economy must go on.

And you see, here's the thing. They've already decided and they're not telling you, before it all happened, way back even at Event 201, in the more private version which they won't publish for the public, they've already worked out in a real situation, rather than let the so-called, the system, be overwhelmed and even chance to take the system down by being overwhelmed with the terrible disease, that they would give the propaganda to the public to keep them in Lala land until the very end. Literally. And if you've noticed, all you're getting on the stories now is what? Testing kits.

Do you understand how they've diverted folk off from, wait a minute here, you're supposed to be stopping this, right, from getting into the country and then containing it, but planes are still coming and going from all different places, folks. Boats are still coming in and out. You know. Come on here. It's already been decided. That it's got more functions, this disease, than just breaking out spontaneously supposedly by itself with four new inserts in it. It's all been decided, you see. And you’re hearing the quotes now as they divert you from, as I say, from the fact that they should've been stopping, with some gusto. And they didn't.

Canada even, the Prime Minister was getting havoc at times for making ridiculous comments that, even stopping people coming in from certain countries, which is infected, which is one of the rules and laws of keeping the population safe, right, that it might be racist if you stop them coming in. It's got nothing to do with race. You're either going to save a healthy population, I don't care what it's comprised of, the fact is you got to do it properly. But they all know this.

But then you see, this all ties in with the guys who've been chomping at the bit for years now giving talks on national television stations, built up by stars as scientists who come out and say, there's too many people. There's just too many people. The wrong kind of people, you understand. And it's unsustainable. This is what's really is behind the climate movement, folks, and sustainability. It's the same group at the very very top of ultra elites. And they'll use all their little old trained robots down below to do their dirty work.

But the fact is, this is an old agenda going back to, even before Thomas Malthus. But it's still on the go. And through the Darwinian era too. Darwin was quite outspoken about it. And so was all those around with him, including those in the Royal Society in London. They were all eugenicists, proper breeding and bad breeding and the proper genes and the wrong genes.

And here you are. Now you get down to bioethics, right. Bioethicists, again, that fairly new, and they started making stars of them and present them on TV back in the 90s. And folk would go, what's a bioethicist? Well, they decide, you see, the practical things to do. Then they give you situations in school, and they trick, they bring up their youngsters in a nice atheistic system who believe in Darwinism too, they all came from apes and stuff, and some molecule at one time says, I think I'll develop into an eyeball, and it did it all by itself. But anyway, this is the kind of stuff that they come out with and children get brought up with this too.

The children are brought up in a completely new way of looking at life altogether, right down to, well you see abortion is important. Then let's go to the other end, well older folk are just using resources on this planet. And we're all getting bumped off at one end or the other. Literally. Then of course they bring in euthanasia laws. Which we have really going well here. Until they even have articles saying there's a glut now of organs from all the folk that are getting euthanized.

But how practical this is, isn't it, to do it this way... for the good of the world and the planet and for your bosses who own it all. And they convince the public it's a good thing. Hm. Bioethicists, who've got qualifications in bioethics. Here is a little peon human down there, you know, that little nothing, you should really keep out of it, leave the field to them, the professionals, who are awfully good at convincing you to believe, just give up, just let yourself go, let us deal with you, do you really want the country to spend X amount of bucks on you, to give you life for another 10 to 15 years? I mean, your government could use that cash that you paid in in the first place, hm.

I remember one in Australia saying the same thing, well you know, maybe folk should start thinking about euthanasia by the time they hit 65, rather than collect their pensions, and leave the jobs to younger people. Oh. Really. Well I would say, and please lead by example. Hm. Make some room. It doesn't seem to happen that way.

We are being led and guided by literally almost demons of the mind you might say. That's their job, to convince you to do the right thing, the right thing. Obama mentioned it too, about his grandmother, you know, she could've, rather than spending so much money to keep her alive, you know, she could've… All these socialists are the same, folks. They're saying all the PC stuff because they know, they've got bosses above them and they know if they say all the things, that they'll stay in the same position a bit longer, and be multimillionaires, maybe even billionaires by the time they're finished. As public employees, 'eh.

So anyway, the time's already flashing by. But what I'm saying here is that you're living through it, your living through something that's awfully awfully important to notice what's going on. And start putting things together. Put it all together. Because out of this, regardless of the final death toll of it, you're going to find that much is changed. A new system planned long before you even heard the coronavirus was coming out at all. Many things will be accomplished.

Just like I said when 9/11 happened, it might have even been Gary Hart that said it, I think, was it Gary Hart. CFR, 9/11, how can we use this disaster to our advantage, you know, for our [Alan chuckles.] long cherished goal, for their agenda. What an odd thing to say, you'd think, 'eh? Not if you're in the club, and he's talking to members of the club then of course and it got into the newspapers.

You're always living through agendas. And you kept to be little simple children. And that's how you're being treated today. Now, they're going along with the agenda exactly as they're supposed to actually unfold it step-by-step. Pooh-poohing it initially, and then admitting all the same things and using the same scary tactics to terrify you. Because eventually down the road they want compliance. And by scaring you enough now, by promoting things, even overboard from the so-called conspiracy theorists, they've even put it on steroids from there, to really make sure you get scared so that you will obey. Because they want to bring in rationing. And they have a big, big exercises on, maybe even, martial law tactics, you see.

I'll just mention these articles. I'll try and cram them in tonight because I haven't got around to them in the last while. It says...

First locally-transmitted COVID-19 cases in Australia, as Attorney-General warns drastic legal powers could be used theconversation.com / 2 March 2020

(Alan: Not a bad article actually.)

The NSW government announced a 53-year-old Sydney health worker - who had not recently travelled abroad - had been diagnosed.

And it goes on to different cases that have been found in different parts of Australia. It's more than that now. Because things are starting to double, and triple and it will get more and more as we go up to the top spike as they call it around Easter time. So they think.

UK coronavirus outbreak set to peak around Easter and last SIX MONTHS with millions to become infected - thesun.co.uk / 26 Feb 2020

And of course, all the banks are in on the action too. The banks literally, that ripped us off and plundered us all, and then they gave their bosses millions of dollars bonuses as usual, by the end of the year after they got bailed out with our tax money, it's really astonishing what we're living through, but they're all on board with it too. Because the economy as we well know, our dollars and our currencies are worth less and less and less. You need much more of it to buy the same basic things. That's all part of agenda 21 too, into austerity for those you haven't figured it out. Then you have this article…

Australians detainable under coronavirus biosecurity laws, Attorney-General says - lawyersweekly.com.au / 2 March 2020

Now we've got the same thing in Canada, the British Commonwealth countries all work together on the same agendas, by the same rules. So that...

Biosecurity Control Orders will be 'strange and foreign': Porter (Audio, 2020-03-03)

abc.net.au / 3 March 2020

Australia’s biosecurity laws are being strengthened and will be “new" and "foreign” to Australians with the first human transmission of coronavirus recorded in Australia.

Attorney-General Christian Porter told parliament that the laws – which were active from the official “listing” of the coronavirus on 21 January – will be “strange" and "foreign” for Australians who could experience the legal implication for the first time.

“These are challenging times going forward (A: I hate these... these... these little… ‘going forward’. It's like ‘proactive’, you know what I'm saying? But anyway…) and these will be some of the first times these important powers may be used,” Mr Porter said.

There's also a little clip I think there of his radio interview, I think he may have been on a TV interview as well. But he leaves it out there. You can see it in his attitude, he's talking almost like a military guy, who is well aware of the powers that he's got, and he will implement them. That's what they always do, the same kind of thing, just like that movie I talked about, there's a documentary that went alongside it where they actually talk to the actual top policeman for [Alan chuckles.] the whole of England at the time, who talked exactly the same way. And they will, they will do what they're told. They will obey their orders, with utmost whatever is necessary.

Also, you find that…

New York declares state of emergency over coronavirus outbreak

They've got quite a job right now trying to contain anything right now. But again, all the big cities are in the same boat. You'd be surprised, every university town, or city, in North America has definitely got a round of infected people from all over the world as well. We are literally international, aren't we? Have been for a long time. So, this article, New York again is definitely been whacked with quite a few workers.

New York declares state of emergency over coronavirus outbreak

cnbc.com / 7 March 2020

Eleven of the cases are in New York City and 70 are in Westchester County.

There are also signals of an ongoing spread, including a pair of cases in both Saratoga County and Rockland County, as well as four in Nassau County, according to the governor.

That's quite interesting to see that whole story and how it spread from even one person that it will mention later too. And then…

Congress warned of (A: Now listen to this one, it’s quite interesting…) possible coronavirus exposure that may have occurred at AIPAC conference

cnbc.com / 4 March 2020

(A: Why would you even have that when this thing was already happening, this plague? Why would you bring in people from other countries, into the same mass of all, when you told to avoid big crowds and everything, especially in confined spaces, all breathing the same air? 'eh?! What's wrong with people? I mean, we were warned about this in January and all through February, but they have this, you know. So anyway…)

The memo, according to the email, “describes a potential exposure based on contact from meeting attendees who were in contact with another individual that tested positive in New York prior to their travel to DC.”

The email said, “there is no particular action necessary at this time for our Congressional Members who attended the meeting in Washington DC.”

“The DC Health Department considers this a low-risk exposure,” the email said.

(A: It's not low-risk at all. It's high-risk actually.)

The Office of Attending Physician notified some congressional staff members on Wednesday in an email of a possible coronavirus exposure...

It could not be immediately determined how many received the email and the breadth of its distribution.

(A: It's quite something. It says…)

New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo earlier Wednesday confirmed that a family of four and their neighbor have tested positive for the coronavirus, bringing the number of cases in the state to at least six.

(A: I think one of, the guy himself, that's maybe a super spreader, are going to bar mitzvahs and different things, met lots of people in all that time before apparently, he came down with it. So, it's high exposure indeed. And he attended that AIPAC meeting as well.)

According to AIPAC’s website, more than two-thirds of Congress (A: ...and also apparently the Senate as far as I know.) attend the annual policy event, which occurred earlier this month. (A: This is CNBC.) Those scheduled to speak at the event this year included Nita Lowey, D-N.Y., House Republican Leader Rep. Kevin McCarthy, R-Calif., Secretary of State Mike Pompeo; and Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer, D-N.Y, according to its website.

I think Pence was there as well. But Chuck Schumer and Pompeo and many others too, the American Israel Public Affairs Committee. They had 4 1/2 thousand students I think from Israel too that were sent over to the meeting as well, the big big massive conference. When they went back to Israel, Israel did the right thing and put them, and I don't know if it was self quarantine but at least quarantine. But think about all the people in the government. [Alan laughing.] What are they gonna do with them, 'eh? In the US government. And it wasn't just the US government. Here's an article here from the Canadian media CTV. It says…

Stephen Harper (A: That's the last Prime Minister, before Trudeau.), Mike Pence attend conference where two test positive for COVID-19

ctvnews.ca / 6 March 2020

(A: You see, anybody who's up there pretty well goes to, they're all over the place, 'eh. But we haven't heard from him in a long while actually. He's high up in the business world now, I guess. But there he is.)

At least two people have tested positive for the novel coronavirus after attending the American Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC) conference in Washington, D.C., where former Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper and U.S. Vice President Mike Pence were in attendance.

It does go in to mention the quarantine of other ones going back to Israel. But as far as we know, I don't think anybody so far on the American side have literally been quarantined. We don't know yet. But I think, really, there must be a bunch of folks who got it. There must've been. Mind you, you're still seeing, I've got to admit this too, heads of state and that, again, you don't risk heads of state when there is a kind of terrible infection going around, something you say you don't understand. Unless the heads of state, as far as I'm concerned, have some kind of immunity to it. Honestly. When Trump went over to India you saw him in like in an arena, there was thousands of people around. And with his wife too was there. Well, what are they on? Antivirals? What is it? You would not risk them. You honestly wouldn't risk them.

I mentioned too this other article here. The IMF, the International Monetary Fund, is another part of the agenda of course, talking about finances and so on…

IMF Head Announces $50 Billion Aid Program For Covid-19 Relief

zerohedge.com / 4 March 2020

(A: Right. And guess what, though? It's for emerging nations. As your economy is falling flat already, this is going to be put on the tab of the West obviously.)

"The $40 billion is for countries that are middle income, (A: Well, what does that mean these days?) and they can approach us and receive the funding immediately. More important is the $10 billion that are accessible for low-income countries.

Have you seen the tent cities in the States? Have you seen them living in the streets? Do you understand, we are at a stage brought down with a long long long, including the drug war. And I'm talking about the real drugs where they end up on the streets and so on, right. Highly highly addictive. And every government agency is involved in the drug trade, all the big agencies, the so-called secret agencies, of course they have been living on these black budgets for a long long time. But the countries have been brought down domestically and you can see how there's no way that we can continue this way. So, they need to go into the next phase of the new system. That's my impression of it.

Harvard Professor Marc Lipsitch Sounds Alarm on ‘Likely’ Coronavirus Pandemic: 40% to 70% of World Could Be Infected This Year - mediaite.com / 14 Feb 2020

I mentioned last week too about Marc Lipsitch who is the Harvard T.H. Chan School of Public Health, he's a professor and this is his specialty. He talked about a global pandemic with up to 70% of people infected worldwide, right. And he said 40% to 70% of people worldwide are likely to be infected in the coming year. Literally, this year. That's how long it's going to take. And who knows about the following year, right. But also, I mentioned this other article where he talked about, because that's his profession, is biochemistry and so on and emerging viruses and all the rest of it. One of his lectures to his students was titled…

Marc Lipsitch - Should we be Making Potential Pandemic Pathogens in the Lab - youtube.com

I'll repeat that for the hard of thinking.

Marc Lipsitch - Should we be Making Potential Pandemic Pathogens in the Lab - youtube.com

This is about 2015 or 2016. And I’ll put the link up to it again where you can hear him talking about it. Because you see, that’s what they do in these labs, folks. They make new ones. Under the pretense of, well you see, now you see you’ve got all these bans on biowarfare. Well, we’re doing it for health instead, you see, we're making new ones in case they ever develop by themselves in nature, then we might have a way to handle it, you understand. So that's how they got around biowarfare treaties, it's for health reasons. But also, I'd like to mention too, that from China you find the coronavirus, it not only attacks the lungs, and causes you know, severe damage to the lung tissue. But it also attacks the testes in males.

Wuhan coronavirus could cause male infertility: Chinese study - taiwannews.com.tw / 19 Feb 2020

Isn't that quite a weapon, that in itself, that nature, we are told, has drummed up by itself. It hits mainly men, and it also starts to attack the testes and can cause infertility, they think. These are studies from China. And they've had plenty of experience in studying this one, believe you me. So, I'll put that up.

Remember too, I want to mention before I get off tonight too, that you can send money to me hopefully to keep me ticking along. Because I always, I generally forget to mention it. And you can donate to me by check or you can send cash. There's other ways too, PayPal. @cuttingthroughthematrix.com you'll find on the website how to do it, you can send cash or whatever. You've got links there as well. You could buy the books and discs if you want. I've got lots of good talks on this going back over many many years and many events, including previous flus and things like that too. As I say, that will help me tick along because I generally forget to even mention money. I'm not selling anything like T-shirts or all kinds of medications or whatever it happens to be. I depend on the people themselves to keep me going. I don't like to get bought off by anybody either.

So anyway, getting back to the articles here... But please do that because I really need the cash too. I really do. And folk take for granted you're somehow awfully rich and it never occurs to them generally to even send you a few bucks, for most folk. For the ones who do, I certainly do appreciate it. And they've helped a lot of people by doing so and helping me tick along too. And I just tick along, I don't live in any kind of luxury whatsoever, believe you me. I'm very, very frugal. I'm probably on the poverty line actually. So anyway, here we go…

Canada Post says no risk after Peterborough, Ont., workers refuse to enter building amid coronavirus concern - globalnews.ca / 6 March 2020

They won't tell you if somebody or other folk have got it there, if any employees have got the virus there. Canada Post says there's no health risk, so we won't get… You see, everything's so hushed, they won't tell you why is it all happening. Is it just because they're handling mail and we know that it can be passed, supposedly, on surfaces for a certain amount of time, you know? Everything is so vague, isn't it? Right down to the incubation period. Well, it could be two days to eight days, and then they let them go after eight days quarantine and then you find out that there's folk that can get it 20 days on or 24. And then they say the same thing, only be a few hours on the surface, to so many days, they say. Quite something, 'eh. So, I'll put that up too.

Then you have people getting re-infected supposedly in China. Now, here's another thing with the bioethics, is they've already trained everyone, just let the old folk just die off. And before the virus by the way. Well you know, they've lived a good life, you know. They can persuade you to do anything. But the bioethics committees and so on, they're really going full tilt ahead with the different behavior insights teams, all over the map, working together, to convince you to do the right thing.

And if you've noticed, have you noticed, that everybody, everything's about testing kits and how they've literally changed the direction of thought, rational thought from, wait a minute, why don't you try to stop it...? They still got folk coming in from countries that are highly infected, highly infectious and so on. But no, no, let's just concentrate on testing. Testing kits are not going to cure you. Hm? Testing kits are not treatments, folks. They've diverted you off from wait a minute here, are they going to give you antivirals? Or what's the schedule here, to enroll, to keep folk alive and get them through this?

And then they'll tell you, well... And here's the… Have you noticed, well you know, most folk who will die will be people over 60, you know, and people with underlying ailments. So, okay, so, once again you've stigmatized the people, hm, people over 60. So, it's like, umph, they're not really human anymore. Isn't that what you're saying here? They're just old, 'eh, discard them, right. This, I'm not kidding you, this is very very obvious from the different articles coming out and little documentaries, special little clips I've been watching from the top.

They're all on board with the same prattle. Just like weapons of mass destruction. Well the folk will be old and stuff and there are underlying problems and... So, in other words, they’re expendable, is that what you're saying here? Hm? Is that what you're telling us? Because all I hear now is testing kits. That's for your own bookkeeping. You can diagnose this even without the kits because it's pretty unique with its symptoms. Very, very obvious actually. But this is how they've diverted the folk from asking the obvious, wait a minute, what are you going to give to try to prevent this and get us through this? So, is this the eugenics plan, let the old die off first and so on.

The young don't get it so bad because their immune systems are not developed, folks, that's the reason it's not happening to them. Did you know that? This thing literally triggers the immune system in your body, it's such a, like to be into absolute panic mode, it throws everything at it, and it's the sudden rush of all the different antibodies going into the lungs, etc. that kills you, not the actual disease. That's real weaponization I would say. That's what it does. That's what happened with the Spanish flu too. The lungs themselves were about four times heavier than they should be with the mass of blood in them.

So are they going to give the people, you know, are they just going to just... Well, once again, bioethics, will there be enough of the treatments for everybody? And if so, who should we give it to?   and prioritize the younger people in their 20s and 30s, 40s and so on, and just let the older folk...? What are you going to do? Or are you just going to put it into the beds with the folk that are over 60, testing kits, to make them feel like little dolls that you take to bed with you, oh I feel better now, I've got a testing kit here. How about giving them some treatment here and telling the public you’re doing it and showing that you’re doing it? That's obvious.

You know, this isn't happenstance, this isn't some kind of mistake they've just admitted here. This is how they are all on board together managing your minds and your behavior. I'm not kidding folks. I'm not kidding at all. Anyway, I've already run through so much here. Time just flies in, doesn't it? It's maybe just me, they say as you get older time flies all the faster. But with me it certainly is flying in. But I'll put that up. And I'll put up too, last week too…

Marc Lipsitch - Should we be Making Potential Pandemic Pathogens in the Lab youtube.com

Awfully important. Because this is a standard lecture that people who are into microbiology and so on, for all kinds of purposes, folks, this is what they do in the laboratories. It truly is. It's just a disgusting scary world we are in. And I think were closer to 12 Monkeys, the movie called 12 Monkeys. That's more the scenario we are in today where the person who let's it loose on the planet is someone working in one of the laboratories that's in the movie. It's well worth watching for bit of humor at the same time. Albeit dark humor but it's humor nonetheless. It shows you in a kind of sci-fi way a really entertaining aftermath of a viral attack, a planned viral attack. Awfully good indeed.

But regardless as I say, the big agendas are on board, they're all looking forward to working through this and achieving so many goals.

And I hope you all make it too because you'd better start looking after yourselves, folks. And I really mean that. Little groups of you can certainly vow to each other if necessary, to stand up and help each other through thick and thin, what might come along, we don't know yet how bad they'll push this. But exercise-wise they're definitely going to push it the whole way to test everything. And even, maybe even getting us used to the idea of another one coming along. Who knows? Who knows? We're not in on the big think tanks at the top who are definitely, definitely sworn to secrecy on these particular kinds of matters.

For myself Alan Watt from Ontario Canada, where it still got lots of snow outside regardless of global warming, it's good night and may your God or your gods, and especially your lives, may you keep a hold of them, it's rather precious, may your gods go with you.

Mar. 15, 2020 "Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

Hi folks I’m Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through the Matrix on March 15, 2020. And I really sincerely hope you're managing to cope through all the mayhem and chaos that's come upon all of us, [Alan chuckles.] in some would say a predictable fashion I suppose. Other ones who like to stay in denial think that things are just going as usual.

But believe you me, when government, that you're always criticizing about and so on, gets moving on something to do on a wartime footing, remember, that's the key to it, is wartime footing. It's like China mentioned it, that the only way they could manage it is a wartime scenario footing where you just obey your superiors and get on with it, or else. And that's just how it happens. We saw the troops in streets and police in the streets and things like that dealing with curfews basically. And everyone had to self isolate pretty well in some of the big cities and we're allowed out only on a certain day each. Each grouping knew their day for going shopping for the groceries and so on and then back to their isolation. That's really how it takes.

The spread of coronavirus means you may be asked to isolate. But what happens if you don't? - mobile.abc.net.au / 10 March 2020

Then of course we saw the same thing getting unrolled yesterday, or the day before in the States. Canada's got something similar eventually when it catches up I think. Because Canada really seems to be following, waiting to see what the States does to follow suit basically. Although mind you too Justin Trudeau has kind of changed his tune a little bit when his wife is said to have come down with it after a trip, the coronavirus, after a trip to London. So, who knows? Who really knows?

Sophie Trudeau, wife of Canadian Prime Minister, tests positive for coronavirus - cnn.com / 13 March 2020

Health minister Nadine Dorries tests positive - bbc.com / 11 March 2020

I take everything with a pinch of salt sometimes, which is a healthy way to be. Especially when you've read and looked at all the different session meetings they had at Johns Hopkins and Bill Gates’ scenario, a meeting last year to do with possible outbreaks of coronavirus and how they'd manage it. They had all kinds, all the strategies you're seeing put in place were discussed then. What they did wasn't an unusual and unique type of scenario, what they projected would happen if it ever broke out. Every country really has this type of thing laid out step-by-step of trying to contain things and so on, mitigate spread, etc. They go through it step-by-step until they end up with a form of martial law.

We forget that back in the Cold War, especially in Britain in European countries, they had civil defense systems set up that really had been on the go since World War II. They came from the old air raid warden special police and it sort of evolved after that when the Cold War got really going and there was the threat of nuclear annihilation, we are told, over and over. If it wasn't that it was financial chaos, it's always some kind of chaos, you know.

They had civil defense who were set up in every little community really, often kind of invisible to the public but sometimes you could see them practicing. They had worked out their strategies for managing each area and parts of each county or Shire. That's what's going on today. Same thing. They did away with the old, old civil defense system, but they can quickly reconstruct it again to get this going. Towns counselors and so on are on boards, and they have their little hideouts set up too in case it ever really spread into a terrible pandemic.

Because again, the big fear is that something like this can mutate, mutate, mutate, mutate and mutate into something much worse, you see, with each… Each person who gets infected leaves a bit of their DNA on the viruses that leave them. And it truly is a robber as they say, the virus is a robber as it takes bits and pieces of your DNA system and spreads it around. And out of that too can come a new thing. Or it can die off, you see. That's what they're waiting to see.

However, there are so many fingers in the pie you might say, or dogs in the fight, you often wonder what to believe. Because there's no doubt about it, I mean I've always said that I was never afraid of atomic warfare, if it happened it happened. But the big fear was more of deliberate exposure to things that would be released to the public. Not because I was imagining things but because I read about all the declassified stuff on biowarfare over many many many years. Then you couple that with the eugenicists who are always out there trying to convince us just to quietly die, you know, and there's too many people, you see, there's too many old people.

Remember too, that the whole idea for technocracy type of systems on behalf of those at the top, the true trans-humanists, the term that was coined by Aldous Huxley's brother Julian, who he said, that trans-humanists, meaning we, he says we, you know basically we, at the time, the true scientific elite who ran all kinds of sciences, the social sciences, the psychology and behavioral, all these sciences, and then chemistry and biochemistry and so on, we are the true elite he said. He really was reiterating what George Bernard Shaw said before him in fact, with Man and Superman and various other actual speeches he gave apart from just the books and novels. So, it's an old idea, you see. There's a right kind of people and the wrong kind of people. And their goal was always to have a world which they owned, a true world governmental system with a vastly reduced population.

And I don't want to just go fear mongering here, but you understand, if you're looking at what is, anyone who calls you a fear monger is an ostrich with their head stuck in the ground. Because these people exist. They have annual meetings a lot of them, the present-day trans-humanists that are so involved, you see, that they have to get outside their little emotional boxes we're all in and see the big picture and do the right things even though it's hard sometimes for people to understand why they must do things that are rather awful and so on.

In other words, you are seeing the legitimization of the worst horror tyrants in history being put across in such a pleasant way you don't recognize what it is when it's under the mesmerizing halo and inside the protective armor of politicized science.

Don't forget too, that some of the top players always said that we'd lose all rights gradually piece by piece for the drive for efficiency, as you toss religion out the window. Which again, people don't realize it, religion was a bulwark against tyranny to an extent because it gave you basically human rights by God you see. And governments hated that because no matter what you think about it, the people themselves could always say to the crowns and governments, hey you can't do this, because it's against the law, of God, you see. Meaning the law for looking after humanity. You understand? You toss it out the window and there's no laws left here.

There's basically the scientists with their beautiful all trained persuaders who will persuade you into simply giving up. That's it, you see. There's a movie, it was Saving Private Ryan, and someone said to me, it's like the bit near the end where the American troops go into this little town that's heavily shelled and all that. One of the American troops goes up a stairwell into a church tower I think it was. Up at the top there's a guy, a German who they had previously caught and then let go eventually somehow or he'd escaped. Anyway, the German is trying to get the knife into the American soldier and he's pushing down heavily and heavily and it's not in there. He says, just give up, it's quite painless once it happens, just give up.

Well, that's how the system is, isn't it? When you watch people being made, and again, there's a star making machine that sets up scientists, they are given the star creation show sort of thing. The same kind of techniques that they use to make anybody, like a singer or whatever, even a nobody, which most of them are actually, into what we call stars, they do the same with scientists so the people will follow scientists and obey them and think, well, they're so clever, they can't be all wrong, you see, I'll follow the clever guy. Which means immediately you're tossing your own brain out the window and thinking this guy knows more than you. This is how simple it is for people to be manipulated by an elite which they really don't understand at all. They think they do but they don't.

I've given so many countless talks @cuttingthroughthematrix.com, and they're in the archives on my website. And I should really say off the bat before I do forget is don't forget to go into my website @cuttingthroughthematrix.com and take a list of all the other sites I have listed there, my official sites, in case during all of this anything gets pulled, maybe some other ones will stay up, you see.

Because we are going through this kind of martial law type scenario. Whether you like it or not, or if it's real or not, it makes no difference. It's a massive test of it all. And those at the top really, certainly have wanted a test for a long time. So make a note of them all, all those links because as I say I've given so many talks on this very topic, for years, long ago in fact through the different scenarios, through the SARS one and through the swine flu and the H1N1 and H5N1 and so on, all these different outbreaks that we've been told to be terribly afraid of, right up to the present. And so much documentation really is included there to do with this particular scenario.

We have the people at the top as I've mentioned before, keep saying, there's just too many of you. Prince Philip is a great one for saying it. He's given speeches on it at the various Sierra Clubs, and so many associations he's the head of. He's given them openly. Nevermind talking about he wishes he was a virus, in his book, and come back and kill all the people. You know, these people are not kidding. I hope you understand, they're not kidding.

It's our disbelief that allows tyranny and hell to emerge down through history, that's how it's always been. We say, oh, we know what they say, but they don't really mean it. We say that automatically, they don't really mean it, you know. And then if you really pushed them with someone who's arguing, oh they don't mean it. You'd say, why don't they mean it? And why wouldn't it happen? Well somebody would stop them. Well who is somebody? You know someone who even gives that kind of answer means [Alan chuckles.] they're not going to try to do anything to stop anything, but they expect someone else to do it for them. That doesn't happen that way. How many folk have died through history through horrible circumstances, by governments by the way, often, who hoped to the bitter end that someone would come forward and help them? Think about that.

So here we are as I say with this kind of scenario, so yeah, I've given so many talks about them and the different people involved, including the professors in Australia that get launched every year or two, the same ones who get world airtime and pushed across the globe. They're like trial balloons, and also familiarization balloons because they familiarize you with the idea that there's just too many of you. maybe you should just retire early, taking the easy way out, the fast way out, and let the government use the monies that you've saved up or whatever for their big agendas and maybe their paychecks or whatever. You know?

The world is a very nasty place, folks. It's only the bulk of the ordinary decent people that makes it work. [Alan chuckles.] And that's a fact. Because those who go for power, nevermind the fact they are generally promoted by one or maybe three institutions worldwide that pick the people for leadership, of all parties, and the people who they pick will do anything they're told for their high Masters, for the power that they're going to appear to portray or carry. And they also love the adoration and the clapping of public. They love power, you see, they are psychopathic. And that's so true, very very true.

We've done diagnoses of different ones of them using the psychopathic scale. You look at Tony Blair and many other ones too, a man who literally tells you the truth according to him when he was asked about what he did, the one-man band with all his handwaving and lies to get Britain into the war against Iraq for instance. And Iraq had nothing to do with 9/11 but that didn't matter, you know. They don't mind lying and taking all countries into war and then handing you the bill as they get rewarded well by their paymasters at the top way above you.

It's horrible, really. We're always taught, for those who still study history and ancient history, that tyrants and tyrannies and even in ancient times, were just awful awful, but we can't have them in this day and age because they don't wear breastplates and carry short swords. Today, they wear suits and ties and they have briefcases and things, you see, folk can't quite compute, they use marketing companies to create an image for them, like any other star, you see. That's how it's done.

But yeah, they keep crying, there's too many of you, and the Georgia Guidestones, etc. etc. It's quite amazing how little people really understand about all of the, including those who follow the organizations that set up the Georgia Guidestone's, how little they understand it either. They think they're so superior [Alan chuckles.] but eventually their bosses will tell them as well, they are expendable too.

Julian Huxley said that by the way, you know, Aldous's brother. Julian said, there are many people who will help us achieve our ends, meaning this strange, on behalf of the ultra elite and wealthy of his day, this socialistic world system for control. It's the best way to control folk is through this idea of socialism and to use them actually and even train them to obey, you see. It's much better than pretending that you’re just moneygrubbing capitalists. So, you really have the capitalists that gave you socialism. Why do you think the top communists in American other countries were all millionaires and multimillionaires some of them? Some of them billionaires, today.

So, Huxley said that, he said, so all those who help us, they think they're going to come through into this new age, you see, where everything's perfected and all the useless eaters pretty well have been killed off. Just like Bertrand Russell another member of it talked about, useless eaters. And efficiency was to be the key. But then he said, so there will be many of those who helped to bring it about will then end up finding out that we don't need them either. He was quite blatantly clear about it.

Exactly the same kind of talk that Yuri Bezmenov gave on the communists of his day. Or socialists, call them what you want. We get mixed up with titles. You don't realize what titles really are. It's meant to deceive you. [Alan chuckles.] That's what they're for. And they're always giving you the idea of what a title is. You know, this is a communist, this is a fascist, this is a capitalist, etc. And it's so deceptive, isn't it? Because it truly is, you've got the capitalist communists and in Britain and elsewhere you got the communist capitalists. It's quite an amazing system. Because that's what it is, isn't it?

So, we're living through a system where you're trained not to understand. You're trained to be always be a child. I gave talks long, maybe 25 years ago, talks about children and history. And you don't realize that childhood as such, as we know, it didn't exist even in the 1800s. For most folk it really didn't exist. Children weren't seen to be, they were seen to be immature people but that's as far as it really went. They didn't have a life, like, 10 years of playing. Especially in the lower class families too. They had to work, even down mines. They might not live past 15 or 20. But they were put down mines and all kinds of terrible places to earn money for the elite of the day. They really didn't have the childhood. They didn't have Christmases full of toys, toys, toys and so on. Just didn't happen that way. They didn't have children's fashions, for instance. Because children didn't have the cash for that. They weren't a marketing section to make money on at the time. That didn't come until really the 20th century, in the mid-part of that really in Europe.

So, you don't realize that childhood, was a serious business for most folk across Europe, especially in Britain and the countries that were so-called industrialized. People just drifted through that, their work as a child then into adulthood and got married and had other children and they had to be responsible for the family and so on. This is just the way it was, a routine, routine, routine and nothing much changed from generation to generation really for a long time.

Today's youth are kept, they're taught to just have everything. There's no restrictions on what they're going to do, you see. Lots of sex. Don't worry about the state, the state will take care of the problems that comes out of it all. And they don't actually, they can't, because if you get certain VDs, venereal diseases, some of them you can't treat anymore, they admit that. However, they don't want to really push that idea.

I used to wonder why they kept showing you from about the 50s and 60s onwards, you would see in the movies, it was sex sex sex sex sex. You see, hyper sexualized them all until you have hyper sexualized adults, and even hyper sexualized older people. As long as they didn't have children, that was fine. That's why it was pushed, you see, to destroy the system and bring everything down so that another group could dominate you, the ones who see themselves as the true masters, you understand. And that's how the world is.

But they also want a world where, again, you take any of the religions out the window, because kings, as they say, kings were told often by priests and counselors initially, you can't do this and you can't do that. And why can't I? Well because it's against the laws of God. Because you see, the people, the ordinary folk had no other laws standing up for them at all.

And with the great propaganda through the 20th century into the present century, folk really think that they are free. But they don't have, they don't really even have some of the rights that were well understood by folk in certain sections and segments of the 20th century. They don't know that. They really think they've got it all simply because they got lots of sex and they get drunk and they get a good supply of cheap drugs and so on, and they think that's what life is about. AS you have the rise of the people behind it, as you're stoned and you're drunk, and there's these people saying, yeah there's too many of you. And they all laugh, ha, who's he talking about, it's not me, surely?

Then of course we saw the, and I did the talks years ago when they introduced euthanasia into initially Holland. Again, it's always put across in a wonderful kind of caring fashion, initially. It's really for the elderly who really have terminal illnesses. It's the persuaders who are so wonderful, really, they can do it with even just a little bit, not much, background music when they're persuading, well isn't this wonderful.

It's very much, very much like Soylent Green. Soylent Green remember, was put out to the people as an anti-human message by the elite, the author himself was approached by them, he admits that. He was asked to write something to do with too many people, and the wrong kinds of people, the useless eaters that Russell talked about. The book was initially called Make Room, Make Room. The world has no more room basically, that was how they pushed it. They didn't have the environmental things so much down pat back then or climate change back then, so they used, just too many people, look at you all.

When I was growing up they kept showing the same, like, crowded places like in Calcutta or something, and you'd say, by God you know, how do they... But what they're really trying to get the message across is too many people. You take the size of India, as an example, d'you realize that most of it is big wide-open spaces, rolling hills and jungles and things, without people in it? They all concentrate in a few cities, but you wouldn’t know that growing up. You'd think, my God, the whole land, every inch is covered with what you are watching, with people. How you can be deceived, 'eh? Perception management. Nothing's changed in that direction, really, or that area.

Anyway, you have that going on, well, there's too many of you, too many of you, so just give up. And they get persuaders out who say, well... Just like Soylent Green, you see. In Soylent Green the reader, as he was called, I think, each cop and person who worked for government had a reader who could read everything and keep them up to scratch with what was going on. Charlton Heston played the cop. One day he goes home, and his reader's gone. The reader was an older fella of course, and he was gone. He was just fed up with it all and got depressed. And when he got depressed, then he thought, well I'm old and have nothing to live for...

Even if you're not terminally ill or whatever, you'd go into this place and they would put you on a table. You'd have a big circle room. And the beautiful music, classical music would be playing. (They actually had tunes then you can remember, what it was like, melodies and things like that. Odd, isn't it? And you used to have beauty, you saw beauty, even in the music that had beauty of course, and that's all gone now too.) Around the walls you would see wildlife and animals jumping. So, it was a wonderful way, and you see the reader, or the book, some would call him the book, watching all this as he’s slowly dying off, with beautiful music in the background, you see.

Same thing as the blade getting pushed into the soldier, you know, just give up, it's quite painless once it starts. And you get these persuaders, don't you just have enough of living?

Aren't you fed up with all the bad news? [Alan laughing.] Really, think about that too, all the bad news. And here's the guys that'll do it for you.

Because now that they've introduced euthanasia of course, after a few years later you've got all kinds of things happening. And they've expanded it, as they always do. You see, whenever they put something across in a wonderful way, we're trying to help people, and you think, well I guess so, I wouldn't like to have that happen to me either, I wouldn't want to just stay alive and to the bitter end. Neither that you should, if they would just give you the proper painkillers and so on you can last for quite a few years, you know, and have some fulfillment in life left if they would give it to you. But no, start taking all those medications away, let you have a bit more pain, and show you terrible pictures of folk in pain, and you might just say, okay give me that 25 cent, you know, whatever it is shot, a cheap way to go, and that's you, hm.

And then they expand it. Well you know there's folk, some people are just depressed teenagers, maybe we should just help them. And that's happening too, you see, that's the next step. That happened in Holland as well. And Canada follows. Because we are progressive, you see, we progress down to the Georgia Guidestones, that's where we're progressing to.

And everything that was, remember, I've said this so many times, very important to understand, everything that was must be destroyed, EVERYTHING that was must be destroyed to bring in the new. This is the old occultic terminology from long ago. That the world was left imperfect by the deity. For those who don't know this yet, the deity, right, so the people who are at war with the deity, who you might not understand are the people actually at war with the deity, gave you masonry and so on, and their job is to perfect all that the builder left imperfect, which is everything. According to them, it's just imperfect, man is imperfect, woman is imperfect, everything is imperfect. And the body is imperfect. They want to completely rebuild all that too. And the symbols are all around you if you understand what the symbology is. Most folk really don't. They might get the lower meanings, but there's a whole bunch of meanings.

But as I've mentioned before a few weeks ago, what d'you think the obelisk is? It's the phallus sticking out of the earth and in defiance of the deity. That's what it symbolizes. They're showing the deity looking down, the perfection of that which he's seeing, which is pushing up through the earth, that which comes from the earth, you see. To perfect all that the builder left imperfect, in defiance. And through all the revolutionary movements associated with the usual societies, you see it in all the writings, consistently, the same agenda, same agenda, same agenda, same agenda. And the folk don't get it. They never will get it, unfortunately, most of them.

Because they're domesticated. Remember what Charles Galton Darwin, the guy who worked on the Manhattan project, of the Darwin family, to make the bomb. He said, he's talking on behalf of the elite. The Next Million Years was his book. He got lauded by all the top newspapers of his day, because they all work for the same elitist group, the Royal Institute of International Affairs/Council on Foreign Relations type thing. He said, the world is run by us, we run the world, we are the captains of the ship. You see, the ship is the earth. He said, we are the wild men.

Now, the wild men are trans-humanists for those who don't understand, when you jump to Julian Huxley, he's part of the same group, you see. The wild men, actually, they're related in some ways too. But the wild man, are unrestricted by moral codes. They'll do things and get away with it which would horrify you. People who are domesticated are horrified all the time about that, oh don't do that, oh that's terrible, don't destroy this, don't destroy that.

Those who say it must be done, the pain will be felt for a while, but they'll go into the next phase and it's going to be better for you. They're always giving better tomorrows with utopias, you know, that you can work generations to achieve and never get there. But that doesn't matter. They will make the hard decisions. The hard decisions.

Don't forget, Julian was a complete eugenicist who kept going and kept alive the whole Darwinian school of Darwinian evolution and eugenics. Look it up yourself. And they believed inferior types would all have to be destroyed. But they'd use them, like a ship, like a rocket ship with the different boosters on the rocket. Three stages, say, or four stages, and as it pushes you up, further up out from the earth, one of the boosters falls away, the next one takes over. You've seen the old videos of them. He likened, basically that's what it's like, it's like the same thing. We are the boosters to launch the elite off into the future world that they're building, and we are supposedly just as unknowing and unthinking as the booster rocket, we have useful purpose and that's it. Expendable. So, we're living through that and we have all these people who are glorified by the elite. And those in university, oh they just worship them for what great brains they have.

But getting back to Charles Galton Darwin, he said, we are the wild man. Again, because they're unrestricted by moral codes, they see what has to be done and they will do it. Now, that's the same mentality, if you haven't figured it out, of the ones who are lambasted by this, like Adolf Hitler. He said, I see what has to be done, and he went ahead to do it. Before him, Hitler watched the Communists in the Soviet Union who started that in 1917, the same thing, we know what has to be done and we do it. And millions would perish because of it.

You'd better understand what we're talking about here. It's the same, the people with, the people who have vision as they call it, 'eh, and not clouded by you and your emotion, your little human fallacies, etc., and niceties and the moral codes that you have.

It's amazing I didn't… I started this off as a scary kind of talk. But I'm just mentioning when you realize, you see what is happening with the media today, and I've got some articles here where they've set up panels to attack anyone who says anything which is not authorized to do with the coronavirus. And it's been happening for a while. You notice certain things you look up yourself and your computer starts stalling out and timing out and all the rest of it. You say, what's going on here? It’s to try and dissuade you from pursuing whatever you're looking for in those particular areas of the virus.

So, you have the authoritarian type characters using this whole thing, as I say, this whole coronavirus thing, which already has terrified the people in the West to watch all the stuff happening in China. Right. And now we're getting told by the people who told you it was all, only conspiracy nut cases were talk about it coming here. Until they get the permission for the newspapers to go into overdrive and overdo it and tell you it's going to be maybe even worse than China.

Mainly because what? I've seen the professors and this article is by professors here in the West and politicians. Well, you know it would be very hard to control in the West because, you see, China is a communist system and they all obey their governments, they must obey their governments, no choice in it, you see. And only that kind of government could mandate everything, and everything goes into action and it's done, blah blah blah, with more efficiency. Because you wouldn't get efficiency in the West, we have human rights, individual liberties and things like that. You getting the picture? Hm?

So, in other words, you've got folk in the West who are salivating at the thought of getting powers like China has demonstrated to deal with the coronavirus, you see. Even though we all watched for a couple months is that the US and Canada as an example, and Britain and other countries, but you're seeing in Canada, we're still sending cruises back and forth all over the place and bringing the aircraft back and forth from all over the place too. Which makes you kind of really, oh come on here, you either put in immediately the plans, which is total, basically total barriers, you know, the barrier for disease and quarantine, or... You can't have a little bit of quarantine; it doesn't work like that.

And then you saw the inkling coming out of South Korea where the head of South Korea at the time said we're not really going to try and contain the virus he says, it's too late and it can't be done. And he was getting his stuff from the WHO, which meant, that was going to be the agenda for the rest of the world from then on, you see. That's why obviously they were, they didn't really go out to stop the thing. Which also, also as I mentioned before, gives validity to this whole eugenics thing. Hm?

Because what have you heard for the last two or three weeks now? What have you heard, hey? You've heard, I mentioned before, I used to give talks on the bioethicists that came along, who suddenly appeared maybe 15 years ago and again made into stars for television. Articles in newspapers just out of the blue, just suddenly, here is this personality type. They always create them as personalities, you see, and have them on shows to put out their profound knowledge of bioethics, you see, how we should be behaving and doing, right down to profound things like, you know, should we kill old grandpa off or not, that kind of thing. But in the nicest possible way, you see, that's what they're trained to do. So, these bioethicists have persuaded you, you see, that the world is a bit more complex and your human emotions can be the wrong things at times to be using for your judgment. It's not efficient to use emotion for judgment.

Then as I say, for the last few weeks you've heard them come forward and say, you know, look at Italy. Well, Italy is already in the next part of the emergency planning, which we are going to go into too. Which is, we don't have enough of the treatment medications, etc., or beds for that matter, to treat the people so I'm afraid lots of them will just have to die at home. Well that's what you sell all through China, more of them were dying at home than in the hospitals for those who didn't know that. This is the agenda worldwide, 'eh, and to get you used to it. Even if this is a big one or not the big one, we don't know, but it's preparing you, your mind for the future too. And to also lessen the value of life... Well I guess so, you know.

What do you here too from the same experts? Well you know, don't worry, young people... They even had one of the generals for health or whatever they use in the States there, who was behind Bush, come forward. He says, you know, don't worry about it, the young people, you'll be fine with it. And they keep repeating it, it's just the older folk who might get sick. In other words, it's okay, the older folk can get killed off with this thing, that shouldn't have been out there may be in the first place.

Or, maybe the folk should start suing like crazy for the government who stalled and stalled and stalled the full quarantine measures, which would be responsible for killing people. Think about it that way instead, 'eh. You should be thinking about it that way because you've been told that, yeah, we're basically, the old ones are expendable. Right from the book of eugenics. Yeah, you've served your time, just do the right thing and die off, you know, and leave your pensions and all the other money to the government, who can use it for wars and, you know, things like that. Hm. Or payoffs.

This is the real world, folks. I don't mince words. I never thought ever that this world, and I never believed the world is just upfront with their suits and ties and their wonderful titles. Psychopaths are the greatest folk for making you like them; I hope you understand that. They’re so pleasant to everybody. That's how the use people, hm, that's how they use folks.

But as I say, here we are in a system in the West with euthanasia, they've already said, don't worry it's older folk or folk with underlying conditions that might just die of it. Then they come out and say, the people, they're are going to be a lot of folk dying here, they've already told you it’s the older folk, and so on. Well, there you go. And the rest of you will nod your head, well I guess so, it gives all the younger folk a chance. Well wait a minute here. If it wasn't for this virus, this particular one, these older folk, or folk with underlying conditions might last another 10, 15, 20 years before you know it, of good life. Think about it that way.

And getting back to eugenics and the founders of it all that tell you a lot more truth than they do today. Because they were far open about it, for the few folks who read their books back then. Like George Bernard Shaw, who said that, he said, when we are in ascendancy and we rule, he says, you'll have to come to us and he's talking about everybody, of every age group, you’ll have to come to us to explain why we should keep you alive. Huh? You'd better start thinking here folks.

Because like all agendas that expand, euthanasia's okay for the terminally ill. Oh, now it's just for old folk, maybe they're getting senile, 'eh. Maybe they've got some wills sitting there and relatives there are just dying to get their hands on it. It's quite easy to get a doctor to sign, you know, dit-dit-dit. That's already happened in cases, folks. And then you go onto the next phase too of, oh they're depressed, that child is depressed, just, you know… Do you know how many teenagers go through a bit of depression? Almost all of them. Think about it that way.

I can remember for as long as I can remember, this other fake nonsense of baby boomers they called them, hm, folk born after World War II with a 10 or 20 year span, baby boomers. Where did they…? There were no babies before in history, 'eh? They'd just lost stacks of people, maybe even millions of folk across Europe in two world wars, actually millions even in the first one, and then the second one, but yet baby boomers, bad, bad baby boomers, 'eh.

Then they tell you, have less children. So, the populations have less children. They get the pill dished out for them for free in the National Health Service in Britain, for a lot of them, got them for free. But then, don't have children. So, you don't have children. Then they tell you they've got to do mass migration to get a workforce. Who's kidding who here, 'eh? Do you see how you're getting played, played and played?

And believe you me, for all those folk who think they're replacing you, they'll get their turn as well. Everybody gets used in turn here. Because there is such a thing as a global structural system here running the show. The giants, you know. The Olympians. They've got a whole bunch of names they have given to themselves. And they train, always train the public. Oh, that's fine, we'll be okay. I've got articles here where a lot of youngsters who can't go to university right now have been offered all these cheap holiday airline flights for students across the world to different places. Very very cheap. So, they're going to start doing that. And, we'll be okay, we won't get ill with it. But they'll be carriers, you understand. There's your selfishness creeping in, oh yeah, I'll enjoy myself, so what, you know.

"If I Die, I Die" - Students "Risk It All" For 'Dream Trips' As Colleges Close Across America - zerohedge.com / 11 March 2020

Sudbury's Laurentian University moving classes online until further notice - northernontario.ctvnews.ca / 11 March 2020

They're never going to get old, hey. When you're 18 or 20, you're never going to get old. That's for other creatures, specimens, but not for you. And all agendas eventually expand as I say. They expand it to first the elderly. Then it's senile folk. First, it's the terminal, then it's senility, then it's, oh it's just a bit of depression. This, this, this. Or maybe it will eventually come down to the unemployed. Have you ever thought about that too? Hm? Things could be made so unpleasant and awful and miserable, you'll get depressed as well and you might just opt for it, just like as I say in Soylent Green the movie.

I hope you understand what I'm saying here. There's a massive operation underway and the behaviorists are part of it, the ones who manage you, even online, behavioral insights teams and so on to manage your thoughts and guide you to the conclusions they want you to have about everything. I'm not kidding you. This is your scientific technique of scientific socialism. It's amazing to watch it in action.

We're living through the planned history. As I say, they always write the history in advance, you understand. They must try and make it appear the way they want it written in the future by writing it in advance. It's a formula, if you do it this way and this way, then that will happen, that will happen. So then down the road they can always put it in, look back and say, yep, we followed the formula, and just put it down as a formula. Which would appear to just be happening by itself, through chance. That's how things are.

Now, I want to put a few articles up, not a lot. I'm sure everyone out there has got as many articles as they can handle, more than that, about what's happening with this, the so-called kind of martial law plans as they like to call them, emergency plans, same kind of thing, that are getting unrolled all over the place. With glee actually. Because now they can actually try it, you see. And sure enough, I mean, the authorities…

But again, for those you think your governments are just, you're trained to believe they're just incompetent. Nothing happens through incompetence. If there's a big massive delay in something it's because they want something to happen, including taking months before they close borders and stop the aircraft coming in and so on. There's no such thing as a little bit of quarantine. You either do it properly or not at all. You understand? I hope you understand. And this is not me saying this, this is the rules [Alan chuckles.] for over 100 years.

Australia as I mentioned before escaped pretty well completely the Spanish flu at the end of World War I by a complete quarantine, they didn't let any ships land. They were all off the coast for about a year or more, wouldn't let anybody in. And they saved them so they know how to do it and what should be done and what must be done. And it's not like they have to reinvent the rules for it for medicine or anything like that, it's all been done long ago.

Remember too, you can buy the books, hopefully, and discs @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. I can send the discs out quite easily, I think, as long as the mail keeps going. And eventually too, the mail will probably, maybe stop. I don't know. We'll have to wait and see. I know China fumigates its mail or disinfects its mail. But you think about it too, if we have so many conflicting stories, if this particular virus can stay on the surface for a few days or more, then with certain mail you might get it in your mailbox, who knows. I don't know.

It's all been discussed; I know that much. I know that, as I say, they've got trouble down in Toronto area, Pickering, where the workers are terrified. I guess somebody, or maybe more than one person got it in their sorting offices and didn't want to go in to work, you see. So, things will get disrupted as we go through this. There's no doubt about it. This is a massive exercise for control, complete control. Right down to eventually you'll only be given permission, maybe even a ration card, who knows, or an ID card and you must stay within your designated areas, or else. You know. That's really where it all ends up going to.

So, in the meantime hopefully you can keep me going by buying the books and discs @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. I have to get more books printed as well. And I have to get into town if they haven't put the barriers up yet. I can remember years ago talking about the barriers getting set for this kind of thing, where they put the sockets in the roads at roundabouts and intersections, the main highway intersections. You see the sockets there. Then the last, it was interesting too, [Alan chuckles.] because I gave the talks on it and folk wouldn't believe it and they went and looked and sure enough, they saw them putting these deep sockets in. And that's for these swing gates, you see. And in the last couple of years I've noticed, especially last year, they started putting them in, the actual gates in. Getting you familiarized with the idea of them, without thinking, it's a way of adapting to things without thinking, you see. But I noticed and I says oh, so it's coming along the pike. And bingo, here we are.

It's quite amazing to witness it all. It really is. It's kind of exciting in a way. Because you understand, the planning that's gone into so much that's happening down through your lifetime for things like today, including the wars and stuff like that too, 'eh.

US angered by Europe's refusal to extend sanctions on Iran - jpost.com / 2 March 2020

I mean, they're hammering Iran as this goes on, because you get them when they're really down on their knees, and they're restricted with food and medicines and all the rest of it, and they've got plague rushing through their country. The big agenda must try and get fulfilled while they’re down. This is warfare, you see. And viral warfare is nothing new either. It isn't just discussed. They have departments of biowarfare, for those who refuse to admit to it.

Anyway here's a few articles. I've got one. Whitehall is the big management system for the country for Britain and London. The Whitehall unit, that's the government with the GCHQ and all the rest of it.

Cross-Whitehall unit set up to counter false coronavirus claims

theguardian.com / 9 March 2020

(Alan: Every country has got their own one set up already, folks.)

DCMS-based unit aims to identify disinformation about virus and establish its scope

(A: Right. But it isn't just to find out, it's to counter it..)

A special cross-Whitehall unit has been set up to counter coronavirus-related disinformation, including from Russia and China, (A: ...from Russia they say, hm, and China, 'eh. M-hm. Have you seen how much disinformation we've got here? We've got conflicting answers for everything here, from the same sources, on about everything. Anyway…) working closely with social media companies...

(A: And that all came out too by the way, what I'm reading here was already planned and worked and arranged last year, at least last year because they admitted that at the Johns Hopkins exercise they had with Bill Gates and so on, or the Gates Foundation for coronavirus. They said they would have these things set up, they had already got permission, and guarantees from Facebook and all the biggies, all the social media ones, they'd be on board with them 100%, total censorship, etc.)

Housed in the Department for Digital, Culture, (A: ...the department for digital culture, I guess that's where they give you the finger.) Media and Sport, the unit will aim to identify false information being deliberately spread online and to establish its scope, impact and whether it needs to be actively countered.

(A: So, it's an intelligence unit, right. Which is going to go after and do counterintelligence. Anything they don't agree upon they'll try to counter it.)

Oliver Dowden, the culture secretary, said defending the country from misinformation and digital interference was a top priority, and that expert teams had been brought together to respond to any threats identified.

(A: Now, these are the same ones I mentioned before, has a whole bunch of them working, thousands of them work actually on social media warfare, warriors, they call them warriors that are paid by the government and trained by the defense department. And many private ones too, by the way, work for government.)

... Facebook and Twitter both putting the NHS (A: National Health Service.) at the top of search results when UK users search for “coronavirus”.

(A: So that's why everything else is blocked and maybe you're blocked too.)

But that has not stopped false information spreading online, including the incorrect claim that anti-microbial sanitiser is not effective against viruses. In fact, alcohol-based gels are effective in killing Covid-19.

(A: Do you understand, you've just been given another falsity by just basic alcohol-based, some of these gels have very little alcohol and it, maybe hardly half, you know, and so it goes in the air.)

Last week a senior US state department official, Lea Gabrielle, told Congress that Russia was behind “swarms of online, false personas” ...

It's always Russia, isn't it? Because there's your agenda, the agenda never stops, 'eh. Even if you're coming down to life-and-death situations, they make hay while the sun shines, and, how can we use this disaster to our advantage type thing, right. Anyway, here you have everything out there. You have to think for yourselves Because believe you me, there are no good guys here at all that are just out there to help you. We're so thick now with intelligence, counterintelligence agencies, on every level of information, before even this happened, that it's almost time to throw the computer away. [Alan chuckles.] And I said that years ago we'd get to that phase.

The Queen of England is rumored again, rumors, awful lot of rumors coming out of them...

Queen to step down? Royal expert (A: You even got experts for royalty. What are you an expert at? I'm an expert for royalty, yes, I write Royal stories for the royalty.) reveals the ONLY way Prince Charles could take over - express.co.uk / 28 No 2019

Who knows? Who cares, in a sense? Britain is finished, I'm afraid to say. And it really is finished. I'm not talking about the system itself, but the people that endured, endured centuries of it and fought for it and all the rest of it, even when it seemed decent to fight for it during certain times. It's just been thrown away in the dustbin by those who ruled it and took it over in fact to an extent. It's not worth crying over now.

The counties in the US have got mitigation effects, different counties in the states already have these, they're unrolling the martial law type system to slow the spread of the virus in the community and so on. You know there's going to be trouble.

County Announces New Mitigation Efforts: COVID-19 - saccounty.net / 9 March 2020

I mean, can you imagine when you start to disallow folk from traveling freely, it would be bad enough for most folk in a country where they have rights, etc. Now getting back to what they said, how they're drooling at what China did because China said just do it or else and that's it. But you also have a massive problem in the West too of drug addicts. And in big areas in cities. And they're going have to start traveling to get their drugs. They can't do without them. The system knows about that too, they're building up to deal with all of that. So, there will be trouble, there will be terrible trouble if this drags on. Obviously. There's no doubt about it. Because they can't just go a day or two days without them.

It's interesting too, you've heard about the strange HIV inserts, as they call them, when attached to this particular virus, and how they are treating a lot of them in China with certain antiviral drugs that were really developed for AIDS and things. But one of them they're treating them with in China was developed in Cuba apparently and we're not using it here. I think it's about time to maybe drop that and start producing it, mass-producing it if it helps them in China. But it says...

Second 'cured' HIV patient goes public

sciencemag.org / 9 March 2020

A 40-year-old former chef, Adam Castillejo, has revealed to The New York Times that he is "the London patient," only the second person in the world that physicians believe has been cured of an HIV infection.

(A: I have followed this for a while, this kind of thing.)

The medical intervention that apparently cured both people is not widely applicable at this time, however. Castillejo's doctor first described the London patient last year at an HIV/AIDS conference and in a Nature paper. At the time, no HIV had been detected in Castillejo's blood for 18 months after a stem cell transplant to treat a life-threatening blood cancer...

Now, I know other ones that have tried it too. They can take, they can produce stem cells, inject them into you, that really go after any particular type of disease, especially ones like HIV where your T cells are really drastically knocked right out, so that you can really...

So, it would be interesting to see. But it's interesting that they're giving some of them in some countries anti-HIV medications, isn't it, when you think about it. And if this is so, it also means they can do this for anybody, wealthy elites, who can afford it too. Because they won't give it to everybody on any national health system. Yeah, there are ways around for people who are vulnerable, indeed, if they can certainly afford it. And we know that, we've all watched so many of the elite walking around still shaking hands with everybody. And so many of them haven't come down with this thing. It kind of makes you wonder what they're on, doesn't it? Is it just antivirals? What is it? It's got to be something.

Another one too is, I don't like the idea of cars self driving. That's my personal thing, you know. And I'm not too keen on electric cars either because it's part of the agenda. And you just, you'll never, you just can't go hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of miles on the thing without charging it up. The batteries don't last long in the winter, they don't charge well, or the high heat either. We know that it doesn't matter what they're made of. But here they go with the...

The car as a Smart Hub

brusselstimes.com / 6 March 2020

(A: Every innovation they make means you've got less and less control over something yourself. But authorities and governments certainly will have control over them and even stop them or immobilize them remotely if they want to. That's why I don't like them too. So, they want to make the cars an actual smart hub.)

The new generation of cars will help the EU achieve its Green New Deal targets

It's all to help the environment. D'you really believe that? On you go, dream on folks. Everything will be connected to it. Everything. And you'll have no privacy. You already have no privacy I suppose, very little. But why help them go the whole way?

They survived the coronavirus. Then they tested positive again. Why?

latimes.com / 13 March 2020

After weeks of confinement to their apartments because one person in the building had tested positive for coronavirus, they were throwing a party to celebrate his recovery and their release.

It was Feb. 24, and Mr. Wang, a resident of Xuzhou, in Jiangsu province, appeared to have emerged victorious from a monthlong battle with the illness. Sixty-five residents of his building gathered downstairs to greet Wang with bouquets of pink flowers, a cake with a flamingo on it, and a red banner that read: “With strong neighborly feelings, we welcome you home.”

Three days later, though, Wang tested positive for the coronavirus again. He was re-hospitalized and his neighbors were locked down once more. His current condition is unknown.

They haven't really figured it out. It could be too that the thing hadn't left him from the first time. Because a lot of these tests are not definitely accurate, you know. And so, he might have had it in his system for a long…

But then again, some of these tests simply test the fragments of it. I mean, these viruses and so on breakdown into fragments as well and if you're testing it in mucus basically or in the sinus, from the sinus test. It's really a nasty little thing, the sinus. It's like a feather they stick up you, that's what it looks like, and it's got a little hook on the end and it rips a little part of your lining away with whatever's on it. And it really stings you.

They can tell, you know, they send it off to the lab to see if there's any of the virus on it. It's possible it's fragments on the thing because they've admitted that too. You can test positive if you have just fragments of it. You might have had the virus and now it's just the remains, bits and pieces of viruses that they're finding with the test. Or maybe, maybe as I say could be, maybe it's not gone full-blown yet. Occasionally there's patients they say that haven't shown symptoms for well over a month. Hm. There was even one article that says 35 days for some, you know, the occasional person here or there. So, let's hope we just don't constantly get this sort of thing over and over again. We should build up an immunity once you're over it, with any luck at all.

So anyway, this is the stuff they want to counter coming out of China. China [Alan chuckles.] and Russia, this is Russia, I don't see Russia putting anything out at all. That's what's come out too, that was the Los Angeles Times by the way, that article. I guess they'll have to hammer the Los Angeles Times for putting out disinformation if they don't like it. Another one too...

To Help Stem Spread of Coronavirus, Trump Must Lift Sanctions on Iran - intpressnews.com / 13 March 2020

Because Iran are dying because they have no medications. A lot of folk are hungry, they're malnourished. Just like Iraq was too when half a million died with starvation and sanctions. They're doing the same thing there, really, because wars don't stop. Isn't it amazing, wars don't stop when terrible death's occurring, the agenda must continue? It's rather disgusting, isn't it. It really is disgusting. That's what I think anyway, that's my personal opinion.

But I'm not, I try not to get depressed because humanity and power is pretty disgusting when you look at it. And there's always another group would come up, it would make no difference who they are, who eventually takes over and wants to get up the ladder. All cultures have the same psychopaths, every single culture, every people across the planet have them.

Even the ones who want to do good end of being tyrants. This is the sad part too. It's so easy to say all the right things to help folk but in reality these deceivers can get up to the top and bring on a kind of a new type of Bolshevik hell down on you and wipeout... Don't forget, the Bolsheviks talked about wiping out a whole class of people, that was Trotsky's boast as well, we have eliminated a whole class of people. Millions and millions of people were slaughtered. And once they've wiped out that class because they didn't stop, they never do, just like the French Revolution, they start looking for other targets until everyone's getting slaughtered. That's a trait of humanity that unfortunately is very unfortunate. M-hm. But now they're all, the real ones are up there behind degrees, a lot of degrees, and titles, it will be expert this and work titles of world leaders and things like that. That's the way it is.

Also, too, as we well know, that we've got problems, got problems with these immune attacks. You get an immune response to these viruses that can end up causing problems. You have the cytokine storms as they call it, that's your body retaliating, trying the best to kill this thing off. But unfortunately, in the process it can go overboard and end up killing you off. Not the virus itself but your response to it. Rather sad. But it's interesting, this virus, like all viruses, there's always a receptor in your system, you see, that it zones in on. And this one is no different.

And some people, they say, have more of these particular receptor cells than others. Some groups definitely have it more so it, can get in and cause more problems than, say, people in the West as an example. But they're trying to hush everything up as well because we're supposed to be equally both vulnerable, they say. But there's very few diseases actually that are equally vulnerable across the world. We all have different genetic backgrounds and traits through the genes and so on which makes us sometimes more or less prone to certain diseases that other folk are not.

I think all of the Western society have problems with their immune systems. We have for quite a long time. There's no doubt about that. I can remember the bubble boy in the 1960s who was one of the first recorded ones who literally was allergic to everything. He had to be kept in an artificial environment because just a simple allergen could kill him, you know. And it's got worse and worse since then. You never heard of peanut allergies until about the 1970s, or 80s actually. So, something's attacking their immune system, and you can all battle away with what you want to say. Sometimes it's just best to just know it and nod to each other because you're not allowed to say things. But that's the way it is, isn't it?

Another article says that Covid, sometimes they're calling it like a SARS 2 type thing believing that it's like, it's really like the base is a SARS virus, with everything added on to it in a sense. But some of them were calling it's SARS Cov 2, the respiratory syndrome coronavirus. It's hard to tell because they keep playing with terms, etc. But there's no doubt about it, it's kind of similar in some ways as a base to build on you might say. And some of these viruses are definitely built on, and they know that too.

And it's wrong right now to point fingers. The whole point is to get through this without having another war on top of it. Because dealing with it is more important. And getting through this is more important. We've got to start looking at life a bit differently because things will come down fast. When government, that you think just screws up, they don't screw up. When things just happen in the world, it's meant to happen. It's planned that way. So never fall for, oh, they just were stupid. No, when something is planned, it was meant to happen that way. And when government gets rolling it really becomes your fearful master, right. FEARFUL master.

Because when they take the power and folk are terrified, the people allow them to do terrible things. To save you all, they'll do terrible things, right. [Alan chuckles.] So never forget that. Never ever forget that. It's a rather dangerous time and you can't really talk about things too much or too deeply. Because it's not going to be tolerated now. And you'll be lifted, or banned, or even imprisonment as some kind of subversive. That came out too at the big planning stage, the tabletop planning stage with all the experts involved from the Johns Hopkins University in the States with the Bill Gates Foundation working with them.

Yeah, literally they'll imprison you if need be. Or, you know, whatever it takes, hm. It's a wartime situation. And in wartime they lock folk up for saying things they don't… I don't believe in this war, boomf, that's you locked up, you know. Or if you say that you've got people in your own governments are traitors that are bringing this war on for other reasons, then you get locked up for that too. They've got carte blanche authority, you see, during this martial law type scenarios.

The whole point is stick together as much as you can. Don't start losing your temper with each other. If you get locked down, especially, don't go into some kind of cabin fever with those that are around you. You have to learn to give and take a bit more than you normally do. And help each other out as best you can. Because we're going to go through it one way or another, there's no doubt about it, and we've got to get along.

There'd be other people who might need your help too during these times. Don't go paranoid and... If you have to get food to someone or whatever it takes, you can always take in a box and leave it at a distance from their door, or something, let them know you're coming. And you can spray the darn thing with some disinfectant if need be, or even just water and a little bit of bleach, not much bleach, and spray the darn thing and you should be okay, things like that.

But you've gotta start helping each other if things get truly bad. That's the way it is. If you lose your humanity in the process, then the elite are happy because that gives them the right to lose what they would say is humanity and use it on you. Think about that too. When you lose your humanity and as society starts breaking down, then folk will go nuts and they’ll have mob rule and everything else. And that will get dealt with. And if people come down who are troops or the police or whatever, they've all got provisions for that too, with them coming down too, then it will be hell to pay, absolute hell to pay, no doubt about it. And they'll become more ruthless if that happens, you know.

So, as they say in Scotland, keep the heed, keep the heed, that's keep your head and don't go nuts as we go through all this.

Just to finish off, to say I'm not making this kind of thing up, that the eugenics types and bioethicists and functionality and efficiency of the agenda, right…

Coronavirus could be 'quite useful' in killing off NHS bed blockers, says ex official mirror.co.uk / 6 March 2020

Professor June Andrews admitted her comments sounded "horrific", but insisted they were an honest assessment of the consequences of a pandemic in the UK

The former director of the Scottish Government’s Centre for Change (A: Interesting, Centre for Change. Remember, change is good, this is the century of change, for a whole bunch of things.) and Innovation was speaking at Holyrood's public audit committee when she made the controversial comments.

(A: That's like the parliamentary system there, Holyrood.)

According to The Herald , she said: "If you’re on the board of a care home company, a pandemic is one of things you think about as a potential damage to your business because of the number of older people it’s going to take out of the system.

“Curiously, ripping off the sticking plaster, in a hospital that has 92 delayed discharges, (A: … delayed discharges…) a pandemic would be quite useful because your hospital would work because these people would be taken out of the system.”

(A: Meaning, they'd be killed off, folks, 'eh.)

She added: “That sounds like it’s a horrific thing to say – but it is the case that somehow or other, we’ve put people in the wrong places by not having the kind of strategic views (A: ...you see the language? ...strategic views...) that we should have.

“That means that politicians who don’t want to think about bad things before the election, need to think about putting income tax up even higher in order to pay for more care in care homes and they need to think about whether they reinstate geriatric hospitals.”

So, in other words, here's your governments, not your government anyway but she's part of this elitist’s thing, yeah, you know, there's them and us, I think, them and us, you know. They are the wise ones, we are the scientific group that see things clearly without emotions, why don't we be efficient here, come on, you've just got to do the right thing and just let the people die off and cull them off and so on and dut-dut-dut-dut-dut-dut-dut.

Here you have it right in your face and they wonder why folk are getting panicky? Right? And in the times of euthanasia in the hospitals, folks? Hm? When you toss out, and it's not me that said, it was a doctor a hundred years ago said this. When you throw out the right for the human being to be treated in hospital as a full human being, he said, when it's tossed out the window, he says, hell will follow.

Because the government is working with them, you see. Yeah. There you go. Then...

What Is 'Boomer Remover' and Why Is It Making People So Angry?

newsweek.com / 13 March 2020

The term has appeared in more than 65,000 tweets and references the higher mortality rate among older people (A: That's all you're hearing now, it's okay, you know, it's just older folk that get it. Like literally that's a different species, like the zombie movies. What do you think they were all for, the zombie movies, 'eh? What do you think they were for? To dehumanize the next target, that's what you do in warfare.) infected with COVID-19—particularly among people over 60, including the Boomer Baby age (A: The Boomer Baby age… I mean, we never had people having babies before that?) cohort approximately between the ages of 56 and 74.

The nickname is most often touted by teenagers, with adults then sharing the term on social media, as in this early viral example of the trend

Doctors Treating Coronavirus Told to Discriminate Against Elderly Patients: They Will Be Left to Die - lifenews.com / 12 March 2020

That' s bioethics, well you know, just, yeah, he's a nobody. I gave talks years ago on the same thing, where they have you listed as according to your status in society. It's not just your age, your status in the community, are you necessary? Dut-dut-dut-dut-dut-dut-dut-dut.

Who gets hospital bed? - theatlantic.com / 11 March 2020

You're in a horror show and it should never have gotten to this stage. But it did. As they told you to play and they trained you to start to accept euthanasia, etc. etc. etc. That's it, folks. I'm telling ya. Hell is coming down.

So, as we go through this, remember if you've got a few friends, make sure you all keep in touch every day. And if anyone's on their own or even if they are elderly and a couple, still keep phoning up at set times of the day to check in or the evening or whatever it is. And to help each other out.

Because that's what you… Don't look for government to help you. Don't do it. And if you're older, it's true, you'll need your friends more than anything else. And they can help each other out as best as you can, as I say, there's ways to do things, and even supplying a bit of food here and there, whatever it takes during this whole scenario.

But don't expect government, government gives out nothing, especially in these scenarios for free. And it's going to be a ration card maybe or ID card for your area, where you can travel to, how far you can go, and what days you can go out to a store or something and back again. But government will take, there's no doubt about it, as they said, just after 9/11, that's what rang out then, it will never be the same again, from the Council on Foreign Relations. And we heard the same thing again with this one from the CFR, that it will never be the same again. This is meant to achieve far far more than they're letting on at the moment.

But take care of each other because as I say it's an imperative natural duty to ourselves to keep your humanity.

From myself Alan Watt from Ontario Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Mar. 22, 2020 "Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

Hi folks I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through the Matrix on March 22, 2020. Now, I'd like to just mention that you can donate to me during these hard times because I have to survive myself like everybody else during these hard times. You can do so by going into cuttingthroughthematrix.com website. Once again, bookmark all the other sites I've got listed there, that's my official sites in case any go down in the crisis. I know my speed on the Internet has been clamped down on, and they're putting out stories that they're using it for bandwidth for this emergency, etc. etc.

There's a lot going on and a lot of it is untrue, and a lot of it is true for other reasons. However, you can buy the books and discs at cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Remember, there'll be an awful drag on it as timed delivery goes because of the crisis, but you can certainly donate to me and keep me ticking over. You can do so by as I say, go into cuttingthroughthematrix.com website to find out how to do it. You can use PayPal, or you can even send cash. There are ways to clean, believe you me, dirty money. Ask the crooks, you know, the people who make it.

It's quite easy to just get by through the crisis if we just keep our heads, etc. So, what I'm going to do is a two hour show right now and for those who want the whole two hours just take it straight from cuttingthroughthematrix.com. For those who want to upload and find it more difficult to do it all in one go, most folk won't have a problem with it, if they want to they can take part one and part two afterwards, two hours, split them up if they want to if it's easier for them. But regardless I'll put up the complete show on my website @cuttingthroughthematrix.com, and I'll put up the part one and the part two of the same show for those who want to take it half-and-half basically.

Just before I get off part one, end the part one show, I just want to mention another inconsistency here too, where all the reports are coming out saying, oh, the younger folk are spreading it to everybody else and things like that, it's possible and they're carrying it and all that. Well, if the asymptomatic young healthy people are going to be a danger to everybody else, why don't you just quarantine all of them? [Alan laughing.] Rather than going for everybody else that's a bit older, etc. And regarding the quarantine of the young, now remember, for those who are so serious these days, that's a wee joke. Again, even now they're putting out reports that folk who are in their 20s are getting it in Canada, out the Alberta way I think it is. Which is interesting as well.

So again, cuttingthroughthematrix.com the whole two-hour show, or part one and part two, depending on how you take it down. So, the title of the full two-hour talk and part one, part two if you want to break it up for those who want it broke it up into two parts. Those will all be called As Sensible Guidance by Governments Banished, a Plentiful Food Supply is Suddenly Vanished.

I hope you are all hanging in there during these incredible crisis times. Of course, it's not really unexpected from people like myself because this is part of a massive agenda, obviously. Probably in the works for a long time. And who knows if they planned the actual dates all this would start or if it was just time to really unroll it during some kind of, it's hard to even call it a true pandemic in some sense. Because according to the definitions of even the WHO and other places it's hardly at like the proportions of pandemic to make sense.

When you see the numbers, and yeah, I know there's other people too who ride along the fact that there's nothing happening at all and it's just another flu. But regardless of what the truth of it all is, and I must admit it's incredibly confusing from the authorities for what they're giving you for the data, it's all contradictory. And you wonder if that's all by design [Alan chuckles.] that it's contradictory. Because folk can't get a grasp on it at all, not with the figures they give you and all the rest of it.

So anyway, as I say, big things are happening and they're already shouting from the rooftops at the control places that things will never be the same again. The exact same phrase that came out right after 9/11, as they get that through your heads. Because it's going to achieve a lot of the goals of the agenda of course.

I remember a few years back I mentioned apart from the fact that you'd end up with martial law one day, and you'd get ID for food and all the rest of it, and for your vaccinations, this was back in the 1990s I said it, and eventually you'll have some kind of, something on your wrist or whatever like a bracelet or something. It would be up-to-date with all your records of your vaccinations, and if you didn't have it, up-to-date vaccinations, and they could still use it with just visual ID too, then alarms would go off just like red alert-red alert and all that if you weren't up to scratch. And here we are. It's all getting unrolled as we live through this of course.

So, it's interesting to watch it. And also, to be partly detached from it in some ways. Of course, we're all affected by what's happening because the emergency powers acts are unrolled and its wartime measures of course, which people accept generally. Most folk accept generally as necessary in a wartime situation for survival. So, give up all the rest of your rights, if you've got any left at all that is, and of course you'll be perfectly safe, and they'll take care of you.

I wouldn't count on the latter part either because [Alan chuckles.] it's almost Idiocracy and laughable, that a lot of the so-called statements from politicians and countries including Canada, big time, big time in Canada, and all over the world, it's the same kind of thing where people who really are nobodies, they're not there because they are exceptionally bright or anything like that, often the opposite in fact. But they're awfully good, they're very cunning as far as getting, you know, getting power and using power and getting awfully rich, the ones who rule over us.

But to hear the statements coming out of their mouths is quite something. But everywhere you look you see formulas. And they have formulas, I knew they'd unroll it in the NATO type formula. And it's just like the movies, that's where the movies get the idea too. And the movies also train you in predictive programming how to react in such situations, by countless zombie movies with pandemics and things like that, until you know it all by heart, what's coming next. But you go through stages of it. That's exactly how they manage it.

Just like the meeting they had with Bill Gates at Johns Hopkins University before this broke loose with the training group for pandemics, the ones who would manage it and how they'd manage the public, the first law of course is never tell the public the truth. So, it doesn't vary that much from everyday life without the pandemic, really. But they really don't tell you the truth. And the newspapers, which are all on board before it all happens, even during the training exercise they had them all on board they said, if one should ever break out, and that's all social media as well, the big ones that most folk used, had all agreed to be on board with it to manage the public. And much much more than just managing us. But the key is, don't tell the public the truth.

And in the first month or two, lie through your teeth, as the governments and all the different agencies involved including eventually military forces are all geared up to manage it. But don't tell the public this is happening, just kind of give them vague answers to things. And that's what we've had.

And again, as it all happens, as it all happens and unrolls you have psychological warfare going on, because that's what these agencies that manage it all use. Behaviorists and psychologists and the neuroscientists, etc. etc., and you know, the behavioral insights teams, they've got thousands of these people all over the planet, they're working in tandem to manage your brains to make sure we do what they want us to do without ever figuring it out we're getting used. And that's really at work today. Really at work.

Number one, there's nothing that isn't known about how to handle and manage pandemics. It's a very, very old understanding. The medical profession used to always get taught all about it, and its history. They used to get taught lot of things that they're not taught anymore too. The first thing you do, you see, if you still have a nation-state that is, if you have a country, a national country, the first thing you do is to safeguard your domestic people, your own people first and foremost from getting contaminated from coming in from countries which have the contaminations. That's vital. That's the first thing you do.

That means that even your own citizens that are outside the country are locked out for a long time perhaps. And it's sad, but that's how you… In that way, if you go into full lockdown that way, then obviously you're going to, at the very least, awfully restrict the cases that are coming into the country in one way or another, or even sneaking in. Because there's a lot that want to sneak in as well during these times. We know that even from China we've lost count on people who vanished from China, to all over, countries neighboring them too and over here, getting the first whiff of this.

But the fact is, the first thing you do is you stop all the international flights coming in. Just a few days ago, I don't know if it's still there, I imagine it's still the same, Canada were using about five international airports to bring folk back and forth from all over. You can still book flights too, and get to Wuhan, roundtrips, by going to Beijing first and then getting another flight, and then to Wuhan. If you wanted to, and for about $1200 you could get a holiday there if that's the holiday for you. [Alan laughing.] If you like excitement I guess.

It was 1200 bucks including your hotel and the whole thing. Then you go back the same way you came basically, and into the country. And there's no questions asked in Canada. They even had reporters at Toronto Airport asking people coming in every day, if they had any restrictions applied to them, did any authorities stop them when they got off the planes coming into Canada back in from these countries in the affected areas? No. No. No questions at all. No temperature taken, nothing like that. Then they would scatter.

It makes no sense. You see, there is sense and nonsense, right. And when it makes non sense, not sense, which is nonsense, you see, then you have to sit... And this is the thing, they're not stupid at the top. Don't forget behind every great tactic of terror there are massive businesses and massive agendas all ready to unravel upon the world and to be implemented. And someone's going to benefit. There will be different companies for instance benefiting, and you can't believe the rhetoric in the stock market for the big companies for vaccines and they'll trial this and trial that and trial antivirals, etc. They're all getting billions; they've got hands out and they're getting billions thrown at them by a terrified public via their colluding governments perhaps.

But the first thing is, why would you still be bringing planes in, knowingly, from these affected places? And don't forget too, that those who have tested negative supposedly with these strange [Alan chuckles.] I hate to call them tests in a way, you know, where they admit that so many of them are just faulty. Maybe the public are shocked by that. I don't know.

But I can remember the names of the big corporations that got the contracts, for years they were doing the blood work for definitely Ontario and then other parts of Canada too, these laboratories. For years and years and years they managed a massive, massive business. Guaranteed money, remember, when the insurance companies, that are this quasi government oversight in Canada, and you still pay for your insurance, you see, that's taken off your wages for instance. And businesses have to pay it too so. You have these companies who are making a fortune off of doing blood work.

A few years back, and I remember it wasn't, it was no surprise to me in fact that eventually there was a huge lawsuit against them. I don't know how it started or whatever. They were transferred, the businesses transferred to some other company. The big one that had the contract for years and years and years, almost had been guessing at the results. They were putting them through so fast and the whole bit and telling their employees, on most of them, well, to guess, m-hm, just make a guess, like flip a coin. And it was that, like flip a coin, half the tests were positive, and half were negative, for any particular thing. Which it was, it was a toss of a coin, you see.

Now you see, we've been brainwashed for so long, and this is vital to understand, through countless ways, with Bernays and the ideas of, and it used to be corporations that he did the PR propaganda work for and things like that. It escalated from there through fiction, mainly on television programs and so on. Mainly, and I know in Britain it was aimed mainly at the women on soaps like Dr. Kildare and things like that. And they'd all think, what a wonderful young man, you know, good looking young man, what a wonderful, and they're all swooning and all that.

And this guy could, he didn't sleep because he worried about his patients that much. You wouldn't believe it. You wouldn't believe how dedicated this guy was. He wasn't in it for the money, you see. He knew his patients by who they were, everything about them, they were like personal friends of his, it's just instant friendship. But he couldn't sleep when he worried, and in the middle of the night sometimes, you know, it was voilà, it would just hit him you know, well there's the answer to the problem. And all the women would swoon and say what a dedicated young, they all wanted to be hitched to this guy, you see. And that really did start the ball rolling for millions of people across the world watching these soaps.

Then they go into Emergency Ward 10, you see, another fictional thing. There's the emergency staff, but again, now you go into the personal lives of them, that we're just ordinary people too, with ordinary problems. And in amongst all their ordinary problems you had all the politically correct agendas, [Alan chuckles.] like what do you do in a promiscuous society and things like that. So, and now it's, how do you manage any problems, etc. etc. And that's how you're brainwashed.

But again, this hospital, you'd all want to be in it. Because everybody in their who worked there, they didn't sleep. These people who don't sleep, like Dr. Kildare and all the rest of them, they never have bags under their eyes or anything. They never start making mistakes and spilling their coffee because they're half sleeping. No, these people are on the ball. I guess dedication just makes you so alert and well, right. Maybe that's the key to health, is to love people so much that you're not there for a paycheck, it's to help them.

You see, the hospitals today too are public-private. They've been public-private for a long time in the socialist countries. The American companies, if you want to call them American, it's okay, they might not even be American really but there's chains of these things across the planet now. The governments, in public-private you pay for all the cost of everything and they take the profit. That's the wonders of it. And if you forget that for a second, that that's why they're really there is for business, it's a big business, you see, forget all your propaganda because it doesn't work out that way.

Again, people are fallible. Obviously. They don't think so, a lot of them, but they're fallible.

And they'll soak up the PR things about who goes into hospital, like you see, it doesn't matter who you are, if you're a nobody, you'll never get your name mentioned. But you get a celebrity going in and oh my God, we're all concerned about it, oh. Just like the soaps, you see, oh my goodness, will Jim be back in time for his date with so-and-so? Talking about the soap, he's in the hospital right now hey. This is the junk your head is full of.

Because you're dealing with a business. Now, the business is not even the same business that it used to be years ago. The British system for instance had a good national health service initially. And like everything else it becomes ultra-politicized. Eventually towards the end of it, and I can actually tell you when the end really was even though it still pretends it's going. But it was so highly unionized in different parts, all different kinds of unions for different segments of the hospital staff, that things were dysfunctional. And again too, the country wasn't training domestically enough doctors either for the job. So, you had all kinds of conflicts between differing groups, even people coming into the countries from different parts of the countries fighting with each other. In the hospital. I'm talking about staff. Then once you bring political correctness into it and priority hiring’s, priority promotions, in other words people will get promoted not for the fact of their abilities, then things go down the hill very quickly. And in any area, that's sensible too.

But the hospital system like in Britain is a profit-making thing for those who work inside it. I'm talking about the bigger, the higher staff and specialists and so on. It's just incredible [Alan chuckles.] what they take home with them. Honestly, it truly is. And Canada is the same. So, you get away from this Dr. Kildare idea that he's there because they love you, that's why they're there, right. Cancel that out right away.

And today you don't have in the hospitals the purpose that they were founded upon, was to help the infirmed. That's why they were called infirmaries, they are infirmed. And folk often get it confused with old folks’ homes and hospitals. Hospital is not an old person's home, and so your general hospital has all age groups within it, you see. And they're supposed to deal with disease, that's part of their function. They have teams of infectious disease specialists that work there and so on. So, hospitals are meant to do the purpose that they are there for. However, so much has really changed.

Because as I mentioned last week and the weeks before and even long long before that, we do live... have... Get away from the fictional side of things and look at the real world. An incredible evil prospers because we're trained to be naïve. And they say, oh nobody would do that, nobody would do that. You understand, there's no weapon made that hasn't been used. That's why they're made. They don't make things to take photographs and stand beside it, so they can show their grandchildren. And often the guys who work with it don't think they're going to live long enough to have grandchildren.

But in the world of science today, the scientist, remember, are the new high priests in the white coats, that's their uniform, the white coat. And doctors have the stethoscope hanging around, because that was all popularized by movies by the way and television dramas, not by reality.

Having something hanging around your neck like that, if you try to run, if there's a particular code gets sounded in the hospital, it’s a very impractical thing to do. And when it falls on the floor it's rather dirty, especially the hospital, so you don't want to touch the patients with that after you drop 'em. So, having it around your neck is a bad place.

But that's what they do, well this is why I am, you see. That distinguishes you from a local grocer who might also wear a white coat, you see. Hm. He might have a sprig of parsley tied to his lapel, and that's okay. Everything today is symbology and who do you think they are, etc. But people really aren’t there in this day and age with the same motivations to help anybody, except maybe themselves and their status.

I'm not the first person to mention this. Professor Carroll Quigley talked about it in his book Tragedy and Hope in one of the chapters about the up-and-coming, it would be the middle class in the US, how the greed factor and the system of the culture was literally dog-eat-dog to climb to the top. That the medical industry would literally go to the dogs in a sense - and I hate the expression, I like dogs - but it would fall apart because of the greed factor as everybody rushed into it as a place to get money, supposedly there to help.

Do you realize the 1920s and even in the 30s up until that period into the 40s, people who went into medicine often, at one point, at one time came from the wealthier classes? They didn't need the cash so much. And they did do house calls, they really did. They did know their area people, the people in their community, they did know them. You try getting that kind of service today, it's not going to happen.

The hospitals today are not there just to help people out of any kind of love for the people. They are there because it's a business and they've all been trained today in the science which adapted into it, you know, situation ethics and bioethics, who should live and who should die. It's a rather frightening place to go into today if you know you’re already ticked off before you go in as savable, not savable, or they're going to determine why they even bother treating you, I'm not kidding you, that's what it is. And the hospitals too by the way, which are into euthanasia these days, is not a place… You'd better start thinking and reevaluating what these places are. Hm?

I mean Dr. Kildare didn't say back in the old days, when he was asked out for, he didn't have dates, you see, he would just accept meeting some woman for a cup of coffee, that was as far as they went, you see. But he didn't say I'm sorry, I can't make it, I've got 10 patients to euthanize, you know. We've turned a whole different way and direction of what it is today. Until you even have, and I think Canada in Ontario and they had an article about a glut, a glut of organs harvested thanks, thanks, it was a glowing report to our policies now for assisted suicide, or you know, euthanasia. That's what it is, promoting it like a good thing.

So, you have to really, really think about things. So, you're seeing in Italy, and Italians haven't gone all the way to just see us all as paychecks, the patients that is. They haven't seen us all as different, oh, you're savable, I've decided I'll save you, but I won't save you. According to your social status as well by the way, that's part of what's going to save you or not. I'm not kidding you. As we are all equal in such social systems as we have in Canada for instance. 'Eh? What a joke that is.

But you have to get it through our heads, I suppose, that it's overwhelmed... And we only have X amount or a limited supply of medications to treat them with. Well, we've got to give it to the ones who are, who've got a better chance of pulling through, 'eh. And they've got a whole list, checklist of young people, blah, blah, blah, blah, blah and you know.

Getting back to what hospitals were. It was for generally the older people who were getting infirmed. You're not so infirmed when you're young, you see. You become infirmed when you get older. And they call them infirmaries. And you did everything you could to save life. Because life at that time was called, a strange thing, it was called precious, you see. Precious. And people believed that. And you did all you could. When someone went into hospital, they didn't say, oh they're going to do their best to kill me gently. No, no. They didn't. That wasn't done then, you see.

Today they've got special teams that come and see you. And the nicest person you'll meet in the hospital. I met them in the 2016 when I ended up in there and I was coughing blood, a similar thing as this thing here, hm. And they have their little team there and they're looking at you like three monkeys, you know. So in the hospital that I went to in Canada back then the nicest guy who came back, and he was the only one who came back occasionally to tell me how I was progressing and about how the tests were and all the rest of it.

I could tell he was trained in being nice, you see. And when he wasn't sure if I had cancers or what the heck it was, I didn't know, my lungs were a mess. And he'd come up and say, well you can always think about the future, it all depends how you see things, you know. In other words, getting you ready for the big, the big decision, you see. But very pleasantly so. They know how to do it. And they've got training for it, all kinds of responses from different types of people, you see. And whatever you'd say, he had an immediate response. Okay, yeah, use this response in situation C3 or whatever. And I was quite aware of this [Alan laughing.] in the hospital, that's what it was. And sure enough, I mean, he had a kind of clinic place, or home that he would take people that were on the way, you know, on the big journey and deal with them and so on.

All properly, I'm sure. Again, just like as I said Soylent Green where in the book as they called it, Charlton Heston's kind of manager there, the guy kept the books going and read to him from the books and kept everything straight, he went for euthanasia. And had a great sendoff. In a world that was supposedly overcrowded, that was the idea for Make Room, Make Room was the book that it came from, the actual movie Soylent Green. So yeah, the book had a great sendoff. Nice people talk to him and nice music was played. Nice old wildlife scenes were there. And that was it, you see. M-hm. That was the end of the book.

So, we live in a system really that’s well-controlled today with so many branches of science. My personal opinion is that we're going down hill so quickly from the idea of being human, by all the incredible useless degrees that are churned out from universities across the planet. This is a fairly new thing, this idea that you're all supposed to go to university. Who said that? Hm? You see, when you had all kinds of factories, and you had all kinds of tech schools as well, as opposed to just having your universities. Germany was a great leader in this, they turned out tradesmen from all, in all kinds of professions, really top-class world people for the whole of Europe basically, way ahead of anybody else. Except for maybe Japan.

You see, factories are so important. Because most folk didn't go to university. Now they expect to go. You can get degrees in belly dancing now here, you know, and things like that and all kinds of social politics and divisions of social politics that it's like multiple divisions of Marxism basically and specialist areas of Marxist thought and all that kind of stuff. We're falling apart with all this nonsense.
